LAW DICTIONARY.

J.

JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE. In English Ecclesiastical Law. The boasting by an individual that he or she has married another, from which it may happen that they will acquire the reputation of being married to each other.

The ecclesiastical courts may in such cases entertain a libel by the party injured, and on proof of the facts enjoin the wrong-doer to perpetual silence, and, as a punishment, make him pay the costs; 3 Bla. Com. 93; 2 Hagg. Cons. 423, 285; 2 Chitty, Pr. 459.

JACTURA (Lat. jaceo, to throw). A jettison.

JACTUS (Lat.). A throwing goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. Dig. 14. 2, de lege Rhodia de jactu; 1 Pardessus, Collec. des Lois marit. 104 et seq.; Kuricke, Inst. Marit. Hanseat. tit. 8; 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 288, note.

JAIL, GAOL (fr. Lat. caveola, a cage for birds). A place for the confinement of persons arrested for debt or for crime and held in the custody of the sheriff. Webster, Dict. It may be used also for the confinement of witnesses; and, in general, now there is no distinction between a jail and a prison, except that the latter belongs to a greater extent of country; thus, we say a state's prison and a county jail. Originally, a jail seems to have been a place where persons were confined to await further proceeding—e. g., debtors till they paid their debts, witnesses and accused persons till a certain trial came on, etc.—as opposed to prison, which was for confinement, as punishment.

A jail is an inhabited dwelling-house, and a house within the statutes against arson; 2 W. Bla. 682; 1 Leach, 4th ed. 69; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1020; 2 Cox, Cr. Cas. 65; 18 Johns. 115; 4 Call, 109; 4 Leigh, 683. See GAOL; PRISON.

JAMUNLINGI, JAMUNDILINGI. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Spelman, Gloss. Also, a species of serfs among the Germans. Du Cange. The same as commendati.

JEOFAILE (L. Fr.). I have failed; I am in error.

Certain statutes are called statutes of amendments and jeofailes, because, where a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error (jeofaile), he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend it. The amendment, however, is seldom made; but the benefit is attained by the court's overlooking the exception; 3 Bla. Com. 407; 1 Saund. 228, n. 1; Doct. Pl. 297; Dane, Abr. These statutes do not apply to indictments.

JEOPARDY. Peril; danger.

The term is used in this sense in the act establishing and regulating the post-office department. The words of the act are, "or if, in effecting such robbery of the mail the first time, the offender shall wound the person having the custody thereof, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of dangerous weapons, such offender shall suffer death." 3 Story, Laws U. S. 1992. See Baldw. 93–95.

The situation of a prisoner when a trial jury is sworn and impanelled to try his case upon a valid indictment, and such jury has been charged with his deliverance. 1 Bail. 655; 7 Blackf. 191; 1 Gray, 490; 38 Me. 574, 586; 23 Penn. 12; 12 Vt. 93.

This is the sense in which the term is used in the United States constitution: "no person . . . . shall be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb," U. S. Const. art. v. Amend., and in the statutes or constitutions of most if not all of the states.

This provision in the constitution of the U. S. binds only the United States; 2 Cow. 819; 5 How. 410; contra, 2 Pick. 521; 18 Johns. 187. In this country this rule depends in most cases on constitutional provisions; in England it is said not to be one of those principles which lie at the foundation of the law, but to be a matter of practice, which has fluctuated at various times, and which even at the present day may perhaps be considered as not finally settled; per Cockburn, C. J., in L. R. 1 Q. B. 289.

The constitutional provision, which refers to "life or limb," properly interpreted, extends only to treason and felonies, but it has usually been extended to misdemeanors; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 990; 26 Ala. 135; but not to proceedings for the recovery of penalties, nor to applications for sureties of the peace; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 990.

A person is in legal jeopardy when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance; Cooley, Const. Lim. 404; approved in 9 Bush, 333; 21 Alb. L. J. 398. If, however, the court had no jurisdiction of the cause; 7 Mich. 161; or if the indictment was so defective that no valid judgment could be rendered upon it; 36 Ga. 447; 105 Mass. 53; or if by any overruling necessity the jury are discharged without a verdict; 9 Wheat. 579; 68 N. C. 203; or if the term of the court comes to an end before the trial is finished; 5 Ind. 290; or the jury are discharged with the consent of the defendant, express or implied; 9 Metc. 572; or if after verdict against the accused, it has been set aside on his motion for a new trial or on writ of error, or the judgment thereon has been arrested; 13 Johns. 351; 8 Kans. 232; s. c. 12 Am. Rep. 469, n.; in these cases, the accused may again be put upon trial and the proceedings had will constitute no protection; Cooley, Const. Lim. 405. But if a prisoner has been indicted for murder, convicted of murder in the second degree, and afterwards granted a new trial on his own motion, he cannot, on the second trial, be convicted of a higher crime than murder in the second degree; 33 Wisc. 121; s. c. 14 Am. Rep. 748, n.; 35 Mo. 105; 11 Iowa, 352; contra, 20 Ohio St. 572; 8 Kans. 232; s. c. 12 Am. Rep. 469, n. Where the indictment was good and the judgment erroneously arrested, the verdict was held to be a bar; 2 Yerg. 24. Where a prisoner during his trial fled the jurisdiction, and it became necessary to discharge the jury, it was held that he was never in jeopardy; 13 Reporter, 105 (S. C. of Cal.). See DISCHARGE OF A JURY.

JERGUER. In English Law. An officer of the custom-house, who oversees the waiters. Techn. Dict.

JETTISON, JETSAM. The casting out of a vessel, from necessity, a part of the lading. The thing so cast out.

It differs from flotsam in this, that in the latter the goods float, while in the former they sink, and remain under water. It differs also from ligan.

The jettison must be made for sufficient cause, and not for groundless timidity. It must be made in a case of extremity, when the ship is in danger of perishing by the fury of a storm, or is laboring upon rocks or shallows, or is closely pursued by pirates or enemies.

If the residue of the cargo be saved by such sacrifice, the property saved is bound to pay a proportion of the loss. In ascertaining such average loss, the goods lost and saved are both to be valued at the price they would have brought at the place of delivery on the ship's arrival there, freight, duties, and other charges being deducted. Marsh. Ins. 246; 3 Kent, 185–187; Park. Ins. 123; Pothier, Charte-partie, n. 108 et suiv.; Boulay-Paty, Dr. Com. tit. 13; Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 734; 1 Ware, 9. The owner of a cargo jettisoned has a maritime lien on the vessel for the contributory share from the vessel on an adjustment of the average, which may be enforced by a proceeding in venue in the admiralty; 19 How. 162; 2 Pars. Marit. Law, 373. See AVERAGE; ADJUSTMENT.

JEUX DE BOURSE. In French Law. A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things. 1 Pardessus, Droit Com. n. 162.

JOB. The whole of a thing which is to be done. In this sense it is employed in the Civil Code of Louisiana, art. 2727: "To build by plot, or to work by the job," says that article, "is to undertake a building for a certain stipulated price." See Duranton, du Contr. de Louage, liv. 3, t. 8, nn. 248, 263; Pothier, Contr. de Louage, nn. 392, 394; DEVIATION.

JOBBER. In Commercial Law. One who buys and sells articles for others. Stock-jobbers are those who buy and sell stocks for others. This term is also applied to those who speculate in stocks on their own account.

JOCALIA (Lat.). Jewels. This term was formerly more properly applied to those ornaments which women, although married, call their own. When these jocalia are not suitable to her degree, they are assets for the payment of debts; 1 Rolle, Abr. 911.

JOINDER. In Pleading. Union; concurrence.

Of Actions. IN CIVIL CASES. The union of two or more causes of action in the same declaration.

At common law, to allow a joinder, the form of actions must be such that the same plea may be pleaded and the same judgment given on all the counts of the declaration, or, the counts being of the same nature, that the same judgment may be given on all; 2 Saund. 177 c; 1 Term, 276; Comyns, Dig. Actions (G); 16 N. Y. 548; 6 Du. N. Y. 43; 4 Cal. 27; 12 La. An. 873; 33 N. H. 495. And all the causes of action must have accrued to the plaintiff or against the defendant; 12 La. An. 44; in the same right, though it may have been by different titles. Thus, a plaintiff cannot join a demand in his own right to one as representative of another person, or against the defendant himself to one against him in a representative capacity; 2 Viner, Abr. 62; Bacon, Abr. Action in General (C); 21 Barb. 245. See 25 Mo. 357.

In real actions there can be but one count.

In mixed actions joinder occurs, though but infrequently; 8 Co. 876; Poph. 24; Cro. Eliz. 290.

In personal actions joinder is frequent.

By statutes, in many of the states, joinder of actions is allowed and required to a greater extent than at common law.

In Criminal Cases. Different offences of the same general nature may be joined in the same indictment; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 253, 255; 29 Ala. N. S. 62; 10 Cush. 530; 28 Miss. 267; 4 Ohio St. 440; 6 McLean, 596; 4 Denio, 133; 18 Me. 103; 1 Cheves, 103; 4 Ark. 56; see 14 Gratt. 687; and it is no cause of arrest of judgment that they have been so joined; 29 E. L. & Eq. 536; 29 N. H. 184; 11 Ga. 225; 3 W. & M. 164; see 1 Strobh. 455; but not in the same count; 5 R. I. 385; 24 Mo. 353; 1 Rich. 260; 4 Humphr. 25; and an indictment may be quashed, in the discretion of the court, where the counts are joined in such manner as will confound the evidence; 17 Mo. 544; 19 Ark. 563, 577; 20 Miss. 468.

No court, it is said, will, however, permit a prisoner to be tried upon one indictment for two distinct and separate crimes; 29 N. H. 184. See 5 S. & R. 59; 12 id. 69; 10 Cush. 530.

In Demurrer. The answer made to a demurrer. Co. Litt. 71 b. The act of making such answer is merely a matter of form, but must be made within a reasonable time; 10 Rich. 49.

Of Issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it. For example, when one party denies the fact pleaded by his antagonist, who has tendered the issue thus, "And this he prays may be inquired of by the country," or, "and of this he puts himself upon the country," the party denying the fact may immediately subjoin, "And the said A B does the like;" when the issue is said to be joined.

Of Parties. In Civil Cases.

In Equity.

All parties materially interested in the subject of a suit in equity should be made parties, however numerous; Mitf. Eq. Plead. 144; 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 179; 3 Swanst. 139; 1 Pet. 299; 2 id. 482; 13 id. 359; 7 Cra. 72; 2 Mas. 181; 5 McLean, 444; 2 Paine, 536; 1 Johns. Ch. 349; 2 Bibb, 184; 24 Me. 20; 3 Vt. 160; 7 Conn. 342; 11 Gill & J. 426; 4 Rand. 451; 1 Bail. Ch. 384; 7 Ired. Eq. No. C. 261; 2 Stew. Ala. 280; 6 Blackf. 223. But, where the parties are very numerous, a portion may appear for all in the same situation; 16 Ves. 321; 16 How. 288; 11 Conn. 112; 3 Paige, Ch. 222; 19 Barb. 517.

Mere possible or contingent interest does not render its possessor a necessary party; 6 Wheat. 550; 3 Conn. 354; 5 Cow. 719. And see 3 Bibb, 86; 6 J. J. Marsh. 425.

There need be no connection but community of interests; 2 Ala. N. S. 209.

Plaintiffs.

All persons having a unity of interest in the subject-matter; 3 Barb. Ch. 397; 2 Ala. N. S. 209; and in the object to be attained; 2 Iowa, 55; 3 id. 443; who are entitled to relief; 14 Ala. N. S. 135; 17 id. 631; may join as plaintiffs. The claims must not arise under different contracts; 8 Pet. 123; 5 J. J. Marsh. 154; 6 id. 33; or to the same person in different capacities; 1 Busb. Eq. 196. And see 1 Paige, Ch. 637; 4 id. 23; 5 Metc. Mass. 118.

Assignor and assignee. The assignor of a contract for the sale of lands should be joined in a suit by the assignee for specific performance; 3 Sandf. Ch. 614; and the assignor of part of his interest in a patent in a suit by assignee for violation; 3 McLean, 350.

But he should not be joined where he has parted with all his legal and beneficial interest; 32 Me. 203, 343; 13 B. Monr. 210. The assignee of a mere chose in action may sue in his own name, in equity; 17 How. 43; 5 Wisc. 270; 6 B. Monr. 540; 7 id. 273.

Corporations. Two or more may join if their interest is joint; 8 Ves. 706. A corporation may join with its individual members to establish an exemption on their behalf; 3 Anstr. 738.

Husband and wife must join where the husband asserts an interest in behalf of his wife; 6 B. Monr. 514; 3 Hayw. 252; 5 Johns. Ch. 196; 9 Ala. 133: as, for a legacy; 5 Johns. Ch. 196; or for property devised or descended to her during coverture; 5 J. J. Marsh. 179, 600; or where he applies for an injunction to restrain a suit at law against both, affecting her interest; 1 Barb. Ch. 313.

Idiots and lunatics may be joined or not in bills by their committees, at the election of the committee, to set aside acts done by them whilst under imbecility; 1 Ch. Cas. 112; 1 Jac. 377; 7 Johns. Ch. 139. They must be joined in suits brought for the partition of real estate; 3 Barb. Ch. 24. In England it seems to be the custom to join; 2 Vern. 678. See Story, Eq. Pl. § 64, and note; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1336, and note.

Infants. Several may join in the same bill for an account of the rents and profits of their estate; 2 Bland, Ch. 68.

Trustee and cestui que trust should join in a bill to recover the trust fund; 5 Dana, 128; but need not to foreclose a mortgage; 5 Ala. 447; 4 Abb. Pr. 106; nor to redeem one made by the trustee; 2 Gray, 190. And see 3 Edw. Ch. 175; 7 Ala. N. S. 386.

Defendants.

In general, all persons interested in the subject-matter of a suit who cannot be made plaintiffs should be made defendants. They may claim under different rights if they possess an interest centring in the point in issue; 4 Cow. 682.

Bills for discovery need not contain all the parties interested as defendants; 1 M'Cord, Ch. 301; and a person may be joined merely as defendant in such bill; 3 Ala. 214. A person should not be joined as a party to such bill who may be called as a witness on trial; 13 Ill. 212; 3 Barb. Ch. 482. And see 1 Chandl. 286.

Assignor and assignee. An assignor who retains even the slightest interest in the subject-matter must be made a party; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. 395; 1 Green, Ch. 347; 2 Paige, Ch. 289; 11 Cush. 111: as a covenantee in a suit by a remote assignee; 1 Dana, 585; and the original plaintiff in a creditor's bill by the assignee of a judgment; 4 B. Monr. 594.

A fraudulent assignee need not be joined in a bill by a creditor to obtain satisfaction out of a fund so transferred; 1 Paige, Ch. 637. The assignee of a judgment must be a party in a suit to stay proceedings; 11 Paige, Ch. 438.

A party who acquires his interest pendente lite cannot be made a party; 5 Ill. 354. Otherwise of an assignee in insolvency, who must be made a party; 3 Johns. 543; 1 Johns. Ch. 339; 10 Paige, Ch. 20.

Corporations and associations. A corporation charged with a duty should be joined with the trustees it has appointed, in a suit for a breach; 1 Gray, 399; 7 Paige, Ch. 281. Where the legal title is in part of the members of an association, no others need be joined; 1 Gilm. 187.

Officers and agents may be made parties merely for purposes of discovery; 9 Paige, Ch. 188.

Creditors who have repudiated an assignment and pursued their remedy at law are properly made parties to a bill brought by the others against the trustee for an account and the enforcement of the trust; 3 Wisc. 367. So, when judgments are impeached and sought to be set aside for fraud, the plaintiffs therein are indispensable parties to the bill; 20 Ala. 200. To a bill brought against an assignee by a creditor claiming the final balance, the preferred creditors need not be made parties; 28 Vt. 465. See, also, 20 How. 94; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 299; 3 Metc. Mass. 474; 11 Paige, Ch. 49.

Debtors must in some cases be joined with the executor in a suit by a creditor; though not ordinarily; Story, Eq. Pl. § 227; 1 Johns. Ch. 305. Where there are several debtors, all must be joined; 1 M'Cord, Ch. 301; unless utterly irresponsible; 1 Mich. 446. Judgment debtors must in some cases be joined in suits between the creditor and assignees or mortgagees; 5 Sandf. 271.

Executors and administrators should be made parties to a bill to dissolve a partnership; 21 Ga. 6; to a bill against heirs to discover assets; 7 B. Monr. 127; to a bill by creditors to subject lands fraudulently conveyed by the testator their debtor, to the satisfaction of their debt; 9 Mo. 304. See, also, 21 Ga. 433; 6 Munf. 520; 7 E. L. & Eq. 54.

Foreclosure suits. All persons having an interest, legal or equitable, existing at the commencement of a suit to foreclose mortgaged premises, must be made parties, or they will not be bound; 4 Johns. Ch. 605; 10 Paige, Ch. 307; 10 Ala. N. S. 283; 3 Ark. 364; 6 McLean, 416; 11 Tex. 526; including the mortgagor within a year after the sale of his interest by the sheriff; 4 Johns. Ch. 649; and his heirs and personal representative after his death; 2 Bland, 684. But bond-holders for whose benefit a mortgage has been made by a corporation to a trustee need not be made parties; 5 Gray, 162; Jones, Railroad Securities, § 42. A person claiming adversely to mortgagor and mortgagee cannot be made a defendant to such suit; 3 Barb. Ch. 438.

Heirs, distributees, and devisees. All the heirs should be made parties to a bill respecting the real estate of the testator; 3 N. Y. 261; 2 Ala. N. S. 571; 4 J. J. Marsh. 231; 7 id. 432; 5 Ill. 452; although the testator was one of several mortgagees of the vendee, and the bill be brought to enforce the vendor's lien; 6 B. Monr. 74; but need not to a bill affecting personalty; 1 M'Cord, Ch. 280. All the devisees are necessary parties to a bill to set aside the will; 2 Dana, 155; or to enjoin executors from selling lands belonging to the testator's estate; 2 T. B. Monr. 30. All the distributees are necessary parties to a bill for distribution; 1 B. Monr. 27; to a bill by the widow of the intestate against the administrator to recover her share of the estate; 4 Bibb, 543; and to a bill against an administrator to charge the estate with an annual payment to preserve the residue; 1 Hill, Ch. 51. See, also, 11 Paige, Ch. 49; 2 T. B. Monr. 95; 5 id. 573.

Idiots and lunatics should be joined with their committees when their interests conflict and must be settled in the suit; 2 Johns. Ch. 242; 3 Paige, Ch. 470.

Partners must, in general, be all joined in a bill for dissolution of the partnership, but need not if without the jurisdiction; 17 How. 468; 12 Metc. 329. And see 3 Stor. 335.

Assignees of insolvent partners must be joined; 10 Me. 255.

Dormant partners need not be joined when not known in the transaction on which the bill is founded; 7 Blackf. 218.

Principal and agent should be joined if there be a charge of fraud in which the agent participated; 3 Stor. 611; 12 Ark. 720; and the agent should be joined where he binds himself individually; 3 A. K. Marsh. 484.

See, also, 5 H. & J. 147; 8 Ired. Eq. 229; 2 D. & B. 357; 1 Barb. Ch. 157.

Trustee and cestui que trust. If a trustee has parted with the trust fund, the cestui que trust may proceed against the trustee alone to compel satisfaction, or the fraudulent assignee may be joined with him at the election of the complainant; 2 Paige, Ch. 278.

The trustees under a settlement of real estate, against whom a trust or power given to them to sell the estate is to be enforced, are necessary parties to a suit for that purpose; 39 E. L. & Eq. 76. See, also, id. 225; 24 Miss. 597; 19 How. 576; 5 Du. N. Y. 168; 8 Md. 34.

At Law.

In actions ex contractu.

All who have a joint legal interest or are jointly entitled must join in an action on a contract, even though it be in terms several, or be entered into by one in behalf of all; Brown, Partn. 18; 1 Saund. 153; Archb. Civ. Pl. 58; Metc. Yelv. 177, n. 1; 10 East, 418; 6 S. & R. 308; 15 Me. 295; 3 Brev. 249; 3 Ark. 565; 16 Barb. 325: as, where the consideration moves from several jointly; 2 Wms. Saund. 116 a; 4 M. & W. 295; 5 id. 698; or was taken from a joint fund; 19 Johns. 218; 1 Meigs, 394.

One of several joint obligees, payees, or assignees may sue in the name of all; 10 Yerg. 235. See 4 Saund. 657.

Some contracts may be considered as either joint or several, and in such case all may join, or each may sue separately; but part cannot join leaving the others to sue separately.

In an action for a breach of a joint contract made by several, all the contracting parties should be made defendants; 1 Saund. 158 n.; even though one or more be bankrupt or insolvent; 2 Maule & S. 33; but see 1 Wils. 89; or an infant; but not if the contract be utterly void as to him; 3 Taunt. 307; 5 Johns. 160, 280; 11 id. 101; 5 Mass. 270; 1 Pick. 500.

On a joint and several contract, each may be sued separately, or all together; 1 Pet. 73; 1 Wend. 524.

Executors and administrators must bring their actions in the joint names of all; 5 Scott, N. R. 728; 1 Saund. 291 g; 2 id. 213; 2 N. & M'C. 70; 2 Penning. 721; 1 Dutch. 374; even though some are infants; Broom, Part. 104.

All the executors who have proved the will are to be joined as defendants in an action on the testator's contract; Broom, Part. 196; 1 Lev. 161; 1 Cr. M. & R. 74; 4 Bingh. 704. But an executor de son tort is not to be joined with the rightful executor. And the executors are not to be joined with other persons who were joint contractors with the deceased; 2 Wheat. 344; 6 S. & R. 272; 5 Cal. 173.

Administrators are to be joined, like executors; Comyns, Dig. Administrators (B 12). Foreign executors and administrators are not recognized as such, in general; 2 Jones, Eq. 276; 10 Rich. 393; 7 Ind. 211.

Husband and wife must join to recover rent due the wife before coverture on her lease while sole; Co. Litt. 55 b; Cro. Eliz. 700; on the lease by both of lands in which she has a life estate, where the covenant runs to both; 20 Barb. 269; but on a covenant generally to both, the husband may sue alone; 2 Mod. 217; 1 B. & C. 443; 1 Bulstr. 331; in all actions in implied promises to the wife acting in autre droit; Comyns, Dig. Baron & F. (V); 9 M. & W. 694; 4 Tex. 283; as to suit on a bond to both, see 2 Penning. 827; on a contract running with land of which they are joint assignees; Woodf. Landl. & T. 190; Cro. Car. 503; in general, to recover any of the wife's choses in action where the cause of action would survive to her; Comyns, Dig. Baron & F. (V); 1 Chitty, Pl. 17; 1 Maule & S. 180; 1 P. A. Browne, 263; 13 Wend. 271; 10 Pick. 470; 9 Ired. 163; 21 Conn. 557; 24 Miss. 245; 2 Wisc. 22.

They may join at the husband's election in suit on a covenant to repair, when they become joint grantees of a reversion; Cro. Jac. 399; to recover the value of the wife's choses in action; 5 Harr. Del. 57; 24 Conn. 45; 2 Wisc. 22; 2 Mod. 217; 2 Ad. & E. 30; 2 Maule & S. 396, n.; in case of joinder the action survives to her; 6 M. & W. 426; 10 B. & C. 558; in case of an express promise to the wife, or to both where she is the meritorious cause of action; Cro. Jac. 77, 205; 1 Chitty, Pl. 18; 5 Harr. Del. 57; 32 Ala. N. S. 30.

They must, in general, be joined in actions on contracts entered into by the wife dum sola; 1 Kebl. 281; 2 Term, 480; 7 id. 348; 1 Taunt. 217; 7 id. 432; 8 Johns. 149; 1 Grant, Cas. 21; 5 Harr. Del. 357; 25 Vt. 207; seb 15 Johns. 403; 17 id. 167; 7 Mass. 291; where the cause of action accrues against the wife in autre droit; Cro. Car. 518. They may be joined when the husband promises anew to pay the debt of the wife contracted dum sola; 7 Term, 349; for rent or breaches of covenant on a joint lease to both for the wife's benefit; Broom, Part. 178, 179.

Joint tenants must join in debt or an avowry for rent; Broom, Part. 24; but one of several may make a separate demise, thus severing the tenancy; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (H 2); 12 East, 39, 57, 61; 3 Campb. 190; and one may maintain ejectment against his co-tenants; Woodf. Landl. & T. 789.

Partners must all join in suing third parties on partnership transactions; 1 Esp. 183; 2 Campb. 302; 18 Barb. 534; 7 Rich. 118; including only those who were such at the time the cause of action accrued; Broom, Part. 65; although one or more may have become insolvent; 2 Cr. & M. 318; but not joining the personal representative of a deceased partner; 2 Salk. 444; 2 Maule & S. 225; 4 B. & Ald. 374; 9 B. & C. 538; with a limitation to the actual parties to the instrument in case of specialties; 6 Maule & S. 75; and including dormant partners or not, at the election of the ostensible partners; 2 Esp. 468; 10 B. & C. 671; 4 B. & Ald. 437. See 4 Wend. 628. Where one partner contracts in his name for the firm, he may sue alone, or all may join; 4 B. & Ad. 815; 4 B. & Ald. 437; but alone if he was evidently dealt with as the sole party in interest; 1 Maule & S. 249.

The surviving partners; 3 Ball & B. 30; 1 B. & Ald. 29, 522; 18 Barb. 592; must all be joined as defendants in suits on partnership contracts; 1 East, 30. And third parties are not bound to know the arrangements of partners amongst themselves; 4 Maule & S. 482; 8 M. & W. 703, 710.

A partner need not be joined if he was not known as such at the time of making the contract and there was no indication of his being a partner; 1 Bosw. 28; 19 Ark. 701. And see PARTNERSHIP.

Tenants in common should join in an action on any joint contract; Comyns, Dig. Abatement (E 10).

Trustees must all join in bringing an action; 1 Wend. 470.

In actions ex delicto.

Joint owners must, in general, join in an action for a tortious injury to their property; 1 Saund. 291 g; 6 Term, 766; 7 id. 297; 11 N. H. 141; in trover, for its conversion; 5 East, 407; in replevin, to get possession; 6 Pick. 571; 8 Mo. 522; 15 Me. 245; or in detinue, for its detention, or for injury to land; 3 Bingh. 455; 29 Barb. 9.

So may several owners who sustain a joint damage; 1 W. & M. 229.

For injury to the person, plaintiffs cannot, in general, join; 2 Wms. Saund. 117 a; Cro. Car. 512; Cro. Eliz. 472.

Partners may join for slanders; 3 Bingh. 452; 10 id. 270; 1 C. & K. 568; 8 C. & P. 708; for false representations; 17 Mass. 182; injuring the partnership.

An action for the infringement of letters patent may be brought jointly by all the parties who at the time of the infringement were the holders of the title; 1 Gall. 429; 1 McAll. 82.

In cases where several can join in the commission of a tort, they may be joined in an action as defendants; 3 East, 62; 6 Taunt. 29; 14 Johns. 462; 19 id. 381; as, in trover; 1 Maule & S. 588; in trespass; 2 Wms. 117 a; for libel; Broom, Part. 249,—not for slander; Cro. Jac. 647; in trespass; 1 C. & M. 96.

Husband and wife must join in action for direct damages resulting from personal injury to the wife; 3 Bla. Com. 140; 4 Iowa, 420; in detinue, for the property which was the wife's before marriage; 2 Tayl. 266; see 30 Ala. N. S. 582; for injury to the wife's property before marriage; 2 Jones, No. C. 59; where the right of action accrues to the wife in autre droit; Comyns, Dig. Baron & F. (V); 11 Mod. 177; 2 B. & P. 407; and, generally, in all cases where the cause of action by law survives to the wife; 4 B. & Ald. 523; 10 Pick. 470; 35 Me. 89.

They may join for slander of the wife, if the words spoken are actionable per se, for the direct injury; 4 M. & W. 5; 22 Barb. 396; 2 Hill, N. Y. 309; 2 T. B. Monr. 56; 25 Mo. 580; 4 Iowa, 420; 11 Cush. 10; and in ejectment for lands of the wife; Broom, Part. 235; 1 Bulstr. 21.

They must be joined as defendants for torts committed by the wife before marriage; Co. Litt. 351 b; 5 Binn. 43; or during coverture; 19 Barb. 321; 2 E. D. Smith, 90; or for libel or slander uttered by her; 5 C. & P. 484; and in action for waste by the wife, before marriage, as administratrix; 2 Wms. Ex. 1441.

They may be joined in trespass for their joint act; 2 Stra. 1094; 4 Bingh. N. C. 96; 3 B. & Ald. 687; 6 Gratt. 213.

Joint tenants and parceners, during the continuance of the joint estate, must join in all actions ex delicto relative thereto, as in trespass to their land, and in trover or replevin for their goods; 2 Bla. Com. 182, 188; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (K); 2 Salk. 205; 29 Barb. 29. Joint tenants may join in an action for slander of the title to their estate; 3 Bingh. 455. They should be sued jointly, in trespass, trover, or case, for any thing respecting the land held in common; 5 Term, 651; Comyns, Dig. Abatement (F 6); 1 Wms. Saund. 291 e. Joint tenants should join in an avowry or cognizance for rent; 3 Salk. 207; 1 id. 390; or for taking cattle damage feasant; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (K); or one joint tenant should avow in his own right, and as bailiff to the other; 3 Salk. 207. But a tenant in common cannot avow the taking of the cattle of a stranger upon the land damage feasant, without making himself bailiff or servant to his co-tenant; 2 H. Bla. 388, 389; Bacon, Abr. Replevin (K).

Master and servant, where co-trespassers, should be joined though they be not equally culpable; 2 Lev. 172; 1 Bingh. 418; 5 B. & C. 559. Partners may join for a joint injury in relation to the joint property; 3 C. & P. 196. They may be joined as defendants where property is taken by one of the firm for its benefit; 1 C. & M. 93; and where the firm makes fraudulent representations as to the credit of a third person, whereby the firm gets benefit; 17 Mass. 182.

Tenants in common must join for a trespass upon the lands held in common; Littleton, § 315; 15 Johns. 497; 8 Cow. 304; 28 Me. 136; or for taking away their common property; Cro. Eliz. 143; or for detaining it; 1 Hill, N. Y. 234; or for a nuisance to their estate; 14 Johns. 246.

IN CRIMINAL CASES. Two or more persons who have committed a crime may be jointly indicted therefor; 7 Gratt. 619; 6 McLean, 596; 10 Ired. 153; 8 Blackf. 205; only where the offence is such that it may be committed by two jointly; 3 Sneed, 107.

They may have a separate trial, however, in the discretion of the court; 15 Ill. 536; 1 Park. Cr. Ca. 424; 7 Gratt. 619; 10 Cush. 530; 5 Strobh. 85; 9 Ala. N. S. 137; and in some states as a matter of right; 1 Park. Cr. Ca. 371.

See Dicey, Parties; Steph. Pl.

JOINT ACTION. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See 1 Parsons, Contr.; ACTIONS; JOINDER, § 1.

JOINT BOND. The bond of two or more obligors, the action to enforce which must be joint against them all.

JOINT AND SEVERAL BOND. A bond of two or more obligors, who bind themselves jointly and severally to the obligees, who can sue all the obligors jointly, or any one of them separately, for the whole amount, but cannot bring a joint action against part,—that is, treat it as joint as to some and several as to others. Upon the payment of the whole by one of such obligors, a right to contribution arises in his favor against the other obligors.

JOINT CONTRACT. One in which the contractors are jointly bound to perform the promise or obligation therein contained, or entitled to receive the benefit of such promise or obligation.

It is a general rule that a joint contract survives, whatever may be the beneficial interests of the parties under it. When a partner, covenantor, or other person entitled, having a joint interest in a contract not running with the land, dies, the right to sue survives in the other partner, etc.; 1 Dall. 65, 248; Addison, Contr. 285. And when the obligation or promise is to perform something jointly by the obligors or promisors, and one dies, the action must be brought against the survivor; Hamm. Partn. 156; Barb. Partn.

When all the parties interested in a joint contract die, the action must be brought by the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligee against the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligor; Add. Contr. 285. See CONTRACTS; PARTIES TO ACTIONS; CO-OBLIGOR.

JOINT EXECUTORS. Those who are joined in the execution of a will.

Joint executors are considered in law as but one person representing the testator; and, therefore, the acts of any one of them, which relate either to the delivery, gift, sale, payment, possession, or release of the testator's goods, are deemed, as regards the persons with whom they contract, the acts of all; Bacon, Abr.; 11 Viner, Abr. 358; Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 12); 1 Dane, Abr. 583; 2 Litt. Ky. 315; Dy. 23, in marg.; 16 S. & R. 337. But an executor cannot, without the knowledge of his co-executor, confess a judgment for a claim part of which was barred by the act of limitations, so as to bind the estate of the testator; 6 Penn. 267.

As a general rule, it may be laid down that each executor is liable for his own wrong or devastacit only, and not for that of his colleague. He may be rendered liable, however, for the misplaced confidence which he may have reposed in his co-executor: as, if he signs a receipt for money, in conjunction with another executor, and he receives no part of the money, but agrees that the other executor shall retain it, and apply it to his own use, this is his own misapplication, for which he is responsible; 1 P. Wms. 241, n. 1; 1 Sch. & L. 341; 2 id. 231; 7 East, 256; 11 Johns. 16; 11 S. & R. 71; 5 Johns. Ch. 283. And see 2 Brown, Ch. 116; 3 id. 112. Fonbl. Eq. b. 2, c. 7, s. 5, n. k.

Upon the death of one of several joint executors, the right of administering the estate of the testator devolves upon the survivors; 3 Atk. 509; Comyns, Dig. Administration (B 12).

JOINT INDICTMENT. One indictment brought against two or more offenders, charging the defendants jointly. It may be where there is a joint criminal act, without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants: thus, there may be a joint indictment against the joint keepers of a gaming-house. 1 Ventr. 302; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 240.

JOINT STOCK BANKS. In English Law. A species of quasi corporations, or companies regulated by deeds of settlement.

In some respects they stand in the same situation as other unincorporated bodies; but they differ from the latter in this, that they are invested by certain statutes with powers and privileges usually incident to corporations. These enactments provide for the continuance of the partnership notwithstanding a change of partners. The death, bankruptcy, or the sale by a partner of his share, does not affect the identity of the partnership; it continues the same body, under the same name, by virtue of the act of parliament, notwithstanding these changes. 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, s. 9.

JOINT STOCK COMPANY. An association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital contributed by the members composing it, such capital being commonly divided into shares, of which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner. The business of the association is under the control of certain selected individuals, called directors; such an association was, at common law, merely a large partnership; Shelford, Joint St. Comp. 1. A quasi partnership, invested by statutes, in England and many of the states, with some of the privileges of a corporation. See 10 Wall. 556; L. R. 4 Eq. 695.

There is in such a company no dilectus personarum, that is, no choice about admitting partners; the shares into which the capital is divided are transferable at the pleasure of the person holding them, and the assignee becomes a partner by virtue of the transfer, and the rights and duties of the partners or members are determined by articles of association, or, in England, by a deed of settlement. A partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares so as to be transferable without the express consent of all the co-partners. 1 Parsons, Contr. 121. The 7 & 8 Vict. includes within the term joint stock company all life, fire, and marine insurance companies, and every partnership consisting of more than twenty-five members. In this country, where there were formerly no statutes providing for joint stock companies, they were rather to be regarded as partnerships; 2 Lindl. Part. 1083; 63 Penn. 273; 3 Kent, 262. Statutes regulating the formation of these companies exist in New York, Massachusetts, and Maine. In New York they have all the attributes of a corporation, except the right to have and use a common seal, and an action is properly brought for or against the president or treasurer; 74 N. Y. 234; but it has been held that a company formed under the New York law, is not a corporation, but must be sued as a partnership; 128 Mass. 445; 60 Me. 468; contra, 50 Barb. 157; 6 N. Y. 542. An English joint stock company, however, is held to be a corporation in this country; 10 Wall. 566; see infra. The words, joint stock company, in the Massachusetts statutes, refer to companies organized under the general laws as corporations; 121 Mass. 524.

"A joint stock company (in this case a fire insurance company) which by its deed of settlement in England and certain acts of parliament is endowed with the faculties and powers mentioned below, is a corporation and will be so held in this country, notwithstanding the acts of parliament declaring it shall not be so held. These faculties and powers are: 1. A distinctive artificial name by which it can make contracts. 2. A statutory form to sue and be sued in the name of its officers as representing the association. 3. A statutory recognition of the association as an entity distinct from its members, by allowing them to sue and be sued by it. 4. A provision for its perpetuity by transfer of its shares, so as to secure succession of membership. Such corporations, whether organized under the laws of a state of the Union, or a foreign government, may be taxed by another state, for the privilege of conducting their corporate business within the latter." 10 Wall. 566. See Shelf.; Steph.; Joint St. Co.; Lindl. Partn.

JOINT TENANTS. Two or more persons to whom are granted lands or tenements to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will. 2 Bla. Com. 179. The estate which they thus hold is called an estate in joint tenancy. See ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY; JUS ACCRESCENDI; SURVIVOR.

JOINT TRUSTEES. Two or more persons who are intrusted with property for the benefit of one or more others.

Unlike joint executors, joint trustees cannot act separately, but must join both in conveyances and receipts; for one cannot sell without the others, or receive more of the consideration-money or be more a trustee than his partner. The trust having been given to the whole, it requires their joint act to do anything under it. They are not responsible for money received by their co-trustees, if the receipt be given for the mere purposes of form. But if receipts be given under circumstances purporting that the money, though not received by both, was under the control of both, such a receipt shall charge, and the consent that the other shall misapply the money, particularly where he has it in his power to secure it, renders him responsible; 11 S. & R. 71. See 1 Sch. & L. 341; 5 Johns. Ch. 283; Bac. Abr. Uses and Trusts, K; 2 Brown, Ch. 116; 3 id. 112.

JOINTRESS, JOINTURESS. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. Co. Litt. 46.

JOINTURE. A joint estate limited to both husband and wife. A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least.

Jointures are regulated by the statute of 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, commonly called the statute of uses.

To make a good jointure, the following circumstances must concur, namely: It must take effect, in possession or profit, immediately from the death of the husband. It must be for the wife's life, or for some greater estate. It must be limited to the wife herself, and not to any other person in trust for her. It must be made in satisfaction for the wife's whole dower, and not of part of it only. The estate limited to the wife must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her whole dower. It must be made before marriage. A jointure attended with all these circumstances is binding on the widow, and is a complete bar to the claim of dower; or, rather, it prevents its ever arising. But there are other modes of limiting an estate to a wife, which, Lord Coke says, are good jointures within the statute, provided the wife accepts of them after the death of the husband. She may, however, reject them, and claim her dower; Cruise, Dig. tit. 7; 2 Bla. Com. 137. In its more enlarged sense, a jointure signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife; 2 Bla. Com. 137. See 14 Viner, Abr. 540; Bacon, Abr.; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1761 et seq.; Washb. R. P.

JOUR. A French word, signifying day. It is used in our old law-books: as, tout jours, forever. It is also frequently employed in the composition of words: as, journal, a day-book; journeyman, a man who works by the day; journeys account.

JOURNAL. In Maritime Law. The book kept on board of a ship or other vessel which contains an account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. Another name for log-book. Chitty, Law of Nat. 199.

In Commercial Law. A book used among merchants, in which the contents of the waste-book are separated every month, and entered on the debtor and creditor side, for more convenient posting in the ledger.

In Legislation. An account of the proceedings of a legislative body.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, directs that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may, in their judgment, require secrecy." See 2 Story, Const. 301.

The constitutions of the several states contain similar provisions.

The journal of either house is evidence of the action of that house upon all matters before it; 7 Cow. 613; Cowp. 17. It is a public record of which the courts may take judicial notice; 5 W. Va. 85; s. c. 17 Am. Rep. 28; 16 id. 647; 94 U. S. 260. Contra, 45 Ill. 119; 2 Cent. L. J. 407. If it should appear therefrom that any act did not receive the requisite vote, or that the act was not constitutionally adopted, the courts may adjudge the act void; Cooley, Const. Lim. 164. But every reasonable presumption is made in favor of the action of a legislative body; it will not be presumed from the mere silence of the journals that either house disregarded a constitutional requirement in the passage of an act, unless in cases where the constitution has required the journals to show the action that has been taken; 25 Ill. 181; 11 Ind. 424.

JOURNEYS ACCOUNT. In English Practice. A new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court: hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accomptes or counted. This writ was quasi a continuance of the first writ, and so related back to it as to oust the defendant or tenant of his voucher, plea of non-tenure, joint tenancy fully administered, or any other plea arising upon matter happening after date of the first writ. Co. Litt. fol. 9 b.

This mode of proceeding has fallen into disuse, the practice now being to permit that writ to be quashed, and to sue out another. See Termes de la Ley; Bacon, Abr. Abatement (Q); 14 Viner, Abr. 558; 4 Comyn, Dig. 714; 7 M. & G. 762; 8 Cra. 84.

JUBILACION. In Spanish Law. The right of a public officer to retire from office, retaining his title and his salary, either in whole or in part, after he has attained the age of fifty years and been in public service at least twenty years, whenever his infirmities prevent him from discharging the duties of his office.

JUDAISMUS (Lat.). The religion and rites of the Jews. Du Cange. A quarter set apart for residence of Jews. Du Cange. A usurious rate of interest. 1 Mon. Angl. 839; 2 id. 10, 665. Sex marcus sterlingorum ad acquietandam terram prædictum de Judaismo, inquo fuit impignorata. Du Cange. An income anciently accruing to the king from the Jews. Blount.

JUDEX (Lat.). In Roman Law. One who, either in his own right or by appointment of the magistrate for the special case, judged causes.

Thus, the prætor was formerly called judex. But, generally, prætors and magistrates who judge of their own right are distinguished from judices, who are private persons, appointed by the prætor, on application of the plaintiff, to try the cause, as soon as issue is joined, and furnished by him with instructions as to the legal principles involved. They were variously called judices delegati, or pedanei, or speciales. They resemble in many respects jurors: thus, both are private persons, brought in at a certain stage of the proceedings, viz., issue joined, to try the cause, under instructions from the judge as to the law of the case. But civilians are not clear whether the judices had to decide the fact alone, or the law and fact. The judex resembles in many respects the arbitrator, or arbiter, the chief differences being, first, that the latter is appointed in cases of trust and confidence, the former in cases where the relations of the parties are governed by strict law (in actionibus strictis); second, the latter has the whole control of case, and decides according to equity and good conscience, the former by strict formulæ; third, that the latter may be a magistrate, the former must be a private person; fourth, that the award of the arbiter derives its force from the agreement of submission, while the decree of the judex has its sanction in the command of the prætor to try the cause; Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210, note; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, Kaufmann ed. § 193, note.

There was generally one judex, sometimes three,—in which case the decision of two, in the absence of the third, had no effect. Calvinus, Lex. Down to the time of handing over the cause to the judex, that is, till issue joined, the proceedings were before the prætor, and were said to be in jure; after that, before the judex, and were said to be in judicio. In all this we see the germ of the Anglo-Saxon system of judicature. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 67.

In Civil Law. A judge who conducts the trial from beginning to end; magistratus. The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1327.

In Old English Law. A juror. Spelman, Gloss. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i. e. a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge. Bracton, fol. 401, 402.

JUDEX ORDINARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A judge who had jurisdiction by his own right, not by another's appointment. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Blackstone says that judices ordinarii decided only questions of fact, while questions of law were referred to the centumviri; but this would seem to be rather the definition of judices selecti; and not all questions of law were referred to the centumviri, but particular actions: e. g. querela inofficiosi testamenti. See 2 Bla. Com. 315; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr. Centumviri.

JUDGE. A public officer lawfully appointed to decide litigated questions according to law.

An officer so named in his commission, who presides in some court.

In its most extensive sense the term includes all officers appointed to decide litigated questions while acting in that capacity, including justices of the peace, and even jurors, it is said, who are judges of the facts; 4 Dall. 229; 3 Yeates, 300. In ordinary legal use, however, the term is limited to the sense of the second of the definitions here given; 15 Ill. 388; unless it may be that the case of a justice or commissioner acting judicially is to be considered an extension of this meaning. See 3 Cush. 584.

Judges are appointed or elected in a variety of ways in the United States. For the federal courts they are appointed by the president, by and with the consent of the senate; in some of the states they are appointed by the governor, the governor and senate, or by the legislature. See 11 Ind. 357; 29 Penn. 129; 2 Greene, Iowa, 458; 6 Ired. 5. The judges of the federal courts, and of the courts of some of the states, hold their offices during good behavior; see 3 Cush. 584; of others, as in New York, during good behavior, or until they shall attain a certain age; and of others, for a limited term of years. See 30 Miss. 206.

Impartiality is the first duty of a judge: if he has any (the slightest) interest in the cause, he is disqualified from sitting as judge; aliquis non debet esse judex in propriâ causâ; 8 Co. 118; 6 Pick. 109; 21 id. 101; 14 S. & R. 157; 4 Ohio St. 675; 17 Ga. 253; 17 Barb. 414; 22 N. H. 473; 19 Conn. 585. It is said to be discretionary with him whether he will sit in a cause in which he has been of counsel; 2 A. K. Marsh. 517; Coxe, N. J. 164. See 2 Binn. 454; 5 Ind. 230. But the practice is to refuse to sit in such case. And in 5 Coldw. 217, it was held that where the judge who rendered the judgment in the case had been counsel in it, the judgment was a nullity. A magistrate authorized to sign writs cannot sign them in his own case; 47 Conn. 316.

When the lord chancellor, who was a shareholder in a company in whose favor the vice chancellor had made a decree, affirmed this decree, the house of lords reversed this decree on that ground; 3 H. L. C. 759; where there is no other tribunal that can act, the judge may hear the case; 5 H. L. C. 88; 19 Johns. 501; contra, Hopk. Ch. 2; 105 Mass. 221. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 515; 25 Mich. 83.

It has been held that where the interest of the judge is merely that of a corporator in a municipal corporation, the legislature may provide that this shall constitute no disqualification when the corporation is a party — apparently on the ground that the interest is insignificant; 1 Gray, 475. But it is doubtful whether even the legislature can go beyond this class of cases and abolish the maxim; Cooley, Const. Lim. 516.

If one of the judges is disqualified on this ground, a judgment rendered will be void, even though the proper number may have concurred in the result, which includes the interested judge; 6 Q. B. 753. The objection may be raised for the first time in the appellate court; 6 Cush. 332; 3 H. L. C. 387.

A judge is not competent as a witness in a cause trying before him, for this among other reasons, that he can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding on the admissibility of his own testimony, or of weighing it against that of another; 2 Mart. La. N. S. 312; 2 Cal. 358. See Comyn, Dig. Courts (B 4), (C 2), (E 1), (P 16), Justices (I 1, 2, 3); Bacon, Abr. Courts (B); 1 Kent, 291; CHARGE.

While acting within the bounds of his jurisdiction, the judge is not responsible for any error of judgment or mistake he may commit as judge; 12 Co. 23; 2 Dall. 160; 2 N. & M'C. 168; 1 Day, Conn. 315; 5 Johns. 282; 9 id. 395; 3 A. K. Marsh. 76; 1 South. 74; 1 N. H. 374. It has been said that a judge of a court of superior jurisdiction is not liable for acts done in excess of his jurisdiction; 2 Bla. Rep. 1141 (dictum); 13 Wall. 335. Field, J., in 7 Wall. 523, said, obiter, that a judge of a court of superior jurisdiction is not liable when he acts in excess of his jurisdiction, except for malice. In 73 N. Y. 12, this point was so decided, but the court drew a distinction between the case where the judge had acquired no jurisdiction at all, and the case where the act was merely in excess of jurisdiction after jurisdiction had been acquired. There the judge of the circuit court had imposed a resentence upon a prisoner, and he was accordingly imprisoned; the supreme court held the second sentence illegal, and discharged the prisoner. These cases have been doubted in an article in 15 Am. L. Rev. 442. There is no distinction between a judge acting in court and acting judicially out of court, that is, in chambers; 3 Moore, P. C. 52; Wilm. 208.

"A judge of a court not of record is not liable for any injury sustained which is the result of an honest error of judgment in a matter wherein the court has jurisdiction, and when the act done is not of a purely ministerial nature." The rule is thus stated in 15 Am. L. Rev. 444. See further an article in Ir. L. T. and Sol. J., Nov. 13, 1880; 6 Am. Dec. 303; 29 Am. Rep. 80 n.; 23 Am. Rep. 690.

A judge who acts corruptly may be impeached; 5 Johns. 282; 8 Cow. 178; 4 Dall. 225.

JUDGE ADVOCATE. An officer of a court-martial who is to discharge certain duties at the trial of offenders. His duties are to prosecute in the name of the United States; but he shall so far consider himself as counsel for the prisoner, after the prisoner shall have made his plea, as to object to leading questions to any of the witnesses, or any question to the prisoner the answer to which might tend to criminate himself. He is, further, to swear the members of the court before they proceed upon any trial. Rules and Articles of War, art. 69; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1001; Holt, Dig. passim.

JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE. In English Practice. The written statement of the judge who tried the cause that one of the parties is entitled to costs in the action. It is very important in some cases that these certificates should be obtained at the trial. See Tidd, Pr. 879; 3 Chitty, Pr. 458, 486; 3 Campb. 316; 5 B. & Ald. 796. A statement of the opinion of the court, signed by the judges, upon a question of law submitted to them by the chancellor for their decision. See 3 Bla. Com. 453; CASE STATED.

JUDGE-MADE LAW. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statute, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is sometimes used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent. Cooley, Const. Lim. 70, n. See Austin, Prov. of Jur.

JUDGE'S NOTES. Short statements, noted by a judge on the trial of a cause, of what transpires in the course of such trial.

They usually contain a statement of the testimony of witnesses, of documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

In general, judge's notes are not evidence of what transpired at a former trial, nor can they be read to prove what a deceased witness swore to on such former trial; for they are no part of the record, and he is not officially bound to make them. But in chancery, when a new trial is ordered of an issue sent out of chancery to a court of law, and it is suggested that some of the witnesses in the former trial are of an advanced age, an order may be made that, in the event of death or inability to attend, their testimony may be read from the judge's notes; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 166.

JUDGMENT. In Practice. The conclusion of law upon facts found, or admitted by the parties, or upon their default in the course of the suit. Tidd, Pr. 930; 32 Md. 147.

The decision on sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury. 3 Bla. Com. 395; 12 Minn. 437. It is said to be the end of the law; 51 Penn. 373.

Judgment of cassetur breve or billa (that the writ or bill be quashed) is a judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ or action. Steph. Pl. 130, 131.

Judgment by confession is a judgment entered for the plaintiff in case the defendant, instead of entering a plea, confesses the action, or at any time before trial confesses the action and withdraws his plea and other allegations.

Contradictory judgment is a judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard either in support of their claims or in their defence. 11 La. 366. It is used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Judgment by default is a judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant.

Judgment in error is a judgment rendered by a court of error on a record sent up from an inferior court.

Final judgment is one which puts an end to a suit.

Interlocutory judgment is one given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. 3 Bla. Com. 396.

Judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam is a judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Judgment by nil dicit is one rendered against a defendant for want of a plea.

Judgment of nolle prosequi is a judgment entered against the plaintiff where after appearance and before judgment he says "he will not further prosecute his suit." Steph. Pl. 130.

Judgment of non obstante veredicto is a judgment rendered in favor of one party without regard to the verdict obtained by the other party.

Judgment of non pros. (non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neglect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time.

Judgment by non sum informatus is one which is rendered when, instead of entering a plea, the defendant's attorney says he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action. Steph. Pl. 130.

Judgment of non suit, a judgment rendered against the plaintiff when he, on trial by jury, on being called or demanded, at the instance of the defendant, to be present while the jury give their verdict, fails to make an appearance.

Judgment pro retorno habendo is a judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Judgment quod computet is a judgment in an action of account-render that the defendant do account.

Judgment quod partitio fiat is the interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition that partition be made.

Judgment quod partes replacitent is a judgment for repleader. See REPLEADER.

Judgment quod recuperet is a judgment in favor of the plaintiff (that he do recover) rendered when he has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory plea. Steph. Pl. 126.

Judgment of respondeat ouster is a judgment given against the defendant after he has failed to establish a dilatory plea upon which an issue in law has been raised.

Judgment of retraxit is one given against the plaintiff where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff enters upon the record that he "withdraws his suit."

Judgments upon facts found are the following. Judgment of nul tiel record occurs when some pleading denies the existence of a record, and issue is joined thereon; the record being produced is compared by the court with the statement in the pleading which alleges it; and if they correspond, the party asserting its existence obtains judgment; if they do not correspond, the other party obtains judgment of nul tiel record. Judgment upon verdict is the most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict. Judgment non obstante veredicto is a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff notwithstanding the verdict for the defendant: this judgment is given upon motion (which can only be made by the plaintiff) when, upon an examination of the whole proceedings, it appears to the court that the defendant has shown himself to be in the wrong, and that the issue, though decided in his favor by the jury, is on a point which does not at all better his case; Smith, Actions, 161. This is called a judgment upon confession, because it occurs after a pleading by defendant in confession and avoidance and issue joined thereon, and verdict found for defendant, and then it appears that the pleading was bad in law and might have been demurred to on that ground. The plea being substantially bad in law, of course the verdict which merely shows it to be true in point of fact cannot avail to entitle the defendant to judgment; while, on the other hand, the plea being in confession and avoidance involves a confession of the plaintiff's declaration, and shows that he was entitled to maintain his action. Sometimes it may be expedient for the plaintiff to move for judgment non obstante veredicto even though the verdict be in his favor; for, in a case like that described above, if he takes judgment as upon the verdict it seems that such judgment would be erroneous, and that the only safe course is to take it as upon confession; 1 Wils. 63; Cro. Eliz. 778; 2 Rolle, Abr. 99; 1 Bingh. N. C. 767. See, also, Cro. Eliz. 214; 6 Mod. 10; Str. 394; 1 Ld. Raym. 641; 8 Taunt. 413; Rastell, Ent. 622; 1 Wend. 307; 5 id. 513; 6 Cow. 225. A judgment of repleader is given when issue is joined on an immaterial point, or one on which the court cannot give a judgment which will determine the right. On the award of a repleader, the parties must recommence their pleadings at the point where the immaterial issue originated. See REPLEADER. This judgment is interlocutory, quod partes replacitent. See Bacon, Abr. Pleas, 4 (M); 3 Hayw. 159.

Judgments upon facts admitted by the parties are as follows. Judgment upon a demurrer against the party demurring concludes him, because by demurring a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary, and relies on their insufficiency in law. It sometimes happens that though the adverse parties are agreed as to the facts, and only differ as to the law arising out of them, still these facts do not so clearly appear on the pleadings as to enable them to obtain the opinion of the court by way of demurrer; for on demurrer the court can look at nothing whatever except the pleadings. In such circumstances the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 25, which has been imitated in most of the states, allows them after issue joined, and on obtaining the consent of a single judge, to state the facts in a special case for the opinion of the court, and agree that a judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff or defendant by confession or nolle prosequi immediately after the decision of the case; and judgment is entered accordingly. Sometimes at the trial the parties find that they agree on the facts, and the only question is one of law. In such case a verdict pro forma is taken, which is a species of admission by the parties, and is general, where the jury find for the plaintiff generally but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case, or special, where they state the facts as they find them, concluding that the opinion of the court shall decide in whose favor the verdict shall be, and that they assess the damages accordingly. The judgments in these cases are called, respectively, judgment on a case stated, judgment on a general verdict subject to a special case, and judgment on a special verdict.

Besides these, a judgment may be based upon the admissions or confessions of one only of the parties. Such judgments when for defendant upon the admissions of the plaintiff are: Judgment of nolle prosequi, where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff says he "will not further prosecute his suit." Judgment of retraxit is one where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff enters upon the record that he "withdraws his suit," whereupon judgment is rendered against him. The difference between these is that a retraxit is a bar to any future action for the same cause; while a nolle prosequi is not, unless made after judgment; 7 Bingh. 716; 1 Wms. Saund. 207, n. A plaintiff sometimes, when he finds he has misconceived his action, obtains leave from the court to discontinue, on which there is a judgment against him and he has to pay costs; but he may commence a new action for the same cause. A stet processus is entered where it is agreed by leave of the court that all further proceedings shall be stayed: though in form a judgment for the defendant, it is generally, like discontinuance, in point of fact for the benefit of the plaintiff, and entered on his application, as, for instance, when the defendant has become insolvent, it does not carry costs; Smith, Actions, 162, 163.

Judgments for the plaintiff upon facts admitted by the defendant are judgment by cognovit actionem, cognovit or confession, where, instead of entering a plea, the defendant chooses to acknowledge the rightfulness of the plaintiff's action; or by confession relicta verificatione, where, after pleading and before trial, he both confesses the plaintiff's cause of action to be just and true and withdraws, or abandons, his plea or other allegations. Upon this, judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial.

Analogous to this is the judgment confessed by warrant of attorney: this is an authority given by the debtor to an attorney named by the creditor, empowering him to confess judgment either by cognovit actionem, nil dicit, or non sum informatus. This differs from a cognovit in that an action must be commenced before a cognovit can be given; 3 Dowl. 278, per Parke, B.; but not before the execution of a warrant of attorney. Judgments by nil dicit and non sum informatus, though they are in fact founded upon a tacit acknowledgment on the part of the defendant that he has no defence to the plaintiff's action, yet as they are commonly reckoned among the judgments by default, they will be explained under that head.

A judgment is rendered on the default of a party, on two grounds: it is considered that the failure of the party to proceed is an admission that he, if plaintiff, has no just cause of action, or, if defendant, has no good defence; and it is intended as a penalty for his neglect; for which reason, when such judgment is set aside or opened at the instance of the defaulting party, the court generally require him to pay costs. Judgment by default is against the defendant when he has failed to appear after being served with the writ; to plead, after being ruled so to do, or, in Pennsylvania and some other states, to file an affidavit of defence within the prescribed time; or, generally, to take any step in the cause incumbent on him. Judgment by non sum informatus is a species of judgment by default, where, instead of entering a plea, the defendant's attorney says he is "not informed" of any answer to be given to the action. Judgment by nil dicit is rendered against the defendant where, after being ruled to plead, he neglects to do so within the time specified.

Judgment of non pros. (from non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neglect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time. Judgment of non suit, (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas) is where the plaintiff, after giving in his evidence, finds that it will not sustain his case, and therefore voluntarily makes default by absenting himself when he is called on to hear the verdict. The court gives judgment against him for this default; but the proceeding is really for his benefit, because after a nonsuit he can institute another action for the same cause, which is not the case—except in ejectment, in some states—after a verdict and judgment against him. It follows that at common law the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited against his will; for a party cannot be compelled to make default. But in Pennsylvania, by statute, the plaintiff may be nonsuited compulsorily. This may be done in two cases: 1, under the act of March 11, 1836, when the defendant has offered no evidence, and the plaintiff's evidence is not sufficient in law to maintain his action; 2, under the act of April 14, 1846, confined to Philadelphia, when the cause is reached and the plaintiff or his counsel does not appear, or, if he appears, does not proceed to trial, and does not assign and prove a sufficient legal cause for continuance.

The formality of calling the plaintiff when he is to suffer a nonsuit is obsolete in most of the states.

In England, when the plaintiff neglects to carry down the record to the assizes for trial, the defendant is empowered by stat. Geo. II. c. 17, to move for judgment as in case of nonsuit, which the court may either grant, or may, upon just and reasonable terms, allow the plaintiff further time to try the issue.

Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Any judgment leaving something to be done by the court, before the rights of the parties are determined, and not putting an end to the action in which it is entered, is interlocutory; Freem. Judg. § 12; 3 Bla. Com. 396. Such is a judgment for the plaintiff upon a plea in abatement, which merely decides that the cause must proceed and the defendant put in a better plea. But, in the ordinary sense, interlocutory judgments are those incomplete judgments whereby the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained. This can only be the case where the plaintiff recovers; for judgment for the defendant is always complete as well as final. The interlocutory judgments of most common occurrence are where a demurrer has been determined for the plaintiff, or the defendant has made default, or has by cognovit actionem acknowledged the plaintiff's demand to be just. After interlocutory judgment in such case, the plaintiff must ordinarily take out a writ of inquiry, which is addressed to the sheriff, commanding him to summon a jury and assess the damages, and upon the return of the writ of inquiry final judgment may be entered for the amount ascertained by the jury. It is not always necessary to have a writ of inquiry upon interlocutory judgment; for it is said that "this is a mere inquest of office to inform the conscience of the court, who, if they please, may themselves assess the damages." 3 Wils. 62, per Wilmot, C. J.; and accordingly, if the damages are matter of mere computation, as, for instance, interest upon a bill of exchange or promissory note, it is usual for the court to refer it to the master or prothonotary, to ascertain what is due for principal, interest, and costs, whose report supersedes the necessity of a writ of inquiry; 4 Term, 275; 1 H. Blackst. 541; 4 Price, 134. But in actions where a specific thing is sued for, as in actions of debt for a sum certain, the judgment upon demurrer, default, or confession is not interlocutory, but is absolutely complete and final in the first instance.

Final judgments are such as at once put an end to the action by determining the right and fixing the amount in dispute. Such are a judgment for defendant at any stage of the suit, a judgment for plaintiff after verdict, a judgment for a specific amount confessed upon warrant of attorney, and a judgment signed upon the return of a writ of inquiry, or upon the assessment of damages by the master or prothonotary. Judgment for plaintiff is final also in an action brought for a specific sum, as debt for a sum certain, although entered upon a demurrer or default, because here, the amount being ascertained at the outset, the only question at issue is that respecting the right, and when that is determined nothing remains to be done.

When an issue in fact, or an issue in law arising on a peremptory plea, is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is "that the plaintiff do recover, etc., which is called a judgment quod recuperet; Steph. Pl. 126; Comyn, Dig. Abatement (I 14, I 15); 2 Archb. Pr. 3. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer over," called a judgment of respondeat ouster. In an action of account, judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant "do account," quod computet. Of these, the last two, quod computet and quod respondeat ouster, are interlocutory only; the first, quod recuperet, is either final or interlocutory according as the quantum of damages is or is not ascertained at the rendition of the judgment.

Judgment in error is either in affirmance of the former judgment; in recall of it for error in fact; in reversal of it for error in law; that the plaintiff be barred of his writ of error, where a plea of release of errors or of the statute of limitations is found for the defendant; or that there be a venire facias de novo, which is an award of a new trial; Smith, Actions, 196. A venire facias de novo will always be awarded when the plaintiff's declaration contains a good cause of action, and judgment in his favor is reversed by the court of error; 24 Penn. 470. In general, however, when judgment is reversed, the court of error not merely overturns the decision of the court below, but will give such a judgment as the court below ought to have given; Smith, Actions, 196.

REQUISITES OF. To be valid, a judicial judgment must be given by a competent judge or court, at a time and place appointed by law, and in the form it requires. A judgment would be null if the judge had not jurisdiction of the matter, or, having such jurisdiction, he exercised it when there was no court held, or out of his district, or if he rendered a judgment before the cause was prepared for a hearing.

The judgment must confine itself to the question raised before the court, and cannot extend beyond it. For example, where the plaintiff sues for an injury committed on his lands by animals owned and kept carelessly by defendant, the judgment may be for damages, but it cannot command the defendant for the future to keep his cattle out of the plaintiff's land. That would be to usurp the power of the legislature. A judgment declares the rights which belong to the citizen, the law alone rules future actions. The law commands all men, it is the same for all, because it is general; judgments are particular decisions, which apply only to particular persons, and bind no others; they vary like the circumstances on which they are founded.

Effect of. Final judgments are commonly said to conclude the parties; and this is true in general, but does not apply to judgments for defendant on non suit, as in case of non suit by nolle prosequi, and the like, which are final judgments in one sense, because they put an end to all proceedings in the suit, but which nevertheless do not debar the plaintiff from instituting another suit for the same cause. With this qualification, the rule as to the effect of a judgment is as follows. The judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, or, as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court. The judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction directly upon the point is in like manner conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent nor exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment. Duchess of Kingston's case, 20 Howell, St. Tr. 538; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 424; and see the authorities there cited. See, also, 2 Gall. 229; 4 Watts, 183. The rule above given relates to the effect of a judgment upon proceedings in another court; if the court is the same, of course the rule holds a fortiori. Moreover, all persons who are represented by the parties, and claim under them or in privity with them, are equally concluded by the proceedings. All privies whatever in estate, in blood, or in law, are, therefore, estopped from litigating that which is conclusive upon him with whom they are in privity; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 523, 536.

A further rule as to the conclusiveness of judgments is sometimes stated thus: "a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be impeached or set aside in any collateral proceeding except on the ground of fraud." See, generally, 1 Greenl. Ev. pt. 3, ch. 5, and the authorities there cited.

This does not prevent a judgment from being attached directly by writ of error or other proceeding in the nature of an appeal; and its validity may be impeached in other direct proceedings, as by motion to open or set it aside, and in contests between creditors in regard to the validity of their respective judgments; in this latter class of cases the court will sometimes award a feigned issue to try questions of fact affecting the validity of the judgment.

If the record of a judgment show that it was rendered without service of process or appearance of the defendant, or if that fact can be shown without contradicting the recitals of the record, it will be treated as void in any other state; 97 Mass. 538; 46 N. Y. 30; s. c. 7 Am. Rep. 299; 48 Ga. 50; s. c. 15 Am. Rep. 660. But this fact cannot be shown in contradiction of the recitals of the record; 17 Vt. 302; 2 McLean, 511; 65 Penn. 105; contra, 46 N. Y. 30; 24 Tex. 551; 18 Wall. 457. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 22.

Matters of defence arising since the judgment may be taken advantage of by a writ of audita querela, or, which is more usual, the court may afford summary relief on motion.

All the judgments, decrees, or other orders of courts, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounced them during the term at which they are rendered or entered of record, and may then be set aside, vacated, or modified by the court, but after the term has ended, unless proceedings to correct the errors alleged have been taken before its close, they can only be corrected by writ of error or appeal, as may be allowed in a court which by law can reverse the decision; 14 Cent. L. J. 250; citing 102 U. S. 107; 9 Wall. 103. To this rule there is an exception founded on the common law writ of coram nobis, which brought before the court where the error was committed certain mistakes of fact not put in issue or passed upon by the court, such as the death of one of the parties when the judgment was rendered, coverture if a female party, infancy and failure to appoint a guardian, error in the process, or mistake of the clerk. But if the error was in the judgment itself, the writ did not lie. What was formerly done by this writ is now attained by motion and affidavits when necessary; 14 Cent. L. J. 253; 7 Pet. 147.

As to Form. The form of the judgment varies according to the nature of the action and the circumstances, such as default, verdict, etc., under which it is obtained. Anciently great particularity was required in the entries made upon the judgment roll; but now, even in the English practice, the drawing up the judgment roll is generally neglected, except in cases where it is absolutely necessary, as where it is desirable to give the proceedings in evidence on some future occasion; Smith, Actions, 169. In this country the roll is rarely if ever drawn up, the simple entry on the trial list and docket, "judgment for plaintiff," or "judgment for defendant," being all that is generally considered necessary; and though the formal entries are in theory still required to constitute a complete record, yet if such record should subsequently be needed for any purpose, it may be made up after any length of time from the skeleton entries upon the docket and trial list. See 11 Penn. 399. When the record is thus drawn up in full, the ancient formalities must be observed, at least in a measure.

Judgments on Verdict.

In account, judgment for the plaintiff is interlocutory in the first instance, that the defendant do account, quod computet; 4 Wash. C. C. 84; 2 Watts, 95; 1 Penn. 138.

In assumpsit, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover the damages assessed by the jury, and full costs of suit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 100. Judgment for the defendant is that he recover his costs. For the form, see Tidd, Pr. Forms, 165.

In case, trover, and trespass, the judgment is the same in substance, and differs but slightly in form from that of assumpsit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 100, 147.

A judgment in trover passes title to the goods in question; 4 Cent. Cas. 88; but only where the value of the thing converted is included in the judgment; 5 H. & N. 288; contra, that an unsatisfied judgment does not pass the property; L. R. 6 C. P. 584; 3 Wall. 1, 16; but see 1 Rawle, 121.

In covenant, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover the amount of his damages as found which he has sustained by reason of the breach or breaches of the defendant's covenant, together with costs of suit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 116, 117. Judgment for defendant is for costs.

In debt, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover his debt, and, in general, nominal damages for the detention thereof; and in cases under the 8th & 9th Will. III. c. 11, for successive breaches of a bond conditioned for the performance of a covenant, it is also awarded that he have execution for such damages, and likewise full costs of suit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 108, 109. But in some penal and other actions the plaintiff does not always recover costs; Esp. Pen. Act. 154; Hull, Costs, 200; Bull. N. P. 333; 5 Johns. 251. Judgment for defendant is generally for costs; but in certain penal actions neither party can recover costs; 5 Johns. 251. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms, 176.

In detinue, judgment for the plaintiff is in the alternative that he recover the goods or the value thereof if he cannot have the goods themselves, with damages for the detention, and costs; 1 Chitty, Pl. 121, 122; 1 Dall. 458. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms, 187.

Executor. If judgment in any of the above personal actions is against the defendant in the character of executor, it confines the liability of the defendant for the debt or damages to the amount of assets of the testator in his hands, but leaves him personally liable for costs. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms, 168. If the executor defendant has pleaded plene administravit, judgment against him confines his liability to such amount of the assets as shall hereafter come to his hands. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms, 174. A general judgment for costs against an administrator plaintiff is against the estate only.

In dower, judgment for demandant is interlocutory in the first instance with the award of a writ of habere facias seisinam, and inquiry of damages, on the return of which final judgment is rendered for the value of the land detained, as ascertained by the jury, from the death of the husband to the suing out of the inquisition, and costs of suit. See the form, 3 Chitty, Pl. 583–585.

In ejectment, judgment for plaintiff is final in the first instance, that he recover the term, together with the damages assessed by the jury, and the costs of suit, with award of the writ of habere facias possessionem, directing the sheriff to put him in possession. See the form, 3 Bla. Com. App. xii.; Tidd, Pr. Forms, 188.

In partition, judgment for plaintiff is also interlocutory in the first instance; quod partitio fiat, with award of the writ de partitione facienda, on the return of which final judgment is rendered,—"therefore it is considered that the partition aforesaid be held firm and effectual forever," quod partitio facta firma et stabilis in perpetuam teneatur; Co. Litt. 169. See the form, 2 Sell. Pr. 319, 2d ed. 222.

In replevin. If the replevin is in the detinuit, i. e. where the plaintiff declares that the chattels "were detained until replevied by the sheriff," judgment for plaintiff is that he recover the damages assessed by the jury for the taking and unjust detention, or for the detention only where the taking was justifiable, and also his costs; 5 S. & R. 133; Hamm. N. P. 488. If the replevin is in the detinet, i. e. where the plaintiff declares that the chattels taken are "yet detained," the jury in giving a verdict for plaintiff find, in addition to the above, the value of the chattels each separately; for the defendant will perhaps restore some, in which case the plaintiff is to recover the value of the remainder; Hamm. N. P. 489; Fitzh. N. B. 159 b; 5 S. & R. 130.

If the replevin be abated, the judgment is that the writ or plaint abate, and that the defendant, having avowed, have a return of the chattels.

If the plaintiff is nonsuited, the judgment for defendant, at common law, is that the chattels be restored to him, and that without his first assigning the object of the taking, because by abandoning his suit the plaintiff admits that he had no right to dispossess the defendant by prosecuting the replevin. The form of this judgment is simply "to have a return," pro retorno habendo, without adding the words "to hold irreplevisable." Hamm. N. P. 490. For the form of judgments of nonsuit under the statutes 21 Hen. VIII. c. 19, and 17 Car. II. c. 7, see Hamm. N. P. 490, 491; 2 Chitty, Pl. 161; 8 Wentw. Pl. 116; 5 S. & R. 132; 1 Saund. 195, n. 3; 2 id. 286, n. 5. In these cases the defendant has the option of taking his judgment pro retorno habendo at common law; 5 S. & R. 132; 1 Lev. 255; 3 Term, 349.

When the avowant succeeds upon the merits, the common-law judgment is that he "have return irreplevisable;" for it is apparent that he is by law entitled to keep possession of the goods; 5 S. & R. 145; Hamm. N. P. 493; 1 Chitty, Pl. 162. For the form of judgment in such case under the statutes last mentioned, see Hamm. N. P. 494.

After verdict, the general form of judgment for plaintiff in actions on contracts sounding in damages, and in actions founded on torts unaccompanied with violence, is this. "Therefore it is considered that the said A B do recover against the said C D his damages aforesaid, and also —— for his said costs and charges, by the court now here adjudged of increase to the said A B, with his assent; which said damages, costs, and charges in the whole amount to ——. And the said C D in mercy, etc." In debt for a sum certain, the general form is "—— that the said A B do recover against the said C D his said debt, and also —— for his damages which he has sustained, as well on occasion of detaining the said debt as for his costs and charges by him about his suit in this behalf expended, by the court now here adjudged to the said A B, and with his assent. And the said C D in mercy, etc." In actions founded on torts accompanied with violence, the form of judgments for plaintiff is, "—— that the said A B do recover against the said C D his damages aforesaid, and also —— for his said costs and charges by the court now here adjudged of increase to the said A B, and with his consent; which said damages, costs, and charges in the whole amount to ——. And let the said C D be taken, etc."

Final judgment for the defendant is in these words: "Therefore it is considered that the said A B take nothing by his writ, but that he be in mercy, etc. (or that he and his pledges to prosecute be in mercy, etc.), and that the said C D do go thereof without day, etc. And it is further considered ——." Then follows the award of costs and of execution therefor. See Tidd, Pr. Forms, 189.

This is the general form of judgment for defendant, whether it arise upon interlocutory proceedings or upon verdict, and whatever be the form of action. This is sometimes called judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam; Steph. Pl. 128.

The words "and the said —— in mercy, etc.," or, as expressed in Latin, quod sit in misericordia pro falso clamore suo, were formerly an operative part of the judgment, it being an invariable rule of the common law that the party who lost his cause was punished by amercement for having unjustly asserted or resisted the claim. And on this account pledges of prosecution were required of the plaintiff before the return of the original, who were real and responsible persons and liable for these amercements. But afterwards the amercements ceased to be exacted, —perhaps because the payment of costs took their place,—and, this portion of the judgment becoming mere matter of form, the pledges returned were the fictitious names John Doe and Richard Roe. Bacon, Abr. Fines, etc. (C 1); 1 Ld. Raym. 273, 274.

The words "and let the said —— be taken," in Latin, capiatur pro fine, which occur above in the form of judgment in actions founded on torts accompanied with violence, were operative at common law, because formerly a defendant adjudged to have committed a civil injury with actual violence was obliged to pay a fine to the king for the breach of the peace implied in the act, and was liable to be arrested and imprisoned till the fine was paid. This was abolished by stat. 5 W. & M. c. 12; but the form was still retained in entering judgment against defendant in such actions. See Gould, Pl. §§ 38, 82; Bacon, Abr. Fines, etc. (C 1); 1 Ld. Raym. 273, 274; Style, 346.

These are called, respectively, judgments of misericordia and of capiatur.

Judgments in other cases. On a plea in abatement, either party may demur to the pleading of his adversary or they may join issue. On demurrer, judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant have another day to plead in chief, or, as it is commonly expressed, that he answer over: quod respondeat ouster; and judgment for defendant is that the writ be quashed: quod cassetur billa or breve. But if issue be joined, judgment for plaintiff is quod recuperet, that he recover his debt or damages, and not quod respondeat; judgment for defendant is the same as in the case of demurrer, that the writ be quashed. But the plaintiff may admit the validity of the plea in abatement, and may himself pray that his bill or writ may be quashed, quod cassetur billa or breve, in order that he may afterwards sue or exhibit a better one; Steph. Pl. 128, 130, 131; Lawes, Civ. Pl. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms, 195.

Judgment on demurrer in other cases, when for the plaintiff is interlocutory in assumpsit and actions sounding in damages, and recites that the pleading to which exception was taken by defendant appears sufficient in law, and that the plaintiff ought therefore to recover; but the amount of damages being unknown, a court of inquiry is awarded to ascertain them. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms, 181. In debt it is final in the first instance. See the form, id. pp. 181, 182. Judgment on demurrer when for the defendant is always final in the first instance, and is for costs only. See the form, id. 195, 196.

Judgment by default, whether by nil dicit or non sum informatus, is in these words, in assumpsit or other actions for damages, after stating the default: "wherefore the said A B ought to recover against the said C D his damages on occasion of the premises; but because it is unknown to the court, etc., now here what damages the said A B hath sustained by means of the premises, the sheriff is commanded, etc." Then follows the award of the writ of inquiry, on the return of which final judgment is signed. See the forms, Tidd. Pr. Forms, 165–169. In debt for a sum certain, as on a bond for the payment of a sum of money, the judgment on default is final in the first instance, no writ of inquiry being necessary. See the form, id. 169, 170.

Judgment by cognovit actionem is for the amount admitted to be due, with costs, as on a verdict. See the form, id. 176.

Judgment of non pros. or non suit is final, and is for defendant's costs only, which is also the case with judgment on a discontinuance or nolle prosequi. See id. 189–195.

Of Matters of Practice. Of docketing the judgment. By the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20, all final judgments are required to be regularly docketed: that is, an abstract of the judgment is to be entered in a book called the judgment-docket; 3 Bls. Com. 398. And in these states the same regulation prevails. Besides this, an index is required to be kept in England of judgments confessed upon warrant of attorney, and of certain other sorts of judgments; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 396, n. In most of the states this index is required to include all judgments. The effect of docketing the judgment is to notify all interested persons, including purchasers or incumbrancers of land upon which the judgment is a lien, and subsequent judgment creditors, of the existence and amount of the judgment. In Pennsylvania, the judgment index is for this purpose conclusive evidence of the amount of a judgment in favor of a purchaser of the land bound thereby, but not against him: if the amount indexed is less than the actual amount, the purchaser is not bound to go beyond the index; but if the amount indexed is too large, he may resort to the judgment-docket to correct the mistake; 1 Penn. 408.

Now, in England, judgments, in order to affect purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, must be registered in the common pleas, and renewed every five years. See 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 5.

Of the time of entering the judgment. After verdict a brief interval is allowed to elapse before signing judgment, in order to give the defeated party an opportunity to apply for a new trial, or to move in arrest of judgment, if he is so disposed. This interval, in England, is four days; Smith, Actions, 150. In this country it is generally short; but, being regulated either by statute or by rules of court, it of course may vary in the different states, and even in different courts of the same state.

See Arrest of Judgment; Assumpsit; Attachment; Conflict of Laws; Covenant; Debt; Detinue; Ejectment; Foreign Judgment; Lien; Replevin; Trespass; Trover. See Freeman, Judgments.

JUDGMENT NISI. A judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record with the postea indorsed, which will become absolute according to the terms of the "postea" unless the court out of which the nisi prius record proceeded shall, within the first four days of the following term, otherwise order.

Under the compulsory arbitration law of Pennsylvania, on filing the award of the arbitrators, judgment nisi is to be entered, which judgment is to be valid as if it had been rendered on a verdict of a jury, unless an appeal is entered within the time required by law.

JUDGMENT NOTE. A promissory note given in the usual form, and containing, in addition, a power of attorney to appear and confess judgment for the sum therein named. On this account it is not negotiable; 77 Penn. 131; but see 19 Ohio, 130.

It usually contains a great number of stipulations as to the time of confessing the judgment; 11 Ill. 623; against appeal and other remedies for setting the judgment aside; see 9 Johns. 80; 20 id. 296; 2 Cow. 465; 2 Penn. 501; 15 Ill. 356; and other conditions.

JUDGMENT PAPER. In English Practice. An incipitur of the pleadings, written on plain paper, upon which the master will sign judgment. 1 Archb. Pr. 229, 306, 343.

JUDGMENT RECORD. In English Practice. A parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. 3 Steph. Com. 632. See Judgment Roll. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk, all of which is necessary to suing out execution; Graham, Pr. 341.

JUDGMENT ROLL. In English Law. A record made of the issue roll (which see), which, after final judgment has been given in the cause, assumes this name. Steph. Pl. 133; 3 Chitty, Stat. 514; Freem. Judg. § 75. The Judicature Act of 1875 requires every judgment to be entered in a book by the proper officer.

JUDICATURE. The state of those employed in the administration of justice; and in this sense it is nearly synonymous with judiciary. This term is also used to signify a tribunal; and sometimes it is employed to show the extent of jurisdiction: as, the judicature is upon writs of error, etc. Comyn, Dig. Parliament (L 1). And see Comyn, Dig. Courts (A).

JUDICATURE ACTS.

The statutes of 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, which went into force Nov. 1, 1875, with amendments in 1877, c. 9, 1879, c. 78, and 1881, c. 68, made most important changes in the organization of, and methods of procedure in, the superior courts of England, consolidating them together so as to constitute one Supreme Court of Judicature, consisting of two divisions: Her Majesty's High Court of Justice, having chiefly original jurisdiction, and Her Majesty's Court of Appeals, whose jurisdiction is chiefly appellate. To the former is transferred the jurisdiction of the courts of chancery, queen's bench, common pleas, exchequer, admiralty, probate, divorce, and the assize court, with certain exceptions, of which the most important is the appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeal in chancery. The London court of bankruptcy was included in this list by the act of 1873, but excluded by that of 1875. To Her Majesty's Court of Appeal is transferred the jurisdiction exercised by the lord chancellor and lords justices of the court of appeal in chancery, the court of exchequer chamber, the judicial committee of the privy council on appeal from the high court of admiralty, or from any order in lunacy made by the lord chancellor, or any other person having jurisdiction in lunacy. By the act of 1873, no appeals were to be brought from the High Court or Court of Appeal to the house of lords or the privy council, but by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 59, the house of lords retains for all practical purposes here, its powers and functions to hear appeals from Her Majesty's Court of Appeal in England, and from the courts of Scotland and Ireland. Her Majesty's Court of Appeal practically takes the place of the exchequer chamber in appeals in common law actions, and also hears appeals in chancery, previously heard by the chancellor or by the court of appeal in chancery, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, and of the same court as a court of appeal in bankruptcy. It consists of five ex-officio judges, viz., the lord chancellor as president, the lord chief justice of England, the master of the rolls, the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and the lord chief baron of the exchequer, and six ordinary judges of the court of appeal, to be styled, by the act of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 9, lords justices of appeal, the first three of whom are to be made by the transfer of three judges from the High Court of Justice.

The High Court of Justice consists of five divisions as follows: 1. The chancery division, consisting of the lord chancellor, the master of the rolls (but by the act of 44 & 45 Vict. c. 68, the master of the rolls ceases to belong to the high court, and provision is made for a judge in his place, who shall be in the same position as a puisne judge under the acts of 1873 and 1875) and such of the vice chancellors of the court of chancery as shall not be appointed ordinary judges of the court of appeal. The Judicature Act of 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 9, provides for the appointment of a new judge, to be attached to the chancery division, and entitles the puisne judges, justices of the high court. The lord chancellor is not to be deemed a permanent judge of the High Court of Justice.

2. The queen's bench division, consisting of the lord chief justice of England, and such other of the judges of the court of queen's bench as shall not be appointed ordinary judges of the Court of Appeal.

3. The common pleas division, consisting of the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and such other judges of the court of common pleas as shall not be appointed ordinary judges of the Court of Appeal.

4. The exchequer division, consisting of the lord chief baron of the exchequer, and certain other barons of the court of exchequer.

5. The probate, divorce, and admiralty division, consisting of two judges, one of whom shall be the judge of the court of probate and of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes, and the judge of the high court of admiralty.

Any judge of any of the above divisions may be transferred by her majesty from one to another of the said divisions. Divisional courts of the high courts of justice may be held for the transaction of special business, consisting usually of two judges.

Crown cases reserved are to be heard by the judges of the High Court of Justice, or at least five of them, of whom the lord chief justice of England, the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and the lord chief baron of the exchequer, or one of them, shall be part. Their determination is final, save for some error of law upon the record, as to which no question shall have been reserved for their decision, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78.

The reports of adjudicated cases are now arranged thus (see REPORTS):—

Appeal cases. Cases decided by the house of lords and privy council, cited as App. Cas. They are reported with the cases of the division from which the appeal was taken, and are indicated as, "In the court of appeal," or "C. A.;" chancery division, cited as Ch. Div.; common pleas division, cited as C. P. Div.; exchequer division, cited as Ex. Div.

Probate division. Cases decided by the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions, cited as P. Div.

Queen's bench division, cited as Q. B. Div.

These acts provide for a concurrent administration of legal and equitable remedies, according to seven rules, which substantially provide that any one of the courts, included in the acts, shall give the same equitable relief to any plaintiff or defendant claiming it as would formerly have been granted by chancery; equitable relief will be granted against third persons, not parties, who shall be brought in by notice; all equitable estates, titles, rights, duties, and liabilities, will be taken notice of as in chancery; no proceeding shall be restrained by injunction, but every matter of equity on which an injunction might formerly have been obtained, may be relied on by way of defence, and the courts may in any cause direct a stay of proceedings. Subject to these and certain other provisions of the act, effect shall be given to all legal claims and demands, and all estates, titles, rights, duties, obligations, and liabilities, existing by the common law, custom, or statute, as before the acts: the new courts shall grant, either absolutely or on terms, all such legal or equitable remedies as the parties may appear entitled to; so that all matters may be completely and finally determined, and multiplicity of legal proceedings avoided.

Eleven new rules of law are established, which will be found in the act of 1873, c. 66, § 25, of the following nature: 1. In the administration of insolvent estates, the same rules shall prevail as may be in force under the law of bankruptcy;

2. No claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee, for property held on an express trust, shall be barred by any statute of limitations; 3. A tenant for life shall have no right to commit equitable waste, unless such right is expressly conferred by the instrument creating the estate; 4. There shall be no merger by operation of law only, of any estate, the beneficial interest in which would not be deemed merged in equity; 5. A mortgagor entitled for the time being to the possession of the profits of land, as to which the mortgagee shall have given no notice of his intention to take possession, may sue for such possession, or for the recovery of such profits, or to prevent or recover damages in respect of any trespass, or other wrong relative thereto, in his own name only, unless the cause of action arises upon a lease or other contract made jointly with any other person; 6. Any absolute assignment of a chose in action, of which express notice in writing shall have been given to the debtor, shall pass the legal right thereto from the date of notice, and all remedies for the same, and the power to give a good discharge: provided, that if the debtor, etc., shall have had notice of any conflicting claims to such debt, he shall be entitled to call upon such claimants to interplead; 7. Stipulations as to time or otherwise, which would not have been deemed of the essence of the contract in equity, shall receive the same construction as formerly in equity; 8. A mandamus or an injunction may be granted, or a receiver appointed by an interlocutory order, which may be made either unconditionally or on terms; and an injunction may be granted to prevent threatened waste or trespass, whether the estates be legal or equitable, or whether the person against whom the injunction is sought is or is not in possession under any claim of title, or does or does not claim a right to do the act sought to be restrained under color of title; 9. In proceedings arising from collisions at sea, where both ships are in fault, the rules hitherto in force in the court of admiralty shall prevail; 10. In questions relating to the custody of infants, the rules of equity shall prevail; 11. Generally, in all matters in which there is any conflict between the rules of common law and the rules of equity, the latter shall prevail.

The division of the legal year into terms is abolished, so far as relates to the administration of justice, but where they are used as a measure for determining the time at or within which any act is required to be done, they may continue to be referred to. Numerous other regulations are established for the arrangement of business, and course of procedure under the new system, for which reference must be had to the acts. We will merely note that nothing is to affect the law relating to jury trials, and the existing forms of procedure are to be used as far as consistent with these acts. Nothing shall affect the practice or procedure in—1. Criminal proceedings; 2. Proceedings on the crown side of the queen's bench division; 3. Proceedings on the revenue side of the exchequer division; 4. Proceedings for divorce and matrimonial causes. The Chancery Procedure Acts and the Common Law Procedure Acts remain in full force, except so far as impliedly or expressly repealed by the Judicature Acts. Many sections of the C. L. P. Acts are repealed by the act of 1879, c. 78, and by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act of 1879, c. 59. See Moz. & W.; preface to 15 Eng. Rep. by N. C. Moak, and the several articles on the Courts of England.

JUDICATURE ACTS (IRELAND). The act of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 57, which went into operation Jan. 1, 1878, established a supreme court of judicature in Ireland, essentially similar in its constitution to that in England. Amended by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 27.

JUDICES PEDANEOS (Lat.). In Roman Law. Judges chosen by the parties.

Among the Romans, the prætors and other great magistrates did not themselves decide the actions which arose between private individuals: these were submitted to judges chosen by the parties, and these judges were called judices pedaneos. In choosing them, the plaintiff had the right to nominate, and the defendant to accept or reject those nominated. Heineccius, Antiq. lib. 4, tit. b. n. 40; 7 Toullier, n. 353.

JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS. Admissions of the party which appear of record in the proceedings of the court.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. In English Law. A tribunal formerly composed of members of the privy council, established by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92, and subsequent acts, for hearing appeals from colonial and ecclesiastical courts and the courts of admiralty, and from certain orders in lunacy. By 34 & 35 Vict. c. 91, provision was made for the appointment of four additional members; no one was qualified who was not when appointed, or had not been a judge of the superior courts at Westminster, or a chief justice of the High Court in Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay.

The Judicature Act (q. v.) transferred the jurisdiction in admiralty and lunacy appeals to the Court of Appeal. The same act provided for the transfer to the same court of all appeals to the Queen in Council. But by the judicature act of 1875, the operation of this provision was postponed, and an Order in Council will be necessary to give effect to it. Mozl. & W.; Whart. Dict. See PRIVY COUNCIL.

JUDICIAL CONFESSIONS. In Criminal Law. Those voluntarily made before a magistrate, or in a court, in the due course of legal proceedings. A preliminary examination, taken in writing, by a magistrate lawfully authorized, pursuant to a statute, or the plea of guilty made in open court to an indictment, are sufficient to found a conviction upon them.

JUDICIAL CONVENTIONS. Agreements entered into in consequence of an order of court; as, for example, entering into a bond on taking out a writ of sequestration. 6 Mart. La. N. S. 494.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS. The opinions or determinations of the judges in causes before them. Hale, Hist. Cr. Law, 68; Willes, 666; 3 B. & Ald. 122; 1 H. Blackst. 63; 5 Maule & S. 185. See DICTUM.

JUDICIAL LIABILITY. See JUDGE; 6 Am. Dec. 333.

JUDICIAL MORTGAGE. In Louisiana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether these be rendered on contested cases, or by default, whether they be final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. La. Civ. Code, art. 3289.

JUDICIAL NOTICE. Courts of justice take judicial notice of certain facts, and no evidence of any fact of which the court will take such notice need be given by the party alleging its existence. The judge, if a case arise, may, if unacquainted with such fact, refer to any person, or any document, or book of reference for his satisfaction in relation thereto; or may refuse to take judicial notice thereof unless and until the party calling upon him to take such notice, produces any such document or book of reference. Steph. Ev., art. 59. The following classification of the subject has been made by Mr. May in his edition of Stephen's Evidence.

Courts will take judicial notice of:—

The existence and titles of all the sovereign powers in the civilized world which are recognized by the government of the United States, their respective flags and seals of state; 7 Wheat. 610, 634; id. 273, 335; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 585. The law of nations; 14 Wall. 170, 188; the general usages and customs of merchants; 91 U. S. 37; treaties made by the United States with foreign governments, and the public acts and proclamations of those governments and their public authorized agents in carrying such treaties into effect; 9 How. 127, 147.

Foreign admiralty and maritime courts; 4 Cra. 434, 299; and their notaries public; 8 Wheat. 326, 333; and their respective seals.

The constitution, public statutes, and general laws and customs of the Union, and also of their own particular state or territory; 11 How. 663; and the courts of the United States take judicial notice of the laws of the several states applicable to causes depending before them; 12 Wall. 226.

The accession of the chief executive of the nation, and of their own state or territory; his powers and privileges; 33 Miss. 508; 5 Wisc. 308; and the genuineness of his signature; 4 Mart. La. 635; the heads of departments, and principal officers of state; 91 U. S. 37; and the public seals; 2 Halst. 553; 3 Johns. 310; the election or resignation of a senator of the United States; the appointment of a cabinet or foreign minister; 91 U. S. 37; 2 Rob. La. 466; marshals and sheriffs; 27 Ala. 17; and the genuineness of their signatures; 10 Mart. Public proclamations of war and peace, and of the days of special fast and thanksgiving; stated days of general political elections, the sittings of congress, and also of their own state or territorial legislatures, and their established and usual course of proceeding, the privileges of the members, but not the transactions on the journals; 13 Wall. 154; 6 id. 4; contra (as to journals), 48 Ala. 115; 13 Mich. 481.

The territorial extent of the jurisdiction and sovereignty exercised de facto by their own government; 19 Iowa, 319; and the local political divisions of their own state into counties, cities, townships, and the like; 40 N. H. 420; 22 Me. 453; and their relative positions, but not their boundaries further than described in public statutes; 39 Me. 263. 291; 28 Ind. 429.

The general geographical features of their own country, state, and judicial district, as to the existence and location of its principal mountains, rivers, and cities; 27 Ind. 233; 40 N. H. 420; and also the geographical position and distances of foreign countries and cities in so far as the same may be fairly presumed to be within the knowledge of most persons of ordinary intelligence and education within the state or district where the court is held; 91 U. S. 37; and the courts of the United States especially take judicial notice of the ports and waters of the United States, in which the tide ebbs and flows, and of the boundaries of the several states and judicial districts; 91 U. S. 37.

All things which must have happened according to the ordinary course of nature; as the ordinary limitation of human life as to age, the course of time and of the heavenly bodies, the mutations of the seasons and their general relations to the maturity of the crops; 91 U. S. 37.

The ordinary public fasts and festivals; 4 Md. 409; the coincidence of days of the week with days of the month; 31 Ala. 167. The meaning of words in the vernacular language: but not of catch words, technical, local, or slang expressions; 20 Pick. 206; 15 Md. 276, 484.

Such ordinary abbreviations as by common use may be regarded as universally understood, as abbreviations of Christian names, and the like; 91 U. S. 37; 37 Ala. 216; 18 Mo. 89; but not those which are in any degree doubtful or difficult of interpretation; 8 Texas, 205.

Any matters of public history affecting the whole people, and also public matters affecting the government of the nation, or of their own particular state or district; 16 How. 416; 91 U. S. 37; 37 Conn. 597.

And finally all matters which may be considered as within the common experience or knowledge of all men; 28 Ala. 83; or which they are directed by any statute to notice.

Judicial notice will also be taken of the period of gestation; 2 East, 202; of the variation of the magnetic needle; 6 Litt. Ky. 91; (but not, it has been held, of the fact that the concentric layers of the trunk of a tree mark its age; 3 Bland, 69;) of general and notorious customs of merchants;

1 Whart. Ev. § 331; if they have been sanctioned by the courts; ibid.; and are intelligible without extrinsic proof; 23 Beav. 370; of the custom of the road, as to passing to the right or left; 8 C. & P. 104; and of the customs of the sea, if general and notorious; L. R. 3 P. C. 44.

It has been said that the courts should exercise this power with caution. Care must be taken that the requisite notoriety exists. Every reasonable doubt upon the subject should be solved promptly in the negative. Per Swayne, J., in 91 U. S. 43. In that case the court took judicial notice, in a patent case, of the principle of operation of an ice-cream freezer; and the subject of judicial notice was there fully discussed.

See, generally, 2 Cent. L. J. 393, 409; 14 id. 114, 125; 5 So. L. Rev. N. S. 214.

JUDICIAL POWER. The authority vested in the judges.

The constitution of the United States declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Art. 3, s. 1.

By the constitutions of the several states, the judicial power is vested in such courts as are enumerated in each respectively. See the articles on the several states. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States to forbid or prevent the legislature of a state from exercising judicial functions; 2 Pet. 413; but even in the absence of special limitations in the state constitutions, legislatures cannot exercise powers in their nature essentially judicial; 13 N. Y. 391. The different classes of power have been apportioned to different departments, and as all derive their authority from the same instrument, there is an implied exclusion of each department from exercising the functions conferred upon the others; Cooley, Const. Lim. 106. The legislative power cannot from its nature be assimilated to the judicial; the law is made by the one, and applied by the other; 1 N. H. 204; 10 Wheat. 46; 11 Penn. 494; 19 Ill. 282; 1 Ohio St. 81; 13 N. Y. 391.

A state legislature cannot annul the judgments nor determine the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States; 5 Cra. 115; 2 Dall. 410; nor authoritatively declare what the law is or has been, but what it shall be; 2 Cra. 272; 4 Pick. 23; 3 Mart. La. 248; 10 id. 1; 3 Mart. La. N. S. 551; 5 id. 519.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. Proceedings relating to, practised in, or proceeding from, a court of justice.

Conclusive presumptions are made in favor of judicial proceedings. Thus, it is an undoubted rule of pleading that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior court but that which is so expressly alleged; 1 Saund. 74; 10 Q. B. 411, 455–459. So, also, it is presumed, with respect to such writs as are actually issued by the superior courts at Westminster, that they are duly issued, and in a case in which the courts have jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the face of them; and all such writs will of themselves, and without any further allegation, protect all officers and others in their aid acting under them; and this, too, although they are on the face of them irregular, or even void in form; 6 Co. 54 a; 10 Q. B. 411, 455–459.

The rule is well settled by the authorities, that words spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, though they are such as impute crime to another, and therefore if spoken elsewhere would import malice and be actionable in themselves, are not actionable if they are applicable and pertinent to the subject of inquiry. And this extends not merely to regular courts of justice, but to all inquiries before magistrates, referees, municipal, military, and ecclesiastical bodies; and they are only restrained by this rule, viz., that they shall be made in good faith to courts or tribunals having jurisdiction of the subject, and power to hear and decide the matter of complaint or accusation, and that they are not resorted to as a cloak for private malice. The question, therefore, in such cases is, not whether the words spoken are true, not whether they are actionable in themselves, but whether they were spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, and whether they were relevant and pertinent to the cause or subject of inquiry; Heard, Lib. & S. §§ 101, 102. The rule that no action will lie for words spoken or written in the course of any judicial proceeding, has been acted upon from the earliest times. In 4 Co. 14 b, it was adjudged that if one exhibits articles to justices of the peace, "in this case the parties shall not have, for any matter contained in such articles, any action upon the case, for they have pursued the ordinary course of justice in such cases; and if actions should be permitted in such cases, those who have just cause for complaint would not dare to complain, for fear of infinite vexation." And it has been more recently decided, that, though an affidavit made in a judicial proceeding is false, slanderous, and malicious, no action will lie against the party making it; 18 C. B. 126; 4 H. & N. 568.

The general rule is subject to this qualification: that in all cases where the object or occasion of the words or writing is redress for an alleged wrong, or a proceeding in a tribunal or before some individual or associated body of men, such tribunal, individual, or body must be vested with authority to render judgment or make a decision in the case, or to entertain the proceeding, in order to give them the protection of privileged communications. This qualification of the rule runs through all the cases where the question is involved; Heard, Lib. & S. § 104.

Official Records of the States. The constitution provides that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved and the effect thereof. The term records includes all executive, judicial, legislative, and ministerial acts, constituting the public records of the state. The object of this clause was to prevent judgments from being disregarded in other states; 25 Mich. 247; it does not change the nature of a judgment, but places judgments rendered in another state on a different footing from what are known at common law as foreign judgments; 9 Wheat. 1; a judgment rendered in another state is to be regarded as a domestic judgment; 27 Penn. 247; but this includes only judgments in civil actions; not in criminal prosecutions, or in divorce; 17 Mass. 514; 122 id. 156; 56 Ind. 263. The judgment of a state court has the same validity and effect in any other state, as it has in the state where it was rendered; 6 Wheat. 129; 9 How. 520. The judicial proceedings within the act are only such as have been rendered by a competent court, with full jurisdiction; 9 Mass. 462; it may be a superior court of record or an inferior tribunal; 30 N. H. 78; 13 Ohio, 209; a judgment may, however, be attacked on the ground of a want of jurisdiction; 18 Wall. 457; thus a judgment against a defendant who was not served with proper process, and who did not appear, would be entitled to no credit in another state; 11 How. 165. The constitution does not give to a judgment all the attributes to which it was entitled in the state where it was rendered; 7 Gill & J. 484; but if duly certified, it is admissible in evidence in any state; 7 Cal. 54, 247; a state may give a judgment rendered in another state any effect it may think proper, always provided it does not derogate from legal effect conferred upon it by the constitution and the laws of congress in this behalf; 9 Mass. 462. In case, however, full faith and credit is not given to the judgment of another state, any judgment based thereon will be invalid; 7 Wall. 139. When the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction, its judgment is final as to the merits; 5 Wall. 302; 14 Tex. 352; but no greater effect can be given to a judgment than it had in the state where it was rendered; 17 Wall. 529; 18 N. Y. 468.

Legislative acts must be authenticated by the seal of the state; 4 Dall. 412.

JUDICIAL SALE. A sale, by authority of some competent tribunal, by an officer authorized by law for the purpose.

The officer who makes the sale conveys all the rights of the defendant, or other person against whom the process has been issued, in the property sold. Under such a sale there is no warranty, either express or implied, of the thing sold; 9 Wheat. 616. When real estate is sold by the sheriff or marshal, the sale is subject to the confirmation of the court, or it may be set aside. See 4 Wash. C. C. 45, 322. See TAX SALE.

JUDICIAL WRITS. In English Practice. The capias and all other writs subsequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable.

Being grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, they are called judicial writs, in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called original writs; 3 Bls. Com. 282.

JUDICIARY. That which is done while administering justice; the judges taken collectively: as, the liberties of the people are secured by a wise and independent judiciary. See COURTS; 3 Story, Const. b. 3, c. 38.

JUDICIUM DEI (Lat. the judgment or decision of God).

In Old English Law. A term applied to trials by ordeal; for, in all trials of this sort, God was thought to interfere in favor of the innocent, and so decide the cause. These trials are now all abolished.

JUICIO DE APEO. In Spanish Law. The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.

JUICIO DE CONCURSO DE ACREEDORES. In Spanish Law. The decree obtained by a debtor against his creditors, or by the creditors against their debtor, for the payment of the amount due, according to the respective rank of each creditor, when the property of the debtor is insufficient to pay the whole of his liabilities.

JUNIOR. Younger. This has been held to be no part of a man's name, but an addition by use, and a convenient distinction between a father and son of the same name. 10 Paige, Ch. 170; 7 Johns. 549; 2 Caines, 164; 1 Pick. 388; 15 id. 7; 17 id. 200; 8 Mete. Mass. 330.

Any matter that distinguishes persons renders the addition of junior or senior unnecessary; 1 Mod. Ent. 35; Salk. 7. But if father and son have both the same name, the father shall be primâ facie intended, if junior be not added, or some other matter of distinction; Salk. 7; 6 Co. 20; 11 id. 39; Hob. 330. If father and son have the same name and addition, and the former sue the latter, the writ is abatable unless the son have the further addition of junior, or the younger. But if the father be the defendant and the son the plaintiff, there is no need of the further addition of senior, or the elder, to the name of the father; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 187; Laws of Women, 380.

JUNIOR BARRISTER. A barrister under the rank of queen's counsel. Moz. & W. Also the junior of two counsel employed on the same side in a case.

JUNIPERUS SABINA (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. This plant is commonly called savin.

It is used for lawful purposes in medicine, but too frequently for the criminal purpose of producing abortion, generally endangering the life of the woman. It is usually administered in powder or oil. The dose of oil for lawful purposes, for a grown person, is from two to four drops. Parr, Med. Dict. Sabina. Foderé mentions a case where a large dose of powdered savin had been administered to an ignorant girl in the seventh month of her pregnancy, which had no effect on the fœtus. It, however, nearly took the life of the girl. Foderé, tome iv. p. 431. Given in sufficiently large doses, four or six grains, in the form of powder, it kills a dog in a few hours; and even its insertion into a wound has the same effect. 3 Orfila, Traité des Poisons, 42. For a form of indictment for administering savin to a woman quick with child, see 3 Chit. Cr. L. 798. See 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 316.

JURA FISCALIA (Lat.). Rights of the exchequer. 3 Bla. Com. 45.

JURA PERSONARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rights which belong to men in their different characters or relations, as father, apprentice, citizen, etc. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 122, n.

JURA IN RE (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rights in a thing, as opposed to rights to a thing (jura ad rem). Rights in a thing which are not gone upon loss of possession, and which give a right to an action in rem against whoever has the possession. These rights are of four kinds: dominium, hereditas, servitus, pignus. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 333. See JUS IN RE.

JURA REGALIA (Lat.). Royal rights. 1 Bla. Com. 117, 119, 240; 3 id. 45. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45.

JURAMENTÆ CORPORALES (Lat.). Corporal oaths, q. v.

JURAMENTUM CALUMNIÆ (Lat. oath of calumny). In Civil and Canon Law. An oath required of plaintiff and defendant, whether the parties themselves insist on it or not, that they are not influenced in seeking their right by malice, but believe their cause to be just. It was also required of the attorneys and procurators of the parties. Called, also, jusjurandum or sacramentum calumniæ. Calv. Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.; Clerke, Pr. tit. 42.

JURAMENTUM JUDICIALE (Lat.). In Civil Law. An oath which the judge, of his own accord, defers to either of the parties.

It is of two kinds: first, that which the judge defers for the decision of the cause, and which is understood by the general name juramentum judiciale, and is sometimes called suppletory oath, juramentum suppletorium; second, that which the judge defers in order to fix and determine the amount of the condemnation which he ought to pronounce, and which is called juramentum in litem. Pothier, Obl. p. 4, c. 3, s. 3, art. 3.

JURAT. In Practice. That part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was "sworn" before him.

The jurat is usually in the following form, viz.: "Sworn and subscribed before me, on the —— day of ——, 1842. J. P., justice of the peace."

In some cases it has been holden that it was essential that the officer should sign the jurat, and that it should contain his addition and official description; 3 Caines, 128; 2 Dian. 472. But see 2 Wend. 283; 6 id. 543; 12 id. 223; 2 Cow. 552; 2 Johns. 479; 17 Ind. 294; Proff. Not.

An officer in some English corporations, chiefly in certain towns in Kent and Sussex, whose duties are similar to those of aldermen in others; stat. 1 Edw. IV.; 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 30; 13 Edw. I. c. 26. An officer in the island of Jersey, of whom there are twelve, members of the royal court, and elected for life; 1 Steph. Com. 101; L. R. 1 P. C. 94–114.

JURATA (Lat.). In Old English Law. A jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assiza, or jury established or re-established by stat. Hen. II.

The jurata, or common-law jury, was a jury called in to try the cause, upon the prayer of the parties themselves, in cases where a jury was not given by statute Hen. II., and as the jury was not given under the statute of Henry II., the writ of attaint provided in that statute would not lie against a jurata for false verdict. It was common for the parties to a cause to request that the cause might be decided by the assiza, sitting as a jurata, in order to save trouble of summoning a new jury, in which case "cadit assiza et vertitur in juratam," and the cause is said to be decided non in modum assizæ, but in modum juratæ. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 335, 336; Glanville, lib. 13, c. 20; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 30. But this distinction has been long obsolete.

Juratæ were divided into: first, jurata dilatoria, which inquires out offenders against the law, and presents their names, together with their offences, to the judge, and which is of two kinds, major and minor, according to the extent of its jurisdiction; second, jurata judicaria, which gives verdict as to the matter of fact in issue, and is of two kinds, civilis, in civil causes, and criminalis, in criminal causes. Du Cange.

A clause in nisi prius records called the jury clause, so named from the word jurata, with which its Latin form begins. This entry, jurata ponitur in respectu, is abolished. Com. Law Proc. Act, 1852, § 104; Wharton, Law Lex.; 9 Co. 32; 59 Geo. III. c. 46; 4 Bla. Com. 342. Such trials were usually held in churches, in presence of bishops, priests, and secular judges, after three days' fasting, confession, communion, etc. Du Cange.

A certificate placed at the bottom of an affidavit, declaring that the witness has been sworn or affirmed to the truth of the facts therein alleged. Its usual form is, "Sworn (or affirmed) before me, the —— day of ——, 18—." A jurat.

JURATORY CAUTION. A security sometimes taken in Scotch proceedings, when no better can be had, viz.: an inventory of effects given up upon oath, and assigned in security of the sums which may be found due. Bell, Dict.

JURE DIVINO.

By divine right. Divine Right is the name generally given to the theory of government which holds monarchy to be the only legitimate form of government. The monarch and his legitimate heirs being, by divine right, entitled to the sovereignty, cannot forfeit that right by any misconduct, or any period of dispossession. But where the knowledge of the right heir is lost, the usurper, being in possession by the permission of God, is to be obeyed as the true heir. Sir Robert Filmer, the most distinguished exponent of the theory, died about 1650.

JURE REPRESENTATIONIS (Lat.). By right of representation. See PER STIRPES. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 219, n. 14, 224.

JURE UXORIS (Lat.). By right of a wife.

JURIDICAL. Relating to administration of justice, or office of a judge. Webster, Dict.

Regular; done in conformity to the laws of the country and the practice which is there observed.

JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat.). Of right and by law. A presumption is said to be juris et de jure when it is conclusive, i. e. when no evidence will be admitted to rebut it, in contradistinction to a presumption, which is simply juris, i. e. rebuttable by evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 29; Best, Pres. 20, § 17; Best, Ev. 43, § 48.

JURIS ET SEISINÆ CONJUNCTIO (Lat.). The union of seisin, or possession, and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Bla. Com. 199, 311.

JURISCONSULTUS (Lat. skilled in the law). In Civil Law. A person who has such knowledge of the laws and customs which prevail in a state as to be able to advise, act, and to secure a person in his dealings. Cicero.

The early jurisconsults gave their opinions gratuitously, and were also employed in drawing up written documents. From Augustus to Adrian, only those allowed by the emperor could be jurisconsults: before and after those emperors, any could be jurisconsults who chose. If their opinion was unanimous, it had the force of law: if not, the prætor could follow which opinion he chose. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.

There were two sects of jurisconsults at Rome, the Proculeians and Labinians. The former were founded by Labeo, and were in favor of innovation; the latter by Capito, and held to the received doctrines. Cushing, Int. Rom. Law. §§ 5, 6.

JURISDICTION (Lat. jus, law, dicere, to say). The authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. Power to hear and determine a cause. 3 Ohio, 494; 6 Pet. 591. The right of a judge to pronounce a sentence of the law, on a case or issue before him, acquired through due process of law. It includes power to enforce the execution of what is decreed. 9 Johns. 239; 3 Metc. Mass. 460; Thach. 202.

Appellate jurisdiction is that given by appeal from the judgment of another court.

Assistant jurisdiction is that afforded by a court of chancery in aid of a court of law: as, for example, by a bill of discovery, or for the perpetuation of testimony, and the like.

Jurisdiction of the cause is the power over the subject-matter given by the laws of the sovereignty in which the tribunal exists.

Civil jurisdiction is that which exists when the subject-matter is not of a criminal nature.

Criminal jurisdiction is that which exists for the punishment of crimes.

Concurrent jurisdiction is that which is possessed over the same parties or subject matter at the same time by two or more separate tribunals.

Exclusive jurisdiction is that which gives to one tribunal sole power to try the cause.

General jurisdiction is that which extends to a great variety of matters.

Limited jurisdiction (called, also, special and inferior) is that which extends only to certain specified causes.

Original jurisdiction is that bestowed upon a tribunal in the first instance.

Jurisdiction of the person is that obtained by the appearance of the defendant before the tribunal. 9 Mass. 462.

Territorial jurisdiction is the power of the tribunal considered with reference to the territory within which it is to be exercised. 9 Mass. 462.

Jurisdiction is given by the law; 22 Barb. 323; 3 Tex. 157; and cannot be conferred by consent of the parties; 5 Mich. 331; 3 Iowa, 470; 23 Conn. 112; 2 Ohio St. 223; 11 Ga. 453; 23 Ala. N. S. 155; 34 Me. 223; 4 Cush. 27; 4 Gilm. 131; 6 Ired. 139; 4 Yerg. 579; 3 M'Cord, 280; 12 Miss. 549; see 17 Mo. 258; but a privilege defeating jurisdiction may be waived if the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter; 4 Ga. 47; 11 id. 453; 14 id. 589; 6 Tex. 379; 13 Ill. 432; 1 Iowa, 94; 1 Barb. 449; 7 Humphr. 209; 4 Mass. 593; 4 M'Cord. 79; 3 McLean, 587; 4 Wash. C. C. 84; 5 Cra. 288; 8 Wheat. 699; and parties may admit facts which show jurisdiction; 22 Wall. 322.

Jurisdiction given by the law of the sovereignty of the tribunal is held sufficient everywhere, at least as to all property within the sovereignty; 2 Blatchf. 427; 10 Rich. Eq. 19; 27 Mo. 594; 1 R. I. 285; and as to persons of whom process is actually and personally served within the territorial limits of jurisdiction, or who appear and by their pleadings admit jurisdiction; 6 Tex. 275; 4 N. Y. 375; 8 Ga. 83. See 11 Barb. 309. But the appearance of a person on whom no personal service of process has been made, merely to object to the jurisdiction, is not such an admission; 37 N. H. 9; 9 Mass. 462; Hard. 96. And see 2 Sandf. 717. Jurisdiction must be either of the cause, which is acquired by exercising powers conferred by law over property within the territorial limits of the sovereignty; or of the person, which is acquired by actual service of process or personal appearance of the defendant. The question as to the possession of the former is to be determined according to the law of the sovereignty; Dav. 407; of the latter, as a simple question of fact. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

A court of general jurisdiction is presumed to be acting within its jurisdiction till the contrary is shown; 10 Ga. 371; 10 Barb. 97; 3 Ill. 269; 13 id. 432; 15 Vt. 46; 2 Dev. 431; 4 id. 305. A court of limited jurisdiction, or a court acting under special powers, has only the jurisdiction expressly delegated; 27 Ala. N. S. 291; 32 id. 227; 26 Mo. 65; 1 Dougl. Mich. 384; 7 Hill, So. C. 39; and it must appear from the record that its acts are within its jurisdiction; 5 Harr. Del. 387; 1 Dutch. 554; 2 Zabr. 356, 396; 2 Ill. 554; 20 id. 286; 27 Mo. 101; Hempst. 423; 22 Barb. 323; 28 Miss. 737; 26 Ala. N. S. 568; 5 Ind. 157; 1 Greene, Iowa, 78; 21 Me. 340; 16 Vt. 246; 2 How. 319; unless the legislature, by general or special law, remove this necessity; 24 Ga. 245; 7 Mo. 373; 1 Pet. C. C. 36. See 1 Salk. 414; Bacon, Abr. Courts (C, D).

Where one of two courts of concurrent jurisdiction has taken cognizance of a cause, the other will not entertain jurisdiction of the same cause; 1 Grant, Cas. 212; 8 Ohio St. 599; 16 Ohio, 373; 27 Vt. 518; 28 id. 470; 25 Barb. 513; 8 Md. 254; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 42; 4 Tex. 242; 19 Ala. N. S. 438; 1 Fla. 198; 2 Murph. 195; 6 McLean. 355.

Any act of a tribunal beyond its jurisdiction is null and void, and of no effect whatever; 33 Me. 414; 13 Ill. 432; 21 Barb. 9; 26 N. H. 232; whether without its territorial jurisdiction; 21 How. 506; 1 Grant, Cas. 218; 15 Ga. 457; or beyond its powers; 22 Barb. 271; 13 Ill. 432; 1 Strobh. 1; 1 Dougl. Mich. 390; 5 T. B. Monr. 261; 16 Vt. 246. Want of jurisdiction may be taken advantage of by plea in abatement; 18 Ill. 292; 3 Johns. 105; 20 How. 541; see 6 Fla. 724; and must be taken advantage of before making any plea to the merits, if at all, when it arises from formal defects in the process, or when the want is of jurisdiction over the person; 7 Cal. 584; 19 Ark. 241; 17 id. 340; 28 Mo. 319; 22 Barb. 323; 6 Cush. 560; 18 Ga. 318; 20 How. 541. See 2 R. I. 450; 30 Ala. N. S. 62. But where the cause of action is not within the jurisdiction granted by law to the tribunal, it will dismiss the suit at any time when the fact is brought to its notice; 22 Barb. 271; 23 Conn. 172; 2 Ohio St. 26; 5 T. B. Monr. 261; 13 Vt. 175; 4 Ill. 133.

It is rarely, if ever, too late to object to the jurisdiction of a court where the want of power to hear and determine appears on the face of the proceedings; per Bronson, J., 2 Hill, N. Y. 159. Thus, an appellant from chancery to the court of errors may avail himself in the latter court of an objection to the chancellor's jurisdiction, though it was not made before him, when the objection, if valid, is of such a kind that it could not have been obviated, had it been started at an earlier stage in the proceedings; id.

Courts of dernier resort are conclusive judges of their own jurisdiction; 1 Park. Cr. Cas. 360; 1 Bail. 294.

JURISDICTION CLAUSE. In Equity Practice. That part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity and tend to the injury of the plaintiff, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the jurisdiction clause. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 43.

This clause is unnecessary; for if the court appear from the bill to have jurisdiction, the bill will be sustained without this clause; and if the court have not jurisdiction, the bill will be dismissed though the clause may be inserted. Story, Eq. Pl. § 34.

JURISPRUDENCE. The science of the law. The practical science of giving a wise interpretation to the laws and making a just application of them to all cases as they arise.

By science, in the first definition, is understood that connection of truths which is founded on principles either evident in themselves or capable of demonstration,—a collection of truths of the same kind, arranged in methodical order. In the latter sense, it is the habit of judging the same questions in the same manner, and by this course of judgments forming precedents. 1 Ayliffe, Pand. 3. See Austin, Amos, Markby, Heron, Phillimore, Lorimer, Lindley, on Jurisprudence.

JURIST. One versed in the science of the law. One skilled in the civil law. One skilled in the law of nations.

JURO. In Spanish Law. A certain pension granted by the king on the public revenues, and more especially on the salt-works, by favor, either in consideration of meritorious services or in return for money loaned the government or obtained by it through forced loans. It is a portion of the yearly revenue of the state, assigned as a rightful indemnity, either in perpetuity or as an annuity.

JUROR (Lat. juro, to swear). A man who is sworn or affirmed to serve on a jury.

JURY (Lat. jurata, sworn). In Practice. A body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are proven from the evidence placed before them.

The origin of this venerable institution of the common law is lost in the obscurity of the middle ages. Antiquarians trace it back to an early period of English history; but, if known to the Saxons, it must have existed in a very crude form, and may have been derived by them from the mode of administering justice by the peers of litigant parties, under the feudal institutions of France, Germany, and the other northern nations of Europe. The ancient ordeals of red-hot iron and boiling water, practised by the Anglo-Saxons to test the innocence of a party accused of crime, gradually gave way to the wager of battle, in the days of the Normans; while this latter mode of trial disappeared in civil cases in the thirteenth century, when Henry II. introduced into the assizes a trial by jury. It is referred to in Magna Charta as an institution existing in England at that time; and its subsequent history is well known. See GRAND ASSIZE; 3 Bla. Com. 349; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 23, 84; Granville, c. 9; Bracton, 155; 11 Am. L. Rev. 24. By common law one of the qualifications of a juryman was that he should be a freeholder: 3 Bla. Com. 361; and this requirement is preserved in many of the United States; 20 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 436, 498.

Trial by jury is guaranteed by the constitution of the United States in all criminal cases except upon impeachments, and in all suits at common law where the subject-matter of the controversy exceeds twenty dollars in value. The right to such a trial is also asserted in many of our state constitutions. It has been held, however, not to be an infringement of the prisoner's constitutional right, where a statute provides that in all criminal prosecutions, the party accused, if he shall so elect, may be tried by the court instead of by a jury; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 111; 5 Ohio St. 57; 30 Mich. 116; see 16 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 705; and that the constitutional provision does not apply to suits against the government; 12 Ct. Cl. 312.

The term "jury" as used in the constitution means twelve competent men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court; drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party; duly impanelled, and sworn to render a true verdict, according to the law and the evidence; 11 Nev. 39.

A common jury is one drawn in the usual and regular manner.

A grand jury is a body organized for certain preliminary purposes.

A jury de medietate linguæ is one composed half of aliens and half of denizens.

Such juries might formerly be claimed, both in civil and criminal cases, where the party claiming the privilege was an alien born, by virtue of 28 Edw. III. c. 13. And see 8 Hen. VI. c. 29; 3 Geo. III. c. 25, by which latter statute the right is thought to be taken away in civil cases. See 3 Bla. Com. 360; 4 id. 352. A provision of a similar nature, providing for a jury one-half of the nationality of the party claiming the privilege where he is a foreigner, exists in some of the states of the United States.

A petit or traverse jury is a jury who try the question in issue and pass finally upon the truth of the facts in dispute. The term jury is ordinarily applied to this body distinctively.

A special jury is one selected by the assistance of the parties.

This is granted in some cases upon motion and cause shown, under various local provisions. See 33 E. L. & Eq. 406. The method at common law was for the officer to return the names of forty-eight principal freeholders to the prothonotary or proper officer. The attorneys of the respective parties, being present, strike off each twelve names, and from the remaining twenty-four the jury is selected. A similar course is pursued in those states where such juries are allowed. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 357.

A struck jury is a special jury. See 4 Zabr. 843.

The number of jurors must be twelve; and it is held that the term jury in a constitution imports, ex vi termini, twelve men; 6 Metc. 231; 4 Ohio St. 177; 2 Wisc. 22; 3 id. 219; whose verdict is to be unanimous; 12 N. Y. 190. See 11 Nev. 39, supra.

Qualifications of jurors. Jurors must possess the qualifications which may be prescribed by statute, must be free from any bias caused by relationship to the parties or interest in the matter in dispute, and in criminal cases must not have formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. See CHALLENGE.

The selection of jurors is to be made impartially; and elaborate provisions are made to secure this impartiality. In general, a sufficient number are selected, from among the qualified citizens of the county or district, by the sheriff, or similar executive officer of the court, and, in case of his disqualification, by the coroner, or, in some cases, by still other designated persons. See ELISORS. From among these the requisite number is selected at the time of trial, to whom objection may be made by the parties. See CHALLENGE.

The province of the jury is to determine the truth of the facts in dispute in civil cases, and the guilt or innocence of the person accused in criminal cases. See CHARGE. If they go beyond their province, their verdict may be set aside; 4 Maule & S. 192; 3 B. & C. 357; 2 Price, 282; 2 Cow. 479; 10 Mass. 39.

Duties and privileges of. Qualified persons may be compelled to serve as jurors under penalties prescribed by law. They are exempt from arrest in certain cases. See PRIVILEGE. They are liable to punishment for misconduct in some cases.

Consult Edwards, Forsyth, Ingersoll, on Juries; 1 Kent, 623, 640.

JURY BOX. A place set apart for the jury to sit in during the trial of a cause.

JURY LIST. A paper containing the names of jurors impanelled to try a cause, or it contains the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

JURYMAN. A juror; one who is impanelled on a jury. Webster, Dict.

JURY PROCESS. In Practice. The writs for summoning a jury, viz.: in England, venire juratores facias, and distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum. These writs are now abolished, and jurors are summoned by precept. 1 Chitty, Archb. 344; Com. Law Proc. Act, 1852, §§ 104, 105; 3 Chitty, Stat. 519.

JURY OF WOMEN. A jury of women is given in two cases; viz.: on writ de ventre inspiciendo, in which case the jury is made up of men and women, but the search is made by the latter; 1 Mad. Ch. 11; 2 P. Wms. 591; and where pregnancy is pleaded by condemned criminal in delay of execution, in which case a jury of twelve discreet women is formed, and on their returning a verdict of "enseinte" the execution is delayed till birth, and sometimes the punishment commuted to perpetual exile. But if the criminal be priviment enseinte, and not quick, there is no respite. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 412. As to time of quickening, see 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 229.

JUS (Lat.). Law; right; equity. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1.

JUS ABUTENDI (Lat.). The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to abuse property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toullier, n. 86.

JUS ACCRESCENDI (Lat.). The right of survivorship.

At common law, when one of several joint tenants died, the entire tenancy or estate went to the survivors, and so on to the last survivor, who took an estate of inheritance. This right, except in estates held in trust, has been abolished by statute in Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia; Griffin, Reg.; 1 Hill, Abr. 439, 440; in Connecticut; 1 Root, 48; 1 Swift, Dig. 102. In Louisiana, this right was never recognized. See 11 S. & R. 192; 2 Caines, Cas. 326; 3 Vt. 543; 6 T. B. Monr. 15; ESTATE IN COMMON; ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY.

JUS AQUÆDUCTUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another, either from its source or from any other place.

Its privilege may be limited as to the time when it may be exercised. If the source fails, the servitude ceases, but revives when the water returns. If the water rises in, or naturally flows through, the land, its proprietor cannot by any grant divert it so as to prevent it flowing to the land below; 2 Rolle, Abr. 140, l. 25; Lois des Bât. part 1, c. 3, s. 1, art. 1. But if it had been brought into his land by artificial means, it seems it would be strictly his property, and that it would be in his power to grant it; Dig. 8. 3. 1. 10; 3 Burge, Confl. Laws, 417. See RIVER; WATER-COURSE; Washb. Easem.

JUS CIVILE (Lat.). In Roman Law. The private law, in contradistinction to the public law, or jus gentium; 1 Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 1, § 1.

JUS CIVITATIS (Lat.). In Roman Law. The collection of laws which are to be observed among all the members of a nation. It is opposed to jus gentium, which is the law which regulates the affairs of nations among themselves. 2 Lepage, El. du Dr. c. 5, 1.

JUS CLOACÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which requires the party who is subject to it to permit his neighbor to conduct the waters which fall on his grounds over those of the servient estate.

JUS DARE (Lat.). To give or to make the law. Jus dare belongs to the legislature; jus dicere, to the judge.

JUS DELIBERANDI (Lat.). The right of deliberating given to the heir, in those countries where the heir may have benefit of inventory (q. v.), in which to consider whether he will accept or renounce the succession.

In Louisiana he is allowed ten days before he is required to made his election. La. Civ. Code, art. 1028.

JUS DICERE (Lat.). To declare the law. It is the province of the court jus dicere (to declare what the law is).

JUS DISPONENDI (Lat.). The right to dispose of a thing.

JUS DUPLICATUM (Lat. double right). When a man has the possession as well as the property of any thing, he is said to have a double right, jus duplicatum. Bracton, l. 4, tr. 4, c. 4; 2 Bla. Com. 199.

JUS FECIALE (Lat.). In Roman Law. That species of international law which had its foundation in the religious belief of different nations: such as the international law which now exists among the Christian people of Europe. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 2, § 11.

JUS FIDUCIARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A right to something held in trust: for this there was a remedy in conscience. 2 Bla. Com. 328.

JUS GENTIUM (Lat.). The law of nations. Although the Romans used these words in the sense we attach to law of nations, yet among them the sense was much more extended. Falck, Encyc. Jur. 102, n. 42. It is said to have been a system made up by the early Roman lawyers of the common ingredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes, for the purpose of adjudicating questions arising in Rome between foreigners or natives and foreigners. Maine, Anc. Law, 49.

Modern writers have made a distinction between the laws of nations which have for their object the conflict between the laws of different nations, which is called jus gentium privatum, or private international law, and those laws of nations which regulate those matters which nations, as such, have with each other, which is denominated jus gentium publicum, or public international law. Fœlix, Droit Intern. Privé, n. 14. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

JUS GLADII (Lat. the right of the sword). Supreme jurisdiction. The right to absolve from or condemn a man to death.

JUS HABENDI (Lat.). The right to have a thing.

JUS INCOGNITUM (Lat.). An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws, which, as Bacon truly observes, are unjust; for the law to be just must give warning before it strikes. Bacon, Aph. 8, s. 1; Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, 33. But until it has become obsolete no custom can prevail against it. See Obsolete.

JUS LEGITIMUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A legal right which might have been enforced by due course of law. 2 Bla. Com. 328.

JUS MARITI (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The right of the husband to administer, during the marriage, his wife's goods and the rents of her heritage.

In the common law, by jus mariti is understood the rights of the husband, as jus mariti cannot attach upon a bequest to the wife, although given during coverture, until the executor has assented to the legacy. 1 Bail. Eq. 214.

JUS MERUM (Lat.). A simple or bare right; a right to property in land, without possession or the right of possession.

JUS PATRONATUS (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. A commission from the bishop, directed usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are required to summon a jury, composed of six clergymen and six laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bla. Com. 246.

JUS PERSONARUM (Lat.). The right of persons. See Jura Personarum.

JUS PRECARIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy. 2 Bla. Com. 328.

JUS POSTLIMINII (Lat.). The right to claim property after recapture. See Postliminy; Marsh. Ins. 573; 1 Kent, 108; Dane, Abr. Index.

JUS PROJICIENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude by which the owner of a building has a right of projecting a part of his building towards the adjoining house, without resting on the latter. It is extended merely over the ground. Dig. 50. 16. 242; 8. 2. 25; 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PROTEGENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude: it is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 1; 8. 2. 25; 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS QUÆSITUM (Lat.). A right to ask or recover: for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quæsitum in the obligee. 1 Bell, Com. 323.

JUS IN RE (Lat.). A right which belongs to a person, immediately and absolutely, in a thing, and which is the same against the whole world,—idem erga omnes.

JUS RELICTÆ (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The right of a wife, after her husband's death, to a third of movables if there be children, and to one-half if there be none.

JUS AD REM (Lat.). A right which belongs to a person only mediately and relatively, and has for its foundation an obligation incurred by a particular person.

The jus in re, by the effect of its very nature, is independent and absolute, and is exercised per se ipsum, by applying it to its object; but the jus ad rem is the faculty of demanding and obtaining the performance of some obligation by which another is bound to me ad aliquid dandum, vel faciendum, vel præstandum. Thus, if I have the ownership of a horse, the usufruct of a flock of sheep, the right of habitation of a house, a right of way over your land, etc., my right in the horse, in the flock of sheep, in the house, or the land, belongs to me directly, and without any intermediary; it belongs to me absolutely, and independently of any particular relation with another person; I am in direct and immediate relation with the thing itself which forms the object of my right, without reference to any other relation. This constitutes a jus in re. If, on the other hand, the horse is lent to me by you, or if I have a claim against you for a thousand dollars, my right to the horse or to the sum of money exists only relatively, and can only be exercised through you; my relation to the object of the right is mediate, and is the result of the immediate relation of debtor and creditor existing between you and me. This is a jus ad rem. Every jus in re, or real right, may be vindicated by the actio in rem against him who is in possession of the thing, or against any one who contests the right. It has been said that the words jus in re of the civil law convey the same idea as thing in possession at common law. This is an error, arising from a confusion of ideas as to the distinctive characters of the two classes of rights. Nearly all the common-law writers seem to take it for granted that by the jus in re is understood the title or property in a thing in the possession of the owner; and that by the jus ad rem is meant the title or property in a thing not in the possession of the owner. But it is obvious that possession is not one of the elements constituting the jus in re: although possession is generally, but not always, one of the incidents of this right, yet the loss of possession does not exercise the slightest influence on the character of the right itself, unless it should continue for a sufficient length of time to destroy the right altogether by prescription. In many instances the jus in re is not accompanied by possession at all: the usuary is not entitled to the possession of the thing subject to his use; still, he has a jus in re. So with regard to the right of way, etc. See Dominium.

A mortgage is considered by most writers as a jus in re; but it is clear that it is a jus ad rem: it is granted for the sole purpose of securing the payment of a debt or the fulfilment of some other personal obligation. In other words, it is an accessory to a principal obligation and corresponding right: it can have no separate and independent existence. The immovable on which I have a mortgage is not the object of the right, as in the case of the horse of which I am the owner, or the house of which I have the right of habitation, etc.: the true object of my right is the sum of money due to me, the payment of which I may enforce by obtaining a decree for the sale of the property mortgaged. 2 Marcadé, 350 et seq.

JUS RERUM (Lat.). The right of things. Its principal object is to ascertain how far a person can have a permanent dominion over things, and how that dominion is acquired.

JUS STRICTUM (Lat.). A Latin phrase, which signifies law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

JUS UTENDI (Lat.). The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi. 3 Toullier, n. 86.

JUSTICE. The constant and perpetual disposition to render every man his due. Justinian, Inst. b. 1, tit. 1; Co. 2d Inst. 56. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toullier, Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prél. n. 5.

Commutative justice is that virtue whose object it is to render to every one what belongs to him, as nearly as may be, or that which governs contracts. To render commutative justice, the judge must make an equality between the parties, that no one may be a gainer by another's loss.

Distributive justice is that virtue whose object it is to distribute rewards and punishments to each one according to his merits, observing a just proportion by comparing one person or fact with another, so that neither equal persons have unequal things nor unequal persons things equal. Tr. of Eq. 3; and Touillier's learned note, Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prél. n. 7, note.

In the most extensive sense of the word, it differs little from virtue; for it includes within itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is, that that which considered positively and in itself is called virtue, when considered relatively and with respect to others has the name of justice. But justice, being in itself a part of virtue, is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man's taking such a proportion of them as he ought.

Toullier exposes the want of utility and exactness in this division of distributive and commutative justice, adopted in the compendium or abridgments of the ancient doctors, and prefers the divisions of internal and external justice,—the first being a conformity of our will, and the latter a conformity of our actions, to the law, their union making perfect justice. Exterior justice is the object of jurisprudence; interior justice is the object of morality. Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prél. n. 6 et 7.

According to the Frederician Code, part 1, book 1, tit. 2, a. 27, justice consists simply in letting every one enjoy the rights which he has acquired in virtue of the laws. And, as this definition includes all the other rules of right, there is properly but one single general rule of right, namely: Give every one his own.

In Norman French. Amenable to justice. Kelham, Dict.

In Feudal Law. Feudal jurisdiction, divided into high (alta justitia), and low (simplex inferior justitia), the former being a jurisdiction over matters of life and limb, the latter over smaller causes. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 26; Du Cange. Sometimes high, low, and middle justice or jurisdiction were distinguished.

An assessment, Du Cange; also, a judicial fine, Du Cange.

At Common Law. A title given in England and America to judges of common-law courts, being a translation of justitia, which was anciently applied to common-law judges, while judex was applied to ecclesiastical judges and others; e. g. judex fiscalis. Leges Hen. I. §§ 24, 63; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Index; Co. Litt. 71 b.

The judges of king's bench and common pleas, and the judges of almost all the supreme courts in the United States, are properly styled "justices."

The term justice is also applied to the lowest judicial officers: e. g. a trial justice; a justice of the peace.

JUSTICE AYRES. In Scotch Law. The circuits through the kingdom made for the distribution of justice. Erskine, Inst. 1. 3. 25.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. A public officer invested with judicial powers for the purpose of preventing breaches of the peace and bringing to punishment those who have violated the law.

These officers, under the constitution of some of the states, are appointed by the executive; in others, they are elected by the people and commissioned by the executive. In some states they hold their office during good behavior; in others, for a limited period.

At common law justices of the peace have a double power in relation to the arrest of wrong-doers: when a felony or breach of the peace has been committed in their presence, they may personally arrest the offender, or command others to do so, and, in order to prevent the riotous consequences of a tumultuous assembly, they may command others to arrest affrayers when the affray has been committed in their presence. If a magistrate be not present when a crime is committed, before he can take a step to arrest the offender an oath or affirmation must be made, by some person cognizant of the fact, that the offence has been committed, and that the person charged is the offender or there is probable cause to believe that he has committed the offence.

The constitution of the United States directs that "no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." Amendm. IV. After his arrest, the person charged is brought before the justice of the peace, and after hearing he is discharged, held to bail to answer to the complaint, or, for want of bail, committed to prison.

In some of the United States, justices of the peace have jurisdiction in civil cases given to them by local regulations. In Pennsylvania, their jurisdiction extends only to one hundred dollars, in cases of contracts, express or implied; under the constitution of 1873, police magistrates have been provided for Philadelphia.

JUSTICES COURTS. In American Law. Inferior tribunals, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal. There are courts so called in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and probably other states.

JUSTICES IN EYRE. Certain judges established, if not first appointed, A. D. 1176, 22 Hen. II.

England was divided into certain circuits, and three justices in eyre—or justices itinerant, as they were sometimes called—were appointed to each district, and made the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years, for the purpose of trying causes. They were afterwards directed, by Magna Charta, c. 12, to be sent into every county once a year. The itinerant justices were sometimes mere justices of assize or dower, or of general gaol delivery, and the like. 3 Bla. Com. 58; Crabb, Eng. Law, 103-104.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION (justiciarii pavilionis). Certain judges of a pye-pouder court, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, authorized by the bishop of Winchester, at a fair held at St. Giles Hills near that city, by virtue of letters-patent granted by Edw. IV. Prynne's Animadv. on Coke's 4th Inst. fol. 191.

JUSTICES OF TRAIL BASTION. A sort of justice in eyre, with large and summary powers, appointed by Edw. I. during his absence in war. Old. N. B. fol. 52; 12 Co. 25. For derivation, see Cowel.

JUSTICIAR, JUSTICIER. In Old English Law. A judge or justice. Baker, fol. 118; Cron. Angl. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty.

The chief justiciar (capitalis justiciarius totius Angliæ) was a special magistrate, who presided over the whole aula regis, who was the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and by virtue of his office guardian of the realm in the king's absence. 3 Bla. Com. 37; Spelman, Gloss. 330, 331, 332; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 6. The last who bore this title was Philip Basset, in the time of Hen. III.

JUSTICIARII ITINERANTES (Lat.). In English Law. Justices who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were usually called justices in eyre, to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called justicii residentes. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARII RESIDENTES (Lat.). In English Law. Justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster: they were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARY. Another name for a judge. In Latin, he was called justiciarius, and in French, justicier. Not used. Bacon, Abr. Courts (A).

JUSTICIES (from verb justiciare, 2d pers. pres. subj., do you do justice to).

In English Law. A special writ, in the nature of a commission, empowering a sheriff to hold plea in his county court of a cause which he could not take jurisdiction of without this writ: e. g. trespass vi et armis for any sum, and all personal actions above forty shillings. 1 Burn, Just. 449. So called from the Latin word justicies, used in the writ, which runs, "præcipimus tibi quod justicies A B," etc.; we command you to do A B right, etc. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, c. 13; Kitch. 74; Fitzh. N. B. 117; 3 Bla. Com. 3, 6.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. That which is committed with the intention to kill, or to do a grievous bodily injury, under circumstances which the law holds sufficient to exculpate the person who commits it. A judge who, in pursuance of his duty, pronounces sentence of death, is not guilty of homicide; for it is evident that, as the law prescribes the punishment of death for certain offences, it must protect those who are intrusted with its execution. A judge, therefore, who pronounces sentence of death, in a legal manner, on a legal indictment, legally brought before him, for a capital offence committed within his jurisdiction, after a lawful trial and conviction of the defendant, is guilty of no offence; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 496-502.

Magistrates, or other officers intrusted with the preservation of the public peace, are justified in committing homicide, or giving orders which lead to it, if the excesses of a riotous assembly cannot be otherwise repressed; 4 Bla. Com. 178, 179.

An officer intrusted with a legal warrant, criminal or civil, and lawfully commanded by a competent tribunal to execute it, will be justified in committing homicide, if in the course of advancing to discharge his duty he be brought into such perils that without doing so he cannot either save his life or discharge the duty which he is commanded by the warrant to perform. And when the warrant commands him to put a criminal to death, he is justified in obeying it.

A soldier on duty is justified in committing homicide, in obedience to the command of his officer, unless the command was something plainly unlawful.

A private individual will, in many cases, be justified in committing homicide while acting in self-defence. See DEFENCE.

See, generally, ARREST; HOMICIDE; 4 Bla. Com. 178 et seq.; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 496 et seq.; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 219; 1 Russ. Cr. 538; 2 Wash. C. C. 515; 4 Mass. 391; 1 Hawks, 210; 1 Coxe, N. J. 424; 5 Yerg. 459; 9 C. & P. 22.

JUSTIFICATION. In Pleading. The allegation of matter of fact by the defendant, establishing his legal right to do the act complained of by the plaintiff.

Justification admits the doing of the act charged as a wrong, but alleges a right to do it on the part of the defendant, thus denying that it is a wrong. Excuse merely shows reasons why the defendant should not make good the injury which the plaintiff has suffered from some wrong done. See AVOWRY.

Trespasses. A warrant, regular on its face, and issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, is a complete justification to the officer to whom it is directed for obeying its command, whether it be really valid or not. But where the warrant is absolutely void, or apparently irregular in an important respect, or where the act done is one which is beyond the power conferred by the warrant, it is no justification. See ARREST; TRESPASS. So, too, many acts, and even homicide committed in self-defence, or defence of wife, children, or servants, are justifiable; see SELF-DEFENCE; or in preserving the public peace; see ARREST; TRESPASS; or under a license, express or implied; 3 Caines, 261; 2 Bail. 4; 3 McLean, 571; see 13 Me. 115; including entry on land to demand a debt, to remove chattels; 2 W. & S. 225; 12 Vt. 278; see 2 Humphr. 425; to ask lodgings at an inn, the entry in such cases being peaceful; to exercise an incorporeal right; 21 Pick. 272; or for public service in case of exigency, as pulling down houses to stop a fire; Year B. 13 Hen. VIII. 16 b; destroying the suburbs of a city in time of war; Year B. 8 Edw. IV. 35 b; entry on land to make fortifications; or in preservation of the owner's rights of property; 14 Conn. 255; 4 D. & B. 110; 7 Dana, 220; Wright, Ohio, 333; 25 Me. 453; 6 Penn. 318; 12 Metc. 53; are justifiable.

Libel and slander may be justified in a civil action, in some cases, by proving the truth of the matter alleged, and generally by showing that the defendant had a right upon the particular occasion either to write and publish the writing or to utter the words: as, when slanderous words are found in a report of a committee of congress, or in an indictment, or words of a slanderous nature are uttered in the course of debate in the legislature by a member, or at the bar by counsel when properly instructed by his client on the subject. Comyns, Dig. Pleader. See DEBATE; SLANDER.

Matter in justification must be specially pleaded, and cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. See LICENSE. A plea of justification to an action for slander, oral or written, should state the charge with the same degree of certainty and precision as are required in an indictment. The object of the plea is to give the plaintiff, who is in truth an accused person, the means of knowing what are the matters alleged against him. It must be direct and explicit. It must in every respect correspond with, and be as extensive as the charge in, the declaration.

The justification, however, will be complete if it covers the essence of the libel. But it must extend to every part which could by itself form a substantive ground of action. Where the slander consists in an imputation of crime, the plea of justification must contain the same degree of precision as is requisite in an indictment for the crime, and must be supported by the same proof that is required on the trial of such an indictment. It is a perfectly well-established rule that where the charge is general in its nature, yet the plea of justification must state specific instances of the misconduct imputed to the plaintiff. And, even for the purpose of avoiding prolixity, a plea of justification cannot make a general charge of criminality or misconduct, but must set out the specific facts in which the imputed offence consists, and with such certainty as to afford the plaintiff an opportunity of joining issue precisely upon their existence. Heard, Lib. & Sl. §§ 240–244. See SLANDER.

When established by evidence, it furnishes a complete bar to the action.

In Practice. The proceeding by which bail establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.

It must take place before an authorized magistrate; 5 Binn. 461; 6 Johns. 124; 13 id. 422; and notice must, in general, be given by the party proposing the bail, to the opposite party, of the names of the bail and the intention to justify; 3 Harr. N. J. 503. See 3 Halst. 369.

It is a common provision that bail must justify in double the amount of the recognizance if exceptions are taken; 2 Hill, N. Y. 379; otherwise, a justification in the amount of the recognizance is, in general, sufficient.

It must be made within a specified time, or the persons named cease to be bail; 1 Cow. 54. See Baldw. 148.

JUSTIFICATORS. A kind of compurgators, or those who, by oath, justified the innocence or oaths of others as in the case of wagers of law.

JUSTIFYING BAIL. In Practice. The production of bail in court, who there justify themselves against the exception of the plaintiff. See BAIL; JUSTIFICATION.

JUZGADO. In Spanish Law. The collective number of judges that concur in a decree, and more particularly the tribunal having a single judge.

K.

KAIN. In Scotch Law. A payment of fowls, etc., reserved in a lease. It is derived from canum, a word used in ancient grants to signify fowls or animals deliverable by the vassal to his superior as part of the reddendum. Erskine, Inst. 11. 10. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 236, 405.

KANSAS. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

The territory of Kansas was organized by an act of congress, dated May 30, 1854.

The constitution was adopted at Wyandotte, July 29, 1859, and Kansas was admitted into the Union as a state, by an act of congress, approved January 20, 1861.

The state was carved out of a portion of the Louisiana purchase, and a small portion of the territory ceded to the United States by Texas, and is bounded as follows, to wit:—

"Beginning at a point on the western boundary of the state of Missouri, where the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the twenty-fifth meridian of longitude west from Washington; thence north on said meridian to the fortieth parallel of latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of the state of Missouri; thence south with the western boundary of said state to the place of beginning."

The portion of Kansas that originally belonged to Texas, is that part of the state lying south of the Arkansas river and west of longitude twenty-three degrees west from Washington.

Under the constitution, the powers of the state government are divided into three departments, viz.: executive, legislative, and judicial.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.—The executive department consists of a governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, attorney general, and superintendent of public instruction, who are chosen by the electors of the state, at the time and place of voting for members of the legislature, and hold their offices for two years from the second Monday in January next after their election, and until their successors are elected and qualified.

The secretary of state, lieutenant-governor, and attorney general constitute a board of state canvassers of election, whose duty it is to meet on the second Tuesday of December succeeding each election for state officers, and proclaim the result of such election.

No member of congress, or officer of the state, or of the United States, shall hold the office of governor, except as herein provided.

In all cases of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal, or other disability of the governor, the power and duties of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall be removed, shall devolve upon the president of the senate.

The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate, and shall vote only when the senate is equally divided.

The senate shall choose a president pro tempore, to preside in case of his absence or impeachment, or when he shall hold the office of governor.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.—The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a house of representatives and senate.

The number of representatives is regulated by law, but shall never exceed one hundred and twenty-five representatives and forty senators.

A majority of all the members elected to each house, voting in the affirmative, shall be necessary to pass any bill or joint resolution.

No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived or amended, unless the new act contain the entire act revived, or section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed.

All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state; and in all cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted.

The legislature may confer upon tribunals transacting the county business of the several counties, such powers of local legislation and administration as it shall deem expedient.

For any speech or debate in either house, the members shall not be questioned elsewhere. No member of the legislature shall be subject to arrest, except for felony or breach of the peace, in going to or returning from the place of meeting, or during the continuance of the session; neither shall he be subject to the service of any civil process during the session, nor for fifteen days previous to its commencement.

All sessions of the legislature shall be held at the state capital, and, beginning with the session of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, all regular sessions shall be held once in two years, commencing on the second Tuesday of January each alternate year thereafter.

The house of representatives has the sole power to impeach. All impeachments are tried by the senate. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the senators elected.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.—The judicial power of this state is vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, justices of the peace, and such other courts, inferior to the supreme court, as may be provided by law.

The supreme court consists of one chief justice and two associate justices, who are elected by the electors of the state at large, and whose term of office, after the first, shall be six years. At the first election a chief justice shall be chosen for six years, one associate justice for four years, and one for two years.

The supreme court has original jurisdiction in proceedings in quo warranto, mandamus, and habeas corpus; and such appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law.

The state is divided into five judicial districts, in each of which there is elected a district judge, who holds his office for four years.

The district courts have such jurisdiction in their respective districts as may be provided by law.

There is a probate court in each county, which is a court of record and has such probate jurisdiction and care of estates of deceased persons, minors, and persons of unsound mind, as may be prescribed by law, and shall have jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus. This court consists of one judge, who is elected and holds his office for two years.

Two justices of the peace are elected in each township.

Justices of the supreme court and judges of the district courts may be removed from office by resolution of both houses, if two-thirds of the members of each house concur, but no such removal shall be made except upon complaint, the substance of which shall be entered upon the journal, nor until the party charged shall have had notice and opportunity to be heard.

Elections.—All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and all elections by the legislature shall be viva voce.

Suffrage.—Every person who shall give or accept a challenge to fight a duel, or who shall, knowingly, carry to another person such challenge, or shall go out of the state to fight a duel, shall be ineligible to any office of trust or profit.

Every person who shall have given or offered a bribe to procure his election, shall be disqualified from holding office during the term for which he may have been elected.

Education.—The legislature shall encourage the promotion of intellectual, moral, scientific, and agricultural improvement, by establishing a uniform system of common schools and schools of a higher grade, embracing normal, preparatory, collegiate, and university departments.

No religious sect or sects shall ever control any part of the common school or university funds of the state.

Corporations.—The legislature shall pass no special act conferring corporate powers. Corporations may be created under general laws; but such laws may be amended or repealed.

The term corporation, as used in this article, includes all associations and joint stock companies having powers and privileges not possessed by individuals or partnerships; and all corporations may sue and be sued in their corporate name.

Miscellaneous.—Lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets are forever prohibited.

The legislature shall provide for the protection of the rights of women in acquiring and possessing property, real, personal, and mixed, and separate and apart from the husband; and shall also provide for their equal rights in the possession of their children.

A homestead to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres of farming land, or of one acre within the limits of an incorporated town or city, occupied as a residence by the family of the owner, together with all the improvements on the same, is exempted from forced sale, and shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, when that relation exists; but no property shall be exempt from sale for taxes, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of improvements thereon; Provided, the provisions of this section shall not apply to any process of law obtained by virtue of a lien given by the consent of both husband and wife.

The manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors shall be forever prohibited in this state, except for medical, scientific, and mechanical purposes.

No distinction shall ever be made between citizens and aliens in reference to the purchase, enjoyment, or descent of property.

There are no common law crimes in this state. All crimes are defined and punished by statute.

The common law, as modified by constitutional and statutory law, judicial decisions, and the conditions and wants of the people, shall remain in force in aid of the general statutes in this state; but the rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof shall be strictly construed, shall not be applicable to any general statute in this state, but all such statutes shall be liberally construed to promote their object.

"The body of the laws of England as they existed in the fourth year of the reign of James I. (1607) constitutes the common law of this state;" 9 Kan. 252.

KEELAGE. The right of demanding money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbor. The money so paid is also called keelage.

KEELS. This word is applied, in England, to vessels employed in the carriage of coals. Jacob, Law Dict.

KEEP.

Neither a single act of play at a gaming table, called a sweat cloth, at the races, nor even a single day's use of it on the race field, is a keeping of a common gaming table, within the Penitentiary Act for the District of Columbia; 4 Cr. C. C. 659. When it is said that a certain man keeps a woman, the popular inference is, that the relation is one which involves illicit intercourse; 36 Ala. 717. See 3 Allen, 101; 52 N. H. 368.

KEEPER.

To warrant the conviction of one as the keeper of a common gaming house, he need not be the proprietor or lessee; it is sufficient if he has the general superintendence; 67 Ill. 587.

KEEPER OF THE FOREST (called, also, the chief warden of the forest). An officer who had the principal government over all officers within the forest, and warned them to appear at the court of justice-seat on a summons from the lord chief-justice in eyre. Manw. For. Law, part 1, p. 156; Jacob, Law Dict.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL (lord keeper of the great seal). A judicial officer who is by virtue of his office a lord, and a member of the privy council. Through his hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the crown, to be sealed with the great seal, which is under his keeping. The office was consolidated with that of lord chancellor by 5 Eliz. c. 18; and the lord chancellor is appointed by delivery of the great seal, and taking oath. Co. 4th Inst. 87; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 171, 174; 3 Bla. Com. 47.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL. The officer through whose hands go all charters, pardons, etc. signed by the king before going to the great seal, and some which do not go there at all. He is of the privy council virtute officii. He was first called clerk of the privy seal, then guardian, then lord privy seal, which is his present designation. 12 Ric. II. c. 12; Rot. Parl. 11 Hen. IV.; Stat. 34 Hen. VIII. c. 4; 4 Inst. 55; 2 Bla. Com. 347.

KEEPING HOUSE. In English Law. As an act of bankruptcy, is when a man absents himself from his place of business and retires to his private residence, so as to evade the importunity of creditors. The usual evidence of "keeping house" is denial to a creditor who has called for money. Robson, Bkcy.; 6 Bing. 363.

KEEPING OPEN.

A statute prohibiting shops to be kept open on Sunday is violated where one allows general access to his shop for purposes of traffic, though the outer entrances are closed; 11 Gray, 308; 16 Mich. 472.

KEEPING TERM. In English Law. A duty performed by students of law, consisting in eating a sufficient number of dinners in hall to make the term count for the purpose of being called to the bar; Moz. & W.

KENNING TO THE TERCE. In Scotch Law. The ascertainment by a sheriff of the just proportion of the husband's lands which belongs to the widow in virtue of her terce or third. An assignment of dower by sheriff. Erskine, Inst. 11. 9. 50; Bell, Dict.

KENTLEDGE, or KINTLEDGE. The permanent ballast of a ship. Ab. Sh. 6.

KENTUCKY. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

This state was formerly a part of Virginia, which by an act of its legislature, passed December 18, 1789, consented that the district of Kentucky within the jurisdiction of the said commonwealth, and according to its actual boundaries at the time of passing the act aforesaid, should be formed into a new state. By the act of congress of February, 1791, 1 Story, Laws, 168, congress consented that, after the first day of June, 1792, the district of Kentucky should be formed into a new state, separate from and independent of the commonwealth of Virginia. And by the second section it is enacted, that upon the aforesaid first day of June, 1792, the said new state, by the name and style of the state of Kentucky, shall be received and admitted into this Union, as a new and entire member of the United States of America.

The present constitution of this state was adopted June 11, 1850. The powers of government are divided into three distinct departments, each of them confided to a separate body of magistracy, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial.

Legislative Department.—The legislative power is vested in two branches; a house of representatives and a senate, which together constitute the general assembly of the commonwealth of Kentucky. The house of representatives consists of one hundred members. Representatives are elected for a term of two years on the first Monday in August in every second year beginning with 1851, and must have attained the age of twenty-four years, and have resided in the state two years preceding the election, the last year thereof in the county, town, or city for which they are chosen. Voters for representative shall be male citizens of the age of twenty-one years, who have resided in the state two years, or in the county, town, or city one year next preceding the election.

The senate consists of thirty-eight senators, who are elected for a term of four years. Upon its first session under this constitution in 1851, the senators then elected were divided by lot into two classes. The seats of the first class became vacant at the end of two years, so that half of the senate is chosen every second year. Senators must be citizens of the United States, of the age of thirty years, and have resided in the state six years preceding the election, the last year thereof in the district for which they are chosen.

The general assembly convenes at the seat of government, which is at the town of Frankfort, in Franklin county.

Executive Department.—The executive power is vested in the chief magistrate, who is styled the governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky. He is elected for a term of four years by the qualified voters of the state, and is ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the term for which he shall have been elected. He must be at least thirty-five years of age, a citizen of the United States, and must have been an inhabitant of the state six years next preceding his election. No member of congress, or person holding any office under the United States, or minister of any religious society, is eligible to this office. The governor is commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the commonwealth, and its militia, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States. He has power to remit fines and forfeitures, grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment. In cases of treason, he has power to grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly, and in case of a disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, not exceeding four months. "He shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed."

A lieutenant-governor is chosen at every regular election for governor in the same manner and for the same term. He must have the same qualifications, and he is, by virtue of his office, speaker of the senate; has a right in committee of the whole to debate and vote on all subjects, and when the senate is equally divided, to give the casting vote. Should the governor be impeached, removed from office, die, refuse to qualify, resign, or be absent from the state, the lieutenant-governor shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office of governor, or until another be duly elected and qualified, or the governor, if absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted.

The governor has power to return bills which have passed the general assembly, to the house in which they originated, with his objections thereto, which are to be entered upon its journal, and such house shall then proceed to reconsider the bill, and if, after such reconsideration, a majority of all the members elected to that house agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent to the other house with the objections, and there be likewise considered, and if approved by a majority of all the members elected to that house, it shall be a law, but the votes of both houses must be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against the bill entered in the journal. Any bill not returned by the governor within ten days (Sundays excepted), after it shall have been presented to him, shall become a law, as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall be a law unless sent back within three days after the next meeting of the legislature. Every order, resolution, or vote, in which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor and be approved by him before it shall take effect, or, being disapproved, shall be repassed as before provided. Contested elections for governor and lieutenant-governor shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly, according to such regulations as may be established by law.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.—The judicial power of the commonwealth, both as to matters of law and equity, is vested in one supreme court, styled the court of appeals, and such courts, inferior to the supreme court, as the general assembly may from time to time recommend and establish. The court of appeals consists of four judges, who hold their offices eight years and until their successors are duly qualified, but for any reasonable cause the governor shall remove any of them on the address of two-thirds of each house of the general assembly. The judges are elected; and for the purpose of electing judges the state is by law divided into four districts, in each of which the qualified voters elect one judge of the court of appeals. One judge is elected every two years. A judge of this court must be a citizen of the United States, and resident in the district for which he may be a candidate two years next preceding his election. He must be at least thirty years of age, and have been a practising lawyer or a practising lawyer and judge for eight years.

The inferior courts consist of circuit courts of general jurisdiction, having cognizance of suits both at common law and equity and of criminal cases, but in some circuits the common law jurisdiction is vested in courts of common pleas, and the equity jurisdiction in chancery courts.

In each county there is a county court with probate jurisdiction, and appellate jurisdiction of certain minor appeals from magistrates. The county court is, at stated times, organized as a levy court, composed of the presiding judge of the county court and the magistrates of the county, which has the power of a local legislature for county matters.

There are also justices of the peace. All judges are elected for terms provided by law, by the qualified voters of the district in which they hold office.

KEY. An instrument made for shutting and opening a lock.

The keys of a house are considered as real estate, and descend to the heir with the inheritance; 11 Co. 50 b; 30 E. L. & Eq. 598. See 5 Blackf. 417; 5 Taunt. 518.

When the keys of a warehouse are delivered to a purchaser of goods locked up there, with a view of effecting a delivery of such goods, the delivery is complete. The doctrine of the civil law is the same; Dig. 41. 1. 9. 6; 18. 1. 74.

Keys are implements of housebreaking within statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, § 1; for, though commonly used for lawful purposes, they are capable of being employed for purposes of housebreaking; and it is a question for the jury whether the person found in possession of them by night had them without lawful excuse, with the intention of using them as implements of housebreaking; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 472; 3 C. & K. 250.

KEYAGE. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

KEYS. In the Isle of Man are the twenty-four chief commoners, who form the local legislature. 1 Steph. Com. 99.

KIDNAPPING. The forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country and sending them into another; 4 Bla. Com. 219. At common law it is a misdmeanor; Comb. 10.

There is no wide difference in meaning between kidnapping, false imprisonment, and abduction. The better view seems to be that kidnapping is a false imprisonment, which it always includes, aggravated by the carrying of the person to some other place; 2 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 750–756. It has been held that transportation to a foreign country is not necessary, though this conflicts with Blackstone's definition, supra; 8 N. H. 550; see 1 East, P. C. 429. The consent of a mature person of sound mind prevents any act from being kidnapping; otherwise as to a young child: a child of nine years has been held too young to render his consent available as a defence; 41 N. H. 53; 5 Allen, 518; Thach. Cr. Cas. 488. Physical force need not be applied. The crime may be effected by means of menaces; 20 Ill. 315; or by getting a man drunk; 25 N. Y. 373. Where the custody of a child is assigned to one of two divorced parents, and the other, or a third person employed for the purpose, carries it off, it is kidnapping; 41 N. H. 53; 5 Allen, 518. New York, Illinois, and other states, have passed statutes on kidnapping. See ABDUCTION; 1 Russ. Cr. 962; 3 Tex. 282; 12 Metc. 56; 2 Park. Cr. Ca. 590.

It has been held, however, that the carrying away is not essential; 8 N. H. 550. The crime includes a false imprisonment; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 671. See ABDUCTION; 1 Russ. Cr. 716; 2 Harr. Del. 538; 3 Tex. 282; 12 Metc. 56.

Kidnapping Act, 1872. The stat. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 19, for the prevention and punishment of criminal outrages upon natives of the islands of the Pacific ocean. Amended by the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 51.

KILDERKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to eighteen gallons.

KIN. Legal relationship.

KINDRED. Relations by blood. This properly includes only legitimate kindred; 1 Bla. Com. 459; 38 Me. 153.

Nature has divided the kindred of every one into three principal classes. 1. His children, and their descendants. 2. His father, mother, and other ascendants. 3. His collateral relations; which include, in the first place, his brothers and sisters, and their descendants; and, secondly, his uncles, cousins, and other relations of either sex, who have not descended from a brother or sister of the deceased. All kindred, then, are descendants, ascendants, or collaterals. A husband or wife of the deceased, therefore, is not his or her kindred; 14 Ves. 372. See Wood. Inst. 50; Ayliffe, Parerg. 325; Dane, Abr.; Toullier, Ex. 382, 383; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 516, n.; Pothier, Des Successions, c. 1, art. 3.

KING. The chief magistrate of a kingdom, vested usually with the executive power.

The following table of the reigns of English and British kings and queens is added, to assist the student in many points of chronology:—

KING CAN DO NO WRONG.

This maxim means that the king is not responsible legally for aught he may please to do, or for any omission. Aust. Jur. sect. VI. It does not mean that everything done by the government is just and lawful, but that whatever is exceptionable in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king; 2 Steph. Com. 478; Moz. & W.

This maxim has no place in the system of constitutional law of the United States, as applicable either to the government or any of its officers. Our government is not liable for the wrongful and unauthorized acts of its officers, however high their place, and though done under a mistaken zeal for the public good; 21 Alb. L. Jour. 397; 2 Wall. 561; 7 id. 122; 8 id. 269.

KING'S BENCH. See COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

KING'S or QUEEN'S COUNSEL. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king's counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the crown without special leave, which is, however, always granted, at a cost of about nine pounds. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 27, note.

KING'S EVIDENCE. An accomplice in a felony, who, on an implied promise of pardon if he fully and fairly discloses the truth, is admitted as evidence for the crown against his accomplices. 1 Phill. Ev. 31. A jury may, if they please, convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice; 4 Steph. Com. 398. On giving a full and fair confession of truth, the accomplice has an equitable title to a recommendation to mercy. He cannot be admitted to testify as king's evidence after judgment against him; 2 Russ. Cri. 956–958. In the United States, this is known as state's evidence.

KING'S SILVER. A fine or payment due to the king for leave to agree in order to levying a fine (finalis concordia). 2 Bla. Com. 350; Dy. 320, pl. 19; 1 Leon. 249, 250; 2 id. 56, 179, 233, 234; 5 Coke, 39.

KINGDOM. A country where an officer called a king exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. Wolff. Inst. Nat. § 994. In some kingdoms, the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a queen.

KINSBOTE (from kin, and bote, a composition). In Saxon Law. A composition for killing a kinsman. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Index, Bote.

KIRBY'S QUEST. An ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the English exchequer; so called from being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to Edward I.

KISSING THE BOOK. A ceremony used in taking the corporal oath, the object being, as the canonists say, to denote the assent of the witness to the oath in the form it is imposed. The witness kisses either the whole Bible, or some portion of it; or a cross, in some countries. See the ceremony explained in Oughton's Ordo, tit. lxxx.; Consitt. on Courts, part 3, sect. 1, § 3; Junkin, Oath, 173, 180; 2 Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 234.

KNAVE. A false, dishonest, or deceitful person. This signification of the word has arisen by a long perversion of its original meaning, which was merely servant or attendant.

To call a man a knave has been held to be actionable; 1 Rolle, Abr. 52; 1 Freem. 277; 5 Pick. 244.

KNIGHT. In English Law. The next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the garter, instituted by Edward III. in 1344; next follows, a knight banneret; then come knights of the bath, instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from a custom of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Bla. Com. 403. These are sometimes called knights of the chamber, being such as are made in time of peace, and so called because knighted in the king's chamber, and not in the field. Co. 2d Inst. 666. Knights were called equites, because they always served on horseback; aurati, from the gilt spurs they wore; and milites, because they formed the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures.

KNIGHT'S FEE was anciently so much of an inheritance in land as was sufficient to maintain a knight; and every man possessed of such an estate was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars, or pay a pecuniary sum in lieu thereof, called escuage. In the time of Henry II. the estate was estimated at twenty pounds a year; but Lord Coke, in his time, states it to be an estate of six hundred and eighty acres. Co. Litt. 69 a.

KNIGHT'S SERVICE. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight's fee, a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary commutations, or aids; until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished at the restoration, by the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24. 1 Bla. Com. 410; 2 id. 62.

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS. See PRESENTS.

KNOWINGLY. In Pleading. The word "knowingly," or "well knowing," will supply the place of a positive averment, in an indictment or declaration, that the defendant knew the facts subsequently stated; if notice or knowledge be unnecessarily stated, the allegation may be rejected as surplusage. See Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G 6); 2 Cush. 577; 2 Stra. 904; 2 East, 452; 1 Chitty, Pl. 367.

KNOWLEDGE. Information as to a fact.

Many acts are perfectly innocent when the party performing them is not aware of certain circumstances attending them; for example, a man may pass a counterfeit note, and be guiltless, if he did not know it was so; he may receive stolen goods, if he were not aware of the fact that they were stolen. In these and the like cases it is the guilty knowledge which makes the crime.

Such guilty knowledge is made by the statute a constituent part of the offence; and therefore it must be averred and proved as such. But it is in general true, and may be considered as a rule almost necessary to the restraint and punishment of crimes, that when a man does that which by the common law or by statute is unlawful, and in pursuing his criminal purpose does that which constitutes another and different offence, he shall be held responsible for all the legal consequences of such criminal act. When a man, without justifiable cause, intends to wound or maim another, and in doing it kills him, it is murder, though he had no intention to take life. It is true that in the commission of all crimes a guilty purpose, a criminal will and motive, are implied. But, in general, such bad motive or criminal will and purpose, that disposition of mind and heart which is designated by the generic and significant term "malice," is implied from the criminal act itself. But if a man does an act, which would be otherwise criminal, through mistake or accident, or by force or the compulsion of others, in which his own will and mind do not instigate him to the act or concur in it, it is matter of defence, to be averred and proved on his part, if it does not arise out of the circumstances of the case adduced on the part of the prosecution. Per Shaw, C. J., in 2 Metc. Mass. 192. Thus, it is not necessary, in an indictment against an unmarried man for adultery with a married woman, to aver that he knew, at the time when the offence was committed, that she was a married woman; nor is it necessary to prove such knowledge at the trial. 2 Metc. Mass. 190. See, as to the proof of guilty knowledge, 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 185–191. See INTENTION; IGNORANCE OF LAW. As to the doctrine of imputed knowledge, see NOTICE.

LABEL. A slip of ribbon, parchment, or paper, attached to a deed or other writing to hold the appended seal.

In the ordinary use of the word, it is a slip of paper attached to articles of manufacture for the purpose of describing them or specifying their quality, etc., or the name of the maker. The use of a label has been distinguished from a trade mark proper; Browne, Trade Marks, §§ 133, 537, 538. The use of labels will be protected by a court of equity under some circumstances; id. 538. A copy of a writ in the Eng. Exch. Tidd, Pr. *156.

The labor and skill of one man are frequently used in a partnership, and valued as equal to the capital of another.

When business has been done for another, and suit is brought to recover a just reward, there is generally contained in the declaration a count for work and labor.

Where penitentiaries exist, persons who have committed crimes are condemned to be imprisoned therein at labor. Under an order of court directing a receiver to pay claims for "labor," an attorney who rendered services to the receiver is included; 8 Report. 579.

LABORER. A servant in husbandry or manufacture not living intra mœnia; Wharton, Law Dic.; for various acts of parliament affecting the rights and duties of laborers, see id. tit. Labor.

In Pennsylvania (P. L. 1872, p. 47.), Alabama (Code 1876, sec. 3481), and other states, laborers have a statutory lien for their wages. This applies to those engaged in manual labor; 82 Penn. 149; 84 id. 168; and not to a hotel cook; 77 id. 107.

The term has been held to include a superintendent in charge of laborers employed by a railroad contractor; 5 How. Pr. 454; and a drayman; 30 N. J. Eq. 588; but not an assistant chief engineer on a railroad; 39 Mich. 47; s. c. 33 Am. Rep. 348, n.; nor a contractor for building the roadbed of a railroad; id. 594; nor a superintendent of a mining company; 16 Hun, 186; 17 id. 463; nor a farm overseer; 81 N. C. 340; s. c. 31 Am. Rep. 503; nor a consulting engineer; 38 Barb. 390. But an architect is within the mechanics' lien law which extends to those who "perform labor;" 76 N. Y. 50; s. c. 32 Am. Rep. 262, n.; 26 N. J. Eq. 29, 389; 13 Minn. 475; contra, 6 Mo. App. 445.

LABOR A JURY. To tamper with a jury; to persuade jurymen not to appear. It seems to come from the meaning of labor, to prosecute with energy, to urge: as to labor a point. Dy. 48; Hob. 294; Co. Litt. 157 b; 14 & 20 Hen. VII. 30, 11. The first lawyer that came from England to practise in Boston was sent back for laboring a jury. Washb. Jud. Hist.

LACHES (Fr. lacher). Unreasonable delay; neglect to do a thing or to seek to enforce a right at the proper time.

When a person has been guilty of unreasonable delay in seeking to enforce a right in equity, this circumstance will, in many cases, in equity prejudice his right, or even his remedy. It is said that equity does not encourage stale claims, nor give relief to those who sleep upon their rights; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. 472; 9 Pet. 405; 91 U. S. 512, 806.

Equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract where the person seeking it has been guilty of laches in bringing his bill, nor unless he has shown himself ready, desirous, prompt, and eager; 5 Ves. 720 n.; Fry, Sp. Perf. 422.

One who seeks to impeach a transaction on the ground of fraud must seek redress promptly; he must show reasonable diligence. Mere lapse of time will sometimes render a fraudulent transaction unimpeachable; Kerr, Fraud & Mist. 303; 9 Pet. 405.

In general, when a party has been guilty of laches in enforcing his right by great delay, this circumstance will, at common law, prejudice and sometimes operate in bar of a remedy which it is discretionary and not compulsory in the court to afford. In courts of equity, and in admiralty, spiritual, and other courts, also, delay will generally prejudice; 1 Chitty, Pr. 786, and the cases there cited; 6 Johns. Ch. 360. As laches at law, Chitty refers only to cases of injury to character and feelings, to objections to irregularities in legal proceedings, and to motions for criminal informations; the first is, however, a mere question of fact for the jury, the last two of practice.

But laches may be excused from ignorance of the party's right; 2 Mer. 362; 2 Ball & B. 104; from the obscurity of the transaction; 2 Sch. & L. 487; by the pendency of a suit; 1 Sch. & L. 413; and where the party labors under a legal disability; as, insanity, coverture, infancy, and the like. And no laches can be imputed to the public; 4 Mass. 522; 3 S. & R. 291; 4 Hen. & M. 57. See Belt, Suppl. to Ves. 436; 2 id. 170.

LADY'S FRIEND. Previously to the act of 1857 abolishing parliamentary divorces, a functionary in the British house of commons. When the husband sues for a divorce, or asks the passage of an act to divorce him from his wife, he is required to make a provision for her before the passage of the act: it is the duty of the lady's friend to see that such a provision is made. Macq. H. & W. 213.

LADY-DAY. The 25th of March, the feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary. In parts of Ireland, however, they so designate the 15th of August, the festival of the Assumption of the Virgin.

LÆSA MAJESTAS (Lat.). Læse-majesty, or injured majesty; high treason. It is a phrase taken from the civil law, and anciently meant any offence against the king's person or dignity, defined by 25 Edw. III. c. 6. See Glanv. lib. 5, c. 2; 4 Bla. Com. 75; Br. 118; CRIMEN LÆSÆ MAJESTATIS.

LÆSIONE FIDEI, SUITS PRO, proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts for spiritual offences against conscience, for non-payment of debts, or breaches of civil contracts. This attempt to turn the ecclesiastical courts into courts of equity was checked by the Constitutions of Clarendon, A. D. 1164, q. v. 3 Bla. Com. 52; Whart. Lex.

LAGA. The law.

LAGAN (Sax. liggan, cubare). Goods found at such a distance from shore that it was uncertain what coast they would be carried to, and therefore belonging to the finder. Br. 120. See LIGAN.

LAHLSLIT (Sax.). A breach of law. Cowel. A mulct for an offence, viz.: twelve "ores." 1 Anc. Inst. & Laws of Eng. 169.

LAIRESITE. The name of a fine imposed upon those who committed adultery or fornication. Tech. Dict.

LAITY. Those persons who do not make a part of the clergy. They are divided into three states: 1. Civil, including all the nation, except the clergy, the army and navy, and subdivided into the nobility and the commonalty. 2. Military. 3. Maritime, consisting of the navy. Whart. Lex. In the United States the division of the people into clergy and laity is not authorized by law, but is merely conventional.

LAKE. A riparian owner of land on a navigable lake does not own any part of the bed, but on a non-navigable lake he takes the bed of the lake ad medium filum; 42 Wisc. 214, 248; 45 Vt. 215; 58 Ind. 248. See L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1324. The riparian proprietor upon a navigable lake has the exclusive right of access to and from the lake in front of his land, and of building wharves in aid of navigation, not interfering with the public easement; 42 Wisc. 214; 10 Mich. 125. Riparian owners on the large fresh-water lakes of New York own only to low water mark; the public own the beds of the lake; 4 Wend. 423; the same rule obtains in New Hampshire; 9 N. H. 461; but in a later case it was held that a lake about one mile wide by five miles long passed under a grant of a larger tract which included it; 36 Barb. 102. See Ang. Waterc.

LAMB. A sheep, ram or ewe, under the age of one year. 4 C. & P. 216.

LAMBETH DEGREE. A degree given by the archbishop of Canterbury. 1 Bla. Com. 381, n. Although he can confer all degrees given by the two universities, the graduates have many privileges not shared by the recipients of his degrees.

LAMMAS DAY. The 1st of August. Cowel. It is one of the Scotch quarter days, and is what is called a "conventional term." Moz. and W.

LAND, LANDS. A term comprehending any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever: as, meadows, pastures, woods, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. 45 N. H. 313. Arable land.

Annexations made by a stranger to the soil of another without his consent become the property of the owner of the soil; Britton, bk. 2, ch. 2, sec. 6, p. 856; 2 Kent, 334; 15 Ill. 397. When annexations are made by the owner of the soil with the materials of another, so long as the identity of the original materials can be proved, the right of the original owner is not lost; 25 Vt. 620; 57 N. H. 514.

An estate of frank tenement at the least. Shepp. Touch. 92.

Land has an indefinite extent upward as well as downward: therefore, land legally includes all houses or other buildings standing or built on it, and whatever is in a direct line between the surface and the centre of the earth. 3 Kent, 378, n. See Co. Litt. 4 a; Wood, Inst. 120; 2 Bla. Com. 18; 1 Cruise, Dig. 58. The law recognizes horizontal divisions of land: e. g., the different strata of a mine; 37 Penn. 430. Under the homestead laws, a part of a house may be reserved and the rest taken in execution; 4 Iowa, 368. Contra, 9 Wisc. 70. Livery may be made of a chamber in a house; Shep. Touchst. 214; and an upper chamber may constitute a distinct tenement; Burt. R. P. 549. See the subject treated in 1 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 577. It is not so broad a term as tenements, or hereditaments, but has been defined in some states as including these. 1 Washb. R. P. 9; 2 Rev. Stat. of N. Y. 137, § 6; 28 Barb. 336.

In the technical sense, freeholds are not included within the word lands; 3 Madd. 535. The term terra in Latin was used to denote land, from terendo, quia vomere teritur (because it is broken by the plough), and, accordingly, in fines and recoveries, land, i. e. terra, has been held to mean arable land; Salk. 256; Cowp. 346; Co. Litt. 4 a; 11 Co. 55 a. But see Cro. Eliz. 476; 4 Bingh. 90; Burt. R. P. 196. See, also, 2 P. Wms. 458, n.; 5 Ves. 476; 20 Viner, Abr. 203.

Land includes, in general, all the buildings erected upon it; 9 Day, 374; but to this general rule there are some exceptions. It is true that if a stranger voluntarily erect buildings on another's land, they will belong to the owner of the land, and will become a part of it; 16 Mass. 449; 105 id. 414; yet cases are not wanting where it has been held that such an erection, under peculiar circumstances, would be considered as personal property; 4 Mass. 514; 111 id. 298; 6 N. H. 555; 10 Me. 371; 1 Dana, 591; 1 Burr. 144. It includes mines, except mines of gold and silver; and in the United States a grant of public lands will include these also; 3 Kent, 378, n.; 1 N. Y. 572. See MINES.

If one be seised of some lands in fee, and possessed of other lands for years, all in one parish, and he grant all his lands in that parish (without naming them), in fee-simple, or for life, by this grant shall pass no more but the lands he hath in fee-simple; Shepp. Touchst. 92. But if a man have no freehold estate, "lands," in a will, will pass his leasehold; and now, by statute, leasehold will pass if no contrary intent is shown, and the description is applicable even if he have freehold; 1 Vict. c. 26; 2 B. & P. 303; Cro. Car. 292: 1 P. Wms. 286; 11 Beav. 237, 250.

Generally, in wills, "land" is used in its broadest sense: 1 Jarm. Wills, 604, n.; Pow. Dev. 186; 10 Paige, 140. But as the word has two senses, one general and one restricted, if it occurs accompanied with other words which either in whole or in part supply the difference between the two senses, that is a reason for taking it in its less general sense: e. g. in a grant of lands, meadows, and pastures, the former word is held to mean only arable land; Burt. R. P. 183; Cro. Eliz. 476, 659; 2 And. 123; 5 Johns. 440.

Incorporeal hereditaments will not pass under "lands," if there is any other real estate to satisfy the devise; but if there is no other such real estate they will pass, by statute. Moore, 359, pl. 49; 3 & 4 Will. IV. cc. 74, 105, 106. See REAL PROPERTY; FIXTURES.

In equity, under certain circumstances, money is considered land; as where it is directed to be converted into land, by will or contract, marriage articles, settlement, or otherwise; Bisp. Eq. § 307. See CONVERSION.

LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACTS. Important acts, beginning in 1845, and last amended by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18, the object of which was to provide legislative clauses in a convenient form for incorporation by reference in future special acts of parliament for taking lands, with or without the consent of their owners, for the promotion of railways, and other public undertakings; Moz. & W.

LAND CHAP, LAND CHHAP (land, and Sax. ceapan, to buy). A fine payable in money or cattle, upon the alienation of land, within certain manors and liberties. Cowel, Gloss.

LAND COURT. In American Law. The name of a court which formerly existed in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri, having sole jurisdiction in St. Louis county in suits respecting lands, and in actions of ejectment, dower, partition.

LANDIRECTA. Rights charged upon land. Toml. See TRINODA NECESSITAS.

LAND-MARK. A monument set up in order to ascertain the boundaries between two contiguous estates. For removing a landmark an action lies. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 787. See MONUMENTS.

LAND-REEVE. One whose business it is to overlook parts of an estate. Moz. & W.

LAND TAX. A tax on the beneficial proprietor of land such as is imposed in many of the states; so far as a tenant is beneficial proprietor, and no farther, does it rest on him. It has superseded all other methods of taxation in Great Britain. Sugden, Vend. 268. It was first imposed in 1693, a new valuation of the lands in the kingdom having been made in 1692, which has not since been changed. In 1798 it was made perpetual, at a rate of four shillings in a pound of valued rent. Under the provisions of the stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 74; this tax is now generally redeemed. See Encyc. Brit. Taxation.

LAND TENANT (commonly called terre tenant, q. v.). He who actually possesses the land.

LAND TITLES AND TRANSFER ACT. The stat. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87, for the establishment of a registry for titles to land, with various provisions in reference to the transmission of land, and unregistered dealings with registered land, etc. Analogous to the recording or registry laws of the United States.

LANDING. A place for loading or unloading boats, but not a harbor for them. 74 Penn. 373.

LANDLORD. The lord or proprietor of land, who, under the feudal system, retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud, or fee of the land; while his grantee, who had only the possession and use of the land, was styled the feudatory, or vassal, which was only another name for the tenant or holder of it. In the popular meaning of the word, however, it is applied to a person who owns lands or tenements which he rents out to others.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. A term used to denote the relation which subsists by virtue of a contract, express or implied, between two or more persons, for the possession or occupation of lands or tenements either for a definite period, from year to year, for life, or at will.

When this relation is created by an express contract, the instrument made use of for the purpose is called a lease. See LEASE. But it may also arise by necessary implication from the circumstances of the case and the relative position of the parties to each other; for the law will imply its existence in many cases where there is an ownership of land on the one hand and an occupation of it by permission on the other; and in such cases it will be presumed that the occupant intends to compensate the owner for the use of the premises; 4 Pet. 84; 39 Ill. 578; 60 N. Y. 102.

The intention to create. This relation may be inferred from a variety of circumstances; but the most obvious acknowledgment of its existence is the payment of rent; and this principle applies even after the expiration of a lease for a definite term of years; for if a tenant continues to hold over, after his term has run out, the landlord may, if he chooses, consider him a tenant, and he is, in fact, understood to do so, unless he proceeds to eject him at once. If the landlord suffers him to remain, and receives rent from him, or by any other act acknowledges him still as tenant, a new tenancy springs up, usually from year to year, regulated by the same covenants and stipulations entered into between the parties at the creation of the original term in so far as they are applicable to the altered nature of the tenancy; 15 Johns. 505; 4 M'Cord. 59; 2 C. & P. 348; 42 Ind. 212; 43 Md. 446; 42 Cal. 316.

The payment of money, however, is only a prima facie acknowledgment of the existence of a tenancy; for if it does not appear to have been paid as rent, but has been paid by mistake or stands upon some other consideration, it will not be evidence of a subsisting tenancy; 10 East, 261; 4 Bingh. 91; 3 B. & C. 413; 4 M. & G. 143. Neither does a mere participation in the profits of land, where the owner is not excluded from possession, nor the letting of land upon shares, unless the occupant expressly agrees to pay a certain part of the crop as rent, in either case amount to a tenancy; 1 Gill & J. 266; 3 Zabr. 390; 2 Rawle, 11; 42 Vt. 94; 60 N. Y. 221; 21 Ill. 200.

But the relation of landlord and tenant will not be inferred from the mere occupation of land, if the relative position of the parties to each other can, under the circumstances of the case, be referred to any other distinct cause: as, for instance, between a vendor and vendee of land, where the purchaser remains in possession after the agreement to purchase falls through. For the possession in that case was evidently taken with the understanding of both parties that the occupant should be owner, and not tenant; and the other party cannot without his consent convert him into a tenant, so as to charge him with rent; 6 Johns. 46; 21 Me. 525; 8 M. & W. 118; 10 Cush. 259; 16 Vt. 257; 11 N. H. 148; 60 Barb. 463; 46 Me. 456; 12 B. Monr. 504; 16 Pet. 25; 17 Ind. 509. The same principle applies to a mortgagor and mortgagee, as well as to that of a mortgagor and an assignee of the mortgagee; for no privity of the estate exists in either case; and, as a general rule, a tenancy by implication can never arise under a party who has not the legal estate of the premises in question; 2 M. & R. 303; 6 Ad. & E. 265; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 25; 16 Vt. 371.

Generally, the rights and obligations of the parties will be considered as having commenced from the date of the lease, if there be one, and no other time for its commencement has been agreed upon; or, if there be no date, then from the delivery of the papers. If, however, there be no writings, it will take effect from the day the tenant entered into possession, and not with reference to any particular quarter-day; 4 Johns. 230; 15 Wend. 656; 3 Camp. 510; Taylor, Landl. & T. 135 (11 ed.). And these rights and duties attach to each of the parties, not only in respect to each other, but also with reference to other persons who are strangers to the contract. The landlord retains certain rights over the property, although he has parted with its possession, while the tenant assumes obligations with respect to it which continue so long as he is invested with that character.

After the making of a lease, the right of possession, in legal contemplation, remains in the landlord until the contract is consummated by the entry of the lessee. When the tenant enters, this right of possession changes, and he draws to himself all the rights incident to possession. The landlord's rights in the premises during the term of the lease are confined to those expressly or impliedly derived from the contract of lease and to the protection of his reversionary interest. He may maintain actions for such injuries as would, in the ordinary course of things, continue to affect his interest after the determination of the lease. But such injuries must be of a character permanently to affect the inheritance; such are breaking the windows of a house, cutting timber, or damming up a rivulet, whereby the timber on the estate becomes rotten; 11 Mass. 519; 1 Maule & S. 234; 3 Me. 6; 5 Duer, 494; 26 How. Pr. 105.

The landlord usually reserves the right to go upon the premises peaceably, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any waste or injury has been committed by the tenant or other persons, first giving notice of his intention. But he has no such right unless he reserves it in the lease. He may also use all ways appurtenant thereto, and peaceably enter the premises to demand rent, to make such repairs as are necessary to prevent waste, or to remove an obstruction; 1 B. & C. 8; 7 Pick. 76; 5 Harr. 378. But if the rent is payable in hay or other produce, to be delivered to him from the farm, he is not entitled to go upon the land and take it, until it is delivered to him by the tenant, or until after it has been severed and set apart for his use; 9 Me. 137; 5 Blackf. 317.

The landlord's responsibilities in respect to possession, also, are suspended as soon as the tenant commences his occupation; 4 Term, 318; 2 Sandf. 301; 2 St. Louis (Mo.) App. 66. But if a stranger receive injuries from the ruinous state of the premises at the time of the demise, or from any fault in their construction, or from any nuisance thereon, even though it be created by a tenant's ordinary use of the premises, the landlord remains liable; 43 Barb. 482; L. R. 2 C. P. 311; 116 Mass. 67; 4 Hun, 24; 20 Penn. 387; and if the landlord has undertaken to keep the premises in repair, and the injury be occasioned by his neglect to keep up the repairs, or if he renew the lease with a nuisance upon it, he will be likewise liable; 2 H. Blackst. 350; 4 Taunt. 649; 1 Ad. & E. 822; 67 Ill. 47.

The principal obligation on the part of the landlord, which is, in fact, always to be implied from the operative words of the lease, but is also usually inserted as a distinct covenant, is that the tenant shall enjoy the quiet possession of the premises.—which means, substantially, that he shall not be turned out of possession of the whole or any material part of the premises by one having a title paramount to that of landlord, or that the landlord shall not himself disturb or render his occupation uncomfortable by the erection of a nuisance on or near the premises, which the law holds tantamount to an eviction; 8 Co. 80 b; 4 Wend. 502; 8 Paige, 597; 8 Cow. 727; 13 N. Y. 151; 5 Day, 282; 6 Term, 458; 29 Md. 35; 10 Gray, 258; 3 Duer, 464; 3 East, 491; 6 Dowl. & R. 349; 7 Wend. 281; 6 Mass. 246. But express covenants for quiet enjoyment are framed usually only against eviction by a paramount title and against the lessor, his heirs, and those claiming under them; implied covenants have a similar effect. So that if the tenant be ousted by a stranger, that is, by one having no title, or if the molestation proceeds from the acts of a third person, the landlord is in neither case responsible for it; 1 Term, 671; 3 Johns. 471; 7 Wend. 281; 5 Hill, N. Y. 599; 13 East, 72; 12 Wend. 529; 25 Barb. 594; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 304, etc.

Another obligation which the law imposes upon the landlord, in the absence of any express stipulation in the lease, is the payment of all arrears of ground-rent, or interest upon mortgages to which the property leased may be subject. The same rule applies as regards all taxes chargeable on the premises, though, as regards these, statutes, both in England and in almost all the United States, have been passed expressly imposing the duty of paying them on the landlord. Sometimes covenants to that effect are inserted in the lease. In general, every landlord is bound to protect his immediate tenant against all paramount claims; and if a tenant is compelled, in order to protect himself in the enjoyment of the land in respect of which his rent is payable, to make payment which ought, as between himself and his landlord, to have been made by the latter, he may call upon the landlord to reimburse him, or he may set off such payment against the rent due or to become due; 6 Taunt. 524; 5 Bingh. 409; 3 B. & Ald. 647; 7 id. 285; 5 id. 521; 3 Ad. & E. 331; 3 M. & W. 312; 19 Mo. 501.

There is no warranty in a lease on the part of the landlord that the premises are fit for the purpose for which they are intended (but see 3 Rob. La. 52); 25 Wend. 669; 71 Penn. 383; 3 Gray, 323; 48 Me. 316. The landlord is, in the absence of any express covenant or agreement, under no obligation to make any repairs, or to rebuild in case the premises should be burned. And it is not in the power of a tenant to make repairs at the expense of his landlord, unless there be a special agreement between them authorizing him to do so; for the tenant takes the premises for better or for worse, and cannot involve the landlord in expense for repairs without his consent; 6 Cow. 475; 3 Du. N. Y. 464; 7 East, 116; 1 Ry. & M. 357; 7 Mann. & G. 576; 52 N. Y. 512; 51 Ill. 492; 33 Cal. 341; 1 Sandf. 321; 22 Ind. 114; 36 Vt. 40. Even if the premises have become uninhabitable by fire, and the landlord having insured them has recovered the insurance-money, the tenant cannot compel him to expend the money so recovered in rebuilding, unless he has expressly engaged to do so; nor can he, in such an event, protect himself from the payment of rent during the unexpired balance of the term; 8 Paige, Ch. 437; 1 Sim. Ch. 146; 1 Term, 312; 4 N. Y. 126; 1 E. & E. 474; 52 N. Y. 512; 81 Ill. 607.

On the part of the tenant, we may observe that on taking possession he is at once invested with all the rights incident to possession, is entitled to the use of all the privileges and easements appurtenant to the premises, and is at liberty to take such reasonable estovers and emblements as are attached to the estate. He may maintain an action against any person who disturbs his possession or trespasses upon the premises, though it be the landlord himself; Cro. Car. 325; 3 Wils. 461; 2 W. Bla. 924; 2 B. & Ad. 97; 1 Denio, 91; 3 Lev. 209; 17 C. B. N. S. 678; 8 Cush. 119; 1 Ohio, 251. And even after the expiration of his term may recover for injuries done during the period of his tenancy; 2 Rolle, Abr. 551; Holt, N. P. C. 553. As occupant, he is also answerable for any neglect to repair highways, fences, or party-wall. He is liable for all injuries produced by the mismanagement of his servants, or by a nuisance kept upon the premises, or by an obstruction of the highway adjacent to them, or the like; for, as a general rule, where a man is in possession of property, he must so manage it that other persons shall not be injured thereby; 3 Term, 766; 3 Q. B. 449; 2 Ld. Raym. 792; 22 N. Y. 355; 65 Ill. 160; 1 M. & W. 435; 51 Penn. 429; 3 Hun, 708.

Another obligation which the law imposes upon every tenant, independent of any agreement, is to treat the premises in such a manner that no substantial injury shall be done to them, and so that they may revert to the landlord at the end of the term, unimpaired by any wilful or negligent conduct on his part. In the language of the books, he must keep the buildings wind-and-water-tight, and is bound to make fair and tenantable repairs, such as the keeping of fences in order, or replacing doors and windows that are broken during his occupation. If it is a furnished house, he must preserve the furniture, and leave it, with the linen, etc., clean and in good order; 5 C. & P. 239; 7 id. 327; 4 Term, 318; 18 Ves. Ch. 331; 2 Esp. 590; 4 M. & G. 95; 12 M. & W. 827; 94 U. S. 53; 55 Md. 71; 28 Penn. 305.

But he is not bound to rebuild premises which have accidentally become ruinous during his occupation; nor is he answerable for ordinary wear and tear, nor for an accidental fire, nor to put a new roof on the building, nor to make what are usually called general or substantial repairs. Neither is he bound to do painting, white-washing, or papering, except so far as they may be necessary to preserve exposed timber from decay. In general he need do nothing which will make the inheritance better than he found it; 6 Term, 650; 6 C. & P. 8; 12 Ad. & E. 476; 1 Marsh. 567; 10 B. & C. 299; 2 Daly, 140; 10 Q. B. 135.

With respect to farming leases, a tenant is under a similar obligation to repair; but it differs from the general obligation in this, that it is confined to the dwelling-house which he occupies,—the burden of repairing and maintaining the out-buildings and other erections on the farm being sustained either by the landlord, or the tenant, in the absence of any express provision in the lease, by the particular custom of the country in which the farm is situated. He is always bound, however, to cultivate the farm in a good and husband-like manner, to keep the fences in repair, and to preserve the timber and ornamental trees in good condition; and for any violation of any of these duties he is liable to be proceeded against by the landlord for waste, whether the act of waste be committed by the tenant or, through his negligence, by a stranger; Co. Litt. 53; 6 Taunt. 300; 13 East, 18; 2 Dougl. 745; 1 Taunt. 198; 1 Denio, 104; 55 Penn. 347; 70 Ill. 527; 94 U. S. 53; 5 Term, 373. As to what constitutes waste, see WASTE.

The tenant's general obligation to repair also renders him responsible for any injury a stranger may sustain by his neglect to keep the premises in a safe condition: as, by not keeping the covers of his vaults sufficiently closed, so that a person walking in the street falls through, or is injured thereby. If he repairs or improves the building, he must guard against accident to the passers-by in the street, by erecting a suitable barricade, or stationing a person there to give notice of the danger; 2 Term, 318; 109 Mass. 398; 22 N. Y. 366; 65 Barb. 214; L. R. 2 C. P. 311; L. R. 5 Q. B. 501. For any unreasonable obstruction which he places in the highway adjoining his premises, he may be indicted for causing a public nuisance, as well as rendered liable to an action for damages, at the suit of any individual injured. Nor may the tenant keep dangerous animals on the premises; 4 Denio, 500; 15 Vt. 404. At common law, if a fire began in a dwelling-house and spread to neighboring buildings, the tenant of the house where the fire begun was liable on damages to all whose property was injured. But by a statute of Queen Anne, amended by stat. 14 Geo. III. c. 78, this right of action has been taken away. The statute is generally re-enacted in the United States; vide Taylor, Landl. & T. § 196.

The tenant's chief duty, however, is the payment of rent, the amount of which is either fixed by the terms of the lease, or, in the absence of an express agreement, is such a reasonable compensation for the occupation of the premises as they are fairly worth. If there has been no particular agreement between the parties, the tenant pays rent only for the time he has had the beneficial enjoyment of the premises; but if he has entered into an express agreement to pay rent during the term, no casualty or injury to the premises by fire or otherwise, nothing, in fact, short of an eviction, will excuse him from such payment; Al. 26; 4 Paige, Ch. 355; 18 Ves. 415; 1 H. & J. 42; 16 Mass. 240; 7 Gray, 560; 1 Term, 310; 10 M. & W. 321; 6 Phila. 457; 72 Penn. 685; 61 N. Y. 356; 80 Ill. 532; 4 Harr. & J. 564. But this is not the law in South Carolina; 1 Bay, 499; 4 McCord, 447. But, if he has been deprived of the possession of the premises by the landlord, or by a third person, under a title paramount to that of the landlord, or if the latter annoys his tenant, or erects or causes the erection of such a nuisance upon or near the premises as renders the tenant's occupation so uncomfortable as to justify his removal, he is in either case discharged from the payment of rent; 8 Cowen, 727; 4 N. Y. 217; 4 Rawle, 339; Co. Litt. 148 b; 75 Ill. 536; 117 Mass. 262; 106 Mass. 201; 18 N.Y. 509; 63 Ill. 430; 2 Ired. Eq. 350; 17 C. B. 30. If, however, part only of the premises be recovered by paramount title, the rent is apportioned, and the tenant remains liable in proportion to the part from which he has not been evicted; 2 East, 575; 39 Barb. 59; 1 Allen, 489; see RENT.

The obligation to pay rent may be apportioned; for, as rent is incident to the reversion, it will become payable to the assignees of the respective portions thereof whenever that reversion is severed by an act of the parties or of the law. But the tenant's consent is necessary for an apportionment when made by the landlord, unless the proportion of rent chargeable upon each portion of the land has been settled by the intervention of a jury; 22 Wend. 121; 2 Barb. 643; 3 Denio, 454; 5 B. & Ald. 876; 1 M. & G. 577; 6 Halst. 262; 22 Pick. 569. A tenant, however, cannot get rid of or apportion his rent by transferring the whole or a part of his lease; for if he assigns it, or underlets a portion of it, he still remains liable to his landlord for the whole; Cro. Eliz. 633; 24 Barb. 333; Dyer, 4 B. Instances of an apportionment by act of law occur where there is a descent of the reversion among a number of heirs, or upon a judicial sale of a portion of the premises; for in such cases the tenant will be bound to pay rent to each of the parties for the portion of the premises belonging to them respectively. So, if a man dies, leaving a widow, she will have a right to receive one-third of the rent, while the remaining two-thirds will be payable to his heirs; so, if a part of the demised premises be taken for public purposes, the tenant is entitled to an apportionment; Cro. Eliz. 742; Co. Litt. 148 a; 25 Wend. 456; 13 Ill. 625; 20 Mo. 24; 57 Penn. 271; 3 Whart. 357. At common law rent could not be apportioned as to time; 2 Ves. Sr. 672; 3 Watts, 394. But various statutes, such as 11 Geo. II. c. 19, both in England and the United States, have mitigated the hardships resulting from an enforcement of this rule. See Taylor, Landl. & T. § 389.

These rights and liabilities are not confined to the immediate parties to the contract, but will be found to attach to all persons to whom the estate may be transferred, or who may succeed to the possession of the premises, either as landlords or tenants. This principle follows as a necessary consequence of that privity of estate which is incident to the relation of landlord and tenant. A landlord may not violate his tenant's rights by a sale of the property; neither can a tenant avoid his responsibilities by substituting another tenant in his stead without the landlord's consent. The purchaser of the property becomes in one case the landlord, and is entitled to all the rights and remedies against the tenant or his assignee which the seller had; while in the other case the assignee of the lessee assumes all the liabilities of the latter, and is entitled to the same protection which he might claim from the assignee of the reversion; in the case of express covenants the original lessee is not by the transfer discharged from his obligations; 17 Johns. 289; 24 Barb. 365; 13 Wend. 530; 19 N. Y. 68; 8 Ves. Ch. 95; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. 11; 4 Term, 94; 17 Vt. 626; 2 W. & S. 556; 12 Miss. 43; 1 Dall. 305. In case of implied covenants he is discharged if the landlord specially accept the assignee as his tenant; 9 Vt. 191; 3 Rep. 22; 1 Sm. L. Cas. *176; and the liability of the assignee may be at any time terminated by him, by a transfer of the estate assigned, even if the transfer be made to a pauper with express intent to evade liability; 3 Y. & C. 96; 9 Cow. 88; 9 Vt. 181.

The relation of landlord and tenant may be terminated in several ways. If it is a tenancy for life, it will of course terminate upon the decease of him upon whose life the lease depends; but if it be for life, or for a certain number of years, and depend upon some particular event, the happening of that event will determine the tenancy. So if it be for a certain number of years, independent of any contingency, it will expire at the last moment of the last day of the tenancy. And in all these cases depending upon the express conditions of the lease, no notice to quit will be necessary in order to dissolve the relation of the parties to each other; Co. Litt. 216; Shepp. Touchst. 187; 9 Ad. & E. 879; 5 Johns. 128; 1 Pick. 43; 2 S. & R. 49; 18 Me. 264; 7 Halst. 99; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 465.

But a tenancy from year to year, or at will, can only be terminated on the part of the landlord by a notice to quit. This notice might at common law be by parol, but by statute in England and in most of the United States must now be in writing; 3 Burr. 1603; 2 Brewst. 528; 5 Esp. 196; it must be explicit, and require the tenant to remove from the premises; 2 Clark, Pa. 219; 2 Gray, 335; 11 Cush. 191; Dougl. 175; 5 Ad. & E. 350; it must be served upon the tenant, and not upon an under-tenant; it must run in the name of the landlord, and not of his agent; 10 Johns. 270; 6 B. & G. 41. But personal service of the notice on the tenant is not absolutely essential, and it is sufficient if the notice be left at the tenant's usual residence with his wife or servant; 4 Tenn. 464; 7 East, 551; L. R. 5 H. L. 134; 103 Mass. 154; 44 Mo. 581. Whether a tenant from year to year is in any event bound to give notice to determine the tenancy seems doubtful. See the authorities collected in Bright. Pa. 463. At common law this notice was required to be one of half a year, ending with the period of the year at which the tenancy commenced; 1 W. Bla. 596; 3 Term, 13; 7 Q. B. 638; 4 Bing. 362; 1 Esp. 94; and this rule prevails in Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Vermont, Illinois, and New Jersey as to tenancies from year to year; 1 Johns. 322; 22 Vt. 88; 4 Ired. 291; 3 Green, N. J. 181; 4 Kent, 113; 6 Yerg. 431; 8 Cow. 13; 18 Ill. 75; 39 Ill. 378. In Pennsylvania, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Michigan, three months' notice is required; 4 Fost. 219; 8 S. & R. 458; 2 Rich. S. C. 346; 11 Penn. 472; 34 id. 96; 113 Mass. 214; while the New York statutes provide for its termination by giving one month's notice wherever there is a tenancy at will or by sufferance, created by the tenant holding over after the term or otherwise; 1 R. S. 745, § 7. The subject is in general governed by statutory rules too numerous and complicated to set forth.

The relation of landlord and tenant will also be dissolved when the tenant incurs a forfeiture of his lease by the breach of some covenant or condition therein contained. At common law a forfeiture was incurred if the tenant did any act which was inconsistent with his relation to his landlord: as if he impugned the title of his lessor by affirming by matter of record the fee to be in a stranger, claimed a greater estate than he was entitled to, or undertook to alienate the estate in fee; Co. Litt. 251 b, 252 a; Cro. Eliz. 321; 12 East, 444. But these causes of forfeiture, founded upon strict feudal principles, have been generally abolished in the United States; and a forfeiture of a term of years now only occurs in consequence of a breach of some express stipulation contained in the lease, as for the commission of waste, non-payment of rent, or the like; 2 Hill, 554; 7 Paige, Ch. 350; 5 B. & C. 855; 22 Md. 122; 20 Ill. 125; 32 Mich. 315. A forfeiture may be waived by an acceptance of, or distraining for, rent which became due after a breach committed by the tenant, or by giving a notice to quit, or by any other act which acknowledges the continuance of the tenancy; 8 Watts, 51; 2 N. H. 163; 18 Johns. 174; 3 H. & M. 436; 1 Binn. 333; 1 M. & W. 408; 6 Wisc. 328; 4 H. & N. 512; L. R. 7 Q.B. 344; 21 Wend. 537; 40 Mo. 449; and will be relieved against by the courts in all cases where it happened accidentally, or where the injury is capable of compensation, the damages on equitable principles being a mere matter of computation; 12 Ves. Ch. 475; 16 id. 405; 2 Price, 206; 1 Dall. 210; 9 Mod. 22; Story, Eq. § 1314; 62 N. Y. 486; 44 Vt. 285; and it is always at the election of the lessor to avail himself of his right of re-entry for conditions broken or not as he pleases; 6 B. & C. 519; and vide 7 W. & S. 41; 38 Penn. 346; 12 Barb. 440; 5 Cush. 281; 29 Conn. 331; 1 Wall. 64.

Another means of dissolving a tenancy is by an operation of law, termed a merger,—which happens where a tenant purchases the fee of the reversion, or the fee descends to him as heir at law, the lease becoming thereby merged in the inheritance, the lesser estate being absorbed in the greater. To produce this result, however, it is necessary that the two estates should meet in the same person and in the same right; for if he who has the reversion in fee marries the tenant for years, or if a tenant makes the landlord his executor, the term of years is in neither case merged, because in either case he holds the fee for his own benefit, while the term of years is taken in one case for his wife's use, and in the other for the benefit of the estate he represents as executor; 10 Johns. 481; 12 N. Y. 526; Co. Litt. 266 b; 1 Washb. R. P. 354; 1 Clark, Pa. 362; 18 Penn. 16; 35 N. Y. 279; 3 Johns. Ch. 53. But the universal current of opinion now sets against the operation of the doctrine of merger wherever a result will be produced contrary to the intentions of the parties or prejudicial to the interests of third parties; 34 N. Y. 320; 4 Gray, 385; 4 DeG. M. & G. 474; 3 Hill, 96; 4 Paige, 403.

In addition to the several methods of putting an end to a tenancy already mentioned, we may add that it is, of course, competent for a tenant at any time to surrender his lease to the landlord; 117 Mass. 357; 16 Johns. 28; 19 Cal. 354. An express surrender can only be made by deed in England, since the Statute of Frauds, and this provision is in some of the states re-enacted; 2 Wils. 26; 8 Taunt. 270; 11 Wend. 616; 8 Allen, 202; 8 Wisc. 141. But a surrender by operation of law is a case excepted out of the statute; as, for example, where, during the period of the old lease, a new one, inconsistent with it in its terms, is accepted, the old lease is at an end; 8 Johns. 394; 99 Mass. 18; Taylor, Landl. & T. 512; 117 Mass. 357. If the subject-matter of the lease wholly perishes; 26 N. Y. 498; 118 Mass. 125; 38 Cal. 259; 11 Metc. 448; or is required to be taken for public uses; 38 Mo. 143; 20 Pick. 159; 57 Penn. 271; 119 Mass. 28; 43 N. Y. 577; or the tenant disclaims to hold under his landlord, and therefore refuses to pay his rent, asserts the title to be in himself or unlawfully attorns to another, the tenancy is at an end, and the landlord may forthwith resume the possession; 3 Pet. 43; 4 Wend. 633; 21 Cal. 342; 8 Watts, 55; 5 Dana, 101; 23 Gratt. 332.

After the tenancy has ended, the right of possession reverts to the landlord, who may re-enter upon the premises if he can do so without violence. But if the tenant holds over and the landlord takes possession forcibly, so as to endanger a breach of the peace, he runs the risk of being punished criminally for a forcible entry (see FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER) as well as of suffering the consequences of an action of trespass; 121 Mass. 309; 59 Me. 568; 4 Allen, 318; 4 Am. Law Rev. 429; 10 Mass. 409; 1 M. & G. 644; 1 W. & S. 90. The landlord should, therefore, in all such cases, call in the law to his assistance, and receive possession at the hands of the sheriff.

The tenant, on his part, is bound quietly to yield up the possession of the entire premises. And for refusal to perform this duty he will be subjected to all the statutory penalties of holding over; 12 Pick. 416; 102 Mass. 514; 51 N. Y. 509; 84 Ill. 62; 35 Penn. 45; 62 Me. 248; E. B. & E. 326. He has, however, a reasonable right of egress and regress for the purpose of removing his goods and chattels; 2 Bla. Com. 14; 24 Me. 424; L. R. 5 C. P. 334. He may, also, in certain cases, take the emblements or annual profits of the land after his tenancy is ended, as to which his rights are largely affected by local customs (see EMBLEMENTS), and, unless restricted by some stipulation to the contrary, may remove such fixtures as he has erected during his occupation for his comfort and convenience, particularly if for trade purposes. See FIXTURES.

The ordinary common-law remedy by which a landlord proceeds to recover the possession of his premises is by an action of ejectment, and in these cases it is a general rule that the tenant is never permitted, for reasons of sound public policy, to controvert his landlord's title, or to set up against him a title acquired by himself during his tenancy which is hostile in its character to that which he acknowledged in accepting the demise; 10 East, 158; 3 B. & C. 413; 7 Term, 488; 5 Wend. 246; 2 Denio, 431; 3 Ad. & E. 188; 2 Binn. 472; 15 N. Y. 327; 61 Me. 590; 54 Penn. 196; 42 Md. 81; 72 N. C. 294; 18 Wall. 431. But to this rule there are some exceptions: of these the chief are cases where the landlord's interest has expired during the lease; 2 Zab. 261; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 708; or where he has sold and conveyed the land; 10 Md. 333; 33 Ves. 383; 50 Ill. 232; 99 Mass. 15; or where the tenant has been evicted by title paramount, and accepted a new lease under the real owner of the premises; 69 Penn. 316; 66 Me. 167; 14 S. & R. 382; 32 Mich. 285.

But the slow and measured progress of the action of ejectment in most cases affords a very inadequate remedy to the landlord; and in order, therefore, to obviate the evils arising from its delays, the statutes of the different states provide a summary proceeding, by which a landlord may be speedily reinstated, upon short notice, in cases where a tenant abandons the premises before the end of the term without surrendering the lease, leaving rent in arrear, continues to hold over after the expiration of his term, or has become unable or unwilling to pay rent for the use of the premises; 22 Wend. 611; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 713 et seq.

LANGUAGE. The medium for the communication of perceptions and ideas.

Spoken language is that wherein articulate sounds are used.

Written language is that wherein written characters are used, and especially the system of characters called letters and figures.

By conventional usage, certain sounds and characters have a definite meaning in one country, or in certain countries, and this is called the language of such country or countries: as, the Greek, the Latin, the French, or the English language. The law, too, has a peculiar language. See Eunom. Dial. 2.

On the subjugation of England by William the Conqueror, the French-Norman language was substituted in all law-proceedings for the ancient Saxon. This, according to Blackstone, 3 Com. 317, was the language of the records, writs, and pleadings until the time of Edward III. Mr. Stephen thinks Blackstone has fallen into an error, and says the record was, from the earliest period to which that document can be traced, in the Latin language. Plead. Appx. note

14. By the statute 36 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 15, it was enacted that for the future all pleas should be pleaded, shown, defended, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue, but be entered and enrolled in Latin. The Norman or law French, however, being more familiar as applied to the law than any other language, the lawyers continued to employ it in making their notes of the trial of cases, which they afterwards published in that barbarous dialect under the name of Reports.

After the enactment of this statute, on the introduction of paper pleadings, they followed in the language as well as in other respects the style of the records, which were drawn up in Latin. This technical language continued in use till the time of Cromwell, when by a statute the records were directed to be in English; but this act was repealed at the restoration by Charles II., the lawyers finding it difficult to express themselves as well and as concisely in the vernacular as in the Latin tongue; and the language of the law continued as before till about the year 1730, when the statute of 4 Geo. II. c. 26, was passed. It provided that both the pleadings and the records should thenceforward be framed in English. The ancient terms and expressions which had been so long known in French and Latin were now literally translated into English. The translations of such terms and phrases were found to be exceedingly ridiculous. Such terms as nisi prius, habeas corpus, fieri facias, mandamus, and the like, are not capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness. They are equally absurd in the manner they are employed in Latin; but use, and the fact that they are in a foreign language, have made the absurdity less apparent.

By statute of 6 Geo. II. c. 14, passed two years after the last-mentioned statute, the use of technical words was allowed to continue in the usual language,—which defeated almost every beneficial purpose of the former statute. In changing from one language to another, many words and technical expressions were retained in the new, which belonged to the more ancient language; and not seldom they partook of both. This, to the unlearned student, has given an air of confusion and disfigured the language of the law. It has rendered essential, also, the study of the Latin and French languages. This, perhaps, is not to be regretted, as they are the keys which open to the ardent student vast stores of knowledge. In the United States, the records, pleadings, and all law proceedings are in the English language, except certain technical terms which retain their ancient French and Latin dress.

Agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments, may be made in any language, and will be enforced. Bac. Abr. Wills (D 1). An English court, having to construe a contract made in a foreign country and foreign language, must obtain a translation of the instrument and an explanation of the terms of art, if any; 10 H. L. C. 624. And a slander spoken in a foreign language, if understood by those present, or a libel published in such language, will be punished as if spoken or written in the English language; Bac. Abr. Slander, (D 3); 1 Rolle, Abr. 74; 6 Term, 163. For the construction of language, see articles CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION; Jacob, Intr. to the Com. Law Max. 46.

Among diplomatists, the French language is the one commonly used. At an early period, the Latin was the diplomatic language in use in Europe. Towards the end of the fifteenth century that of Spain gained the ascendency, in consequence of the great influence which that country then exercised in Europe. The French, since the age of Louis XIV., has become the almost universal diplomatic idiom of the civilized world; though some states use their national language in treaties and diplomatic correspondence. It is usual in these cases to annex to the papers transmitted a translation in the language of the opposite party, wherever it is understood this comity will be reciprocated. This is the usage of the Germanic Confederation, of Spain, and of the Italian courts. When nations using a common language, as the United States and Great Britain, treat with each other, such language is used in their diplomatic intercourse.

See, generally, 3 Bla. Com. 323; 1 Chit. Cr. L. 415; 2 Rey, Inst. jud. de l'Angleterre, 211, 212.

LANGUIDUS (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he has taken by virtue of process, is so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health; 3 Chit. Pr. 249, 358; T. Chitty, Forms, 753.

LANZAS. In Spanish Law. A certain contribution in money paid by the grandees and other high officers in lieu of the soldiers they ought to furnish government in time of war.

LAPSE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The transfer, by forfeiture, of a right to present or collate to a vacant benefice from a person vested with such right to another, in consequence of some act of negligence by the former. Ayl. Par. 331.

Upon six months' neglect of the patron, the right lapses to the bishop; upon six months' neglect of bishop, to archbishop; upon his six months' neglect, to king. The day on which the vacancy occurs is not counted, and the six months are calculated as a half-year. 2 Burn, Ec. L. 355.

To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees. To slip; to deviate from the proper path. Webster, Dict. See LAPSED DEVISE; LAPSED LEGACY.

LAPSE PATENT. A patent issued to petitioner for land. A patent for which land to another party has lapsed through neglect of patentee. The lapse patent relates to date of original patent, and makes void all mesne conveyances. 1 Wash. Va. 39, 40.

LAPSED DEVISE. A devise which has lapsed, or does not take effect because of the death of devisee before testator.

The subject-matter of the lapsed devise will, if no contrary intention appears, be included in the residuary clause (if any) contained in the will. But, if the devise be to children or other issue of devisor, and issue of devisee be alive, the devise shall not lapse, if no such intention appear in the will. See 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 25, 26, 32, 33. A devise always lapses at common law if the devisee dies before testator; 3 id. 803, n.; but in many, if not all the states, if made to a son or grandson of the testator, it takes effect, by force of statute, in favor of his heirs, if he die before testator; so in Massachusetts, in the case of a devise to a child or other relative; 3 Washb. R. P. 523; 101 Mass. 38. See 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 301, n.; 3 id. 803, n.; 4 Kent, 541. In regard to a lapsed devise, where the devisee dies during the life of the testator, the estate so devised will go to the heir, notwithstanding a residuary devise. But if the devise be void, as where the devisee is dead at the date of the will, or is made upon a condition precedent which never happens, the estate will go to the residuary devisee, if the words are sufficiently comprehensive; 2 Vern. 394; 15 Ves. 589; 3 Whart. 477; 1 Harr. 524; 4 Kent, 541, 542. But some of the cases hold in that case, even, that the estate goes to the heir; 6 Conn. 292; 4 Ired. Eq. 320; 13 Md. 415. By the English law a residuary bequest operates upon all the personal estate which the testator is possessed of at the time of his death, and will include such as would have gone to pay specific legacies which lapse or are void; 4 Ves. Ch. 708, 732; 4 Paige, Ch. 115; 6 id. 600; 4 Hawks, 215; 1 Dana, 206; 1 D. & B. Eq. 115, 116; 82 Penn. 428; 1 Jarm. Wills, 585–599.

LAPSED LEGACY. A legacy which, on account of the death of the legatee before the period arrives for the payment of the legacy, lapses or deviates from the course prescribed by the testator, and falls into the residuum. 1 Williams, Ex. 1036; 10 S. & R. 351.

A distinction exists between a lapsed devise and a lapsed legacy. A devise which lapses does not fall into the residue unless so provided by the will, but descends to the heir at law; on the contrary, personal property passes by the residuary clause, where it is not otherwise disposed of; 2 Bouv. Inst. 2158–2161. See LAPSED DEVISE.

LARCENY. In Criminal Law. The wrongful and fraudulent taking and carrying away by one person of the mere personal goods of another from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to his the taker's use, and make them his property without the consent of the owner. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 553; 4 Wash. C. C. 700. Robbery is a form of compound larceny; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 757; 23 Ind. 21.

In a recent English case, Mr. Baron Parke said that this definition, which was the most complete of any, was defective, in not stating what is the meaning of the word "felonious," which, he said, "may be explained to mean that there is no color of right or excuse for the act; and the 'intent' must be to deprive the owner, not temporarily, but permanently, of his property." Regina vs. Holloway, 2 C. & K. 942; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 370; Templ. & M. 40. It is safer to be guided by the cases than by the definitions given by text-writers. Per Coltman, J. Several definitions are collected by Mr. Bishop, 2 Cr. Law, § 675, n., to which reference is made.

Larceny was formerly in England, and still is, perhaps, in some states, divided into grand and petit or petty larceny, according as the value of the property taken was great or small; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 736; 3 M'Cord, 187; 3 Hill, N. Y. 395; 6 id. 144; 1 Hawks, 463; 8 Blackf. 498. Yet in England this distinction is now abolished, by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, § 2; and the same is true of many of the United States, although in some a difference is made, similar in theory, between cases where the amount stolen is more and where it is less than one hundred dollars or some fixed sum.

Compound larceny is larceny under circumstances which, in view of the law, aggravate the crime. The law in relation to this branch of larceny is to a great extent statutory.

The property of the owner may be either general; 1 C. & K. 518; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 449; or special; 10 Wend. 165; 14 Mass. 217; 13 Ala. N. S. 153; 21 Me. 14; 8 Tex. 115; 4 Harr. Del. 570; 6 Hill, 144; 9 C. & P. 44.

There must be a taking against the consent of the owner; 8 C. & P. 291; 9 id. 365; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 381; 2 Ov. 68; 9 Yerg. 198; 20 Ala. N. S. 428; 1 Rich. 30; 2 N. & M'C. 174; Coxe, N. J. 439; and the taking will not be larceny if consent be given, though obtained by fraud; 15 S. & R. 93; 9 C. & P. 741; 4 Taunt. 258; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 289. But where one retains money paid by mistake, it is larceny, for the consent of the owner in parting with his property was only apparent, not real; 8 Oreg. 394; s. c. 34 Am. Rep. 590; 6 Hun, 121. Whenever the defendant can be regarded in the light of the servant or agent of the owner, he is guilty of larceny; 1 Denio, 120; Whar. Cr. Law, §§ 956-971. By stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, a bailee who fraudulently converts the property entrusted to him, to his own use is guilty of larceny; Cox & Saunders, Crim. Law, 26, 27. When the possession of an article is intrusted to a person, who carries it away and appropriates it, this is no larceny; 24 E. L. & Eq. 562; 4 C. & P. 545; 5 id. 533; 1 Pick. 375; 20 Ala. N. S. 428; 17 N. Y. 114; see 2 M'Mull. 382; 2 C. & K. 983; 4 Mo. 461; 33 Me. 127; 11 Cush. 483; 13 Gratt. 803; 11 Tex. 769; but when the custody merely is parted with, such misappropriation is a larceny; 6 T. B. Monr. 130; 1 Denio, 120; 11 Q. B. 929; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 584.

The decisions have not been entirely uniform as to whether the fraudulent retention of money delivered to be changed, is larceny. It has been held in England, not to be so, but here the contrary view has been taken; 56 N. Y. 394; 25 Minn. 66; s. c. 33 Am. Rep. 455, n. See 9 C. & P. 741; 11 Cox's Cr. Cas. 32.

The taking must be in the county where the criminal is to be tried; 9 C. & P. 29; Ry. & M. 349. But when the taking has been in the county or state, and the thief is caught with the stolen property in another county than that where the theft was committed, he may be tried in the county where arrested with the goods; as, by construction of law, there is a fresh taking in every county in which the thief carries the stolen property;

7 Metc. 175. Whether an indictment for larceny can be supported where the goods are proved to have been originally stolen in another state, and brought thence into the state where the indictment is found, is a point on which the decisions are contradictory. Where property was stolen in one of the British Provinces and brought by the thief into Massachusetts, it was held not larceny there; 3 Gray, 434. See, contra, 11 Vt. 650.

There must be an actual removal of the article; 1 Leach, 236, n., 320; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 154; 7 C. & P. 552; 8 id. 291; 8 Ala. N. S. 328; 12 Ired. 157; 9 Yerg. 198; but a very slight removal, if it amount to an actual taking into possession, is sufficient; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 556, 617; 1 C. & K. 245; Dearsl. 421.

The property must be personal; and there can be no larceny of things affixed to the soil; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 510; 11 Ired. 477; 8 C. & P. 293; 35 Cal. 671; 54 Ala. 238; but if once severed by the owner, a third person, or the thief himself, as a separate transaction, it becomes a subject of larceny; 11 Ired. 70; 3 Hill, N. Y. 395; 1 Mod. 89; 2 Rolle, 89; 7 Taunt. 188. The common law rule has been modified from time to time in England, so as to afford protection to things fixed to the freehold. The rule was never satisfactory, and the courts in modern times have been inclined to confine it within the narrowest limits; 30 Am. Rep. 159, n.; S. C. 4 Tex. Ct. App. 26; 11 Ohio, 104. It must be of some value, though but slight; 4 Rich. 356; 3 Harr. Del. 563; 7 Metc. 475. See 8 Penn. 260; 6 Johns. 103; 9 C. & P. 347. At common law there cannot be larceny of animals, in which there is neither an absolute nor a qualified property, as beasts feræ naturæ; 1 Greene, 106; 7 Johns. 16; 1 C. & K. 494; but otherwise of animals reclaimed or confined, as deer, or rabbits in a park, fish in a tank, pheasants, etc., in a mew; all valuable domestic animals, and all animals domitæ naturæ, which serve for food. But all other animals which do not serve for food, as dogs, unless taxed, are not subjects of larceny. But oysters, when planted for use, are so, as is the flesh of dead animals; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, §§ 864-875. But under statute in some of the states there may be larceny of dogs, and actions may be maintained for injury to them; 4 Parker, C. C. 386; 27 Ala. 480; 11 Kans. 480; S. C. 15 Am. Rep. n.; see article in 2 Alb. Law Jour. 101.

LAS PARTIDAS. The name of a code of Spanish law. It is sometimes called las siete partidas, or the seven parts, from the number of its principal divisions. It is a compilation from the civil law, the customary law of Spain, and the canon law. It was compiled by four Spanish jurisconsults, under the eye of Alphonso X., A. D. 1250, and published in Castile in 1263, but first promulgated as law by Alphonso XI., A. D. 1348. The maritime law contained in it is given in vol. 6 of Pardess. Col. of Mar. Law. He follows the editions of 1807, at Paris. It has been translated into English. Such of its provisions as are applicable are in force in Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. 1 Bla. Com. 66; 1 Rec. 354.

LASCIVIOUS CARRIAGE. In Connecticut. A term including those wanton acts between persons of different sexes, who are not married to each other, that flow from the exercise of lustful passions, and which are not otherwise punished as crimes against chastity and public decency. 2 Swift, Dig. 343; 2 Swift. Syst. 331. It includes, also, indecent acts by one against the will of another. 5 Day, 81.

LAST HEIR. He to whom the lands come if they escheat for want of lawful heirs: viz., sometimes the lord of whom the lands are held, sometimes the king. Bract. lib. 5, c. 17.

LAST SICKNESS. That of which a person dies.

The expenses of this sickness are generally entitled to a preference in payment of debts of an insolvent estate. La. Civ. Code, art. 3166.

To prevent impositions, the statute of frauds requires that nuncupative wills shall be made during the testator's last sickness. Roberts, Frauds, 556: 20 Johns. 502.

LAST WILL (Lat. ultima voluntas). A disposition of real estate to take effect after death.

It is strictly distinguishable from testament, which is applied to personal estate, 1 Wms. Exec. 6, n. b, Amer. notes; but the words are generally used together, "last will and testament," in a will, whether real or personal estate is to be disposed of. See WILL.

LASTAGE.

A custom anciently exacted in some fairs and markets to carry things where one will; also a custom paid for goods sold by the last (a certain weight or measure); the ballast of a ship. Cowel. Stowage room for goods in a vessel. Young, Naut. Dic.

LATENT AMBIGUITY. One which does not appear on the face of the instrument. A latent ambiguity is where words apply equally to two different things or subject matters; 15 M. & W. 561; but where the parties may have intended either of the two things in dispute, the term does not apply; 10 Ohio, 534. See AMBIGUITY; MAXIMS, Ambiguities.

LATERAL SUPPORT. A person's right to the support of the land immediately around his house is not so much an easement, as it has been called, as it is the ordinary right of enjoyment of property. Where a house is injured as an indirect effect of the improper working of mines, the right of action arises at the time the mischief is felt, and the statute of limitations runs from that time; 9 H. L. 503. See SUPPORT leda. Law Fr. and Eng. Dict.). A division of certain counties in England, intermediate between a county or shire and a hundred, sometimes containing three or four hundreds, as in Kent and Sussex. Cowel. But in Sussex the word used for this division is rape. 1 Bla. Com. 116. There was formerly a lathe-reeve or bailiff in each lathe. Id. This division into lathes continues to the present day. See 12 E. 244. In Ireland, the lathe was intermediate between the tything and the hundred. Spencer, Ireland. See T. L.

LATIDEMEO. In Spanish Law. The tax paid by the possessor of land held by quit-rent or emphyteusis to the owner of the estate, when the tenant alienates his right in the property.

LATIFUNDIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. Ainsworth. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fundis), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. p. 17.

LATIFUNDUS (Lat. late possidens). A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones. Du Cange.

LATITAT (Lat. he lies hid). In English Law. The name of a writ calling a defendant to answer to a personal action in the king's bench. It derives its name from a supposition that the defendant lurks and lies hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex (in which the said court is holden) to be taken there, but is gone into some other county, and therefore requiring the sheriff to apprehend him in such other county. Fitz. N. B. 78. Abolished by stat. 2 Wm. IV. c. 39.

LAUDIMIUM, LAUDATIOREM (Lat. a laudando domino). A fiftieth part of the purchase-money or (if no sale) of the value of the estate paid to the landlord (dominus) by a new emphyteuta on his succession to the estate, not as heir, but as singular successor. Voetius, Com. ad Pand. lib. 6, tit. 3, §§ 26–35; Mack. C. L. 297.

In Old English Law. The tenant paid a laudimium or acknowledgment-money to the new landlord on the death of the old. See Blount, Acknowledgment-Money.

LAUNCH. The movement by which a ship or boat descends from the shore into the water when she is first built, or afterwards.

A large, long, low, flat-bottomed boat. Mar. Dict. The long-boat of a ship. R. H. Dana. A small vessel employed to carry the cargo of a large one to and from the shore.

The goods on board of a launch are at the risk of the insurers till landed; 5 Mart. La. N. S. 387. The duties and rights of the master of a launch are the same as those of the master of a lighter.

When the master of a vessel agreed to take cotton on board his vessel from the cotton-press, and employed a steam-lighter for that purpose, and the cotton was lost by an explosion of the steam-boiler of the lighter, it was held that his vessel was liable in rem for the loss; 23 Bost. L. Rep. 277.

LAW. That which is laid down; that which is established. A rule or method of action, or order of sequences.

The rules and methods by which society compels or restrains the action of its members.

The aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as the rules and principles which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of its members.

A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Steph. Com. 25.

A rule or enactment promulgated by the legislative authority of a state; a long-established local custom which has the force of such an enactment; 10 Pet. 18.

The doctrines and procedure of the common law of England and America, as distinguished from those of equity.

An oath. So used in the old English practice, by which wager of law was allowed. See WAGER OF LAW.

Perhaps few terms whose use requires equal precision serve in so many diverse meanings as the term law. In its root it signifies that which is laid down, that which is established. "In the largest sense," says Montesquieu (Esprit des Lois, b. 1, ch. 1), "laws are the necessary relations which arise from the nature of things; and, in this sense, all beings have their laws, God has his laws, the material universe has its laws, intelligences superior to man have their laws, animals have their laws, man has his laws. In this sense, the idea of a command proceeding from a superior to an inferior is not necessarily involved in the term law. It is frequently thus used to denote simply a statement of a constant relation of phenomena. The laws of science, thus, are but generalized statements of observed facts." "It is a perversion of language," says Paley, "to assign any law as the efficient operative cause of any thing. A law presupposes an agent: this is only the mode according to which an agent proceeds."

In its relation to human affairs there is a broad use of the term, in which it denotes any of those rules and methods by which a society compels or restrains the action of its members. Here the idea of a command is more generally obvious, and has usually been thought an essential element in the notion of human law.

A distinction is to be observed in the outset between the abstract and the concrete meaning of the word. That which is usually intended by the term "laws" is not coextensive with that which is intended by the term "law." In the broadest sense which it bears when used in the abstract, law is a science. It treats of the theory of government, the relation of states to each other and to individuals, and the rights and obligations of states, of individuals, and of artificial persons and local communities among themselves and to each other.

An analysis of the science of law presents a view, first, of the rights of persons, distinguishing them as natural persons and artificial persons, or bodies politic or corporations. These rights are deemed either absolute, as relating to the enjoyment of personal security, liberty, and of private property, or, on the other hand, as relative,—that is, arising out of the relation in which several persons stand. These relations are either (1) public or political, viz.: the relation of magistrates and people; or, (2) private, as the relations of master and servant, husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, to which might be added relations arising out of private contracts, such as partnership, principal and agent, and the like. Under the head of the rights of persons as arising out of public relations may be discussed the constitution and polity of the state, the distribution of powers among the various departments of the government, the political status of individuals, as aliens, citizens, and the like.

In the second place, the analysis presents the rights of property, which is divided into personal property or chattels, viz., that which is movable, and real property, or that which is immovable, viz., lands, including nearly all degrees of interest therein, as well as such chattels as by a peculiar connection with land may be deemed to have lost their character as legally movable: these rights of property are viewed in respect to the origin of title, the transmission of title, and the protection of the enjoyment thereof.

In the third place, the analysis presents a view of private wrongs, or those injuries to persons for which the law provides a redress for the aggrieved party; and under this head may be considered the tribunals through which the protection of rights or the redress of wrongs may be obtained, and the various modes of procedure to those ends.

Lastly, the analysis presents a view of public wrongs, or crimes and misdemeanors, in which may be considered the theory of crime and punishment, the persons capable of committing crimes, the several degrees of guilt of principals and accessaries, the various crimes of which the law takes cognizance,—as, those against religion, those against the state and its government, and those against persons and property,—with the punishment which the law affixes to each, and also the tribunals and precedure by which crimes threatened may be prevented, and crimes committed may be punished; Bla. Com.

In a stricter sense, but still in the abstract, law denotes the aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as the rules and principles which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of members of the community.

It is the aggregate of legal rules and principles, as distinguished from any particular rule or principle. No one statute, nor all statutes, constitute the law of the state; for the maxims of the courts and the regulations of municipal bodies, as well as, to some extent, the universal principles of ethics, go to make up the body of the law. It includes principles, which rest in the common sense of justice and right, as well as positive rules or regulations, which rest in ordinance. It is the aggregate of the rules or principles only which the governing power in the community recognizes, because that power, whether it be deemed as residing in a monarch, an aristocracy, or in the people at large, is the source of the authority and the sanction of those rules and principles. It is the aggregate of those rules and principles which are recognized as the law by that power, rather than those which are actually enforced in all cases; for a statute is none the less a law because the community forbear to enforce it, so long as it is officially recognized by them as that which, in theory at least, should be enforced; nor does a departure from the law by the governing power in itself abrogate the law. It comprises not only those rules and principles which are to be enforced, but also those which are simply permissive; for a very large part even of modern statute-law—which is commonly defined as a rule commanding or prohibiting—in reality neither commands nor prohibits, except in the most distant and indirect sense, but simply authorizes, permits, or sanctions; and this is much more generally true of those principles of the law which rest in custom and the adjudications of the courts. It is only those which relate to the members of the community in question; for laws, as such, have no extra-territorial operation.

The earliest notion of law was not an enumeration of a principle but a judgment in a particular case. When pronounced in the early ages, by a king, it was assumed to be the result of direct divine inspiration. Afterwards came the notion of a custom which a judgment affirms, or punishes its breach. In the outset, however, the only authoritative statement of right and wrong is a judicial sentence rendered after the fact has occurred. It does not presuppose a law to have been violated, but is enacted for the first time by a higher form into the judge's mind at the moment of adjudication. Maine, Anc. Law, (Dwight's ed.) pp. xv. 5.

The idea of law has commonly been analyzed as composed of three elements: (1) a command of the lawgiver, which command must prescribe not a single act merely, but a series or class of acts; (2) an obligation imposed thereby on the citizen; (3) a sanction threatened in the event of disobedience; Benth. Frag. on Gov.; Austin, Province, etc.; Maine, Anc. Law. Thus, municipal law is defined as "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in the state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong." 1 Bla. Com. 44. The latter clause of this definition has been much criticized. Mr. Chitty modifies it to "commanding what shall be done or what shall not be done" (id. note); and Mr. Stephen omits it, defining law as "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state." 1 Stephen, Com. 25. It is also defined as a rule of conduct contained in the command of a sovereign addressed to the subject. (Encyc. Brit.) These definitions, though more apt in reference to statutes and edicts than to the law in general, seem, even in reference to the former sort of law, to look rather at the usual form than the invariable essence of the thing. The principle of law, that a promise without a consideration is void, neither commands men to provide a consideration for every promise nor forbids them to promise without consideration, for this is lawful; nor does it forbid them to fulfil such promises. It simply amounts to this, that if men choose to break such promises, society will interfere to enforce them. And even many statutes have no form of a command or prohibition; and, moreover, some that are such in form are not in reality. An enactment that no action shall be brought on a simple contract after the lapse of six years from the time the cause of action accrued cannot aptly be said to command men to bring actions within six years, nor even, in fact, to forbid them to bring such actions after that time; for it is still lawful to sue on an outlawed demand, and, if the defendant do not object, the plaintiff may succeed. It may be deemed a command in so far as it is a direction to the court to dismiss such actions; but as a rule of civil conduct it amounts simply to this, that when an obligation has become stale to a certain degree, society will sanction the debtor in repudiating it.

When used in the concrete, the term usually has reference to statutes or expressions of the legislative will. "The laws of a state," observes Mr. Justice Story, "are more usually understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long-established local customs having the force of laws." 16 Pet. 18. Hence, he argues, "in the ordinary use of language it will hardly be contended that the decisions of courts constitute laws." In the Civil Code of Louisiana they are defined to be "the solemn expression of the legislative will."

But, as has already been said, "law" in the abstract involves much more. Thus, a reference in a statute to "the cases provided by law" includes not only those cases provided by former statutes, but also those contemplated by the common or unwritten law; 18 N. Y. 115.

The law of the land, an expression used in Magna Charta and adopted in most of the earlier constitutions of the original states, means, however, something more than the legislative will: it requires the due and orderly proceeding of justice according to the established methods. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW; 8 Gray, 329.

When the term law is used to denote enactments of the legislative power, it is frequently confined, especially by English writers, to permanent rules of civil conduct, as distinguished from other acts, such as a divorce act, an appropriation bill, an estates act. Report of Eng. Stat. L. Com., Mar. 1856.

In the United States, the organic law of a state is termed the constitution, and the term "laws" generally designates statutes or legislative enactments, in contradistinction to the constitution. See STATUTES.

Law, as distinguished from equity, denotes the doctrine and procedure of the common law of England and America, from which equity is a departure.

Distinct courts of equity still exist in New Jersey, Maryland, Kentucky, Delaware, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama. The judges of the common law courts are invested with the powers of a court of chancery in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Illinois, Texas, Florida, Michigan, Iowa, Arkansas, and Oregon. In all the other states the distinction between law and equity is abolished.

Law is also used in contradistinction to fact. Questions of law are, in general, for the decision of the court; while it is for the jury to pass upon questions of fact.

In respect to the ground of the authority of law, it is divided as natural law, or the law of nature or of God, and positive law.

Arbitrary law. A law or provision of law so far removed from considerations of abstract justice that it is necessarily founded on the mere will of the law-making power, so that it is rather a rule established than a principle declared. The principle that an infant shall not be bound by his contract is not arbitrary; but the rule that the limit of infancy shall be twenty-one years, not twenty nor twenty-two, is arbitrary.

The term is also sometimes used to signify an unreasonable law,—one that is in violation of justice.

Irrevocable laws. All laws which have not in their nature or in their language some limit or termination provided are, in theory, perpetual; but the perpetuity is liable to be defeated by subsequent abrogation. It has sometimes been attempted to secure an absolute perpetuity by an express provision forbidding any abrogation. But it may well be questioned whether one generation has power to bind their posterity by an irrevocable law. See this subject discussed by Bentham, Works, vol. 2, 402–407; and see Dwarris, Stat. 479.

Municipal law is a system of law proper to any single state, nation, or community. See MUNICIPAL LAW.

A penal law is one which inflicts a penalty for its violation.

Positive law is the system naturally established by a community, in distinction from natural law. See POSITIVE LAW.

Private law is a term used to indicate a statute which relates to private matters which do not concern the public at large.

A prospective law or statute is one which applies only to cases arising after its enactment, and does not affect that which is already past.

A public law is one which affects the public, either generally or in some classes.

A retrospective law or statute is one that turns backward to alter that which is past or to affect men in relation to their conduct before its enactment. These are also called retroactive laws. In general, whenever a retroactive statute would take away vested rights or impair the obligation of contracts, it is in so far void, because opposed to the constitution of the United States; 3 Dall. 391. But laws which only vary the remedies, or merely cure a defect in proceedings otherwise fair, are valid; 10 S. & R. 102, 103; 15 id. 72; 2 Pet. 380, 627; 8 id. 88; 11 id. 420. See EX POST FACTO.

For mattters peculiar to the following classes of laws, see their several titles:—

AGRARIAN LAWS; BREHON LAW; CANON LAW; CIVIL LAW; CODES; COLONIAL LAW; COMMERCIAL LAW; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; CONSUETUDINARY LAW; CORN LAWS; CRIMINAL LAWS; CROWN LAW; ECCLESIASTICAL LAW; EDICTAL LAW; EX POST FACTO LAWS; FECIAL LAW; FEUDAL LAW; FOREIGN LAW; GAME LAWS; GENTOO LAW; GREEN CLOTH LAW; HINDU LAW; INSOLVENCY; LAWS OF OLERON; MAHOMMEDAN LAW; MARTIAL LAW; MILITARY LAW; RHODIAN LAW; STATUTES OF WISBUY.

See, generally, Maine, Bentham, Austin.

LAW BORGH. In Old Scotch Law. A pledge or surety for appearance.

LAW-BURROWS. In Scotch Law. Security for the peaceful behavior of a party; security to keep the peace. This process was much resorted to by the government of Charles II. for political purposes.

LAW COURT OF APPEALS. In American Law. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

LAW DAY. The day fixed in a mortgage or defeasible deed for the payment of the debt secured. 24 Ala. N. s. 149; 10 Conn. 280; 21 N. Y. 345. This does not occur now until foreclosure, and the use of the term is confusing; 21 N. Y. 343.

In Old English Law. Law day or lage day denoted a day of open court; especially the more solemn courts of a county or hundred. The court-leet, or view of frankpledge.

LAW FRENCH. From the time of William the Norman down to that of Edward III., all public proceedings and documents in England, including the records of the courts, the arguments of counsel, and the decisions of the judges, were in the language of the Norman-French. After Latin and English were substituted in the records and proceedings, however, the cases and decisions continued until the close of the seventeenth century to be reported in French; the first reports published in English being those of Styles in 1658. The statutes of the reign of Henry III. and some of the subsequent reigns are partly or wholly in this language; but English was substituted in the reign of Henry VII. Of the law-treatises in French, the Mirrour and Britton, and the works of Littleton, may be mentioned.

LAW OF THE LAND. Due process of law. 2 Yerg. 50; 6 Penn. 86; 75 id. 370; 60 Me. 504; 4 Hill, N. Y. 140. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

LAW LATIN. Edward III. substituted the Latin language for the Norman-French in the records, and the English in other proceedings. The Latin was used by virtue of its being the language of scholars of all European nations; but, in order to adapt it to the purpose of the profession, the English terms of legal art in most frequent use were Latinized by the simple addition of a Latin termination, and the diverse vocabulary thus collected was arranged in English idioms. But this barbarous dialect commended itself by a semblance of scholarly sound, and more by the precision which attaches to technical terms that are never used in popular language. During the time of Cromwell, English was used; but with the restoration Latin was reinstated, and held its place till 4 Geo. II. ch. 26, when it was enacted that, since the common people ought to know what was done for and against them, proceedings should be in English. It was found, however, that certain technical terms had become so fixed that by a subsequent act such words were allowed to continue in use; 6 Geo. II. ch. 14. Hence a large class of Latin terms are still in use, of which nisi prius, habeas corpus, lis pendens are examples. Consult 3 Bla. Com. 318–323; and as to particular words and phrases, Termes de la Ley; Taylor's Law Gloss.; the Law-French and Law-Latin Dictionary; Kelham's Dic.; Du Cange.

LAW LIST. In English Law. An annual publication of a quasi-official character, comprising various statistics of interest in connection with the legal profession.

LAW LORDS. In English Law. Peers who have held high judicial office, or have been distinguished in the legal profession. Moz. & W.

LAW MERCHANT. The general body of commercial usages in matters relative to commerce. Blackstone calls it the custom of merchants, and ranks it under the head of the particular customs of England, which go to make up the great body of the common law; 1 Bla. Com. 75. Since, however, its character is not local, nor its obligation confined to a particular district, it cannot with propriety be considered as a custom in the technical sense; 1 Steph. Com. 54. It is a system of law which does not rest exclusively on the positive institutions and local customs of any particular country, but consists of certain principles of equity and usages of trade which general convenience and a common sense of justice have established, to regulate the dealings of merchants and mariners in all the commercial countries of the civilized world; 3 Kent, 2.

These usages, being general and extensive, partake of the character of rules and principles of law, not of matters of fact, as do usages which are local or special. They constitute a part of the general law of the land, and, being a part of that law, their existence cannot be proved by witnesses, but the judges are bound to take notice of them ex officio; Winch, 24; and this application is not confined to merchants, but extends to all persons concerned in any mercantile transaction. See Beawes, Lex Mercatoria Rediviva; Caines, Lex Mercatoria Americana; Comyns, Dig. Merchant (D); Chitty, Com. LAW OF MARQUE. See LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL.

LAW OF NATIONS. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

LAW OF NATURE. That law which God, the sovereign of the universe, has prescribed to all men, not by any formal promulgation, but by the internal dictate of reason alone. It is discovered by a just consideration of the agreeableness or disagreeableness of human actions to the nature of man; and it comprehends all the duties which we owe either to the Supreme Being, to ourselves, or to our neighbors: as, reverence to God, self-defence, temperance, honor to our parents, benevolence to all, a strict adherence to our engagements, gratitude, and the like; Erskine, Pr. Sc. Law, 1. 1. 1. See Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 2, p. 2; Cicero, de Leg. lib. 1.

The primitive laws of nature may be reduced to six, namely: comparative sagacity, or reason; self-love; the attraction of the sexes to each other; the tenderness of parents towards their children; the religious sentiment; sociability.

When man is properly organized, he is able to distinguish moral good from moral evil; and the study of man proves that man is not only an intelligent but a free being, and he is therefore responsible for his actions. The judgment we form of our good actions produces happiness; on the contrary, the judgment we form of our bad actions produces unhappiness.

Every animated being is impelled by nature to his own preservation, to defend his life and body from injuries, to shun what may be hurtful, and to provide all things requisite to his existence. Hence the duty to watch over his own preservation. Suicide and duelling are, therefore, contrary to this law; and a man cannot mutilate himself, nor renounce his liberty.

The attraction of the sexes has been provided for the preservation of the human race; and this law condemns celibacy. The end of marriage proves that polygamy and polyandry are contrary to the law of nature. Hence it follows that the husband and wife have a mutual and exclusive right over each other.

Man from his birth is wholly unable to provide for the least of his necessities; but the love of his parents supplies for this weakness. This is one of the most powerful laws of nature. The principal duties it imposes on the parents are to bestow on the child all the care its weakness requires, to provide for its necessary food and clothing, to instruct it, to provide for its wants, and to use coercive means for its good, when requisite.

The religious sentiment which leads us naturally towards the Supreme Being is one of the attributes which belong to humanity alone; and its importance gives it the rank of the moral law of nature. From this sentiment arise all the sects and different forms of worship among men.

The need which man feels to live in society is one of the primitive laws of nature whence flow our duties and rights; and the existence of society depends upon the condition that the rights of all shall be respected. On this law are based the assistance, succors, and good offices which men owe to each other, they being unable to provide each every thing for himself.

LAW OF THE STAPLE. See LAW MERCHANT.

LAWFUL. Legal. That which is not contrary to law. That which is sanctioned or permitted by law. That which is in accordance with law. The terms "lawful," "unlawful," and "illegal" are used with reference to that which is in its substance sanctioned or prohibited by the law. The term "legal" is occasionally used with reference to matter of form alone: thus, an oral agreement to convey land, though void by law, is not properly to be said to be unlawful, because there is no violation of law in making or in performing such an agreement; but it is said to be not legal, or not in lawful form, because the law will not enforce it, for want of that written evidence required in such cases.

LAWFUL AGE.

Majority. This usually means twenty-one years, but in some of the states, for certain purposes, a woman attains lawful age at eighteen; 4 Md. Ch. 228.

LAWFUL AUTHORITIES.

The expression "lawful authorities," used in our treaty with Spain, refers to persons who exercised the power of making grants by authority of the crown; 9 Pet. 711.

LAWFUL DISCHARGE.

Such a discharge in insolvency as exonerates the debtor from his debts; 12 Wheat 370.

LAWFUL GOODS.

Whatever is not prohibited to be exported by the positive law of the country, even though it be contraband of war, for a neutral has a right to carry such goods at his own risk; 1 Johns. Cas. 1; 2 id. 77; id. 120.

LAWFUL ISSUE.

In a devise to A for life, and on her death to her lawful issue, etc., these words are to be given the same effect as "heirs;" 3 Edw. 1; 21 Tex. 804. Under the term lawful issue, bastards cannot take a remainder in a life estate to the mother; 10 B. Mon. 188.

LAWFULLY POSSESSED.

In a statute concerning forcible entry and detainer, is equivalent to peaceably possessed; 45 Mo. 35.

LAWFUL MONEY. Money which is a legal tender in payment of debts: e. g. gold and silver coined at the mint. 2 Salk. 446; 5 Mod. 7; 3 Ind. 358; 2 How. 242; 3 id. 717; 16 Ark. 83. See Hempst. 236.

LAWING OF DOGS. Mutilating the fore-feet of mastiffs, to prevent them from running after deer. 3 Bla. Com. 71.

LAWLESS COURT. An ancient local English court, said to have been held in Essex once a year, at cock-crowing, without a light or pen and ink, and conducted in a whisper.

LAWLESS MAN. An outlaw.

LAWSUIT. An action at law, or litigation. This is, however, only the vernacular expression for a case before the courts in which there is a controversy between two parties. Technically we speak of a suit in admiralty or equity, an action at law, a prosecution in a criminal court, etc. The term lawsuit may include an arbitration; 7 Cow. 434.

LAWYER. One skilled in the law.

Any person who, for fee or reward, prosecutes or defends causes in courts of record, or other judicial tribunals of the United States, or of any of the states, or whose business it is to give legal advice in relation to any cause or mattter whatever. Act of July 13, 1866, § 9, Stat. at L. 121.

LAY. In English Law. That which relates to persons or things not ecclesiastical. In the United States, the people are not by law divided, as in England, into ecclesiastical and lay. The law makes no distinction between them. The word is also used in the sense of opposed to professional. Also applied to a share of the profits of a fishing or whaling voyage, allotted to the officers and seamen, in the nature of wages; 3 Story, 108.

In Pleading. To state or to allege. The place from whence a jury are to be summoned is called the venue, and the allegation in the declaration of the place where the jury is to be summoned is, in technical language, said to lay the venue. 3 Steph. Com. 574; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2830.

LAY CORPORATION. A corporation composed of lay persons or for lay purposes. They are either civil or eleemosynary. Ang. & A. Corp. 28-30; 1 Bla. Com. 470.

TO LAY DAMAGES. To state at the conclusion of the declaration the amount of damages which the plaintiff claims.

LAY DAYS. In Maritime Law. The time allowed to the master of a vessel for loading and unloading the same. In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are to be computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge; 10 M. & W. 331. See 3 Esp. 121; 3 Kent, 202; 2 Steph. Com. 141. They differ from DEMURRAGE, which see.

LAY FEE. A fee held by ordinary feudal tenure, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical tenure of frankalmoign, by which an ecclesiastical corporation held of the donor. The tenure of frankalmoign is reserved by stat. 12 Car. II., which abolished military tenures. 1 Bla. Com. 101.

LAY IMPROPRIATOR. Lay rector, to whom the greater tithes are reserved, the lesser going to the vicar. 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 75, 76.

LAY INVESTITURE. See INVESTITURE; ANNULUS ET BACULUS.

LAY OUT. This term has come to be used technically in highway laws as embracing all the series of acts necessary to the complete establishment of a highway; 28 Conn. 363; 121 Mass. 382. See 11 Ired. 94.

LAY PEOPLE. Jurymen. Finch, Law, 381.

LAYMAN. In Ecclesiastical Law. One who is not an ecclesiastic nor a clergyman.

LAZARET, LAZARETTO. A place, selected by public authority, where vessels coming from infected or unhealthy countries are required to perform quarantine. See HEALTH.

LE ROI S'AVISERA, or LA REINE S'AVISERA. The king will consider of it. This phrase is used by the English monarch when he gives his dissent to an act passed by the lords and commons. This power was last exercised in the year 1707, by Queen Anne; May, P. L. ch. 18. The same formula was used by the king of the French for the same purpose. 1 Toullier, n. 52. See VETO.

LE ROI LE VEUT. The king assents. This is the formula used in England, and formerly in France, when the king approved of a bill passed by the legislature. 1 Toullier, n. 52.

LE ROI VEUT EN DELIBERER. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the king of the French used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly. 1 Toullier, n. 42.

LEADING A USE. A term applied to a deed executed before a fine is levied, declaring the use of the fine: i. e. specifying to whose use the fine shall enure. If executed after the fine, it is said to declare the use. 2 Bla. Com. 363. See DEED.

LEADING CASE. A case decided by a court of last resort, which decides some particular point in question, and to which reference is constantly or frequently made, for the purpose of determining the law in similar questions.

Many elements go to the constitution of a case as a leading case: among which are, the priority of the case, the character of the court, the amount of consideration given to the question, the freedom from collateral matters or questions. The term is applied to cases as leading either in a particular state or at common law. A very convenient means of digesting the law upon any subject is found to be the selection of a leading case upon the subject, and an arrangement of authorities illustrating the questions decided. See B. & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 2 v.; Smith, Lead. Cas. 2 v.; Sm. L. Cas. Comm. L.; Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 2 v.; Tudor, Cas. R. P. 1 v.; Tudor, L. Cas. M. L. 1 v.; Sedgwick, Damages; Bigelow, Torts; Redf. & Bigel., Bills & Notes; Redfield, Railw. Cas., and a variety of others.

The French Causes Célèbres correspond to the English state trials.

LEADING COUNSEL. That one of two or more counsel employed on the same side in a cause who has the principal management of the cause. Sometimes called the leader. So called as distinguished from the other, who is called the junior counsel.

LEADING QUESTION. In Practice. A question which puts into the witness's mouth the words to be echoed back, or plainly suggests the answer which the party wishes to get from him. 7 S. & R. 171; 4 Wend. 247. In that case the examiner is said to lead him to the answer. It is not always easy to determine what is or is not a leading question.

Binn. 130; 6 id. 483; 1 Phill. Ev. 221; 1 Stark. Ev. 123. But, in an examination in chief, questions may be put to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry; and they are allowed when it appears the witness wishes to conceal the truth or to favor the opposite party, or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject; 1 Campb. 43; 1 Stark. 100.

In cross-examinations, the examiner has generally the right to put leading questions; 1 Stark. Ev. 132; 3 Chitty, Pr. 892; Rose. Civ. Ev. 94; Whart. Ev. §§ 501–504; but not perhaps when the witness has a bias in his favor; Best, Ev. 805.

LEAGUE. A measure of length, which consists of three geographical miles. The jurisdiction of the United States extends into the sea a marine league. See Acts of Congress of June 5, 1794, 1 Story, Laws, 352; and April 20, 1818, 3 Story, Laws, 1694; 1 Wait, State Papers, 195.

A conspiracy to do an unlawful act. The term is but little used.

An agreement or treaty between states. Leagues between states are of several kinds: First, leagues offensive and defensive, by which two or more nations agree not only to defend each other, but to carry on war against their common enemies. Second, defensive, but not offensive, obliging each to defend the other against any foreign invasion. Third, leagues of simple amity, by which one contracts not to invade, injure, or offend the other: this usually includes the liberty of mutual commerce and trade, and the safeguard of merchants and traders in each other's domain. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (D 4). See CONFEDERACY; CONSPIRACY; PEACE; TRUCE; WAR.

LEAKAGE. The waste which has taken place in liquids, by their escaping out of the casks or vessels in which they were kept. See 107 Mass. 140, 145.

By the act of March 2, 1799, s. 59, 1 Story, Laws, 625, it is provided that there be an allowance of two per cent. for leakage on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of liquors subject to duty by the gallon, and ten per cent. on all beer, ale, and porter in bottles, and five per cent. on all other liquors in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity, in lieu of breakage; or it shall be lawful to compute the duties on the actual quantity, to be ascertained by tale, at the option of the importer, to be made at the time of entry.

LEAL. Loyal; that which belongs to the law.

LEAP YEAR. See BISSEXTILE.

LEASE. A species of contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements either for life or for a certain period of time, or during the pleasure of the parties.

One of its essential properties is, that its duration must be for a shorter period than the duration of the interest of the lessor in the land; for if he disposes of his entire interest it becomes an assignment, and is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves to himself a reversion in the leased premises.

And a distinction is to be noted between a lease and a mere agreement for a lease. The whole question, however, resolves itself into one of construction, and an instrument is to be considered either a lease or an agreement for a lease, according to what appears to be the intention of the parties; 1 Term, 735; 26 Pick. 401; 16 Barb. 621; 9 Ad. & E. 644; though, generally, if there are apt words of demise followed by possession, the instrument will be held a lease; 5 id. 74; 8 N. Y. 44; 3 C. & P. 441; 8 Bingh. 178; 102 Mass. 392; 4 Ad. & E. 225; 5 B. & A. 322; otherwise, if a fuller lease is to be prepared and executed before the demise is to take effect and possession to be given; 21 Vt. 172; 24 Wend. 201; 3 Stor. 325; 4 Conn. 238; 75 Ill. 44; L. R. 2 Ex. Div. 355; 5 B. & C. 41; 14 Abb. Pr. 372.

The party who leases is called the lessor, he to whom the lease is made the lessee, and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent. The words lease and demise are frequently used to signify the estate or interest conveyed; but they properly apply to the instrument of conveyance. When a lessee parts with the estate granted to him, reserving any portion thereof, however small, he makes an underlease; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 16; 5 Denio, 454; 36 N. Y. 569; 12 Iowa, 319; 16 Johns. 159.

The estate created by a lease, when for years, is called a term (terminus), because its duration is limited and determined,—its commencement as well as its termination being ascertained by an express agreement of the parties. And this phrase signifies not only the limitation of time or period granted for the occupation of the premises, but includes also the estate or interest in the land that passes during such period. A term, however, is perfected only by the entry of the lessee; for previous to this the estate remains in the lessor, the lessee having a mere right to enter, which right is called an interesse termini; 1 Washb. R. P. 292, 297; 5 B. & C. 111; 5 Co. 123 b; Co. Litt. 46, B.; Cro. Jac. 60; 1 B. & Ald. 593; 1 Br. & B. 238.

Any thing corporeal or incorporeal lying in livery or in grant may be the subject-matter of a lease; and therefore not only lands and houses, but commons, ways, fisheries, franchises, estovers, annuities, rent charges, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, are included in the common-law rule; Shepp. Touchst. 268; 110 Mass. 175; 24 Mich. 279; 33 N. Y. 251; 66 Me. 229; 17 C. E. Green, 130; 27 Conn. 164. Rent cannot properly be said ever to issue out of chattels; 3 H. & M. 470; 35 Barb. 295; 15 Ohio, N. S. 186; 5 Rep. 16; but goods, chattels, or live stock upon or about real property may be leased with it and a rent contracted for, to issue from the whole, upon which an action for rent in arrear may be maintained as upon such lease; Co. Litt. 57 a; 31 Penn. 20; 24 Wend. 76; 9 Paige, 310.

Leases are made either by parol or by deed. The former mode embraces all cases where the parties agree either orally or by a writing not under seal. The technical words generally made use of in the written instrument are, "demise, grant, and to farm let;" but no particular form of expression is required in any case to create an immediate demise; 8 Bing. 182; 9 Ad. & E. 650; 5 Term, 168; 4 Burr. 2208; 5 Scott, 531; 15 Wend. 379; 111 Mass. 30; 71 Ill. 317; 7 Blackf. 403; 12 Me. 135; 6 Watts, 362; 1 Denio, 602; Williams, R. P. 327. Any permissive holding is, in fact, sufficient for the purpose, and it may be contained in any written memorandum by which it appears to have been the intention of one of the parties voluntarily to dispossess himself of the premises for any given period, and of the other to assume the possession for the same period; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 26; 1 Washb. R. P. 300. The English statute of frauds (29 Charles II. c. 3), first required all leases exceeding three years to be in writing. In Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah, Oregon, Tennessee, West Virginia, Wyoming, Virginia, and Wisconsin, leases for one year only are excepted from the requirement that they should be in writing. In Georgia, Maryland, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina, the law is as in England. It is two years in Florida. While in Vermont, Ohio, New Hampshire, Missouri, Massachusetts, Maine, and Indiana, all leases not in writing are declared mere estates at will. See Browne on Stat. of Frauds, App.

A written agreement is generally sufficient to create a term of years. But in England, by statute, all leases that are required to be in writing must also be under seal; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106. In Massachusetts and Maryland, leases for more than seven years must be by deed. So in Virginia, of those for more than five, and in Delaware, Rhode Island, and Vermont, of those for more than one.

All persons seised of lands or tenements may grant leases of them, unless they happen to be under some legal disability: as, of unsound mind, immature age, or the like; 8 C. & P. 679. See, as to infants, 10 Pet. 65; 7 Cow. 179; 11 Johns. 539; 3 Mod. 310. Contracts by them are voidable only and not void, and may be affirmed or disaffirmed by them on attaining their majority; 17 Wend. 119; 12 Vt. 28; 11 Johns. 539; 6 Conn. 494. As to persons of unsound mind, see 3 Camp. 126; 51 N. Y. 384; 11 Pick. 304; 8 C. & P. 679; intoxicated persons, 2 Paige, 30; 18 Ves. 16; 4 Harr. 285; married women, Smith, Landl. & T. 48; 1 Taylor, Landl. & T. § 101. See PARTIES; CONTRACTS. But it is essential to the validity of a lease that the lessor has, at the time he undertakes to make the grant, possession of the premises; otherwise, whatever he does will amount to nothing more than the assignment of a chose in action; Cro. Car. 109; Shep. Touchst. 269. But possession is always presumed to follow the title unless there is a clearly marked adverse possession.

And although a lease may not be sufficient to authorize a lessee to demand possession for the want of a possessory title in his lessor, it will still operate by way of estoppel, and enure to his benefit if the lessor afterwards comes into possession of the land before the expiration of the lease; Bacon, Abr. Leases (I 4); Cro. Eliz. 109; 28 Barb. 240; 61 N.Y. 6; 7 M. & G. 701; 3 Pick. 52; 18 How. 82; 6 Watts, 60; 2 Hill, N.Y. 554; 16 Johns. 110, 201; 5 Ark. 693.

The power to lease will, of course, depend upon the extent of the lessor's estate in the premises; and if he has but an estate for life, his lease can only be coextensive therewith; when for a term of years, its commencement as well as its termination must be ascertained, for certainty in these respects is of the essence of a term of years. But although this term may not at first appear to be certain, it may be rendered so by reference to some fact or event; id certum est quod certum reddi potest. Thus, if a lease be made to a man for so many years as he has in the manor of Dale, and he happens to have a term of two years in that manor, the lease will be good for that period; Co. Litt. 45 b: 3 Term, 463; 4 East, 29; 1 M. & W. 533; 3 Co. 346; 97 Mass. 206; 102 Mass. 93; 10 R. I. 355.

Lord Coke states that, originally, express terms could not endure beyond an ordinary generation of forty years, lest men might be disinherited; but the doctrine had become antiquated even in his day, and at the present time there is no limitation to a term of years except in the state of New York, where land cannot be leased for agricultural purposes for a longer period than twelve years; see Co. Litt. 45 b, 46 a; 9 Mod. 101; 13 Ohio, 334; 1 Platt, Leas. 3; 1 Washb. R. P. 310; 41 N. Y. 480; 62 N. Y. 524.

In all leases of uncertain duration, or if no time has been agreed upon for the continuation of the term, or if after the expiration of a term the tenant continues to hold over, without any effort on the part of the landlord to remove him, the tenancy is at the will of either party. And it remains at will until after the payment and receipt of rent on account of a new tenancy, or until the parties concur in some other act which recognizes the existence of a tenancy, from which event it becomes a tenancy from year to year, invested with the qualities and incidents of the original tenancy. After this, neither party has a right to terminate it before the expiration of the current year upon which they have entered, nor then without having first given due notice to the other party of his intention to do so. The length of this notice is regulated by the statutes of the different states; 11 Wend. 616; 13 Johns. 109; 8 Term, 3; 4 Ired. 294; 3 Zabr. 111. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The formal parts of a lease by deed are: first, the date, which will fix the time for its commencement, unless some other period is specified in the instrument itself for that purpose; but if there is no date, or an impossible one, the time will be considered as having commenced from the delivery of the deed; 2 Johns. 230; 15 Wend. 656; 4 B. & C. 908; 17 Wend. 103. Second, the names of the parties, with respect to which the law knows but one Christian name; and therefore the middle letter of the name of either party is immaterial, and a person may always show he is as well known by one name as another; 14 Pet. 322; 36 Ill. 362; 55 N. Y. 380. The entire omission of the lessee's name from a lease will render the instrument simply void; 11 Com. 129; 8 Md. 118; 24 N. Y. 336; 6 Allen, 305; 19 Iowa, 290; 2 Wall. 24. Third, recitals of title or other circumstances of the case. Fourth, some consideration must appear, although it need not be what is technically called rent, or a periodical render of compensation for the use of the premises; but it may be a sum in gross, or the natural affection which one party has for the other. It may also consist in grain, animals, or the personal services of the lessee; 3 Hill, N. Y. 345; 1 Speers, 408; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 152. Fifth, the operative words of the lease are usually "demise, grant, lease, and to farm let;" 50 N. Y. 414; 53 N. H. 513; 27 Md. 173. Sixth, the description of the premises need not specify all the particulars of the subject-matter of the demise, for the accessories will follow the principal thing named: thus, the garden is parcel of a dwelling-house, and the general description of a farm includes all the houses and lands appertaining to the farm; 9 Conn. 374; 5 Johns. 446; 11 C. E. Green, 82; 4 Rawle, 330; 9 Cow. 747. But whether certain premises are parcel of the demise or not is always matter of evidence; 14 Barb. 434; 3 B. & C. 870; 14 B. Mon. 8. Seventh, the rights and liabilities of the respective parties are regulated by law in the absence of any particular agreement in respect thereto; but express covenants are usually inserted in a lease, for the purpose of limiting or otherwise defining their rights and duties in relation to repairs, taxes, insurance renewals, residence on the premises, modes of cultivation, fixtures, and the like. Certain covenants are also implied in law from the use of certain technical terms in leases.

In every well-drawn lease, provision is made for a forfeiture of the term in case the tenant refuses to pay rent, commits waste, or is guilty of a breach of the covenant to repair, insure, reside upon the premises, or the like. This clause enables the lessor or his assigns to re-enter in any such event upon the demised premises and eject the tenant, leaving both parties in the same condition as if the lease were a nullity; but in the absence of a proviso for re-entry the lessor would possess no such power, the mere breach of a covenant enabling him to sue for damages only; 11 Mod. 61; 3 Wils. 127; 2 Cow. 591; 2 Overton, 233; 1 Dutch. 285; 15 Cal. 233. The forfeiture will generally be enforced by the courts, except where the landlord's damages are a mere matter of computation and can be readily compensated by money; 7 Johns. 235; 4 Munf. 332; 2 Price, 200; 44 Vt. 285; 9 Hare, 683; 5 R. I. 144; 60 Penn. 131; 20 Vt. 415; 31 Conn. 468; 40 N. H. 434. But in case of a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, the proviso is allowed to operate simply as a security for rent, and the tenant will be relieved from its effects at any time by paying the landlord or bringing into court the amount of all arrears of rent, with interest and costs.

A lease may also be terminated before the prescribed period if the premises are required to be taken for public uses or improvements, or the subject-matter of demise wholly perishes or is turned into a house of ill fame; 24 Wend. 454; 29 Barb. 116; 119 Mass. 28; 46 N. Y. 297; 38 Mo. 143; 58 Penn. 271; 118 Mass. 125; 38 Cal. 259; 11 Cush. 600; 5 Ohio, 303. The same result will follow when the tenant purchases the fee, or the fee descends to him as heir at law; for in either case the lease is merged in the inheritance; since there would be a manifest inconsistency in allowing the same person to hold two distinct estates immediately expectant on each other, while one of them includes the time of both, thus uniting the two opposite characters of landlord and tenant; 10 Johns. 482; 2 C. & P. 347; 26 Ill. 19; 6 Johns. Ch. 417; 13 Penn. 16; Taylor, Landl. & T. § 502. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LEASE AND RELEASE. A species of conveyance much used in England, consisting theoretically of two instruments, but which are practically united in the same instrument.

It was invented by Sergeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the statute of uses. It is thus contrived: a lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him.

The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance; 2 Bla. Com. 339; 4 Kent, 482; Co. Litt. 207; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.

LEASEHOLD. The estate held by virtue of a lease. In practice the word is generally applied to an estate for a fixed term of years.

LEASING-MAKING. In Scotch Law. Verbal sedition, viz.: slanderous and untrue speeches to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of his majesty, his council and proceedings, etc. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 4. 4. 29.

LEAVE OF COURT. Permission granted by the court to do something which, without such permission, would not be allowable.

The statute of 4 Ann. c. 16, s. 4, provides that it shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with leave of the court, to plead as many several matters thereto as he shall think necessary for his defence. The principles of this statute have been adopted by most of the states of the Union.

When the defendant, in pursuance of this statute, pleads more than one plea in bar to one and the same demand or thing, all of the pleas except the first should purport to be pleaded with leave of the court. But the omission is not error nor cause of demurrer; Lawes, Pl. 132; 2 Chitty, Pl. 421; Story, Eq. Pl. 72, 76; Gould, Pl. c. 8, § 21; Steph. Pl. 272; Andr. 109; 3 N. H. 523.

Asking leave of court to do any act is an implied admission of jurisdiction of the court, and in those cases in which the objection to the jurisdiction must be taken, if at all, by plea to the jurisdiction, and it can be taken in no other way, the court, by such asking leave, becomes fully vested with the jurisdiction. Bacon, Abr. Abatement (A); Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (E 2); Lawes, Pl. 91; 6 Pick. 391. But such admission cannot aid the jurisdiction except in such cases.

LECTOR DE LETRA ANTIQUA. In Spanish Law. The person duly authorized by the government to read and decipher ancient documents and titles, in order to entitle them to legal effect in courts of justice.

LEDGER. In Commercial Law. A book in which are inscribed the names of all persons dealing with the person who keeps it, and in which there is a separate account, composed generally of one or more pages for each. There are two parallel columns, on one of which the party named is the debtor, and on the other the creditor, and presents a ready means of ascertaining the state of the account. As this book is a transcript from the day-book or journal, it is not evidence per se.

LEDGER-BOOK. In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a book kept in the prerogative courts in England. It is considered as a roll of the court, but, it seems, it cannot be read in evidence. Bacon, Abr.

LEGACY. A gift of personal property by last will and testament. The term is more commonly applied to a bequest of money or chattels, although sometimes used with reference to a charge upon real estate; 2 Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 1051; see 9 Cush. 297; 1 Law Rep. 107; 5 Term, 716; 1 Burr. 268; 7 Ves. Ch. 391, 522.

An absolute legacy is one given without condition, to vest immediately; 1 Vern. Ch. 254; 2 id. 181; 5 Ves. Ch. 461; 19 id. 83; Comyns, Dig. Chancery (I 4).

An additional, or, more technically, a cumulative, legacy is one given to a legatee to whom a legacy has already been given. It may be given by the same will in which a legacy has been already bequeathed, or by a codicil thereto; 1 Bro. C. C. 90; 10 Johns. 156; 17 Ohio, 597; 22 Conn. 371; as to when such second legacy will be held a mere repetition of a prior bequest; see 2 L. C. Eq. 346.

An alternate legacy is one by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

A conditional legacy is a bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event; 1 Roper, Leg. (3d ed.) 645. The condition may be either precedent; 2 Conn. 196; 9 W. & S. 103; 17 Wend. 393; 14 N. H. 315; 10 Cush. 129; or subsequent; 25 Me. 529; 33 N. H. 285; 3 Pet. 376.

A demonstrative legacy is a bequest of a certain sum of money, stock, or the like, with reference to a particular fund for payment; Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 860; 23 N. H. 154; 19 Gratt. 438; 10 Penn. 387; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. 453; 16 N. Y. 365.

A general legacy is one so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money of the testator, distinguished from all others of the same kind; 1 Roper, Leg. (3d ed.) 170; 8 N. Y. 516; 6 Madd. 92.

An indefinite legacy is a bequest of things which are not enumerated or ascertained as to numbers or quantities: as, a bequest by a testator of all his goods, all his stocks in the funds; Lowndes, Leg. 84; Swinburne, Wills, 485; Ambl. 641; 1 P. Wms. 697; of this class are generally residuary legacies.

A lapsed legacy is one which, in consequence of the death of the legatee before the testator or before the period for vesting, has never vested; Swinb. b. t. 7, s. 23, pl. 1; 2 W. & S. 450; 1 P. Wms. 83; 1 Bro. C. C. 84; 4 DeG. M. & G. § 633.

A legacy for life is one in which the legatee is to enjoy the use of the legacy for life.

A modal legacy is a bequest accompanied with directions as to the mode in which it should be applied for the legatee's benefit: for example, a legacy to Titius to put him an apprentice; 2 Vern. Ch. 431; Lowndes, Leg. 151.

A pecuniary legacy is one of money. Pecuniary legacies are most usually general legacies, but there may be a specific pecuniary legacy, for example, of the money in a certain bag; 1 Roper, Leg. (3d ed.) 150, n.

A residuary legacy is a bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will; Lowndes, Leg. 10; Bacon, Abr. Legacies (I); 6 H. L. Cas. 217.

A specific legacy is a bequest of a specified part of the testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind; 3 Beav. 349; 20 Me. 105; 3 Rawle, 237; 23 N. H. 154; L. R. 20 Eq. 308.

All natural persons and all corporations are capable of becoming legatees, unless prohibited by statute or alien enemies. Legacies to the subscribing witnesses to a will are by statute often declared void; see 2 Will. Exec. (6th Am. ed.) 1053 et seq.; 19 Ves. Ch. 208; 3 Russ. Ch. 437; 1 Bla. Com. 442; L. R. 13 Eq. 381; 106 Mass. 474; 1 Moo. & R. 288. Bequests to superstitious uses are prohibited by many of the English statutes; 2 Beav. 151; 2 Mylne & K. 397; 5 Mylne & C. 11; 1 Salk. 162; 2 Vern. 266. But in the United States the free toleration of all religious opinions would seem to make it almost impossible to hold any use superstitious; 1 Watts, 218; 1 Bright. 346; 2 Dana, 170. But the courts will not intervene to support and maintain a legacy for any purpose which is illegal or subversive of public policy; 63 Penn. 465. Bequests to charitable uses are favored both in England and the United States. See CHARITY. The cases are extensively collated in 2 Will. Exec. (6th Am. ed.) 1055; 4 Kent, 508; 2 How. 127; 4 Wheat. 1; 7 Johns. Ch. 292; 20 Ohio, 483; 10 Penn. 23; 11 Vt. 296; 5 Cush. 336; 12 Conn. 113; Saxt. Ch. 577; 3 Leigh, 450; 2 Ired. Eq. 9, 210; 5 Humphr. 170; 11 Beav. 481; 14 id. 357; 10 Hare, 446. Legacies which would otherwise be void for uncertainty or perpetuity are sustained if for charitable uses; 14 Allen, 550; 38 Conn. 366; 15 How. 367; 7 R. I. 252. In those states where the principles of the statute of Elizabeth in regard to charitable uses are recognized in the equity courts, the decisions have been liberal in upholding bequests for the most diverse objects and expressed in the most general terms; 17 S. & R. 88; 2 Ired. Eq. 210; 1 Gilm. 336; 7 Vt. 241; 2 Sandf. Ch. 46; 7 B. Monr. 617, 618–622; 2 How. 127; 9 Penn. 433; 7 Johns. Ch. 292; 10 Allen, 177; 25 Md. 518; 2 Dana, 170; 24 How. 465; 15 Ohio St. 537; 28 Penn. 23; 59 Me. 332; 38 Conn. 362; 43 N. Y. 424; 2 Perry, Trusts, § 748, note 1; 33 Md. 699. In Virginia, the stat. of 43 Eliz. c. 4, has been repealed; 3 Leigh, 450; 15 Gratt. 423.

Construction of legacies. First, the technical import of words is not to prevail over the obvious intent of the testator; 3 Term, 86; 11 East, 246; 16 id. 221; 6 Ad. & E. 167; 7 M. & W. 1, 481; 1 M. & K. 571; 2 id. 659; 2 Russ. & M. 546; L. Ch. 386, 387; 1 Younge & J. 512; 4 Ves. Ch. 329; 8 id. 306; Dougl. 341; 5 Mass. 500; 8 id. 3; 2 M'Cord, 66; 5 Denio, 646; 75 Penn. 220; 3 Green, 218; 1 Sumn. 239; 18 N. Y. 417; 25 Wend. 119. The particular intent will always be sacrificed to the general intent; 1 Burr. 38; 7 Term, 531; 11 Gray, 469; 70 Penn. 335; 106 Mass. 24; 26 Mo. 590; 6 Peters, 68. Third, the intent of the testator is to be determined from the whole will; 1 Swanst. 28; 1 Coll. Ch. 681; 8 Term, 122; 3 Pet. 377; 4 Rand. 213; 8 Blackf. 387; 100 Mass. 342; 51 N. H. 88, 78 Penn. 40; 35 Ind. 198; 52 N. Y. 450, 22 Me. 413. Fourth, every word shall have effect, if it can be done without defeating the general purpose of the will, which is to be carried into effect in every reasonable mode; 6 Ves. 102; 2 B. & Ald. 448; 2 Bla. Com. 381; 3 Pick. 360; 7 Ired. Eq. 267; 16 Humphr. 368; 2 Md. 82; 6 Pet. 68; 1 Jarm. Wills, 404–412; 9 H. L. Cas. 420; 40 N. H. 500; 53 Penn. 106; 12 Gratt. 196; 19 N. Y. 348. But where it is impossible to form a consistent whole the latter part will prevail; 6 Ves. 100; 1 Phill. C. C. 333; 5 Beav. 100; 52 Me. 287; 52 N. Y. 12; 29 Penn. 234; 75 id. 225; 78 id. 484. Fifth, the will will be favorably construed to effectuate the testator's intent, and to this end, words may be transposed, supplied, or rejected; Hob. 75; 15 East, 309; 21 Beav. 143; 7 H. L. Cas. 68; 2 Bligh, 1; 8 Sim. 184; 30 Iowa, 294; 4 Rich. Eq. 22; 63 N. C. 381; 7 Gill. & J. 311; 105 Mass. 338; 22 Me. 429; L. R. 14 Eq. 54; 10 Wheat. 204; 35 Md. 198; 54 Penn. 245; 20 Ohio St. 418. Sixth, in the case of a will of personalty made abroad, the lex domicilii must prevail, unless it appear the testator had a different intent; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 479 a, 479 m, 490, 491; 1 DeG. F. & J. 404; L. R. 1 H. L. 401; 99 Mass. 136; 52 Me. 165; 34 N. Y. 584; 1 Cranch, 38; 14 How. 426. Seventh, a will of personalty speaks from the time of testator's death; 8 DeG. M. & G. 391; 8 Paige, 104; 34 N. Y. 201; 22 N. H. 434; 21 Conn. 610; 41 Barb. 50.

Whether cumulated or repeated Where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to one person it becomes a question whether the legatee is entitled to both or one only. Where there is internal evidence of the intention of the testator, that intention is to be carried out; 2 Beav. 215; 7 id. 107; 3 Hare, 620; 2 Drur. & W. Ch. 138; 3 Ves. Ch. 462; 5 id. 369; 17 id. 462; 2 Sim. & S. 145; 4 Hare, 219; L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 738; 10 Johns. 156; 4 Harr. N. J. 127; 1 Zabr. 573; and evidence will be received in support of the apparent intention, but not against it; 5 Madd. 351; 2 Beav. 115; 1 My. & K. 589; 2 Brown, Ch. 528; 4 Hare, 216; 1 Drur. & W. Ch. 94, 118. Where there is no such internal evidence, the following positions of law appear established. First, if the same specific thing is bequeathed twice to the same legatee in the same will, or in the will and again in a codicil, in that case he can claim the benefit of only one legacy; Toller, Exec. 335; 2 Hare, 432. Second, where two legacies of quantity of equal amount are bequeathed to the same legatee in one and the same instrument; there also the second bequest is considered a mere repetition, and he shall be entitled to one legacy only; 1 Brown, Ch. 30; 4 Ves. Ch. 75; 3 Mylne & K. 29; 10 Johns. 156. See 4 Gill, 280; 1 Zabr. 573; 16 Penn. 127; 5 De G. & S. 698; 16 Sim. 423. Third, where two legacies of quantity of unequal amount are given to the same person in the same instrument, the one is not merged in the other, but the latter shall be regarded as cumulative, and the legatee entitled to both; Finch, 267; 2 Brown, C. C. 225; 3 Hare, 620. Fourth, where two legacies are given simpliciter to the same legatee by different instruments, in that case also the latter shall be cumulative, whether its amount be equal; 1 Cox, 392; 17 Ves. Ch. 34; 1 Coll. Ch. 495; 4 Hare, 216; or unequal to the former; 1 Chanc. Cas. 801; 1 P. Wms. 423; 5 Sim. 431; 7 id. 29; 1 Mylne & K. 589; 4 H. L. Cas. 393; 1 De G. F. & J. 183; L. R. 12 Eq. Cas. 525; id. 7 Ch. App. 448. And see 1 Cox, 392; 1 Brown, Ch. 272; 2 Beav. 215; 2 Drur. & W. 133; 1 Bligh, N. S. 491; 1 Phill. 294. See, generally, on this subject notes to Hooley vs. Hatton, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. *346.

Description of legatee.—Children. This may have reference to the time of the testator's death, or that of making the will. The former is the presumed intention, unless from the connection or circumstances the latter is the apparent intent, in which case it must prevail; 4 Brown, 55; Ambl. 397; 2 Cox, 191, 192; 11 Sim. 42; 2 Will. Exec. (6th Am. ed.) 1089; 11 Gill & J. 185; 21 Conn. 16; 59 Me. 325; 2 Dev. & B. 30; 101 Mass. 132; 54 N. Y. 83.

This term will include a child in ventre sa mère; 2 H. Bla. 399; 1 Sim. & S. 181; 2 Cox, 425; 1 Meigs, 149; 5 S. & R. 38; 15 Pick. 255; 30 Penn. 173; L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 460. Where the division of a fund to legatees is postponed until a certain event or period the word "child" will apply to all those answering that description when the fund is to be divided; 8 Ves. 38; 9 Leigh, 79; 1 Hill, Ch. 322; 1 McCarter, 159; 4 Sandf. 36; 101 Mass. 138. But it will sometimes have a more restricted application, and thus be confined to children born before the death of the testator. But children born after the period of distribution take no share; L. R. 12 Eq. 427; 45 N. H. 270; 8 Conn. 49; 5 Jones, Eq. 208; 1 Pars. 347; 1 Houst. 561. And it will make no difference that the bequest is to children begotten, or to be begotten, or which "may be born;" 2 Mylne & K. 46; 14 Beav. 453; 10 Sim. 317; 5 R. I. 318; 1 Rop. Leg. (3 ed.) 51; unless such be the testator's clear intent; 19 Ves. 566; 16 Gray, 305; 4 Sneed, 254; 4 R. I. 121; 3 Head, 493; 3 Jones, Eq. 490; 2 Jarman, Wills, 84.

"Children," when used to designate one's heirs, may include grandchildren; 12 B. Monr. 115, 121; 5 Penn. 365; 37 N. Y. 42; 63 Mass. 289; 33 Me. 464; 5 Binn. 606. But if the word children is used, and there are persons to answer it, then grandchildren cannot be comprehended under it; 4 Myl. & C. 60; L. R. 11 Eq. 91; 29 Md. 443; 14 Allen, 205; 6 C. E. Green, 85; 2 Whart. 376; 5 Jred. Eq. 421; 4 Watts, 82. The general rule is, that a bequest to a man and his children, he having children living at the time the will takes effect, creates a joint estate in the father and children; but if he have no children, he takes an absolute estate; 5 Sim. 548; 2 You. & Coll. 478; L. R. 12 Eq. 316; L. R. 14 Eq. 415; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 253; 3 Pick. 360; 5 Gray, 336. But in both cases slight circumstances will warrant the court in decreeing the limitation to be for life to the father, with remainder over to the children; 4 Madd. 361; 13 S. & R. 68; 16 B. Mon. 309; 1 Bailey, Eq. 357; 5 Jones, Eq. 219; 23 Ala. 705.

The term children will not include illegitimate children, if there are legitimate to answer the term; 1 Younge, 354; 2 Russ. & M. 336; see 2 Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 1100, and note (2); otherwise, it may or may not, according to circumstances; 1 Ves. & B. 422; 1 Bail. Eq. 351; 6 Ired. Eq. 135; 9 Paige, 88; 2 Smed. 625; 1 Roper, Leg. 80; L. R. 10 Eq. 160; L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 644; 37 Conn. 429; L. R. 7 H. L. 576; L. R. 4 P. C. 164. But a legacy to a natural child of a certain man still in ventre sa mère is void, as contravening public morals and decency; 1 P. Wms. 529; 2 My. & R. 769; L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 773. The term grandchildren will not usually include great-grandchildren; 3 Ves. & B. 59; 4 My. & C. 60; 8 Beav. 247. A bequest to "my beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the wife at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife; 1 Russ. & M. 629; 8 Hare, 131; L. R. 8 Eq. Cas. 65; 31 Beav. 398. One not lawfully married may, nevertheless, take a legacy by the name or description of the wife of the one to whom she is reputed to be married; 1 Keen, 685; 9 Sim. 615; 1 De G. J. & S. 177; 11 W. R. 614; but not if the reputed relation is the motive for the bequest; 4 Ves. 802; 4 Brown, 90; 5 My. & C. 145; L. R. 2 Ex. 319. But see 1 Keen, 685.

Nephew and nieces are terms which, in the description of a legatee, will receive their strict import, unless there is something in the will to indicate a contrary intention; 14 Sim. 214; 1 Jac. 207; 4 My. & C. 60; 27 Beav. 480; 2 Yeates, 196; 3 Barb. 475; 3 Halst. Ch. 462; 10 Hare, 63; 7 De G. M. & G. 494; L. R. 6 Ch. App. 351; 2 Jones, Eq. 302.

The term cousins will be restricted in its signification, where there is something in the will to limit its meaning; 9 Sim. 457. See 2 Brown, C. C. 125; 1 Sim. & S. 301; 6

De Gex, M. & G. 68; 4 Mylne & C. 56; 9 Sim. 386; 31 Beav. 305.

Terms which give an estate tail in lands will be construed to give the absolute title to personalty; 1 Madd. 475; 19 Ves. 544; 8 H. L. Cas. 571; 3 Md. Ch. 36; 10 Yerger, 287; 23 Penn. 9; 3 W. & S. 124; 4 Dev. & B. 478; 2 Russ. & Mylne, 390; 1 Bligh, 1; L. R. 5 Eq. Cas. 383.

A legacy to one and his heirs, although generally conveying a fee-simple in real estate and the entire property in personalty, may, by the manner of its expression and connection, be held to be a designation of such persons as are the legal heirs of the person named, and thus they take as purchasers by name; 4 Bro. C. C. 542; 10 B. Mon. 104; 108 Mass. 579; 64 Me. 490; 15 N. J. 404; 15 Ohio, 559. But the authority of these cases is doubtful. The word "heirs," when used to denote succession or substitution, is understood in the case of a legacy to mean persons entitled under the intestate law; 63 Me. 368; 59 N. Y. 151; 14 Allen, 205; 9 Pet. 483; L. R. 9 Eq. 258; 100 Mass. 348; 3 Penn. 305. But if not so used, the word heir is construed in its ordinary and legal sense; 63 Me. 379; 59 N. Y. 149; 37 Penn. 9; 108 Mass. 579; 45 Penn. 201; 3 H. L. Cas. 557; L. R. 7 Eq. Cas. 151.

The word "issue," used as a word of purchase, comprises all descendants of him to whose issue the bequest is made; 3 Ves. 257; 23 Beav. 40; 7 Allen, 76; 63 Penn. 484; 103 Mass. 288.

The term "relations" includes those only who would otherwise be entitled under the statute of distributions; 1 Bro. C. C. 31; 3 Swanst. 319; 54 Me. 291; 20 N. H. 431; 8 S. & R. 45; and so of the word "family;" 9 Ves. 323; 19 Beav. 580; L. R. 9 Eq. Cas. 622; 9 R. I. 412.

A legacy to A and his executors and administrators, legal representatives or personal representatives, gives A an absolute interest in the legacy; 15 Ves. 537; 1 Coll. 108; 118 Mass. 198; 18 Gratt. 529; L. R. 4 Eq. 359. But in some instances these words will be taken as words not of limitation but of purchase; 6 Sim. 47; L. R. 4 Eq. 359; 2 Beav. 67; 25 Md. 401. Generally when persons take under this description they will be bound to apply the legacy as the personal estate of the testator or intestate; 3 Bro. C. C. 224; 2 Yeates, 587; 8 Sim. 328. But see 1 Anstr. 128.

Mistakes in the name or description of legatees may be corrected whenever it can be clearly shown by the will itself what was intended; 1 Phill. 279, 288; 2 Younge & C. 72; 10 Hare, 345; 8 Md. 496; 15 N. H. 317; 32 id. 268; 4 Johns. Ch. 607; 23 Vt. 336; 7 Ired. Eq. 201; 15 Gray, 347; 59 N. Y. 441; L. R. 10 Eq. 29.

The only instances in which parol evidence is admissible to show the intention of the testator as to a legatee imperfectly described, is that of a strict equivocation: that is, where it appears from extraneous evidence that two or more persons answer the description in the will; 8 Bingh. 244; 5 M. & W. 363; 2 Younge & C. 72; 12 Ad. & E. 451; L. R. 2 P. & D. 8; L. R. 11 Eq. Cas. 578; 15 N. H. 380; 49 Me. 288; 3 Watts, 385; 24 Penn. 199; 59 N. Y. 441; and to explain names in the will, which the testator has used and which are peculiar or incomprehensible owing to testator's idiosyncrasies or other reasons; 2 P. Wms. 141; 4 John. Ch. 607; 5 H. L. Cas. 168.

Interest of legatee. Property given specifically to one for life, and remainder over, must be enjoyed specifically during the life of the first donee, although that may exhaust it; 4 My. & Cr. 299; 2 My. & K. 703; L. R. 11 Eq. 80; 45 N. H. 261; 6 Gill. & J. 171; 17 S. & R. 293; 2 Md. Ch. 190. But where the bequest is not specific, as where personal property is limited to one for life, remainder over, it is presumed that the testator intended the same property to go over, and if any portion of it be perishable, it shall be sold and converted into permanent property, for the benefit of all concerned; 2 My. & K. 699, 701, 702; 7 Ves. 137; 4 My. & C. 298; L. R. 4 Eq. Cas. 295.

In personal property there cannot be a remainder in the strict sense of the word, and therefore every future bequest of personal property, whether it be preceded or not by any particular bequest, or limited on a certain or uncertain event, is properly an executory bequest, and falls under the rules by which that mode of limitation is regulated; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 401, n. An executory bequest cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate, out of which or after which it is limited; 8 Co. 96 a; 10 id. 476. And this privilege of executory bequests, which exempts them from being barred or destroyed, is the foundation of an invariable rule, that the event on which a limitation of this sort is permitted to take effect must be such that the estate will necessarily vest in interest from the time of its creation within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years thereafter and the fraction of another year, allowing for the period of gestation, afterwards; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 431.

Lapse of legacies. Unless the legatee survive the testator, as a rule neither he nor his representatives have any claim to the legacy; 2 W. & S. 450; 18 Pick. 41; 4 Strobh. Eq. 179; and the same rule applies where a legacy is given to a man and his executors, etc.; 1 P. Wms. 83; 3 Bro. C. C. 128; 108 Mass. 382; 39 Conn. 219. Though the testator may expressly provide otherwise; 1 Bro. C. C. 84; L. R. 14 Eq. 343. Where the legacy is payable at a future time a question often arises as to when the legacy vests. The rule seems to be that if a legacy is payable or to be paid at a future time, then a vested interest is conferred on the legatee eo instante the testator dies, transmissible to his executors or administrators; 31 Beav. 425;

44 N. H. 281; 1 Ves. 217; 2 Sim. & S. 505; 5 W. & S. 517; 48 Me. 257; 9 Cush. 516; 2 Edw. Ch. 156. But if it be payable at, if, when, in case, or provided a certain time comes or contingency arrives, then the legatee's right depends upon his being alive at the time fixed for payment; 21 Pick. 311; 62 Me. 449; 37 Penn. 105; 3 R. I. 226; 106 Mass. 28; 4 Dana, 572; 3 Bro. C. C. 473; 5 Beav. 391. For exceptions to this rule see 2 Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 1224, etc.

No particular form of words is requisite to constitute one a residuary legatee. It must appear to be the intention of the testator that he shall take the residue of the estate, after paying debts and meeting all other appointments of the will; 2 Jac. & W. 399; 44 N. H. 255; 9 Leigh, 361; 40 Conn. 264. The right of the executor to the residue of the estate when there is no residuary legatee is well established, both at law and in equity, in England, except so far as it is controlled by statute; 2 P. Wms. 340; 3 Atk. 228; 7 Ves. 288; but the rule has been controlled in equity by aid of slight presumptions in favor of the next of kin; 1 Bro. C. C. 201; 14 Sim. 8, 12; 2 Sm. & G. 241; 14 Ves. 197; and is now altered by stat. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV c. 40. The rule never obtained in this country, it is believed, to any great extent; 3 Binn. 557; 9 S. & R. 424; 6 Mass. 153; 2 Hayw. 298; 4 Leigh, 163; 9 S. & R. 186; 1 Penning. 44.

The assent of the executor to a legacy is requisite to vest the title in the legatee; 1 Bail. 504; 12 Ala. 532; 10 Humphr. 559; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 162; 11 Gratt. 724; 8 How. 170; 2 Dev. & B. 254. This will often be presumed where the legatee was in possession of the thing at the decease of the testator, and the executor acquiesces in his right. See 6 Pick. 126; 6 Call, 55; 23 Ala. 326; 4 Dev. & B. 40; 1 Bailey, Ch. 517.

Abatement. The general pecuniary legacies are subject to abatement whenever the assets are insufficient to answer the debts and specific legacies. The abatement must be upon all pro rata; 4 Brown, Ch. 349, 350; 13 Sim. 440; 106 Mass. 100; 71 Penn. 333; but a residuary legatee has no right to call upon general legatees to abate proportionally with him; 1 Dr. & S. 623; L. R. 3 Ch. App. 537; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 555–575. And, generally, among general legatees there is a preference of those who have relinquished any right in consideration of their legacy over mere volunteers; 106 Mass. 100; L. R. 3 Ch. Div. 714. Specific legatees must abate, pro rata, when all the assets are exhausted except specific devises, and prove insufficient to pay debts; 2 Vern. 756; 1 P. Wms. 679; 2 Bla. Com. 513.

Demonstrative legacies will not abate under general legacies; 11 Ves. 607; 11 Cl. & F. 509; 25 N. Y. 128. In default of special provision the following order is observed in calling upon the estate to supply a deficiency of assets; (1) General residuary estate; (2) Estate devised for payment for debts; (3) Real estate descended; (4) Real estate devised subject to debts; (5) General legacies; (6) Specific legacies and devises pro rata; 11 Penn. 72.

Ademption of legacies. A specific legacy is revoked by the sale or change of form of the thing bequeathed: as, by converting a gold chain into a cup, or wool into cloth, or cloth into garments; 2 Bro. C. C. 110; 7 Johns. Ch. 262; so if a debt specifically bequeathed be received by the testator the legacy is adeemed; 3 Bro. C. C. 431; 7 Johns. Ch. 262; 23 N. H. 218; 10 Ohio, 64; and so of stock, which is partially or wholly disposed of by testator before his death; 6 Pick. 212; 28 Penn. 363; 1 Ves. Sen. 426; 7 Johns. Ch. 258. A demonstrative legacy is not adeemed by the sale or change of the fund; 15 Ves. 384; 6 H. L. Cas. 883; 11 Cl. & F. 509; 16 Penn. 275; 25 N. Y. 128; 13 Allen, 256. A legacy to a child is regarded in courts of equity as a portion for such child: hence, when the testator, after giving such a legacy, settles the child and gives a portion, it is regarded as an ademption of the legacy. And it will make no difference that the portion given in settlement is less than the legacy: it will still adeem the legacy pro tanto; 2 Vern. 257; 15 Beav. 565; 5 My. & C. 29; L. R. 14 Eq. 236; 16 N. Y. 9; 15 Penn. 212; 5 Rand. 577; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1111–1113.

Payment of legacies. A legacy given generally, if no time of payment be named, is due at the death of the testator, although not payable until the executor has time to settle the estate in due course of law. See DEVISE. Legacies are not due by the civil law or the common law until one year after the decease of the testator, and from that time interest is chargeable on them. The same term is generally allowed the executor in the American states to dispose of the estate and pay debts, and sometimes, by special order of the probate court, this is extended, from time to time, according to circumstances; 13 Ves. 333; 12 N. Y. 474; 41 N. H. 391; 21 Md. 156; 105 Mass. 431; 4 Cl. & F. 276; 5 Binn. 475.

An annuity given by will shall commence at the death of the testator, and the first payment fall due one year thereafter; 3 Madd. 167; 1 Sumn. 19; 42 Barb. 533; 5 W. & S. 30. A distinction is taken between an annuity and a legacy, in the matter of interest. In the latter case, no interest begins to accumulate until the end of one year from the death of the testator; 1 Sch. & L. 301; 17 S. & R. 396; 2 Roper, Leg. 1253. In cases where a legacy is given a child as a portion, payable at a certain age, this will draw interest from the death of the testator; L. R. 1 Eq. 369; 11 Ves. 2; 5 Binn. 477, 479; 4 Rawle, 113, but this rule does not apply when any other provision is made for the child; 9 Beav. 164; 19 Penn. 49; 16 N. J. Eq. 243; 41 N. H. 393; 14 Allen, 239.

Where legatees are under disabilities, as infancy or coverture, the executor cannot discharge himself by payment, except to some party having a legal right to receive the same on the part of the legatee, which in the case of an infant is the legally-appointed guardian; 9 Metc. 435; 1 Johns. Ch. 3; 106 Mass. 586; 1 P. Wms. 285; and in the case of a married woman the husband; 1 Vern. 261; but in the latter case the executor may decline to pay the legacy until the husband make a suitable provision out of it for the wife, according to the order of the court of chancery; 8 Bligh, 224; Bisph. Eq. § 109. By statute in England and in some of the United States the executor is allowed in such cases to deposit the money on interest, subject to the order of the court of chancery; 2 Will. Exec. (6th Am. ed.) 1407. The executor is liable for interest upon legacies, whenever he has realized it, by investing the amount; L. R. 5 Ch. App. 233; 114 Mass. 404; 16 How. 542; and usually with annual rests; 29 Beav. 586; 23 N. J. Eq. 192; 109 Mass. 541. Where an executor was compelled to pay money out of his own funds on account of the devastarit of a co-executor, and the matter had lain along for many years on account of the infancy of the legatees, no interest was allowed under the special circumstances until the filing of the bill; 9 Vt. 41.

The better opinion is that at common law no action lay against an executor for a general legacy; 5 Term, 690. But in case of a specific legacy it will lie after the assent of the executor; 5 Gray, 67; 114 Mass. 26; and in the United States assumpsit will generally lie for all legacies even before assent by the executor; 30 N. H. 505; 6 N. J. Law, 432; 12 Penn. 341; 2 Johns. 243; 6 Conn. 176; 2 Hayw. 153; 63 Me. 537.

The proper remedy for the recovery of a legacy is in equity; 5 Term, 690; 35 N. H. 349; 71 N. C. 281; 35 N. H. 339; Will. Exec. (6th Am. ed.) 2005. In most of the United States summary proceedings to recover legacies are provided in the orphans' or probate courts.

Satisfaction of debt by legacy. In courts of equity, if a legacy equal or exceed the debt, it is presumed to have been intended to go in satisfaction; but if the legacy be less than the debt, it shall not be deemed satisfaction pro tanto; 16 Vt. 150; 12 Mass. 391; 3 S. & R. 54; 3 W. C. C. 43; 8 Cow. 246; 1 Lowell, 418. But courts allow very slight circumstances to rebut this presumption of payment: as, where the debt was not contracted until after the making of the will; 2 P. Wms. 343; Prec. in Chan. 240; 3 P. Wms. 353; 4 Madd. 325; 2 Salk. 508; where the debt is unliquidated, and the amount due not known; 1 P. Wms. 299; where the debt was due upon a bill or note negotiable; 3 Ves. 561; 1 Root, 159; 1 Allen, 129; where the legacy is made payable after the debt falls due; 3 Atk. 96; where the legacy appears from the will to have been given diverso intuitu; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 635; 2 Gill & J. 185; where there is express direction in the will for the payment of all debts and legacies, or the legacy is expressed to be for some other reason; 1 P. Wms. 410. The same rule applies where the legacy is of a different nature from the debt; 1 Atk. 428; 3 Atk. 65, 68; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1110–1113; Brightly, Eq. Jur. §§ 382, 391; as a rule, the American cases are not favorable to the doctrine of satisfaction.

Release of debt by a legacy. If one leave a legacy to his debtor, it is not to be regarded as a release of the debt unless that appears to have been the intention of the testator; 4 Bro. C. C. 226; 15 Sim. Ch. 554; 5 Ala. 245; and parol evidence is admissible to prove this intention; 5 Ves. 341; 23 Beav. 404; 2 Dev. Ch. 488.

Where one appoints his debtor his executor, it is at law regarded as a release of the debt; Co. Litt. 264; 8 Co. 136 a; but this is now controlled by statute in England and in many of the United States; 116 Mass. 552; 15 Penn. 533; 9 Conn. 470; 7 Cow. 781. But in equity it is considered that the executor is still liable to account for the amount of his own debt; 11 Ves. Ch. 90, nn. 1, 2, 3; 13 id. 262, 264.

Where one appoints his creditor executor, and he has assets, it operates to discharge the debt, but not otherwise; 2 Will. Exec. (6th Am. ed.) 1316, etc.; 2 Show. 401; 1 Salk. 304. See, generally, Toller, Williams, on Executors, Roper on Legacies, Jarman on Wills.

LEGAL. That which is according to law. It is used in opposition to equitable: as, the legal estate is in the trustee, the equitable estate in the cestui que trust. But see Powell, Mortg. Index.

LEGAL ASSETS. Such property of a testator in the hands of his executor as is liable to debts in temporal courts and to legacies in the spiritual by course of law; equitable assets are such as are liable only by help of a court of equity. 2 Will. Exec. 1408–1431, Amer. notes. No such distinction exists in Pennsylvania; 1 Ashm. 347. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 551; 2 Jarm. Wills, 543.

LEGAL ESTATE. One the right to which may be enforced in a court of law.

It is distinguished from an equitable estate, the right to which can be established only in a court of equity. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1688.

The party who has the legal title has alone the right to seek a remedy for a wrong to his estate, in a court of law, though he may have no beneficial interest in it. The equitable owner is he who has not the legal estate, but is entitled to the beneficial interest.

The person who holds the legal estate for the benefit of another is called a trustee; he who has the beneficiary interest and does not hold the legal title is called the beneficiary, or, more technically, the cestui que trust.

When the trustee has a claim, he must enforce his right in a court of equity, for he cannot sue any one at law in his own name; 1 East, 497; 8

Term, 322; 1 Saund. 158, n. 1; 2 Bingh. 20; still less can he in such court sue his own trustee; 1 East, 497.

LEGALIZATION. The act of making lawful.

By legalization is also understood the act by which a judge or competent officer authenticates a record, or other matter, in order that the same may be lawfully read in evidence.

LEGAL TENDER. That currency which has been made suitable by law for the purposes of a tender in the payment of debts.

The following descriptions of currency are legal tender in the United States:—

All the gold coins of the United States are a legal tender in all payments at their nominal value when not below the standard weight and limit of tolerance provided by law for the single piece, and, when reduced in weight below such standard tolerance, they are a legal tender at valuation in proportion to their actual weight. The silver dollar of 412½ grains is a legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract. The silver coins of the United States of smaller denominations than one dollar are a legal tender in all sums not exceeding ten dollars in payment of all dues, public and private. The trade dollar of 420 grains is not a legal tender. The five-cent piece, the three-cent piece, and the one-cent piece are legal tender for any amount not exceeding twenty-five cents in any one payment. No foreign coins are now a legal tender.

By acts of Feb. 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, congress authorized the issue of notes of the United States, declaring them a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. 12 Stat. at L. 345, 532, 709. These notes are obligations of the United States, and are exempt from state taxation; 7 Wall. 26; but where a state requires its taxes to be paid in coin, they cannot be discharged by a tender of these notes. A debt created prior to the passage of the legal tender acts, and payable by the express terms of the contract in gold and silver coins, cannot be satisfied by a tender of treasury notes; 7 Wall. 229; id. 258; 12 id. 687. The legal tender acts are constitutional, as applied to pre-existing contracts, as well as to those made subsequent to their passage; 12 Wall. 457; per Strong, J., overruling the previous opinion of the court in 8 Wall. 604, per Chase, C. J. See 17 Am. L. Reg. 193; 19 id. 73; 21 id. 601.

A postage currency has also been authorized, which is receivable in payment of all dues to the United States less than five dollars. They are not, however, a legal tender in payment of private debts. (Act of Congress, approved July 17, 1862.)

LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.). A person who stands rectus in curia, who possesses all his civil rights. A lawful man. One who stands rectus in curia, not outlawed nor infamous. In this sense are the words probi et legales homines.

LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Pope Gregory IX. and Clement IV., in the reign of Hen. III., about the years 1220 and 1268. 1 Bla. Com. 83. Burn says, 1237 and 1268. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 30 d.

LEGATARY. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

LEGATEE. The person to whom a legacy is given. See LEGACY.

LEGATES. Legates are extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to catholic countries to represent him and to exercise his jurisdiction. They are distinguished from the ambassadors of the pope who are sent to other powers.

Legates à latere hold the first rank among those who are honored by a legation; they are always chosen from the college of cardinals, and are called à latere, in imitation of the magistrates of ancient Rome, who were taken from the court or side of the emperor.

Legati missi are simple envoys.

Legati nati are those who are entitled to be legates by birth. See A LATERE.

LEGATION. An embassy; a mission. All persons attached to a foreign legation, lawfully acknowledged by the government of this country, whether they are ambassadors, envoys, ministers, or attachés, are protected by the act of April 30, 1790, 1 Story, Laws, 83, from violence, arrest, or molestation; 1 Dall. 117; 1 Wash. C. C. 232; 2 id. 435; 4 id. 531; 11 Wheat. 467; 1 Miles, 366; 1 N. & M'C. 217; 1 Baldw. 240; Wheat. Int. Law, 167. See AMBASSADOR; ARREST; PRIVILEGE.

LEGATORY. The third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will. Bacon, Abr. Customs of London (D 4).

LEGES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Laws proposed by a magistrate of the senate and adopted by the whole people in comitia centuriata. See POPULISCITUM; LEX.

In English Law. Laws. Scriptæ.

Leges scriptæ, written or statute laws.

Leges non scriptæ, unwritten or customary laws; the common law, including general customs, or the common law properly so called; and also particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and those particular laws that are, by custom, observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. 1 Bla. Com. 67. "These parts of law are therefore styled leges non scriptæ, because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding power and the force of laws by long and immemorial usage." 1 Steph. Com. 40, 66. It is not to be understood, however, that they are merely oral; for they have come down to us in reports and treatises.

LEGISLATIVE POWER. The authority, under the constitution, to make laws, and to alter and repeal them.

LEGISLATOR. One who makes laws.

LEGISLATURE. That body of men in the state which has the power of making laws.

By the constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 1, all legislative powers granted by it are vested in a congress of the United States, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives.

It requires the consent of a majority of each branch of the legislature in order to enact a law, and then it must be approved by the president of the United States, or, in case of his refusal, by two-thirds of each house; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 7, 2.

Most of the constitutions of the several states contain provisions nearly similar to this. In general, the legislature will not, and, by the constitutions of some of the states, cannot, exercise judicial functions: yet the use of such power upon particular occasions is not without example.

LEGITIM (called, otherwise, Bairn's Part of Gear). In Scotch Law. The legal share of father's free movable property, due on his death to his children: if widow and children are left, it is one-third; if children alone, one-half; Ersk. Inst. 3. 9. 20; 4 Bell, H. L. Cas. 286.

LEGITIMACY. The state of being born in wedlock; that is, in a lawful manner.

Marriage is considered by all civilized nations as the only source of legitimacy; the qualities of husband and wife must be possessed by the parents in order to make the offspring legitimate; and, furthermore, the marriage must be lawful, for if it is void ab initio, the children who may be the offspring of such marriage are not legitimate; 1 Phill. Ev.; La. Civ. Code, art. 203 to 216.

In Virginia, it is provided, by statute of 1787, "that the issue of marriages deemed null in law shall nevertheless be legitimate." 3 Hen. & M. 228, n.

A strong presumption of legitimacy arises from marriage and cohabitation; and proof of the mother's irregularities will not destroy this presumption: pater est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. To rebut this presumption, circumstances must be shown which render it impossible that the husband should be the father, as impotency and the like; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3062. See BASTARD.

LEGITIMATE. That which is according to law: as, legitimate children are lawful children, born in wedlock, in contradistinction to bastards; legitimate authority, or lawful power, in opposition to usurpation.

LEGITIMATION. The act of giving the character of legitimate children to those who were not so born.

In Louisiana, the Civil Code, art. 217, enacts that "children born out of marriage, except those who are born of an incestuous or adulterous connection, may be legitimated by the subsequent marriage of their father and mother, whenever the latter have legally acknowledged them for their children, either before their marriage, or by the contract of marriage itself."

In most of the other states, the character of legitimate children is given to those who are not so, by special acts of assembly. In Georgia, real estate may descend from a mother to her illegitimate children and their representatives, and from such child, for want of descendants, to brothers and sisters, born of the same mother, and their representatives. Prince's Dig. 202. In Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, Vermont, and Virginia, subsequent marriage of parents, and recognition by the father, legitimize an illegitimate child; and the law is the same in Massachusetts, for all purposes except inheriting from their kindred. Mass. Rev. Stat. 414.

The subsequent marriage of parents legitimatizes the child in Illinois; but he must be afterwards acknowledged. The same rule seems to have been adopted in Indiana and Missouri. An acknowledgment of illegitimate children, of itself, legitimatizes in Ohio; and in Michigan and Mississippi, marriage alone between the reputed parents has the same effect. In Maine, a bastard inherits from one who is legally adjudged, or in writing owns himself to be, the father. A bastard may be legitimated in North Carolina, on application of the putative father to court, either where he has married the mother, or she is dead, or married another, or lives out of the state. In a number of the states, namely, in Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, North Carolina, Ohio, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Vermont, and Virginia, a bastard takes by descent from his mother, with modifications regulated by the laws of these states. 2 Hill, Abr. §§ 24-35, and authorities cited. See DESCENT.

LEGITIME. In Civil Law. That portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.

The civil code of Louisiana declares that donations inter vivos or mortis causâ cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half if he leaves two children; and one-third if he leaves three or a greater number. Under the name of children are included descendants of whatever degree they may be: it must be understood that they are only counted for the child they represent. La. Civ. Code, art. 1480.

In Holland, Germany, and Spain, the principles of the Falcidian law, more or less limited, have been generally adopted. Coop. Just. 516.

In the United States, other than Louisiana, and in England, there is no restriction on the right of bequeathing. But this power of bequeathing did not originally extend to all a man's personal estate: on the contrary, by the common law, as it stood in the reign of Henry II., a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts, one of which went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or, if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children; and so e converso if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal. Glanville, l. 2, c. 5; Bracton, l. 2, c. 26. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable part. 2 Bla. Com. 491. See DEATH'S PART; FALCIDIAN LAW.

LENDER. He from whom a thing is borrowed. The bailor of an article loaned. See BAILMENT; LOAN.

LESION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the injury suffered, in consequence of inequality of situation, by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract.

The remedy given for this injury is founded on its being the effect of implied error or imposition; for in every commutative contract equivalents are supposed to be given and received. La. Code, art. 1854. Persons of full age, however, are not allowed in point of law to object to their agreements as being injurious, unless the injury be excessive. Pothier, Obl. p. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 3, § 4. But minors are admitted to restitution, not only against any excessive inequality, but against any inequality whatever. Pothier, Obl. p. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 3, § 5; La. Code, art. 1858. See FRAUD; GUARDIAN; SALE.

LESSEE. He to whom a lease is made. He who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. See LEASE.

LESSOR. He who grants a lease. See LEASE; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LESTAGE, LASTAGE (Sax. last, burden). A custom for carrying things in fairs and markets. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47; Termes de la Ley.

LET. Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction. To lease; to grant the use and possession of a thing for compensation. It is the correlative of hire. See HIRE. To award a contract of some work to a proposer, after proposals have been received; 35 Ala. 33.

LETTER. He who, being the owner of a thing, lets it out to another for hire or compensation. Story, Bailm. § 369. See HIRING.

LETTER. An epistle; a dispatch; a written message, usually on paper, folded up and sealed, and sent by one person to another. 1 Caines, 582.

The business of transporting and delivering letters between different towns, states, and countries, and from one part of a city to another, is undertaken by the government, and private persons are forbidden to enter into competition.

In the United States by act of congress, severe penalties are inflicted upon all persons who interfere with the rapid transportation of the mails, and upon all officers who tamper with the mails, as by opening letters, secreting the contents, etc., and competition by private individuals is prohibited; R. S. 3982.

Severe penalties are also provided for the punishment of all persons sending obscene, scurrilous, or disloyal books, pamphlets, or articles through the mails. Letters and circulars regarding illegal lotteries are also forbidden; R. S. 3893.

It is no defence to an indictment under this statute, that the matter mailed was sent to a detective who wrote a decoy letter soliciting it under a fictitious name; 11 Blatchf. 346; 10 Fed. Rep. 92, note.

Contracts may be made by letter; and when a proposal is made by letter, the mailing a letter containing an acceptance of the proposal completes the contract; 6 Wend. 104; 1 B. & Ald. 681; 6 Hare, 1; 1 H. L. Cas. 381; 11 N. Y. 441; 4 Ga. 1; 12 Conn. 431; 7 Dana, 281; 5 Penn. 339; 9 How. 390; 4 Wheat. 228; L. R. 4 Eq. 9; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 587. See 23 Am. Law Reg. 401; 29 id. 21; 2 Kent, *477, n.; Holmes, Com. Law, 305. This doctrine has sometimes been questioned, and it has been held that the letter of acceptance must be received by the offerer before the contract becomes complete; 1 Pick. 281; L. R. 6 Ex. 108 (but see 7 Ch. App. 592). See Merlin, Rép. Jur. tit. Vente, 1, art. iii.; Langd. Contr. 15; 7 Am. L. Rev. 433; L. R. 13 Eq. 148.

Payments may be made by letter at the risk of the creditor, when the debtor is authorized, expressly, or impliedly from the usual course of business, and not otherwise; Peake, 67; 1 Ex. 477; Ry. & M. 149; 3 Mass. 249.

LETTER OF ADVICE. In Common Law. A letter containing information of any circumstances unknown to the person to whom it is written; generally informing him of some act done by the writer of the letter.

It is usual and perfectly proper for the drawer of a bill of exchange to write a letter of advice to the drawee, as well to prevent fraud or alteration of the bill, as to let the drawee know what provision has been made for the payment of the bill. Chitty, Bills, 185.

LETTER OF ADVOCATION. In Scotch Law. The decree or warrant of the supreme court or court of sessions, discharging the inferior tribunal from all further proceedings in the matter and advocating the action to itself. This proceeding is similar to a certiorari issuing out of a superior court for the removal of a cause from an inferior.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY. In Practice. A written instrument, by which one or more persons, called the constituents, authorize one or more other persons, called the attorneys, to do some lawful act by the latter for or instead, and in the place, of the former;

1 Moody, 52, 70. It may be parol or under seal. It is equivalent to POWER OF ATTORNEY, q. v.

LETTER BOOK. In Common Law. A book containing the copies of letters written by a merchant or trader to his correspondents.

A press copy in a letter book stands in the same relation to the original as a copy taken from the letter book; both are secondary evidence, and are receivable on the loss of, or after notice to produce, the original: but the decisions are not entirely uniform on this point; 3 Camp. 305; 37 Conn. 555; 102 Mass. 362; see Bouv. Inst. n. 3143; 1 Stark. Ev. 356; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 72, 93, 133; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 116. See COPY; EVIDENCE.

LETTER CARRIER. A person employed to carry letters from the post-office to the persons to whom they are addressed. Provisions are made by the act of March 3, 1851, 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 591, for the appointment of letter carriers in cities and towns, and by c. 21, § 2 of the same act, for letter carriers in Oregon and California.

See acts of June 23, 1874, and Feb. 21, 1879, R. S. 3865, 3874, 3980, 3996, and R. S. Suppl. pp. 95, 414, 415.

LETTER OF CREDENCE. In International Law. A written instrument addressed by the sovereign or chief magistrate of a state to the sovereign or state to whom a public minister is sent, certifying his appointment as such, and the general object of his mission, and requesting that full faith and credit may be given to what he shall do and say on the part of his court.

When it is given to an ambassador, envoy, or minister accredited to a sovereign, it is addressed to the sovereign or state to whom the minister is delegated; in the case of a chargé d'affaires, it is addressed by the secretary or minister of state charged with the department of foreign affairs to the minister of foreign affairs of the other government; Wheat. Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 7; Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, l. 1, § 15.

LETTER OF CREDIT. An open or sealed letter, from a merchant in one place, directed to another, in another place or country, requiring him, if a person therein named, or the bearer of the letter, shall have occasion to buy commodities, or to want money to any particular or unlimited amount, either to procure the same, or to pass his promise, bill, or other engagement for it, the writer of the letter undertaking to provide him the money for the goods, or to repay him by exchange, or to give him such satisfaction as he shall require, either for himself or the bearer of the letter; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 336. And see 4 id. 259, for a form of such letter.

These letters are either general or special: the former is directed to the writer's friends or correspondents generally, where the bearer of the letter may happen to go; the latter is directed to some particular person. When the letter is presented to the person to whom it is addressed, he either agrees to comply with the request, in which case he immediately becomes bound to fulfil all the engagements therein mentioned; or he refuses, in which case the bearer should return it to the giver without any other proceeding, unless, indeed, the merchant to whom the letter is directed is a debtor of the merchant who gave the letter, in which case he should procure the letter to be protested; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 337; Malyn, 76; 1 Beaw. Lex Mer. 597; Hall, Adm. Pr. 14; 4 Ohio, 197.

In England it seems questionable whether an action can be maintained by one who advances money on a general letter of credit; 2 Story, 214; 11 M. & W. 383; the reason given being that there is no privity of contract between the mandant and the mandatory. But in this country the contrary doctrine is well settled; 3 N. Y. 214; 5 Hill, N. Y. 643; 58 Penn. 102; 54 Miss. 1; s. c. 28 Am. Rep. 347, n. In England, a letter of credit is not negotiable; 1 Macq. 513; Grant, Bank. ch. 15; except when it relates to bills of exchange; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 397; 3 id. 154. The same rule has been generally followed here, but it has been held that a general letter of credit, if it authorize more than a single transaction with the party to whom it is granted, may be honored by several persons successively, keeping within the specified aggregate; 3 N. Y. 208; 22 Vt. 160.

The debt which arises on such letter, in its simplest form, when complied with, is between the mandatory and the mandant; though it may be so conceived as to raise a debt also against the person who is supplied by the mandatory. First, when the letter is purchased with money by the person wishing for the foreign credit, or is granted in consequence of a check on his cash account, or procured on the credit of securities lodged with the person who granted it, or in payment of money due by him to the payee, the letter is, in its effects, similar to a bill of exchange drawn on the foreign merchant. The payment of the money by the person on whom the letter is granted raises a debt, or goes into account between him and the writer of the letter, but raises no debt to the person who pays on the letter, against him to whom the money is paid. Second, when not so purchased, but truly an accommodation, and meant to raise a debt on the person accommodated, the engagement generally is, to see paid any advances made to him, or to guaranty any draft accepted or bill discounted; and the compliance with the mandate, in such case, raises a debt both against the writer of the letter and against the person accredited; 1 Bell, Com. 371, 5th ed. The bearer of the letter of credit is not considered bound to receive the money; he may use the letter as he pleases, and he contracts an obligation only by receiving the money; Pothier, Contr. de Change, 237.

LETTER OF LICENSE. An instrument or writing made by creditors to their insolvent debtor, by which they bind themselves to allow him a longer time than he had a right to, for the payment of his debts, and that they will not arrest or molest him in his person or property till after the expiration of such additional time. Since the general abolition of imprisonment for debt, and under the modern system of laws for settling insolvents' estates, it is seldom, if ever, used.

LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL. A commission granted by the government to a private individual, to take the property of a foreign state, or of the citizens or subjects of such state, as a reparation for an injury committed by such state, its citizens or subjects. The prizes so captured are divided between the owners of the privateer, the captain, and the crew. A vessel loaded with merchandise, on a voyage to a friendly port, but armed for its own defence in case of attack by an enemy, is also called a letter of marque. 1 Boulay-Paty, tit. 3, § 2, p. 300.

By the constitution, art. 1, § 8, cl. 11, congress have power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. And by another section of the same instrument this power is prohibited to the several states. The granting of letters of marque is not always a preliminary to war or necessarily designed to provoke it. It is a hostile measure for unredressed grievances, real or supposed; Story, Const. § 1356. This is a means short of actual war, well recognized in international law, for terminating differences between nations; Wheat. Int. Law, § 290. Special reprisals are when letters of marque are granted in time of peace, to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the government or subjects of another nation; they are to be granted only in case of clear and open denial of justice; id. § 291. See Chitty, Law of Nat. 73; 1 Bla. Com. 251; Viner, Abr. Prerogative (B 4); Comyns, Dig. Prerogative (B 4); Molloy, b. 1, c. 2, § 10; 2 Woodd. 440; 2 C. Rob. 224; 5 id. 9, 260. And see REPRISAL; PRIVATEER; DECLARATION OF PARIS.

LETTER MISSIVE. In English Law. A letter from the king or queen to a dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect as bishop. 1 Steph. Com. 666. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament, against whom a bill has been filed, desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. It is issued by the lord chancellor, on petition, after the filing of the bill; and a neglect to attend to this places the defendant, in relation to such suit, on the same ground as other defendants who are not peers, and a subpœna may then issue; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 196; Coop. Eq. Pl. 16; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 366–369.

LETTER OF RECALL. A written document addressed by the executive of one government to the executive of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former to him has been recalled.

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION. In Commercial Law. An instrument given by one person to another, addressed to a third, in which the bearer is represented as worthy of credit. 1 Bell, Com. 5th ed. 371; 3 Term, 51; 7 Cra. 69; Fell, Guar. c. 8; 6 Johns. 181; 13 id. 224; 1 Day, Conn. 22. See RECOMMENDATION.

LETTER OF RECREDENTIALS. A document delivered to a minister by the secretary of state of the government to which he was accredited. It is addressed to the executive of the minister's country. This is in reply to the letter of recall.

LETTERS OF ABSOLUTION. Letters whereby, in former times, an abbot released a monk ab omni subjectione et obedientia, etc., and enabled him to enter some other religious order. Jacob.

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION. An instrument in writing, granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction and power of granting such letters, thereby giving the administrator (naming him) "full power to administer the goods, chattels, rights, and credits, which were of the said deceased," in the county or district in which the said judge or officer has jurisdiction; as also to ask, collect, levy, recover, and receive the credits whatsoever of the said deceased, which at the time of his death were owing, or did in any way belong, to him, and to pay the debts in which the said deceased stood obliged, so far forth as the said goods and chattels, rights and credits, will extend, according to the rate and order of law." See LETTERS TESTAMENTARY.

LETTERS OF CORRESPONDENCE. In Scotch Law. Letters are admissible in evidence against the panel, i. e., the prisoner at the bar, in criminal trials. A letter written by the panel is evidence against him; not so one from a third party found in his possession. Bell, Dict.

LETTERS OF FIRE AND SWORD. See FIRE AND SWORD.

LETTERS OF HORNING. See HORNING.

LETTERS OF SAFE CONDUCT. See SAFE CONDUCT.

LETTERS CLOSE. In English Law. Close letters are grants of the king, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from letters patent. See CLOSE ROLLS.

LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. In Practice. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant, to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe-custody; 2 Bla. Com. 505.

LETTERS PATENT. The name of an instrument granted by the government to convey a right to the patentee: as, a patent for a tract of land: or to secure to him a right which he already possesses, as a patent for a new invention or discovery. Letters patent are matter of record. They are so called because they are not sealed up, but are granted open. See PATENT.

LETTERS OF REQUEST. In English Ecclesiastical Law. An instrument by which a judge of an inferior court waives or remits his own jurisdiction in favor of a court of appeal immediately superior to it.

Letters of request, in general, lie only where an appeal would lie, and lie only to the next immediate court of appeal, waiving merely the primary jurisdiction to the proper appellate court, except letters of request from the most inferior ecclesiastical court, which may be direct to the court of arches, although one or two courts of appeal may by this be ousted of their jurisdiction as courts of appeal; 2 Add. Eccl. 406. The effect of letters of request is to give jurisdiction to the appellate court in the first instance. See a form of letters of request in 2 Chitty, Pr. 498, note k; 3 Steph. Com. 306. The same title was also given to letters formerly granted by the Lord Privy Seal preparatory to granting letters of marque.

LETTERS ROGATORY. An instrument sent in the name and by the authority of a judge or court to another, requesting the latter to cause to be examined, upon interrogatories filed in a cause depending before the former, a witness who is within the jurisdiction of the judge or court to whom such letters are addressed.

They are sometimes denominated sub mutuæ vicissitudinis, from a clause which they generally contain. Where the government of a foreign country, in which witnesses proposed to be examined reside, refuse to allow commissioners to administer oaths to such witnesses, or to allow the commission to be executed unless it is done by some magistrate or judicial officer there, according to the laws of that country, letters rogatory must issue. Commissioners are forbidden to administer oaths in the island of St. Croix; 6 Wend. 476; in Cuba; 1 Pet. C. C. 236; 8 Paige, Ch. 446; and in Sweden; 2 Ves. Sen. 236.

These letters are directed to any judge or tribunal having jurisdiction of civil causes in the foreign country, recite the pendency of the suit in court, and state that there are material witnesses residing there, without whose testimony justice cannot be done between the parties, and then request the said judge or tribunal to cause the witnesses to come before them and answer to the interrogatories annexed to the letters rogatory, to cause their depositions to be committed to writing and returned with the letters rogatory; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 320. In letters rogatory there is always an offer, on the part of the court whence they issued, to render a mutual service to the court to which they may be directed, whenever required. The practice of such letters is derived from the civil law, by which these letters are sometimes called letters requisitory. A special application must be made to court to obtain an order for letters rogatory.

Though formerly used in England in the courts of common law, 1 Rolle, Abr. 530, pl. 13, they have been superseded by commissions of dedimus potestatem, which are considered to be but a feeble substitute. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 223, n.; Hall, Adm. Pr. 37. The courts of admiralty use these letters; and they are recognized by the law of nations. See Fœlix, Droit Intern. liv. 2, t. 4, p. 300; Denisart; Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 221; Bened. Adm. § 533; 1 Hoffm. Ch. 482.

In Nelson vs. United States, supra, will be found a copy of letters rogatory, issued to the courts of Havana, according to the form and practice of the civil law, on an occasion when the authorities there had prevented the execution of a commission, regarding any attempts to take testimony under it as an interference with the rights of the judicial tribunals of that place.

Under letters rogatory from any foreign court to any circuit court of the United States, a commissioner designated to take the examination of witnesses in said letters mentioned, shall be empowered to compel the witnesses to appear and depose in the same manner as in court; Act of March 1, 1855, § 2. For further legislation, see Acts of March 3, 1863, c. 95; February 27, 1877, c. 69; Rev. Stat. 1878, §§ 875, 4071-4074; Weeks, Depos. §§ 128, 129, 130.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. An instrument in writing granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction of the probate of wills, under his hand and official seal, making known that at a certain date the last will and testament of A B (naming the testator) was duly proved before him; that the probate and grant of administration was within his jurisdiction, and certifying accordingly "that the administration of all and singular the goods, chattels, and credits of the said deceased, and any way concerning his will, was granted" to C D, "the executor named in the said will," "he having been already sworn well and faithfully to administer the same, and to make a true and perfect inventory, etc., and to exhibit the same, etc., and also to render a just and true account thereof."

In England, the original will is deposited in the registry of the ordinary or metropolitan, and a copy thereof made out under his seal; which copy and the letters testamentary are usually styled the probate. This practice has been followed in some of the United States; but where the will needs to be proved in more than one state, the impounding of it leads to much inconvenience. In other states, the original will is returned to the executor, with a certificate that it has been duly proved and recorded, and the letters testamentary are a separate instrument. The letters are usually general; but may be limited as to the locality within which the executor is to act, as to the subject-matter over which he is to have control, or otherwise, as the exigencies of the case or the express directions of the testator may require.

Letters testamentary are granted in case the decedent dies testate; letters of administration, in case he dies intestate, or fails to provide an executor; see ADMINISTRATION, EXECUTOR; but in regard to all matters coming properly under the heads of letters of administration or letters testamentary, there is little or no difference in the law relating to the two instruments. Letters testamentary and of administration are, according to their terms and extent, conclusive as to personal property while they remain unrevoked. They cannot be questioned in a court of law or of equity, and cannot be impeached, even by evidence of fraud or forgery. Proof that the testator was insane, or that the will was forged, is inadmissible; 1 Lev. 235; 8 Cush. 529; 12 Ves. 298; 21 Wall. 503; 27 Me. 17; 49 N. H. 295; 75 Penn. 503; 16 Mass. 433; 19 Johns. 386; 10 Ala. 977; 4 McC. 217; 18 Cal. 499; 60 N. Y. 123; 14 Ga. 185. But if the nature of his plea raise the issue, the defendant may show that the court granting the supposed letters had no jurisdiction and that its action is therefore a nullity; 3 Term, 130; or that the seal attached to the supposed probate has been forged, or that the letters have been revoked or that the testator is alive; 15 S. & R. 42; 9 Dana, 41; 8 Cra. 9; 8 Allen, 87; 25 Ala. 408.

Letters testamentary can be revoked only by the court whence they issued, or on appeal; Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 571.

At common law the executor or administrator has no power over real estate; nor is the probate even admissible as evidence that the instrument is a will, or as an execution of a power to charge land; Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 562. By statute, in some states, the probate is made prima facie or conclusive evidence as to realty; 17 Mass. 68; 23 Conn. 1; 10 Wheat. 470; 3 Penn. 498; 8 B. Monr. 340; 5 La. 388. In some states the probate is made after the lapse of a certain time conclusive as to realty; 9 Pet. 180; 75 Penn. 512; 8 Ohio, 246; 26 Ala. 524; 6 Gratt. 564; 8 Wright, 189. Though the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the grant of letters, yet where a legacy has been obtained by fraud, or the probate has been procured by fraud on the next of kin, a court of equity would hold the legatee or wrong-doer as bound by a trust for the party injured; Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 552 et seq.

Letters may be revoked by the court which made the grant, or an appeal to a higher tribunal, reversing the decision by which they were granted. Special or limited administration will be revoked on the occasion ceasing which called for the grant. An executor or administrator will be removed when the letters were obtained improperly; Will. Exec. (6 Am. ed.) 571.

Of their effect in a state other than that in which legal proceedings were instituted.

In view of the rule of the civil law, that personalia sequuntur personam, certain effect has been given by the comity of nations to a foreign probate granted at the place of the domicil of the deceased, in respect to the personal assets in other states. At common law, the lex loci rei sitæ governs as to real estate, and the foreign probate has no validity; but as to personalty the law of the domicil governs both as to testacy and intestacy. It is customary, therefore, on a due exemplification of the probate granted at the place of domicil, to admit the will to probate, and issue letters testamentary, without requiring original or further proof.

A foreign probate at the place of domicil has in itself no force or effect beyond the jurisdiction in which it was granted, but on its production fresh probate will be granted thereon in all other jurisdictions where assets are found. This is the general rule, but is liable to be varied by statute, and is so varied in some of the states of the United States.

Alabama. Executors and administrators of any person not an inhabitant of Alabama may sue and recover, or receive, property by virtue of letters testamentary or of administration granted in another of the United States, provided that no such letters shall have been issued in Alabama. But before the rendition of the judgment or receipt of the property, they must record with the probate judge of the county said letters, duly authenticated according to the laws of the United States. Before they are entitled to the money on the judgment, they must also give bond, payable to the judge of the court where the judgment is rendered, for the faithful administration of the money received. A delivery of property or a judgment recovered as aforesaid, is a full protection to the defendant or person delivering such property; Walker's Rev. Code (1867), §§ 2293–2296.

Arkansas. Administrators and executors appointed in any of the United States may sue in the courts of this state in their representative capacity with as full effect as though they had received letters in this state; Rev. Stat. (1874), § 4478.

California. When the estate of the deceased is in more than one county, he having died out of the state, and not having been a resident thereof at the time of his death, the probate court of that county in which application is first made for letters testamentary or of administration shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate; Wood, Cal. Dig. art. 2223.

Connecticut. Letters testamentary issued in another state are not available in this; 3 Day, 303: nor are letters of administration; 3 Day, 74; and see 2 Root, 462.

Dakota. The question has not been raised, and is not settled by statute.

Delaware. Letters testamentary or of administration granted in any other state and produced under the seal of the office or court granting the same are received as competent authority to the executor or administrator therein named. But if the deceased owed $20 or more to a citizen of the state, he must before recovering judgment in any suit instituted by him record his letters in the register's office and give security for the faithful application of the amount recovered. Proceedings in any suit may be stopped, or any one may decline to pay over money or property in his hands until such recording and security are completed. But if judgment be once entered, it shall not be reversed or set aside for failure to comply with the above regulations; Rev. Code (1874), p. 552, §§ 46, 47, 48.

Florida. Executors and administrators who shall produce probate of wills or letters of administration duly obtained in any other state, and properly authenticated under the act of congress, may sue in the courts as other plaintiffs; Bush. Dig. 80, § 20; 9 Fla. 129.

Georgia. An executor or administrator may sue by virtue of letters taken out in any state where decedent was domiciled, upon filing an exemplification of said letters in the court where the action is brought. Any person interested as heir, legatee, creditor, or otherwise may compel him, however, to give security before removing the assets from the state. He may also sell decedent's real estate under the same rules as are prescribed for the sale of real estate by resident executors or administrators, and may transfer bank stocks, draw dividends thereon, and draw checks on decedent's funds, upon first depositing with the bank a certified copy of his appointment and qualification; Code (1873), §§ 2450; 2614–2618.

Idaho. No provision is made by statute, and no decisions on the point are reported.

Illinois. Executors or administrators who have obtained letters testamentary or of administration, may sue in the courts of this state, enforce claims of the deceased, and sell real estate to pay debts, provided that no letters have previously been granted in the state on the same estate, and provided that the plaintiff produces a copy of his letters duly authenticated according to the act of congress, and provided that he give a bond for costs; Rev. Stat. (1880), 107, §§ 42, 43. Deeds for real estate made by executors and administrators who have complied with the above regulations are valid; id. 272, § 34.

Indiana. An executor or administrator appointed in another state may maintain actions and suits, and do all other acts coming within his power, as such, within this state, upon producing an authenticated copy of such letters and filing them with the clerk of the court in which such suit is to be brought, and upon giving a bond for costs; 2 Rev. Stat. (1876) 548, § 159. In cases where he is to sell real estate, he must, in addition to the foregoing, file a copy of the bond given by him for the faithful application of the proceeds in the court of the foreign state. But if there be no such bond, or if the court shall think the surety therein insufficient, he shall first be required to file a sufficient bond; id. 530, §§ 95 & 96.

Iowa. If administration of the estate of a deceased non-resident has been granted in accordance with the laws of the state or country where he resided at the time of his death, the person to whom it has been committed may, upon his application, and upon qualifying himself in the same manner as is required of other executors, be appointed an executor to administer upon the property of the deceased in this state, unless another executor has previously been appointed in this state.

The original letters testamentary or of administration, or other authority, conferring his power upon such executor, or an attested copy thereof, together with a copy of the will, if there be one, attested as hereinbefore directed, must be filed in the office of the judge of the proper county court before such appointment can be made; Code (1873), 414, § 2368, 415, § 2369.

Kansas. An executor or administrator duly appointed in any other state or country may sue or be sued in any court in this state, in his representative capacity, in like manner as a non-resident; Comp. Laws (1879), 436, § 2490. In order to enable him to obtain an order for the sale of real estate, he must, however, file a duly authenticated copy of his letters and the bond given by him for the faithful performance of his duty in the probate court. If there be no such bond, or if the court shall think the surety insufficient, he must file a sufficient bond before obtaining the order; id. 427, §§ 2430 and 2431.

Kentucky. Executors or administrators appointed by another state may sue in the courts or prosecute claims otherwise on filing in court an authenticated copy of their letters and filing bond with security to pay from the assets so collected any debts due to residents in the state by decedent. Said bond must be filed before judgment is entered. Debtors paying over to a foreign executor or administrator who was qualified as aforesaid are protected; Gen. Stat. (1873), 463, §§ 43, 44, and 45.

Louisiana. Executors or administrators of other states must take out letters of curatorship in this state. Exemplifications of wills and testaments are evidence; 4 Griffith, Law Reg. 683; 8 Mart. La. N. S. 586. There is no statute provision.

Maine. Letters of administration must be taken from some court of probate in this state. Copies of wills which have been proved in a court of probate in any of the United States, or in a court of probate of any other state or kingdom, with a copy of the probate thereof, under the seal of the court where such wills have been proved, may be filed and recorded in any probate court in this state, which recording shall be of the same force as the recording and proving the original will; Rev. Stat. (1871), 507 and 508, §§ 12–15.

Maryland. Letters testamentary or of administration granted out of Maryland have no effect in this state, except only such letters issued in the District or Columbia; and letters granted there authorize executors or administrators to claim and sue in this state; Rev. Code (1878), 452, § 113. By the Rev. Code (1878), 452–453, §§ 114–117, when non-resident owners of any public or state of Maryland stocks, or stocks of the city of Baltimore, or any other corporation in this state, die, their executors or administrators constituted under the authority of the state, district, territory, or country where the deceased resided at his death, have the same power as to such stocks as if they were appointed by authority of the state of Maryland. But before they can transfer the stocks they must, during three months, give notice in two newspapers, published in Baltimore, of the death of the testator or intestate, and of the "amount and description of the stock designed to be transferred." Administration must be granted in this state, in order to recover a debt due here to a decedent, or any of his property, with the exception above noticed.

Massachusetts. When any person shall die intestate in any other state or country, leaving estate to be administered within this state, administration thereof shall be granted by the judge of probate of any county in which there is any estate to be administered; and the administration which shall be first lawfully granted shall extend to all the estate of the deceased within the state, and shall exclude the jurisdiction of the probate court in every other county; Rev. Stat. c. 117, § 2, 3. See 3 Mass. 514; 5 id. 67; 11 id. 256, 314; 1 Pick. 81.

Michigan. An executor or administrator having received letters in another state upon filing a duly authenticated copy thereof in the probate court may be authorized to sell real estate of the deceased for the payment of debts and legacies upon either filing a copy of the bond duly authenticated given by him in the court whereby he was appointed, or if there be no such bond, or if the court shall deem the security inadequate, upon entering a bond with surety for the faithful application of the purchase money; Comp. Laws (1857), 919, §§ 3071–3075. For all other purposes it is necessary to take out letters in the state. Where the deceased leaves a will executed according to the laws of this state, and the same is admitted to proof and record where he dies, a certified transcript of the will and probate thereof may be proved and recorded in any county in this state where the deceased has property, real or personal, and letters testamentary may issue thereon; 2 Comp. Laws (1857), 867, § 2845.

Minnesota. Wills duly proved in any of the United States may be admitted to probate in any county where testator owned land or personalty with like effect as though originally there admitted to probate; Stat. at Large (1873), 648, § 18. Any executor or administrator appointed in another state may, upon filing a copy of his letters, duly authenticated, in the probate court, obtain leave to sell real estate for payment of debts or legacies, and may either by himself or by attorney execute deeds therefor with like force and effect as if letters had been granted to him in this state; id. 676, § 195.

Mississippi. Executors and administrators who have qualified in other states may sue in this state upon filing in the chancery court of the county wherein the suit is brought, a duly authenticated copy of said letters, and also a certificate from the court where the letters were granted that the property or debt sued for is included in the inventory filed in such court by such administrator or executor, and that he is there liable for the subject matter of such suit; Rev. Code (1871), 236, § 1189.

Missouri. Letters testamentary or of administration granted in another state have no validity in this; to maintain a suit, the executors or administrators must be appointed under the laws of this state; 1 Rev. Stat. (1879), art. vii.

Montana. The same provisions substantially as in Missouri are in force.

Nebraska. An executor or administrator duly appointed by any other state or county may sue as any other non-resident; Gen. Stat. 1873, 342, § 337; and, upon filing in the district court of any county a duly authenticated copy of his appointment, may be empowered to sell real estate. He must, however, in such case file a copy of the bond given by him in the foreign court, whereby his letters were granted; and if there be no such bond, or if the court shall judge the surety therein insufficient, must first give bond with surety for the faithful application by heirs of the purchase money; Gen. Stat. (1873), 294, 295, §§ 100–104.

New Hampshire. One who has obtained letters of administration; Adams, Rep. 193; or letters testamentary under the authority of another state, cannot maintain an action in New Hampshire by virtue of such letters; 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 41.

New Jersey. Executors having letters testamentary, and administrators letters of administration, granted in another state, cannot sue thereon in New Jersey, but must obtain such letters in that state as the law prescribes. When a will has been admitted to probate in any state or territory of the United States, or foreign nation, the surrogate of any county of this state is authorized, on application of the executor or any person interested, on filing a duly exemplified copy of the will, to appoint a time not less than thirty days and not more than six months distant, of which notice is to be given as he shall direct; and if, at such time, no sufficient reason be shown to the contrary, to admit such will to probate, and grant letters testamentary or of administration cum testamento annexo, which shall have the same effect as though the original will had been produced and proved under form. If the person to whom such letters testamentary or of administration be granted is not a resident of this state, he is required to give security for the faithful administration of the estate; Rev. Stat. (1877), 757, §§ 23, 24, and 25. If an exemplification of such foreign probate be filed in the probate court, it shall have like effect as regards real estate to a will duly admitted to probate within the state; id. § 26.

New York. An executor or administrator appointed in another state has no authority to sue in New York; 1 Johns. Ch. 153; 6 id. 353; 7 id. 45. Whenever an intestate, not being an inhabitant of this state, shall die out of the state, leaving assets in several counties, or assets shall after his death come in several counties, the surrogate of any county in which assets shall be shall have power to grant letters of administration on the estate of such intestate; but the surrogate who shall first grant letters of administration on such estate shall be deemed thereby to have acquired sole and exclusive jurisdiction over such estate, and shall be vested with the powers incidental thereto; 3 Fay's Dig. 820, § 24. When letters testamentary or of administration have been granted by a foreign state, and no such letters granted in this state, the executor or administrator so appointed shall on producing a duly certified copy of said letters be entitled to like letters in preference to all others except the public administrator in the city of New York; id. § 24.

North Carolina. It was decided by the court of conference, then the highest tribunal in North Carolina, that letters granted in Georgia were insufficient; Conf. Rep. 68. But the supreme court have since held that letters testamentary granted in South Carolina were sufficient to enable an executor to sue in North Carolina; 1 Car. Law, 471. See 1 Hayw. 355; 2 Murph. 268.

Ohio. Executors and administrators appointed under the authority of another state may, by virtue of such appointment, sue and be sued in this state, but they may be compelled at any time, by any legatee, creditor, or distributee in the state, upon an allegation that they are wasting the estate, to give bonds with security for the securing of the claims thereon; Rev. Stat. (1880), §§ 6129–6133. Upon filing a duly authenticated copy of said letters in the probate court, and of the bond originally given by them to secure the faithful application of the money in their hands, or, if there be no such bond, or the surety thereon shall seem to the said probate court insufficient, upon giving new and sufficient securities, they may be authorized to sell decedent's real estate as in the case of executors and administrators taking out letters within the state; id. § 6168; 38 Ohio Stat. p. 146; Act of March 23, 1840; Swan's Coll. 184.

Oregon. Letters testamentary, or of administration, shall not be granted to a non-resident; and when an executor or administrator shall become non-resident, the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate of the testator or intestate of such executor or administrator shall revoke his letters.

Pennsylvania. Executors and administrators could originally sue in this state by virtue of foreign letters; 1 Binn. 63. The rule is now otherwise by the Act of March 15, 1832, sec. 6. It is provided that letters testamentary or of administration, or otherwise purporting to authorize any person to intermeddle with the estate of a decedent, granted out of the commonwealth, do not in general confer on any such person any of the powers and authorities possessed by an executor or administrator under letters granted within the state. But by the act of April 14, 1835, sec. 3, this rule is declared not to apply to any public debt or loan of this commonwealth; but such public debt or loan shall pass and be transferable, and the dividends thereon accrued and to accrue be receivable, in like manner and in all respects and under the same and no other regulations, powers, and authorities as were used and practised before the passage of the abovementioned act. And the act of June 16, 1836, sec. 3, declares that the above act of March 15, 1832, sec. 6, shall not apply to shares of stock in any bank or other incorporated company within this commonwealth, but such shares of stock shall pass and be transferable, and the dividends thereon accrued and to accrue be receivable, in like manner in all respects, and under the same regulations, powers, and authorities, as were used and practised with the loans or public debt of the United States, and were used and practised with the loans or public debt of this commonwealth, before the passage of the said act of March 15, 1832, sec. 6, unless the by-laws, rules, and regulations of any such bank or corporation shall otherwise provide and declare.

Rhode Island. It does not appear to be settled whether executors and administrators appointed in another state may, by virtue of such appointment, sue in this; 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 107, 108. A foreign administrator of a person not domiciled in the state may, upon filing a copy of his letters in the probate court, filing a bond with surety to account to said court, and giving thirty days' notice of his application, obtain permission from said court to sell the personalty of decedent. But no such application is granted if any creditor of the deceased residing in the state shall, pending said application, make objection thereto in writing before said court, accompanied by an affidavit that his debt is justly due; Sandf. Stat. (1872) 382, § 33.

South Carolina. Executors and administrators of other states cannot, as such, sue in South Carolina; they must take out letters in this state; 4 Griffith, Law Reg. 848.

Tennessee. An act of 1809 (Car. & Nich. Comp. 78) was once in force, enabling foreign executors and administrators to sue in the courts, but it has been repealed.

Texas. "When a will has been admitted to probate in any of the United States or the territories thereof or of any country out of the limits of the United States, and the executor or executors named in such will have qualified, and a copy of such will and of the probate thereof has been filed and recorded in any court of this state, ... and letters of administration with such will annexed have been granted to any other person or persons than the executors therein named, upon the application of such executor or executors, or any one of them, such letters shall be revoked, and letters testamentary shall be issued to such applicant;" Paschal's Dig. (1866), art. 1276.

Utah. No statutory provisions exist, and no cases are reported upon the point.

Vermont. If the deceased person shall, at the time of his death, reside in any other state or country, leaving estate to be administered in this state, administration thereof shall be granted by the probate court of the district in which there shall be estate to administer; and the administration first legally granted shall extend to all the estate of the deceased in this state, and shall exclude the jurisdiction of the probate court of every other district; Gen. Stat. (1870) 372, 373, §§ 18, 19.

Virginia. Authenticated copies of wills, proved according to the laws of any of the United States, or of any foreign country, relative to any estate in Virginia, may be offered for probate in the general court; or, if the estate lie altogether in any one county or corporation, in the circuit, county, or corporation court of such county or corporation; 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 345. It is understood to be the settled law of Virginia, though there is no statutory provision on the subject, that no probate of a will or grant of administration in another state of the Union, or in a foreign country, and no qualification of an executor or administrator elsewhere than in Virginia, give any such executor or administrator any right to demand the effects or debts of the decedent which may happen to be within the jurisdiction of the state. There must be a regular probate or grant of administration and qualification of the executor or administrator in Virginia, according to her laws. And the doctrine prevails in the federal courts held in Virginia, as well as in the state courts; 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 348.

West Virginia. The law is the same as in Virginia.

Wisconsin. When an executor or administrator shall be appointed in any other state, or in any foreign country, on the estate of any person dying out of this state, and no executor or administrator shall be appointed in this state, the foreign executor may file an authenticated copy of his appointment in the county court of any county in which there may be property of the deceased.

Upon filing such authenticated copy of his appointment, such foreign executor or administrator may thereafter exercise full power over said estate, sue and be sued, demand and receive personalty and real estate, and obtain license from the court to sell said real estate and make conveyance thereof, in like manner as executors and administrators obtaining letters in the state may do; Rev. Stat. (1878), § 3267.

Wyoming. No statutory provisions exist, and no cases are reported upon the point.

LETTING OUT. In American Law. The act of awarding a contract.

This term is much used in the United States, and most frequently in relation to contracts to construct railroads, canals, or other mechanical works. When such an undertaking has reached the point of actual construction, a notice is generally given that proposals will be received until a certain period, and thereupon a letting out, or award of portions of the work to be performed according to the proposals, is made. See 35 Ala. N. s. 55.

LEVANDÆ NAVIS CAUSA (Lat.). In Civil Law. For the sake of lightening the ship. See Leg. Rhod. de jactu. Goods thrown overboard with this purpose of lightening the ship are subjects of a general average.

LEVANT AND COUCHANT (Lat. Levantes et cubantes). A term applied to cattle that have been so long on the ground of another that they have lain down, and are risen up to feed, until which time they cannot be distrained by the owner of the lands, if the lands were not sufficiently fenced to keep out cattle. 3 Bla. Com. 8, 9; Mozl. & W.

LEVARI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be levied). In Practice. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment.

Under this writ the sheriff was to sell the goods and collect the rents, issues, and profits of the land in question. It has been generally superseded by the remedy by elegit, which was given by statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.), c. 18. In case, however, the judgment debtor is a clerk, upon the sheriff's return that he has no lay fee, a writ in the nature of a levari facias goes to the bishop of the diocese, who thereupon sends a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens, to collect and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. Yet the same course is pursued upon a fi. fa. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 329. See 2 Tidd, Pr. 1042; Comyns, Dig. Execution (c. 4); Finch, Law, 471; 3 Bla. Com. 471.

In American Law. A writ used to sell lands mortgaged, after a judgment has been obtained by the mortgagee, or his assignee, against the mortgagor, under a peculiar proceeding authorized by statute. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3396.

LEVATO VELO (Lat.). An expression used in the Roman law, Code, 11. 4. 5, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require despatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. Emerigon, Des Assurances, c. 26, sect. 3.

LEVIR. A husband's brother. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

LEVITICAL DEGREES. Those degrees of kindred, set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus, within which persons are prohibited to marry.

LEVY. To raise. Webster, Dict. To levy a nuisance, i. e. to raise or do a nuisance, 9 Co. 55; to levy a fine, i. e. to raise or acknowledge a fine, 2 Bla. Com. 357; 1 Steph. Com. 236; to levy a tax, i. e. to raise or collect a tax; to levy war, i. e. to raise or begin war, to take arms for attack, 4 Bla. Com. 81; to levy an execution, i. e. to raise or levy so much money on execution. Reg. Orig. 298.

In Practice. A seizure; the raising of the money for which an execution has been issued.

In order to make a valid levy on personal property, the sheriff must have it within his power and control, or at least within his view; and if, having it so, he makes a levy upon it, it will be good if followed up afterwards within a reasonable time by his taking possession in such manner as to apprise everybody of the fact of its having been taken into execution. It is not necessary that an inventory should be made, nor that the sheriff should immediately remove the goods or put a person in possession; 3 Rawle, 405, 406; 1 Whart. 377; 2 S. & R. 142; 1 Wash. C. C. 29; 46 Penn. 294. A levy on a leasehold need not be in view of the premises if sufficiently descriptive; 77 Penn. 103. The usual mode of making levy upon real estate is to describe the land which has been seized under the execution, by metes and bounds, as in a deed of conveyance; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3391; 1 T. & H. Pr. § 1216.

It is a general rule that when a sufficient levy has been made the officer cannot make a second; 12 Johns. 208; 8 Cow. 192.

LEVYING WAR. In Criminal Law. The assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution; 4 Cra. 473, 474; Const. art. 3, s. 3. See TREASON; Fries Trial, Pamphl. This is a technical term, borrowed from the English law, and its meaning is the same as it is when used in stat. 25 Ed. III.; 4 Cra. 471; U. S. vs. Fries, Pamphl. 167; Hall, Am. L. J. 351; Burr's Trial; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 62–77; Alison, Cr. Law of Scotl. 606; 9 C. & P. 129. Where war has been levied, all who aid in its prosecution by performing any part in furtherance of the common object, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, are guilty of treason; 2 Abbott, 364.

LEX (Lat.). The law. A law for the government of mankind in society. Among the ancient Romans this word was frequently used as synonymous with right, jus. When put absolutely, it means the Law of the Twelve Tables.

LEX DOMICILII. See DOMICIL.

LEX FALCIDIA. See FALCIDIAN LAW.

LEX FORI (Lat. the law of the forum). The law of the country, to the tribunal of which appeal is made. 5 Cl. & F. 1.

The forms of remedies, modes of proceeding, and execution of judgments are to be regulated solely and exclusively by the laws of the place where the action is instituted; 8 Cl. & F. 121; 11 M. & W. 877; 10 B. & C. 903; 5 La. 295; 2 Rand. 303; 6 Humphr. 45; 2 Ga. 158; 13 N. H. 321; 24 Barb. 68; 4 Zabr. 333; 9 Gill, 1; 17 Penn. 91; 18 Ala. N. S. 248; 4 McLean, 540; 11 Ind. 385; 33 Miss. 423; 12 Vt. 48; 91 U. S. 406; 36 Conn. 39; 2 Woods, C. C. 244; 26 Ark. 368; 83 Ill. 365; 27

Iowa, 251; 42 Miss. 444; 26 Ark. 358; 52 N. Y. 429. See PARTIES.

The lex fori is to decide who are proper parties to a suit; 11 Ind. 485; 33 Miss. 423; Merlin, Rép. Etrang. § II.; Westlake, Priv. Int. Law, 409.

The lex fori governs as to the nature, extent, and character of the remedy; 17 Conn. 500; 37 N. H. 86; 2 Pat. & H. 144; as, in case of instruments considered sealed where made, but not in the country where sued upon; 5 Johns. 239; 1 B. & P. 360; 3 Gill & J. 234; 3 Conn. 523; 27 Iowa, 251; 91 U. S. 406; 9 Mo. 56, 157.

Arrest and imprisonment may be allowed by the lex fori, though they are not by the lex loci contractus; 2 Burr. 1089; 5 Cl. & F. 1; 1 B. & Ad. 284; 14 Johns. 346; 3 Mas. 88; 10 Wheat. 1.

For the law of interest as affected by the lex fori, see CONFLICT OF LAWS. For the law in relation to damages, see DAMAGES.

The forms of judgment and execution are to be determined by the lex fori; 3 Mass. 88; 5 id. 378; 4 Conn. 47; 14 Pet. 67.

The lex fori decides as to deprivation of remedy in that jurisdiction.

Where a debt is discharged by the law of the place of payment, such discharge will amount to a discharge everywhere; 5 East, 124; 12 Wheat. 360; 1 W. Blackst. 258; 13 Mass. 1; 16 Mart. La. 297; 7 Cush. 15; 1 Woodb. & M. 115; 23 Wend. 87; 5 Binn. 332; 16 Me. 206; 2 Blackf. 366; unless such discharge is held by courts of another jurisdiction to contravene natural justice; 13 Mass. 6; 1 South. 192. It must be a discharge from the debt, and not an exemption from the effect of particular means of enforcing the remedy; 14 Johns. 346; 8 B. & C. 479; 1 Atk. 255; 2 H. Blackst. 558; 7 Me. 337; 11 Mart. La. 730; 15 Mass. 419; 5 Mas. 387.

Under the constitution of the United States, the insolvent laws of the various states which purport to discharge the debt are, at most, allowed that effect only as against their own citizens; as between their own citizens and strangers, where the claims of the latter have not been proved, they only work a destruction in the remedy; 5 Mas. 375; 4 Conn. 47; 14 Pet. 67; 12 Wheat. 213, 358, 369; 8 Pick. 194; 3 Iowa, 299; at least, if there be no provision in the contract requiring performance in the state where the discharge is obtained; 9 Conn. 314; 13 Mass. 18, 20; 7 Johns. Ch. 297; 1 Breese, 16; 4 Gill & J. 509. In the United States and some state courts, the discharge of a citizen of the state, granting a discharge from an obligation, is not a bar against a citizen of another state, although the contract creating the obligation was to be performed in the state granting the discharge; 1 Wall. 223; 3 Keyes, 30; 5 Md. 1; 25 Conn. 603; 48 Me. 9; 2 Blackf. 394; but see 2 Gray, 43. If claims are proved, they may work a discharge; 3 Johns. Ch. 435; 26 Wend. 43; 3 Pet. 411; 2 How. 202; 5 id. 295, 299; 8 Metc. 129; 7 Cush. 45; 2 Blackf. 394. See INSOLVENCY.

Statutes of limitation affect the remedy only; and hence the lex fori will be the governing law; 6 Dow, P. C. 116; 5 Cl. & F. 1–16; 8 id. 121, 140; 11 Pick. 36; 7 Ind. 91; 2 Paine, 437; 36 Me. 362; 83 Ill. 365; 68 N. Y. 33; see 9 B. Monr. 518; 16 Ohio, 145. But these statutes restrict the remedy for citizens and strangers alike; 10 B. & C. 903; 2 Bingh. N. C. 202, 216; 5 Cl. & F. 1; 3 Johns. Ch. 190; 6 Wend. 475; 9 Mart. La. 526. For the effect of a discharge by statutes of limitation, where they are so drawn as to effect a discharge, in a foreign state, see Story, Confl. Laws, § 582; 11 Wheat. 361; 2 Bingh. N. C. 202; 6 Rob. La. 15; 3 Hen. & M. 57. The restriction applies to a suit on a foreign judgment; 5 Cl. & F. 1–21; 13 Pet. 312; 2 B. & Ad. 413; 4 Cow. 528, n. 10; 1 Gall. 371; 9 How. 407.

The right of set-off is to be determined by the lex fori; 2 N. H. 296; 6 B. Monr. 301; 83 Ill. 365; 3 Johns. 263; see 13 N. H. 126. Liens, implied hypothecations, and priorities of claim generally, are matters of remedy; 12 La. An. 289. But only, it would seem, where the property affected is within the jurisdiction of the courts of the forum; Wharton, Confl. L. §§ 317–324; 5 Cra. 289. See L. R. 3 Ch. Ap. 484. A prescriptive title to personal property acquired in a former domicil will be respected by the lex fori; 17 Ves. 88; 3 Hen. & M. 57; 5 Cra. 358; 11 Wheat. 361; 1 Coldw. 43; 5 B. Monr. 521; 16 Hun, 80.

Questions of the admissibility and effect of evidence are to be determined by the lex fori; 12 La. An. 410; 12 Barb. 631; 7 Ohio St. 134; 2 Bradf. Surr. 339. See EVIDENCE.

The lex loci is presumed to be that of the forum till the contrary is shown; 4 Iowa, 464; 40 Me. 247; 6 N. Y. 447; 13 Md. 392; 12 La. An. 673; 9 Gill, 1; 70 Penn. 252; and also the lex rei sitæ; 1 H. & J. 687. See FOREIGN LAWS; AUTHENTICATION.

LEX LOCI (Lat.). The law of the place. This may be either lex loci contractus aut actus (the law of the place of making the contract or of the thing done); lex loci rei sitæ (the law of the place where the thing is situated); lex loci domicilii (the law of the place of domicil).

In general, however, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus aut actus.

CONTRACTS. It is a general principle applying to contracts made, rights acquired, or acts done relative to personal property, that the law of the place of making the contract, or doing the act, is to govern it and determine its validity or invalidity, as well as the rights of parties under it in all matters touching the modes of execution and authentication of the form or instrument of contract; and also in relation to the use and meaning of the language in which it is expressed, the construction and interpretation of it, the legal duties and obligations imposed by it, and the legal rights and immunities acquired under it; 1 Bingh. N. C. 151, 159; 8 Cl. & F. 121; 1 Pet. 317; 2 N. H. 42; 13 id. 321; 6 Vt. 102; 2 Mass. 88, 89; 7 Cush. 30; 3 Conn. 253, 472; 14 id. 583; 22 Barb. 118; 17 Penn. 91; 2 H. & J. 193; 3 Dev. 161; 8 Mart. La. 95; 4 Ohio St. 241; 14 B. Monr. 556; 19 Mo. 84; 4 Fla. 404; 23 Miss. 42; 12 La. An. 607; 3 Stor. 465; Ware, 402; 91 U. S. 406; 24 N. J. L. 319; 36 Conn. 39; 2 Woods, C. C. 244; 65 Barb. 265; 2 Kent, 39. As to the rule permitting an election of the law under which certain contracts may be governed, see Whart. Confl. L. § 678 et seq.

This principle, though general, does not, however, apply where the parties at the time of entering into the contract had the law of another country in view, or where the lex loci is in itself unjust, contra bonos mores (against good morals), or contrary to the public law of the state, as regarding the interests of religion or morality, or the general well-being of society; Ferg. Marr. & D. 385; 2 Burr. 1077; 9 N. H. 271; 6 Pet. 172; 1 How. 169; 17 Johns. 511; 13 Mass. 23; 5 Cl. & F. 11, 13; 8 id. 121; 6 Whart. 331; 2 Metc. Mass. 8; 1 B. Monr. 32; 5 Ired. 590; 2 Kent, 458; Story, Confl. Laws, § 280; or the rights of citizens of the former; 12 Barb. 631; 13 Mass. 6. And where the place of performance is different from the locus contractus, it is presumed the parties had the law of the former in mind.

The validity or invalidity of a contract as affected by the lex loci may depend upon the capacity of the parties or the legality of the act to be done.

The capacity of the parties as affected by questions of minority or majority, incapacities incident to coverture, guardianship, emancipation, and other personal qualities or disabilities, is to be decided by the law of the place of making the contract; Story, Confl. Laws, § 103; 1 Grant, Cas. 51.

The question of disability to make a contract on account of infancy is to be decided by the lex loci; 3 Esp. 163, 597; 17 Mart. La. 597; 8 Johns. 189; 1 Grant, Cas. 51; 2 Kent, 233. So, also, as to contracts made by married women; Al. 72; 8 Johns. 189; 13 La. 177; 5 East, 31.

Personal disqualifications not arising from the law of nature, but from positive law, and especially such as are penal, are strictly territorial, and are not to be enforced in any country other than that where they originate; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 91, 92, 104, 620–625; 2 Kent, 459. See Whart. Confl. L. § 101 et seq.; 67 Barb. 9.

Natural disabilities, such as insanity, imbecility, etc., are everywhere recognized, so that the question whether they are controlled by the lex loci or lex domicilii seems to be theoretic rather than practical. On principle, there seems to be no good reason why they should come under a different rule from the positive disabilities.

The legality or illegality of the contract will be determined by the lex loci, unless it affects injuriously the public morals or rights, contravenes the policy or violates a public law of the country where a remedy is sought; 2 Kent, 458.

A contract illegal by the law of the place of its making and performance will generally be held so everywhere; 1 Gall. 375; 2 Mass. 88, 89; 2 N. H. 42; 2 Mas. 459; 13 Pet. 65, 78; 2 Johns. Cas. 355; 1 N. & M'C. 173; 2 H. & J. 193, 221, 225; 17 Ill. 328; 16 Tex. 344; 2 Burr. 1077; 2 Kent, 458; Henry, For. Law, 37, 50; Story, Confl. Laws, § 243.

An exception is said to exist in case of contracts made in violation of the revenue laws; Cas. temp. Hardw. 85; 2 C. Rob. 6; 1 Dougl. 251; 1 Cowp. 341; 2 Cr. M. & R. 311; 2 Kent, 458.

A contract legal by the lex loci will be so everywhere; 13 La. An. 117; unless—

It is injurious to public rights or morals; 3 Burr. 1568; 2 C. & P. 347; 4 B. & Ald. 650; 1 B. & P. 340; 6 Mass. 379; 2 H. & J. 193; or contravenes the policy; 2 Bingh. 314; 2 Sim. Ch. 194; 16 Johns. 438; 5 Harr. Del. 31; 1 Green, Ch. 326; 17 Ga. 253. In this connection, it is held generally that the claims of citizens are to be preferred to those of foreigners in case of a conflict of rights. Assignments, under the insolvent laws of a foreign state, are usually held inoperative as against claims of a citizen of the state, in regard to personal property in the jurisdiction of the lex fori; 1 Green, Ch. 326; 5 Harr. Del. 31; 32 Miss. 246; 13 La. An. 280; 21 Barb. 198; but see 12 Md. 54; 13 id. 392. Or violates a positive law of the lex fori. The application of the lex loci is a matter of comity; and that law must, in all cases, yield to the positive law of the place of seeking the remedy; 18 Pick. 193; 1 Green, Ch. 326; 12 Barb. 631; 17 Miss. 247. See 10 N. Y. 53.

The interpretation of contracts is to be governed by the law of the country where the contract was made; Dougl. 201, 207; 2 B. & Ad. 746; 1 B. & Ad. 284; 10 B. & C. 903; 2 Hagg. Cons. 60, 61; 8 Pet. 361; 30 Ala. N. S. 253; 4 McLean, 540; 2 Bla. Com. 141; Story, Confl. Laws, § 270.

The lex loci governs as to the formalities and authentication requisite to the valid execution of contracts; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 123, 260; 11 La. 14; 2 Hill, N. Y. 227; 37 N. H. 86; 30 Vt. 42. But in proving the existence of, and seeking remedies for, the breach, as well as in all questions relating to the competency of witnesses, course of procedure, etc., the lex fori must govern; 11 Ind. 385; 9 Gill, 1; 17 Penn. 91; 18 Ala. N. S. 248; 4 McLean, 540; 3 id. 545; 5 How. 83; 6 Humphr. 75; 17 Conn. 500; 9 Mo. 56, 157; 4 Gilm. 521; 26 Barb. 177; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 567, 634.

The lex loci governs as to the obligation and construction of contracts; 11 Pick. 32; 8 Vt. 325; 12 N. H. 520; 12 Wheat. 213;

2 Keen, 293; 1 B. & P. 138; 12 Wend. 439; 13 Mart. La. 202; 14 B. Monr. 556; 15 Miss. 798; unless, from their tenor, it must be presumed they were entered into with a view to the laws of some other state; 13 Mass. 1. This presumption arises where the place of performance is different from the place of making; 31 E. L. & Eq. 433; 17 Johns. 511; 13 Pet. 65; 9 La. An. 185; 13 Mass. 23; 91 U. S. 406; 2 Woods, 244.

A lien or privilege affecting personal estate, created by the lex loci, will generally be enforced wherever the property may be found; 8 Mart. 95; 5 La. 295; Story, Confl. Laws, § 402; but not necessarily in preference to claims arising under the lex fori, when the property is within the jurisdiction of the court of the forum; 5 Cra. 289, 298; 12 Wheat. 361; Whart. Confl. L. § 324.

A discharge from the performance of a contract under the lex loci is a discharge everywhere; 5 Mass. 509; 13 id. 1, 7; 7 Cush. 15; 4 Wheat. 122, 209; 12 id. 213; 2 Mas. 161; 2 Blackf. 394; 24 Wend. 43; 2 Kent, 394. A distinction is to be taken between discharging a contract and taking away the remedy for a breach; 3 Mas. 88; 5 id. 378; 4 Conn. 47; 12 Wheat. 347; 8 Pick. 194; 9 Conn. 314; 2 Blackf. 394; 9 N. H. 478.

As to the effect of a discharge from an obligation by a state insolvent law upon a debt due a citizen of another state, see LEX FORI.

Statutes of limitations apply to the remedy, but do not discharge the debt; 9 How. 407; 20 Pick. 310; 2 Paine, 437; 2 Mas. 751; 6 N. H. 557; 6 Vt. 127; 8 Port. (Ala.) 84. See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

A question of some difficulty often arises as to what the locus contractus is, in the case of contracts made partly in one country or state and partly in another, or made in one state or country to be performed in another, or where the contract in question is accessory to a principal contract.

Where a contract is made partly in one country and partly in another, it is a contract of the place where the assent of the parties first concurs and becomes complete; 2 Parsons, Contr. 94; 27 N. H. 217, 244; 11 Ired. 303; 3 Strobh. 27; 1 Gray, 336.

As between the place of making and the place of performance, where a place of performance is specified, the law of the place of performance governs as to obligation, interpretation, etc.; 5 East, 124; 3 Caines, 154; 1 Gall. 371; 12 Vt. 648; 12 Pet. 456; 1 How. 182; 8 Paige, Ch. 261; 5 McLean, 448; 27 Vt. 8; 14 Ark. 189; 7 B. Monr. 575; 9 Mo. 56, 157; 4 Gilm. 521; 21 Ga. 135; 30 Miss. 59; 7 Ohio, 134; 4 Mich. 450; 62 N. Y. 151; 24 Iowa, 412; 2 Kent, 459. But see 11 Tex. 54. See Whart. Confl. L. § 40.

Where the contract is to be performed generally, the law of the place of making governs; 2 B. & Ald. 301; 5 Cl. & F. 12; 1 B. & C. 16; 1 Metc. Mass. 82; 6 Cra. 221; 6 Ired. 107; 17 Miss. 220.

If the contract is to be performed partly in one state and partly in another, it will be affected by the law of both states; 91 U. S. 406; 14 B. Monr. 556; 22 Barb. 118. But see 2 Woods, 244; 24 Iowa, 412.

In cases of indorsement of negotiable paper, every indorsement is a new contract, and the place of each indorsement is its locus contractus; 2 Kent, 460; 17 Johns. 511; 9 B. & C. 208; 13 Mass. 1; 25 Ala. N. S. 139; 19 N. Y. 486; 17 Tex. 102.

The place of payment is the locus contractus, however, as between indorsee and drawer. See 19 N. Y. 436.

The place of acceptance of a draft is regarded as the locus contractus; 3 Gill, 430; 1 Q. B. 43; 4 Pet. 111; 8 Metc. 107; 4 Dev. 124; 6 McLean, 622; 9 Cush. 46; 13 N. Y. 290; 18 Conn. 138; 17 Miss. 220. See PROMISSORY NOTES; BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

The lex loci is presumed to be the same as that of the forum, unless shown to be otherwise; 46 Me. 247; 13 La. An. 673; 1 Sm. & M. 176; 70 Penn. 252; 13 Md. 392; 9 Gill, 1; 4 Iowa, 464. But see 1 Iowa, 388.

TORTS. Damages for the commission of a tortious act are to be measured by the law of the place where the act is done; 1 P. Wms. 395; 1 Pet. C. C. 225; Story, Confl. Laws, § 307.

An action for a tort committed in a foreign country will lie only when it is based upon an act which will be considered as tortious both in the place where committed and in the locus fori; in such case the law of the place where the tort was committed governs; L. R. 1 P. D. 107; id. 6 Q. B. 1; id. 2 P. C. 193. See 1 H. & C. 219; Whart. Confl. L. § 478; 54 Barb. 31.

MARRIAGE. As to the conflict of laws in relation to marriage, see MARRIAGE.

As to divorce, see DIVORCE; DOMICIL.

The law of all acts relating to real property is governed by the lex rei sitæ. Taking a mortgage as security does not, however, divest the lex loci of its force. See LEX REI SITÆ.

For lex domicilii, see DOMICIL.

LEX LONGOBARDORUM (Lat.). The name of an ancient code in force among the Lombards. It contains many evident traces of feudal policy. It survived the destruction of the ancient government of Lombardy by Charlemagne, and is said to be still partially in force in some districts of Italy.

LEX MERCATORIA (Lat.). That system of laws which, is adopted by all commercial nations, and which, therefore, constitutes a part of the law of the land. See LAW MERCHANT.

LEX REI SITÆ (Lat.). The law of the place of situation of the thing.

It is the universal rule of the common law that any title or interest in land, or in other real estate, can only be acquired or lost agreeably to the law of the place where the same is situate; 6 Pick. 286; 1 Paige, Ch. 220; 2 Ohio, 124; 1 H. Blackst. 665; 2 Rose, 29; 2 Ves. & B. 130; 5 B. & C. 438; 6 Madd. Ch. 16; 7 Cra. 115; 10 Wheat. 192, 465; 4 Cow. N. Y. 510, 527; 1 Gill, 280; 6 Binn. 559; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 365, 428; and the law is the same in this respect in regard to all methods whatever of transfer, and every restraint upon alienation; 12 E. L. & Eq. 206.

The lex rei sitæ governs as to the capacity of the parties to any transfer, whether testamentary or inter vivos, as affected by questions of minority or majority; 17 Mart. 569; of rights arising from the relation of husband and wife; Story, Confl. Laws, § 454; 9 Bligh, 127; 8 Paige, Ch. 261; 2 Md. 297; 1 Miss. 281; 4 Iowa, 381; 3 Strobh. 562; 9 Rich. Eq. 475; parent and child, or guardian and ward; 2 Ves. & B. 127; 1 Johns. Ch. 153; 4 Gill & J. 332; 9 Rich. Eq. 311; 14 B. Monr. 544; 11 Ala. N. s. 343; 18 Miss. 529; but see 7 Paige, Ch. 236; and of the rights and powers of executors and administrators, whether the property be real or personal; 2 Hamm. 124; 8 Cl. & F. 112; 4 M. & W. 71, 192; 2 Sim. & S. 284; 3 Cra. 319; 5 Pet. 518; 15 id. 1; 12 Wheat. 169; 2 N. H. 291; 4 Rand. 158; 2 Gill & J. 493; 5 Me. 261; 5 Pick. 65; 20 Johns. 229; 3 Day, 74; 1 Humph. 54; 7 Ind. 211; 10 Rich. 393; see EXECUTORS; of heirs; 5 B. & C. 451, 452; 6 Bligh, 479, n.; 9 Cra. 151; 9 Wheat. 566, 570; 10 id. 192; and of devisee or devisor; Story, Confl. Laws, § 474; 14 Ves. 337; 9 Cra. 151; 10 Wheat. 192; 37 N. H. 114.

So as to the forms and solemnities of the transfer, the lex rei sitæ must be complied with, whether it be a transfer by devise; 2 Dowl. & C. 349; 2 P. Wms. 291, 293; 14 Ves. 537; 7 Cra. 115; 10 Wheat. 192; 4 Johns. Ch. 260; 2 Ohio, 124; 37 N. H. 114; 5 R. I. 112, 413; 2 Jones, No. C. 368; see 4 McLean, 75; or by conveyance inter vivos; 9 Bligh, 127, 128; 2 Dowl. & C. 349; 1 Pick. 81; 1 Paige, Ch. 220; 11 Wheat. 465; 11 Tex. 755; 18 Penn. 170; 12 E. L. & Eq. 206. So as to the amount of property or extent of interest which may be acquired, held, or transferred; 3 Russ. Ch. 328; 2 Dow. & C. 393; and the question of what is real property; 1 W. Blackst. 234; 2 Burr. 1079; 6 Paige, Ch. 630; 3 Deac. & C. 704; 2 Salk. 666. And, generally, the lex rei sitæ governs as to the validity of any such transfer; 4 Sandf. 352; 23 Miss. 42; 11 Mo. 314; 2 Brudf. Surr. 339. As to the disposition of the proceeds, see 12 E. L. & Eq. 206. As to the interpretation and construction of wills, see DOMICIL.

The rules here given do not apply to personal contracts indirectly affecting real estate; 1 Halst. Ch. 631; Story, Confl. Laws, § 351, d.

A contract for the conveyance of lands valid by the lex fori will be enforced in equity by a decree in personam for a conveyance valid under the lex rei sitæ; 1 Ves. 144; 2 Paige, Ch. 606; Wythe, 135; 6 Cra. 148.

An executory foreign contract for the conveyance of lands not repugnant to the lex rei sitæ will be enforced in the courts of the latter country by personal process; 8 Paige, Ch. 201; 23 E. L. & Eq. 288; 4 Bosw. 266.

LEX TALIONIS (Lat.). The law of retaliation: an example of which is given in the law of Moses, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, etc.

Amicable retaliation includes those act of retaliation which correspond to the acts of the other nation under similar circumstances.

Jurists and writers on international law are divided as to the right of one nation punishing with death, by way of retaliation, the citizens or subjects of another nation. In the United States no example of such barbarity has ever been witnessed; but prisoners have been kept in close confinement in retaliation for the same conduct towards American prisoners. See Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 9; Marten, Law of Nat. b. 8, c. 1, s. 3, note; 1 Kent, 93; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 4, c. 1, § 1.

Vindictive retaliation includes those acts which amount to a war.

LEX TERRÆ (Lat.). The law of the land. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

LEY (Old French; a corruption of loi). Law. For example, Termes de la Ley, Terms of the Law. In another, and an old technical, sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators; as, il tend sa ley aiu pleyntiffe. Britton, c. 27.

LEY GAGER. Wager of law. An offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators (q. v.), which oath used to be allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law," "fesans de ley." Termes de la Leye, Ley; 2 B. & C. 538; 3 B. & P. 297; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 16.

LEYES DE ESTILLO. In Spanish Law. Laws of the age. A book of explanations of the Fuero Real, to the number of two hundred and fifty-two, formed under the authority of Alonzo X. and his son Sancho, and of Fernando el Emplazado, and published at the end of the thirteenth century or beginning of the fourteenth, and some of them are inserted in the New Recopilacion. See 1 New Recop. p. 354.

LIABILITY. Responsibility; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. This liability may arise from contracts either express or implied, or in consequence of torts committed.

LIBEL (Lat. liber). In Practice. The plaintiff's written statement of his cause of action and of the relief which he seeks, made and exhibited in a judicial process, with some solemnity of law.

A written statement by a plaintiff of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks to obtain in a suit; Law, Eccl. Law, 17; Ayliffe, Par. 346; Shelf. Marr. & D. 506; Dunl. Adm. Pract. 111. It performs substantially the same office in the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, as the bill in chancery does in equity proceedings and the declaration in common-law practice.

The libel should be a narrative, specific, clear, direct, certain, not general nor alternative; 3 Law, Eccl. Law, 147; Dunl. Adm. Pract. 113. It should contain, substantially, the following requisites: (1) the name, description, and addition of the plaintiff, who makes his demand by bringing his action; (2) the name, description, and addition of the defendant; (3) the name of the judge, with a respectful designation of his office and court; (4) the thing or relief, general or special, which is demanded in the suit; (5) the grounds upon which the suit is founded.

The form of a libel is either simple or articulate. The simple form is when the cause of action is stated in a continuous narration, when the cause of action can be briefly set forth. The articulate form is when the cause of action is stated in distinct allegations or articles; 3 Law, Eccl. Law, 148; Hall, Adm. Pr. 123; 7 Cra. 394. The material facts should be stated in distinct articles in the libel, with as much exactness and attention to times and circumstances as in a declaration at common law; 4 Mas. 541.

Although there is no fixed formula for libels, and the courts will receive such an instrument from the party in such form as his own skill or that of his counsel may enable him to give it, yet long usage has sanctioned forms, which it may be most prudent to adopt. The parts and arrangement of libels commonly employed are:

First, the address to the court: as, To the Honorable William Butler, Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

Second, the names and descriptions of the parties. Persons competent to sue at common law may be parties libellants. The same regulations obtain in the admiralty courts and the common-law courts respecting those disqualified from suing in their own right or name. Married women prosecute by their husbands, or by prochein ami, when the husband has an adverse interest to hers; minors, by guardians, tutors, or prochein ami; lunatics and persons non compos mentis, by tutor, guardian ad litem, or committee; the rights of deceased persons are prosecuted by executors or administrators; and corporations are represented and proceeded against as at common law.

Third, the averments or allegations setting forth the cause of action. These should be conformable to the truth, and so framed as to correspond with the evidence. Every fact requisite to establish the libellant's right should be clearly stated, so that it may be directly met by the opposing party by admission, denial, or avoidance: this is the more necessary, because no proof can be given, or decree rendered, not covered by and conformable to the allegations; 1 Law, Eccl. Law, 150; Hall, Pr. 126; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 113; 7 Cra. 394. But the requirements upon these points are not so strict as in cases of declarations at common law; 7 Cra. 389; 9 Wheat. 386, 401. In no case is it necessary to assert anything which amounts to matters of defence to the claimant; 2 Gall. 485.

Fourth, the conclusion, or prayer for relief and process: the prayer should be for the specific relief desired; for general relief, as is usual in bills in chancery; the conclusion should also pray for general or particular process; 3 Law, Eccl. Law, 149; 3 Mas. 503.

Interrogatories are sometimes annexed to the libel: when this is the case, there is usually a special prayer, that the defendant may be required to answer the libel, and the interrogatories annexed and propounded. This, however, is a dangerous practice, because it renders the answers of the defendant evidence, which must be disproved by two witnesses, or by one witness corroborated by very strong circumstances.

The libel is the first proceeding in a suit in admiralty in the courts of the United States; 3 Mas. 504.

No mesne process can issue in the United States admiralty courts until a libel is filed; 1st Rule in admiralty of the U. S. supreme court. The twenty-second and twenty-third rules require certain statements to be contained in the libel; and to those, and the forms in 2 Conkling, Adm. Pract., the reader is referred. And see Parsons, Marit. Law; Dunl. Adm. Pr.; Hall, Adm. Pr.

In Torts. That which is written or printed, and published, calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt. Parke, J., 15 M. & W. 344.

Every thing, written or printed, which reflects on the character of another and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been; 15 M. & W. 435.

A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Bac. Abr. tit. Libel; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, § 1; 4 Mass. 168; 2 Pick. 115; 9 Johns. 214; 1 Denio, 347; 9 B. & C. 172; 4 M. & R. 127; 2 Kent, 13.

It has been defined, perhaps with more precision, to be a censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals. 3 Johns. Cas. 354; 9 Johns. 215; 5 Binn. 340; 68 Me. 295.

There is a great and well-settled distinction between verbal slander and written, printed, or pictured libel; and this not only in reference to the consequences, as subjecting the party to an indictment, but also as to the character of the accusations or imputations essential to sustain a civil action to recover damages. To write and publish maliciously any thing of another which either makes him ridiculous or holds him out as a dishonest man, is held to be actionable, or punishable criminally, when the speaking of the same words would not be so; 1 Saund. 6th ed. 247 a; 4 Taunt. 355; 5 Binn. 219; Heard, Lib. & S. § 74; 6 Cush. 71; 19 Johns. 349; 6 Vt. 489.

The reduction of the slanderous matter to writing or printing is the most usual mode of conveying it. The exhibition of a libellous picture is equally criminal; 2 Campb. 512; 5 Co. 125 b; 2 S. & R. 91. Fixing a gallows at a man's door, burning him in effigy, or exhibiting him in any ignominious manner, is a libel; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 2; 11 East, 226. So a libel may be published by speaking or singing it in the presence of others; 7 Ad. & E. 233.

There is, perhaps, no branch of the law which is so difficult to reduce to exact principles, or to compress within a small compass, as the requisites of a libel.

In the following cases the publications have been held to be actionable. It is a libel to write of a person soliciting relief from a charitable society, that she prefers unworthy claims, which it is hoped the members will reject forever, and that she has squandered away money, already obtained by her from the benevolent, in printing circulars abusive of the secretary of the society; 12 Q. B. 624. It is libellous to publish of the plaintiff that, although he was aware of the death of a person occasioned by his improperly driving a carriage, he had attended a public ball in the evening of the same day; 1 Chitt. Bail, 480. It is a libel to publish of a Protestant archbishop that he endeavors to convert Roman Catholic priests by promises of money and preferment; 5 Bingh. 17. It is a libel to publish a ludicrous story of an individual in a newspaper, if it tend to render him the subject of public ridicule, although he had previously told the same story of himself; 6 Bingh. 409. It is a libel to publish of a candidate for congress that he is a "pettifogging shyster;" 40 Mich. 241;—or to write and publish of any man that he is "thought no more of than a horse thief and a counterfeiter;" 10 Mo. 648;—or to publish of a member of congress, "He is a fawning sycophant, a misrepresentative in congress, and a grovelling office seeker;" 9 Johns. 214. See 3 Cr. 8; 42 Vt. 252; 17 Gratt. 250; 47 Cal. 207; 105 Mass. 394.

A declaration which alleges that the defendant charged the plaintiff, an attorney, with being guilty of "sharp practice," which is averred to mean disreputable practice, charges a libellous imputation; 4 M. & W. 446.

Any publication which has a tendency to disturb the public peace, or good order of society, is indictable as a libel. "This crime is committed," says Professor Greenleaf, "by the publication of writings blaspheming the Supreme Being, or turning the doctrines of the Christian religion into contempt and ridicule; or tending, by their immodesty, to corrupt the mind, and to destroy the love of decency, morality, and good order; or wantonly to defame or indecorously to calumniate the economy, order, and constitution of things which make up the general system of the law and government of the country; to degrade the administration of government, or of justice; or to cause animosities between our own and any foreign government, by personal abuse of its sovereign, its ambassadors, or other public ministers; and by malicious defamations, expressed in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is living, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. This descriptive catalogue embraces all the several species of this offence which are indictable at common law; all of which, it is believed, are indictable in the United States, either at common law, or by virtue of particular statutes." 3 Greenl. Ev. § 164. See 4 Mass. 163; 9 Johns. 214; 4 M'Cord, 317; 4 Mas. 115; 34 Me. 223; 3 How. 266.

Libels against the memory of the dead, which have a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relatives of the deceased to avenge the insult of the family, render their authors liable to indictment. The malicious intention of the defendant to injure the family and posterity of the deceased must be expressly averred and clearly proved; 5 Co. 125; 4 Term, 126, 129, note; 5 Binn. 281; Heard, Lib. & S. §§ 72, 348.

If the matter is understood as scandalous, and is calculated to excite ridicule or abhorrence against the party intended, it is libellous and indictable as such, however it may be expressed; 13 Metc. Mass. 68; 9 N. H. 34; 7 Conn. 266; 10 S. & R. 173; 32 Me. 530; 1 Denio, 41.

Evidence of publication in order to sustain an indictment upon a libel must be to the same effect as in case of a civil action brought thereon. The publication of the libel in order to warrant either civil action or indictment must be malicious; evidence of the malice may be either express or implied. Express proof is not necessary; for where a man publishes a writing which on the face of it is libellous, the law presumes he does so from that malicious intention which constitutes the offence, and it is unnecessary, on the part of the prosecution, to prove any circumstance from which malice may be inferred; 4 B. & C. 247; 6 Dowl. & R. 296; 18 Md. 177; 3 How. 266; 12 Conn. 262; 16 Mich. 447. But in all cases of libels published confidentially, and other privileged communications, express malice must be shown or inferred from circumstances, and this is always a question for a jury; 8 B. & C. 578; 3 N. & M. 116; 4 Tyrw. 583; 30 Me. 466; 3 Pick. 379; 1 Hawks, 472; 87 Penn. 385; 3 Metc. Mass. 193. But no allegation, however false and malicious, contained in answers to interrogatories in affidavits duly made, or any other proceedings in courts of justice, or petitions to the legislature, are indictable; 4 Co. 14 b; 2 Burr. 807; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 8; 1 Saund. 131, n. 1; 1 Lev. 240; 2 Chitty, Cr. L. 869; 2 S. & R. 23. It is no defence that the matter published is part of a document printed by order of the house of commons: 9 Ad. & E. 1. See JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS; and generally, 2 Bishop, Cr. Law; Heard, Lib. & S.

In civil actions for libel it has always been held competent for the defendant to justify by pleading the truth in evidence; Heard, Lib. & S. 186; 1 R. I. 263; 6 La. An. 254; 5 Sandf. 54; 4 Sneed, 520.

In prosecutions, however, he may not do so; 11 Mod. 99; because, if the publication is malicious, it is equally to the public interest to punish the publisher of it, whether it was true or not.

The question as to the respective provinces of court and jury in trials of indictments for libel has given rise to one of the most interesting of legal controversies. Lord Mansfield, in 5 Burr. 2661, and in 20 How. St. Tr. 892, and Mr. Justice Buller, in the Dean of St. Asaph's case, 21 How. St. Tr. 847–1046, charged the jury that the only questions for them were whether the defendants had printed and published the paper in question, and whether the innuendoes therein were truly intended as avowed in the indictment, and that it was for the court alone to say whether the paper was a libel or not. This was stoutly denied to be the true state of the law, and accordingly an act known as "Fox's Libel Act" was passed in 1792, declaring that the jury may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty in all such cases upon the whole matter put at issue, and shall not be required to find defendant guilty on mere proof of publication, and of the sense ascribed to the same in the indictment.

This statute is now generally conceded to be declaratory of the common law. The judge should instruct the jury as to what a libel is, and then leave it to them to say whether the facts necessary to constitute the offence have been proved to their satisfaction; 63 Penn. 253; 1 Minn. 156; 18 Penn. 489; 28 Vt. 14; 2 Camp. 478; 13 Metc. 120; 29 Me. 323; 21 How. St. Tr. 922. See generally Wharton, Bishop, Crim. Law; Starkie, Heard, Townsend, Odger, Lib. & Sl.

LIBEL OF ACCUSATION. In Scotch Law. The instrument which contains the charge against a person accused of a crime. Libels are of two kinds, namely, indictments and criminal letters.

Every libel assumes the form of what is termed, in logic, a syllogism. It is first stated that some particular kind of act is criminal, as that "theft is a crime of a heinous nature, and severely punishable." This proposition is termed the major. It is next stated that the person accused is guilty of the crime so named, "actor, or art and part." This, with the narrative of the manner in which, and the time when, the offence was committed, is called the minor proposition of the libel. The conclusion is that, all or part of the facts being proved, or admitted by confession, the panel "ought to be punished with the pains of the law, to deter others from committing the like crime in all time coming." Burton, Man. Pub. L. 300, 301.

LIBELLANT. The party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions in the common-law courts.

LIBELLEE. A party against whom a libel has been filed in proceedings in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in a common-law suit.

LIBELLUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A little book. Libellus supplex, a petition, especially to the emperor; all petitions to whom must be in writing. L. 15, D. in jus voc. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. L. 2, § 2, Dig. de jur. fisc. Libellum agere, to assist or counsel the emperor in regard to such petitions, L. 12, D. de distr. pign.; and one whose duty it is to do so is called magister libellorum. There were also promagistri. L. 1, D. de offic. præf. pract. Libellus accusatorius, an information and accusation of a crime. L. 17, § 1, & L. 29, § 8, D. ad leg. Jul. de adult. Libellus divortii, a writing of divorcement. L. 7, D. de divort. et repud. Libellus rerum, an inventory. Calv. Lex. Libellus or oratio consultoria, a message by which emperors laid matters before the senate. Calvinus, Lex.; Suet. Cæs. 56.

A writing in which are contained the names of the plaintiff (actor) and defendant (reus), the thing sought, the right relied upon, and name of the tribunal before which the action is brought. Calvinus, Lex.

In English Law (sometimes called libellus conventionalis). A bill. Bracton, fol. 112.

LIBELLUS FAMOSUS (Lat.). A libel; a defamatory writing. L. 15, D. de pœn.; Vocab. Jur. Utr. sub "famosus." It may be without writing: as, by signs, pictures, etc. 5 Rep. de famosis libellis.

LIBER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A book, whatever the material of which it is made; a principal subdivision of a literary work: thus, the Pandects, or Digest of the Civil Law, is divided into fifty books. L. 52, D. de legat.

In Civil and Old English Law. Free: e. g. a free (liber) bull. Jacobs. Exempt from service or jurisdiction of another, Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.: e. g. a free (liber) man. L. 3, D. de statu hominum.

LIBER ASSISARUM (Lat.) The book of assigns or pleas of the crown; being the fifth part of the Year-Books.

LIBER FEUDORUM (Lat.). A code of the feudal law, which was compiled by direction of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published in Milan, in 1170. It was called the Liber Feudorum, and was divided into five books, of which the first, second, and some fragments of the others still exist, and are printed at the end of all the modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis. Giannone, b. 13, c. 3; Cruise, Dig. prel. diss. c. 1, § 31.

LIBER HOMO (Lat.). A free man; a freeman lawfully competent to act as juror. Ld. Raym. 417; Kebl. 563.

In London, a man can be a liber homo either—1, by service, as having served his apprenticeship; or, 2, by birthright, being a son of a liber homo; or, 3, by redemption, i. e. allowance of mayor and aldermen. 8 Rep., Case of City of London. There was no intermediate state between villein and liber homo. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, § 22. But a liber homo could be vassal of another. Bract. fol. 25.

In Old European Law. An allodial proprietor, as opposed to a feudatory. Calvinus, Lex, Alode.

LIBER JUDICIARUM (Lat.). The book of judgment, or doom-book. The Saxon Domboc. Conjectured to be a book of statutes of ancient Saxon kings. See Jacob, Domboc; 1 Bla. Com. 64.

LIBER ET LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.). A free and lawful man. One worthy of being a juryman; he must neither be infamous nor a bondman. 3 Bla. Com. 340, 362; Bract. fol. 14 b; Fleta, l. 6, c. 25, § 4; l. 4, c. 5, § 4.

LIBERATE (Lat.). In English Practice. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent and in the sheriff's return thereto. See Comyns, Dig. Statute Staple (D 6).

LIBERATION. In Civil Law. The extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 749. Synonymous with payment. Dig. 50. 16. 47.

LIBERTI, LIBERTINI. In Roman Law. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 99.

There is some distinction between these words. By libertus was understood the freedman when considered in relation to his patron, who had bestowed liberty upon him; and he was called libertinus when considered in relation to the state he occupied in society subsequent to his manumission. Lec. El. Dr. Rom. § 93.

LIBERTY (Lat. liber, free; libertas, freedom, liberty). Freedom from restraint. The faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without.

A privilege held by grant or prescription, by which some men enjoy greater privileges than ordinary subjects.

The place within which certain privileges or immunities are enjoyed, or jurisdiction is exercised, as the liberties of a city. See FAUBOURG.

Civil liberty is the greatest amount of absolute liberty which can in the nature of things be equally possessed by every citizen in a state.

The term is frequently used to denote the amount of absolute liberty which is actually enjoyed by the various citizens under the government and laws of the state as administered. 1 Bla. Com. 125.

The fullest political liberty furnishes the best possible guarantee for civil liberty.

Lieber defines civil liberty as guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection, including Blackstone's divisions of civil and political under this head.

Natural liberty is the right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consistent with their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. Burlam. c. 3, § 15; 1 Bla. Com. 125. It is called by Lieber social liberty, and is defined as the protection or unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of.

Personal liberty consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, of removing one's person to whatever place one's inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint unless by due course of law. 1 Bla. Com. 134.

Political liberty is an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws. Lieber, Civ. Lib.

Liberty, in its widest sense, means the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed without influence from without. It means self-determination, unrestrainedness of action. Thus defined, one being only can be absolutely free,—namely, God. So soon as we apply the word liberty to spheres of human action, the term receives a relative meaning, because the power of man is limited; he is subject to constant influences from without. If the idea of unrestrainedness of action is applied to the social state of man, it receives a limitation still greater, since the equal claims of unrestrained action of all necessarily involves the idea of protection against interference by others. We thus come to the definition, that liberty of social man consists in the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of, or in the most efficient protection of his rights, claims, interests, as man or citizen, or of his humanity, manifested as a social being. (See RIGHT.) The word liberty, applied to men in their political state, may be viewed with reference to the state as a whole, and in this case means the independence of the state, of other states (see AUTONOMY); or it may have reference to the relation of the citizen to the government, in which case it is called political or civil liberty; or it may have reference to the status of a man as a political being, contradistinguished from him who is not considered master over his own body, will, or labor—the slave. This is called personal liberty, which, as a matter of course, includes freedom from prison.

Lieber, in his work on Civil Liberty, calls that system which was evolved in England, and forms the basis of liberty in the countries settled by English people, Anglican liberty. The principal guarantees, according to him, are:—

1. National independence. There must be no foreign interference. The country must have the right and power of establishing the government it thinks best.

2. Individual liberty, and, as belonging to it, personal liberty, or the great habeas corpus principle, and the prohibition of general warrants of arrest. The right of bail belongs also to this head.

3. A well-secured penal trial, of which the most important is trial for high treason.

4. The freedom of communion, locomotion, and emigration.

5. Liberty of conscience. The United States constitution and the constitutions of all the states have provisions prohibiting any interference in matters of religion.

6. Protection of individual property, which requires unrestrained action in producing and exchanging, the prohibition of unfair monopolies, commercial freedom, and the guarantee that no property shall be taken except in the course of law, the principle that taxation shall only be with the consent of the tax-payer, and shall be levied for short periods only, and the exclusion of confiscation.

7. Supremacy of the law. The law must not, however, violate any superior law or civil principle, nor must it be an ex post facto law. The executive must not possess the power of declaring martial law, which is merely a suspension of all law. In extreme cases, parliament in England and congress in the United States can pass an act suspending the privilege of habeas corpus.

8. Every officer must be responsible to the person affected for the legality of his act; and no act must be done for which some one is not responsible.

9. It has been deemed necessary in the Bill of Rights and the American constitution specially to refer to the quartering of soldiers as a dangerous weapon in the hands of the executive.

10. The military forces must be strictly submitted to the law, and the citizen should have the right to bear arms.

11. The right of petitioning, and the right of meeting and considering public matters, and of organizing into associations for any lawful purposes, are important guarantees of civil liberty.

The following guarantees relate more especially to the government of a free country and the character of its polity:—

12. Publicity of public business in all its branches, whether legislative, judicial, written, or oral.

13. The supremacy of the law, or the protection against the absolutism of one, of several, or of the majority, requires other guarantees. It is necessary that the public funds be under close and efficient popular control; they should therefore be chiefly in the hands of the popular branch of the legislature, never of the executive. Appropriations should also be for distinct purposes and short times.

14. It is further necessary that the power of making war reside with the people, and not with the executive. A declaration of war in the United States is an act of Congress.

15. The supremacy of the law requires, also, not only the protection of the minority, but the protection of the majority against the rule of a factious minority or cabal.

16. The majority, and through it the people, are protected by the principle that the administration is founded on party principles.

17. A very important guarantee of liberty is the division of government into three distinct functions,—legislative, administrative, and judicial. The union of these is absolutism or despotism on the one hand, and slavery on the other.

18. As a general rule, the principle prevails in Anglican liberty that the executive may do what is positively allowed by fundamental or other law, and not all that which is not prohibited.

19. The supremacy of the law requires that, where enacted constitutions form the fundamental law, there be some authority which can pronounce whether the legislature itself has or has not transgressed it. This power must be vested in courts of law.

20. There is no guarantee of liberty more important and more peculiarly Anglican than the representative government. See Lieber, Civ. Lib. p. 168.

In connection with this, a very important question is, whether there should be direct elections by the people, or whether there should be double elections. The Anglican principle favors simple elections; and double elections have often been resorted to as the very means of avoiding the object of a representative government.

The management of the elections should also be in the hands of the voters, and government especially should not be allowed to interfere.

Representative bodies must be free. They must be freely chosen, and, when chosen, act under no threat or violence of the executive or any portion of the people. They must be protected as representative bodies; and a wise parliamentary law and usage should secure the rights of each member and the elaboration of the law.

A peculiar protection is afforded to members of the legislature in England and the United States by their freedom from arrest, except for certain specified crimes.

Every member must possess the right to propose any measure or resolution.

Not only must the legislature be the judge of the right each member has to his seat, but the whole internal management belongs to itself. It is indispensable that it possess the power and privileges to protect its own dignity.

The principle of two houses, or the bicameral system, is an equally efficient guarantee of liberty, by excluding impassioned legislation and embodying in the law the collective mind of the legislature.

21. The independence of the law, of which the independence of the judiciary forms a part, is one of the main stays of civil liberty. It requires "a living common law, a clear division of the judiciary from other powers, the public accusatorial process, the independence of the judge, the trial by jury, and an independent position of the advocate." See Lieber, Civil Liberty and Self-Government, 208–250.

23. Another constituent of our liberty is local and institutional self-government. It arises out of a willingness of the people to attend to their own affairs, and an unwillingness to permit of the interference of the executive and administration with them beyond what it necessarily must do, or which cannot or ought not to be done by self-action. A pervading self-government, in the Anglican sense, is organic; it consists in organs of combined self-action, in institutions, and in a systematic connection of these institutions. It is, therefore, equally opposed to a disintegration of society and to despotism.

American liberty belongs to the great division of Anglican liberty, and is founded upon the checks, guarantees, and self-government of the Anglican race. The following features are, however, peculiar to American liberty: republican federalism, strict separation of the state from the church, greater equality and acknowledgment of abstract rights in the citizen, and a more popular or democratic cast of the whole polity. With reference to the last two may be added these further characteristics:—

We have everywhere established voting by ballot. The executive has never possessed the power of dissolving or proroguing the legislature. The list of states has not been closed. We admit foreigners to the rights of citizenship, and we do not believe in inalienable allegiance.

There is no attainder of blood. We allow no ex post facto laws. American liberty possesses, also, as a characteristic, the enacted constitution,—distinguishing it from the English polity, with its accumulative constitution. Our legislatures are, therefore, not omnipotent, as the British Parliament theoretically is; but the laws enacted by them may be declared by the courts to conflict with the constitution.

The liberty sought for by the French, as a peculiar system, was founded chiefly, in theory, on the idea of equality and the abstract rights of man. (Rousseau's Social Contract.)

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends. 3 Johns. Cas. 394. The right freely to publish whatever the citizen may please, and to be protected against any responsibility for so doing, except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offence; or as by their falsehood and malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals; Cooley, Const. Lim. c. xii. It is said to consist in this, "that neither courts of justice, nor any judges whatever, are authorized to take notice of writings intended for the press, but are confined to those which are actually printed." De Lolme, Const. 254.

At the common law, the liberty of the press was neither well protected nor well defined, and not until after many struggles was it so far recognized in England as to permit the publication of current news without the permission of government censors. This right is now, however, completely established, and comments on public legislation are not actionable so long as made in a fair spirit and justified by the circumstances; L. R. 4 Q. B. 73; May, Const. Hist. c. 7, 9, 10.

This right is secured by the constitution of the United States; Amendments, art. 1; and a provision of similar import has been embodied in each of the state constitutions; a constitutional principle is thereby established which forms a shield of protection to the free expression of opinion in every part of the United States. The abuse of the right is punished criminally by indictment, civilly by action for damages. See Cooper, Libel; Heard, Lib. & S.; LIBEL.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH. The right to speak facts and express opinions. Whart. Dict.

It is provided by the constitution of the United States that members of congress shall not be called to account for any thing said in debate; and similar provisions are contained in the constitutions of the several states in relation to the members of their respective legislatures. The right, however, does not extend beyond the mere speaking; for if a member of congress were to reduce his speech to writing and cause it to be printed, it would no longer bear a privileged character, and he might be held responsible for a libel, as any other individual. See Bacon, Abr. Libel; DEBATE.

The greatest latitude is allowed by the common law to counsel: in the discharge of his professional duty, he may use strong epithets, however derogatory to other persons they may be, if pertinent to the cause, and stated in his instructions, whether the thing were true or false. But if he were maliciously to travel out of his case for the purpose of slandering another, he would be liable to an action, and amenable to a just, and often more efficacious, punishment, inflicted by public opinion; 3 Chitty, Pr. 887. No respectable counsel will indulge himself with unjust severity; and it is doubtless the duty of the court to prevent any such abuse.

No action will lie against a witness at the suit of a party aggrieved by his false testimony, even though malice be charged; 50 N. Y. 309. The remedy against a dishonest witness is confined to the criminal prosecution for perjury; but false accusations, contained in affidavits or other proceedings by which a prosecution is commenced for supposed crime, render the party liable to action, if actual malice be averred and proven; 47 Cal. 624; Cooley, Const. Lim. 522.

LIBERUM MARITAGIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. Frank-marriage (q. v.). 2 Bla. Com. 115; Littleton, § 17; Bract. fol. 21.

LIBERUM SERVITIUM. Free service. Service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called servitium liberum armorum. Somner, Gavelk. p. 56; Jacob, Law Dict.; 4 Co. 9.

Service not unbecoming the character of a freeman and a soldier to perform: as, to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bla. Com. 60. The tenure of free service does not make a villein a free man, unless homage or manumission precede, any more than a tenure by villein services makes a freeman a villein. Bract. fol. 24.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM. In Real Law. Freehold. Frank-tenement. 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1690; 1 Washb. R. P. 46.

In Pleading. A plea in justification by the defendant in an action of trespass, by which he claims that he is the owner of the close described in the declaration, or that it is the freehold of some third person by whose command he entered. 2 Salk. 453; 7 Term, 355; 1 Wms. Saund. 299 b, note.

It has the effect of compelling the plaintiff to a new assignment, setting out the abuttals where he has the locus in quo only generally in his declaration; 11 East, 51, 72; 16 id. 343; 1 B. & C. 489; or to set forth tenancy in case he claims as tenant of the defendant, or the person ordering the trespass; 1 Saund. 299 b. It admits possession by the plaintiff, and the fact of the commission of a trespass as charged; 2 M'Cord, 226; see Greenl. Ev. § 626.

LICENCIADO. In Spanish Law. Lawyer or advocate. By a decree of the Spanish government of 6th November, 1843, it was declared that all persons who have obtained diplomas of "Licentiates in Jurisprudence" from any of the literary universities of Spain are entitled to practise in all the courts of Spain without first obtaining permission by the tribunals of justice.

Their title is furnished them by the minister of the interior, to whom the universities forward a list of those whom they think qualified.

This law does not apply to those already licensed, who may, however, obtain the benefit of it, upon surrendering their license and complying with certain other formalties prescribed by the law.

LICENSE (Lat. licere, to permit).

In Contracts. A permission. A right given by some competent authority to do an act which without such authority would be illegal.

An authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. 11 Mass. 533; 4 Sandf. Ch. 72; 1 Washb. R. P. *398.

The written evidence of the grant of such right.

An executed license exists when the licensed act has been done.

An executory license exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

An express license is one which is granted in direct terms.

An implied license is one which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

It is distinguished from an easement, which implies an interest in the land to be affected, and a lease, or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits; 1 Washb. R. P. *398.

A license may be by specialty; 2 Pars. Contr. 22; by parol; 13 M. & W. 838; 4 Maule & S. 562; 7 Barb. 4; 1 Washb. R. P. 148; or by implication from circumstances, as opening a door in response to a knock; Hob. 62; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 427.

It may be granted by the owner, or, in many cases, by a servant; Cro. Eliz. 246; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 427.

An executory license may be revoked at the pleasure of the grantor; 1 Washb. R. P. *398. In general, a mere license may be revoked at the grantor's pleasure; 11 Mass. 433; 15 Wend. 380; although the licensee has incurred expense; 10 Conn. 378; 23 id. 223; 3 Du. N. Y. 355; 11 Metc. 251; 2 Gray, 302; 24 N. H. 364; 13 id. 264; 4 Johns. 418; 3 Wisc. 117; 1 Dev. & B. 492; 13 M. & W. 838; 37 E. L. & Eq. 489; 5 B. & Ad. 1. But see 14 S. & R. 267. Not so a license closely coupled with a transfer of title to personal property; 8 Metc. 34; 11 Conn. 525; 13 M. & W. 856; 11 Ad. & E. 34.

An executed license which destroys an easement enjoyed by the licenser in the licensee's land, cannot be revoked; 9 Metc. 395; 2 Gray, 302; 2 Gill, 221; 3 Wisc. 124; 3 Du. N. Y. 255; 7 Bingh. 682; 3 B. & C. 332; 5 id. 221.

The effect of an executed license, though revoked, is to relieve or excuse the licensee from liability for acts done properly in pursuance thereof, and their consequences; 22 Barb. 336; 2 Gray, 302; 10 Conn. 378; 13 N. H. 264; 7 Taunt. 374; 5 B. & C. 221.

It has been held that a license, to the enjoyment of which it was necessary to expend money upon the licenser's land, could not be revoked, without reimbursing the licensee for the expenditures; 33 Ala. 600; 7 N. H. 237; and in Pennsylvania and some other states such a license is treated as irrevocable upon the ground of estoppel; 33 Penn. 169; 59 Ill. 337; 45 Ga. 33; but the current of authority is against this doctrine; 13 M. & W. 838; 38 Mo. 599; 12 Gray, 213. Courts of equity, however, will interfere to restrain the exercise of a legal right to revoke a license on the ground of preventing fraud, and construe the license as an agreement to give the right, and compel specific performance by deed; 4 C. E. Green, 153; 66 N. C. 546; 1 Washb. R. P. *400.

In International Law. Permission granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, or to the subjects of the enemy, to carry on a trade interdicted by war. Wheat. Int. Law, 475.

Licenses operate as a dispensation of the rules of war, so far as its provisions extend. They are stricti juris, but are not to be construed with pedantic accuracy. Wheat. Int. Law, 476; 1 Kent, 163, n.; 4 C. Rob. 8. They can be granted only by the sovereign authority, or by those delegated for the purpose by special commission; 1 Dods. 226; Stew. Adm. 367. They constitute a ground of capture and confiscation per se by the adverse belligerent party; Wheat. Int. Law, 475.

In Patent Law. See PATENTS.

In Pleading. A plea of justification to an action of trespass, that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the freehold to commit the trespass complained of.

A license must be specially pleaded to an action of trespass; 2 Term, 166; but may be given in evidence in an action on the case; 2 Mod. 6; 8 East, 308.

LICENTIA CONCORDANDI (Lat. leave to agree). One of the formal steps in the levying a fine. When an action is brought for the purpose of levying a fine, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of accommodation to the plaintiff, who accepts them, but, having given pledges to prosecute his suit, applies to the court, upon the return of the writ of covenant, for leave to make the matter up: this, which is readily granted, is called the licentia concordandi. 5 Co. 39; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, 22.

LICENTIA LOQUENDI. Imparlance.

LICENTIA SURGENDI. In Old English Law. Liberty of rising. A liberty or space of time given by the court to a tenant, who is essoined, de malo lecti, in a real action, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bract. lib. 5; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10.

LICENTIA TRANSFRETANDI. A writ or warrant directed to the keeper of the port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let the person who has this license of the king pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 93.

LICENTIOUSNESS. The doing what one pleases, without regard to the rights of others. It differs from liberty in this, that the latter is restrained by natural or positive law, and consists in doing whatever we please not inconsistent with the rights of others, whereas the former does not respect those rights. Wolff. Inst. § 84.

LICET (Lat.). It is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Id omne licitum est, quod non est legibus prohibitum, quamobrem, quod, lege permittente, fit, pœnam non meretur. Licere dicimus quod legibus, moribus, institutisque conceditur. Cic. Philip. 13; L. 42, D. ff. de ritu nupt. Est aliquid quod non oporteat; tametsi licet; quicquod vero non licet certe non oportet. L. verbum oportere, ff. de verb. et rer. sign.

Although. Calvinus, Lex. An averment that, "although such a thing is done or not done," is not implicative of the doing or not doing, but a direct averment of it. Plowd. 127.

LICET SÆPIUS REQUISITUS (although often requested). In Pleading. A formal allegation in a declaration that the defendant has been often requested to perform the acts the non-performance of which is complained of.

It is usually alleged in the declaration that the defendant, licet sæpius requisitus, etc., he did not perform the contract the violation of which is the foundation of the action. This allegation is generally sufficient when a request is not parcel of the contract. Indeed, in such cases it is unnecessary even to lay a general request; for the bringing of the suit is itself a sufficient request; 1 Saund. 33, n. 2; 2 id. 118, note 3; 2 H. Bla. 131; 1 Johns. Cas. 99, 319; 3 Maule & S. 150. See DEMAND.

LICITACION. In Spanish Law. The sale made at public auction by co-proprietors, or co-heirs, of their joint property which is not susceptible of being advantageously divided in kind.

LIDFORD LAW. See LYNCH LAW.

LIEGE (from liga, a bond, or litis, a man wholly at command of his lord. Blount). In Feudal Law. Bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior.

The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. So lieges are the king's subjects. Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 10; 14 Hen. VIII. c. 2. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict. But in ancient times private persons, as lords of manors, had their lieges. Jacob, Law Dict.; 1 Bla. Com. 367.

Liege, or ligius, was used in old records for full, pure, or perfect: e.g. ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal. Paroch. Antiq. 280. (Probably in this sense derived from legitima.) So in Scotland. See LIEGE POUSTIE.

LIEGE POUSTIE (Legitima Potestas). In Scotch Law. That state of health which gives a person full power to dispose of, mortis causâ or otherwise, his heritable property. Bell, Dict.

A deed executed at time of such state of health, as opposed to a death-bed conveyance. Id. A person is said to be in such state of health (in liege poustie, or in legitima potestati) when he is in his ordinary health and capacity, and not a minor, nor cognosced as an idiot or madman, nor under interdiction. 1 Bell, Com. 85; 6 Cl. & F. 540.

LIEN. A hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge.

In every case in which property, either real or personal, is charged with the payment of a debt or duty, every such charge may be denominated a lien on the property. Whittaker, Liens, p. 1. It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that a mortgage is made and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment, or, as in case of the lien of a judgment, by mere act of the law, without any act of the party. In this general sense the word is commonly used by English and American law writers to include those preferred or privileged claims given by statute or by admiralty law, and which seem to have been adopted from the civil law, as well as the security existing at common law, to which the term more exactly applies. In its more limited as well as commoner sense, the word lien indicates a mere right to hold the property of another as security; or it is the right which one person possesses, in certain cases, of detaining property placed in his possession belonging to another, until some demand which the former has be satisfied. 2 East, 235. A qualified right which, in certain cases, may be exercised over the property of another. 6 East, 25, n. A lien is a right to hold. 2 Camp. 579. A lien in regard to personal property is a right to detain the property till some claim or charge is satisfied. Metc. Yelv. 67, n. c. The right of retaining or continuing possession till the price is paid. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 144.

Statutory Liens.
Judgment Lien.
Mechanic's Lien.

The Common Law Lien. As distinguished from the other classes, it consists in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid; 2 Story, 131; 24 Me. 214; 5 Ohio, 88; 10 Barb. 626; 43 Ill. 424.

In the case of a factor an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties and the purposes of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds, the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves; 1 Wall. 166; 9 Bosw. 660; Story, Ag. § 111.

A particular lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property.

A general lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner; 3 B. & P. 494; 2 Hunt, 634.

Of course, where a general lien exists, a particular lien is included.

Particular liens constitute the oldest class of liens, and the one most favored by the common law; 4 Burr. 2221; Dougl. 97; 3 B. & P. 126. But courts ceased to originate liens at an early period; 9 East, 426; while general liens have been looked upon with jealousy, being considered encroachments upon the common law and founded solely in the usage of and for the benefit of trade; 3 B. & P. 42, 26, 494. Liens either exist by law, arise from usage, or are created by express agreement.

Liens which exist by the common law, generally arise in cases of bailment. Thus, a particular lien exists whenever goods are delivered to a handicraftsman of any sort for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon them; 1 Atk. 228; 3 Maule & S. 167; 14 Pick. 332; 7 Barb. 113; 8 Iowa, 207; 36 Me. 536; 2 W. & S. 392; 4 C. & P. 152. And so, where a person is, from the nature of his occupation, under a legal obligation to receive and be at trouble or expense about the personal property of another, in every such case he is entitled to a particular lien on it; 1 Esp. 109; 1 Ld. Raym. 654; 6 Term, 17; 3 B. & P. 42; 3 Vt. 245; 5 B. & Ald. 350.

And sometimes a lien arises where there is strictly no bailment. Thus, where a ship or goods at sea come into possession of a party by finding, and he has been at some trouble or expense about them, he is entitled to retain the same until reimbursed his expenses. This applies only to the salvors of a ship and cargo preserved from peril at sea; 1 Ld. Raym. 393; 5 Burr. 2732; 8 East, 57; 16 Penn. 393; Sprague, 57–272; Davcis, 20; Edw. Adm. 175; and, in the case of property on shore, where a specific reward is offered for the restoration; 8 Gill, 213; 3 Metc. Mass. 352; 52 Penn. 484; 7 Barb. 113; and does not apply, generally, it is said, to the preservation of things found upon land; 2 H. Blackst. 254; 2 W. Blackst. 1107; 7 Barb. 113; 4 Watts, 63; 10 Johns. 102; Story, Bailm. § 621, note a.

Liens which arise by usage are usually general liens, and the usage is said by Whitaker to be either the general usage of trade, or the particular usage of the parties; Whitaker, Liens, 31; 3 B. & P. 119; 4 Burr. 2222; 1 Atk. 228; Ambl. 252.

The usage must be so general that the party delivering the goods may be presumed to have known it, and to have made the right of lien a part of the contract; 4 C. & P. 152; 3 B. & P. 50. And it is said the lien must be for a general balance arising from transactions of a similar character between the parties, and that the debt must have accrued in the business of the party claiming the lien; Whitaker, Liens, 33; and see 1 Atk. 223; 1 W. Blackst. 651; and it seems that more decisive proof of general usage is required in those occupations in which the workmen are required to receive their employment when offered them, such as carriers; 6 Term, 14; 6 East, 519; 7 id. 224. But where a general lien has been once established, the courts will not allow it to be disturbed; 1 Esp. 109; 3 id. 31.

In regard to a general lien arising from particular usage between the parties, proof of their having before dealt upon the basis of such a lien will be presumptive evidence that they continue to deal upon the same terms; 1 Atk. 235; 6 Term, 19. If a debtor, who has already pledged property to secure a loan, borrow a further sum, it will be understood that the creditor's lien is for the whole debt; 2 Vern. 691.

Liens which arise from express agreement. A general or particular lien may be acquired in any case by the express agreement of the parties; Cro. Car. 271; 6 Term, 14. This generally happens when goods are placed in the hands of a person for the execution of some particular purpose upon them, with an express contract that they shall be considered as a pledge for the labor or expense which the execution of that purpose may occasion. Or it exists where property is merely pawned or delivered for bare custody to another, for the sole purpose of being a security for a loan made to the owner on the credit of it; Whitaker, Liens, 27; 2 Kent, 637. And if a number of tradesmen, not obliged by law to receive the goods of any one who offers, for the purposes of their trade, agree not to receive goods unless they may be held subject to a general lien for the balance due them, and the bailor knows this, and leaves the goods, the lien attaches. And the same is true, of course, of an individual under similar circumstances.

But where the tradesman is obliged to receive employment from any one who offers, a mere notice will not be enough to give this lien with implied assent, but express assent must be shown; 6 Term, 14; 3 B. & P. 42; 5 B. & Ald. 350.

Among the different classes who have liens by the common law, in the absence of any special agreement, are—

Innkeepers. They may detain a horse for his keep; 2 Ld. Raym. 866; 3 Mod. 173; 6 Term, 141; 9 Pick. 280, 316, 332; though, perhaps, not if the person leaving him be not a guest; 68 Me. 489; 11 Barb. N. Y. 41; but not sell him; F. Moore, 876; Bacon, Abr. Inns (D); 3 Mod. 173; 1 Holt, 383; 3 Gray, 382; Schoul. Bail. 294; except by custom of London and Exeter; F. Moore, 876; and cannot retake the horse or any other goods on which he has a lien, after giving them up; 3 Mod. 173; Hob. 42; Metc. Yelv. 67; L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 484. These privileges do not extend to mere agisters or livery-stable keepers; 5 M. & W. 350; 6 C. B. 132; 78 N. C. 96; 7 Gray, 183; 35 Me. 153; 45 Iowa, 456. They may detain the goods of a traveller, but not of a boarder; 43 Vt. 30; 27 Wisc. 202; L. R. 7 Q. B. 711; 36 Iowa, 651; 8 Rich. So. C. 423. But there are statutes in force in many of the United States conferring on boarding-house keepers all the privileges of innkeepers; 43 N. H. 332; 42 Barb. 623; 27 Wisc. 406; 110 Mass. 158. This lien is a particular lien; 9 East, 433; Cro. Car. 271; 2 E. D. Smith, 195.

Warehousemen have a particular lien; 18 Ill. 286; 34 E. L. & Eq. 116; 31 Miss. 261; 1 Minn. 408; 13 Ark. 457.

Dyers and tailors have a particular lien; Cro. Car. 271; 9 East, 433; 6 East, 523; 4 Burr. 2214.

Common carriers, for transportation of goods; 2 Ld. Raym. 752; 6 East, 519; 7 id. 224; 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 1; Wright (Ohio), 216; 24 Me. 339; 5 Wall. 481; 25 Wisc. 241; 1 Minn. 301; 51 Ala. 512; 10 Wall. 15; 104 Mass. 156; but not if the goods are taken tortiously from the owner's possession, where the carrier is innocent; 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 1; 2 Hall, 561; 5 Cush. 137; 6 East, 519; 6 Whart. 418; 20 E. C. L. 426; nor if the carrier transport them for a mere hire; 107 Mass. 126. Part of the goods may be detained for the whole freight of goods belonging to the same person; 6 East, 622.

Bailees for hire, generally, for work done by them; 6 Term, 14; 3 Selw. N. P. 1163; 4 Term, 260; 26 Miss. 182; 4 Wend. 292; 40 N. H. 88; 86 Penn. 486. A wharfinger; 7 B. & C. 212; 43 N. Y. 554; 2 Gall. 483.

An agister of cattle has no lien; Cro. Car. 271; 7 Gray, 183; 35 Me. 153; nor a livery-stable keeper; 2 Ld. Raym. 866; 6 East, 509; 35 Me. 153. In some of the states, however, statutes have been passed conferring the right of lien in these cases.

Attorneys and solicitors have a lien upon papers of their clients; 12 Wend. 261; 2 Aik. 162; 14 Vt. 485; 11 N. H. 163; 11 Miss. 225; and also upon judgments obtained by them; 20 Pick. 259; 10 Barb. 67; 4 Sandf. 661; Wright, Ohio, 485; 30 Me. 152; 15 Vt. 544; not in Pennsylvania; 7 Penn. St. 376; see 52 How. Pr. 54; 27 N. H. 324; 15 Johns. 405; 3 Me. 34. This lien is subject to some restrictions; Metc. Yelv. 67 f; 24 Me. 20; 21 N. H. 339; 22 Pick. 210.

Clerks of courts have a lien on papers for their fees; 3 Atk. 727; 2 P. Wms. 460; 2 Ves. 111.

Bankers have a lien on all securities left with them by their employers; 5 Term, 488; 1 Esp. 66; 3 Gilm. 233; 1 How. 234; Whit. Liens, 39.

Factors and brokers have a lien on goods and papers; 3 Term, 119; 1 Johns. Cas. 437, n.; 8 Wheat. 268; 28 Vt. 118; 34 Me. 582; on part of the goods for the whole claim; 6 East, 622; 34 Me. 582; but only for such goods as come to them as factors; 11 E. L. & Eq. 528.

The vendor of goods, for the price so long as he retains possession; 7 East, 574; 1 H. Bla. 363; Hob. 41; 2 Bla. Com. 448; 2 Swan, 661; 6 McLean, 472; Story, Sales, § 282; 8 H. L. Cas. 338; 4 Keyes, 90; Benj. Sales, § 796.

Pawnees, from the very nature of their contract; 15 Mass. 408; 2 Vt. 309; 9 Wend. 345; 3 Mo. 219; 39 Me. 45; but only where the pawner has authority to make such pledge; 3 Atk. 44; 2 Camp. 336, n. A pledge, even where the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner, unless the pawner has authority to make the pledge; 1 Vern. 407; 2 Stark. 21; 1 Mas. 440; 2 Mass. 398; 4 Johns. 103; 1 Maule & S. 140; 17 C. B. 161; 20 How. 343; 98 Mass. 303; 57 Ga. 274. See, as to stock, 4 Allen, 272; 100 Mass. 382; 48 Cal.

99. The pawnee does not have a general lien; 15 Mass. 490; 28 Com. 420; 27 La. An. 110; 37 N. Y. 540.

Requisites as to Creation. In all these cases, to give rise to the lien, there must have been a delivery of the property; it must have come into the possession of the party claiming the lien, or his agent; 3 Term, 119; 6 East, 25, n.

A question may arise by whom the delivery is to be made. Where a person, in pursuance of the authority and directions of the owner of property, delivers it to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon it, the tradesman will not have a general lien against the owner for a balance due from the person delivering it, if he knew that the one delivering was not the real owner; 1 East, 335; 2 id. 523; 2 Campb. 218; 2 Atk. 114. Thus, a carrier, who, by the usage of trade, is to be paid by the consignor, has no lien for a general balance against the consignee; 5 B. & P. 64. Nor can a claim against the consignee destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu; 3 B. & P. 42. But a particular lien may undoubtedly be derived through the acts of agents acting within the scope of their employment; 9 East, 233; 3 B. & P. 119; 3 Esp. 182. And the same would be true of a general lien against the owner for a balance due from him; Whit. Liens, 39.

No lien exists where the party claiming it acquires possession by wrong; 2 Term, 485; or by misrepresentation; 1 Campb. 12; or by his unauthorized and voluntary act; 1 Stra. 651; 8 Term, 310, 610; 2 H. Blackst. 254; 3 W. Blackst. 1117. But see 4 Burr. 2218.

No lien exists where the act of the servant or agent delivering the property is totally unauthorized, and the pledge of it is tortious against the owner, whether delivered as a pledge or for the execution of the purposes of a trade thereupon; 5 Ves. 111; 6 East, 17; 4 Esp. 174; 5 Term, 604. A pledge, even when the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner unless the pawner had authority; 1 Vern. 407; 2 Stark. 21; 1 Mas. 440; 2 Mass. 398; 4 Johns. 103.

A delivery by a debtor for the purpose of preferring a creditor will not be allowed to operate as a delivery sufficient for a lien to attach; 4 Burr. 2239; 3 Ves. 85; 2 Campb. 579; 11 East, 256.

Waiver of Leins. Possession is a necessary element of common-law liens; and if the creditor once knowingly parts with that possession after the lien attaches, the lien is gone; Stra. 556; 1 Atk. 254; 5 Ohio, 88; 6 East, 25, n.; 7 id. 5; 3 Term, 119; 2 Edw. Ch. 181; 5 Binn. 398; 3 Am. L. J. 128; 4 N. Y. 497; 4 Denio, 498; 42 Me. 50; 11 Cush. 231; 2 Swan, 561; 23 Vt. 217; Benj. Sales, § 799. But there may be a special agreement extending the lien, though not to affect third persons; 36 Wend. 467. The delivery may be constructive; Ambl. 252; and so may possession; 5 Ga. 153. A lien cannot be transferred; 8 Pick. 73; but property subject to a lien may be delivered to a third person, as to the creditor's servant, with notice of the lien, so as to preserve the lien of the original creditor; 2 East, 529; 7 id. 5. But it must not be delivered to the owner or his agent; 2 East, 529; 4 Johns. 103. But if the property be of a perishable nature, possession may be given to the owner under proper agreements; 1 Atk. 235; 8 Term, 199. Generally a delivery of part of the goods sold is not equivalent to a delivery of the whole, so as to destroy the vendor's lien. He may give up part and retain the rest, and then his lien will remain on the part retained for the price of the whole. But this is not so unless the intention to separate the goods delivered from the rest is manifest; Benj. Sales, § 805.

Neglect to insist upon a lien, in giving reasons for a refusal to deliver property on demand, has been held a waiver; 1 Campb. 410, n.; 7 Ind. 21; 13 Ark. 437.

Where there is a special agreement made, or act done, inconsistent with the existence of the lien, such as an agreement to give credit, or where a distinct security is taken, or the possession of the property is acquired for another distinct purpose, and for that only, or where the property is attached by the creditor, no lien arises; 16 Ves. 275; 4 Campb. 146; 2 Marsh. 339; 5 Maule & S. 180; Metc. Yelv. 67 c; 8 N. H. 441; 17 Pick. 140; 15 Mass. 389; 4 Vt. 549. But such agreement must be clearly inconsistent with the lien; 1 Dutch. 443; 32 Me. 319.

The only remedy or use of the lien at common law is to allow the creditor to retain possession of the goods; 33 Me. 438; 1 Mas. 319. And he may do this against assignees of the debtor; 1 Burr. 489.

The Civil Law Lien. The civil law embraces, under the head of mortgage and privilege, the peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law, and equity, are termed liens.

In regard to privilege, Domat says, "We do not reckon in the number of privileges the preference which the creditor has on the movables that have been given him in a pawn, and which are in his custody. The privilege of a creditor is the distinguishing right which the nature of his credit gives him, and which makes him to be preferred before other creditors, even those who are prior in time, and who have mortgages." Domat, part 1, lib. iii. tit. i. sect. v.

These privileges were of two kinds: one gave a preference on all the goods, without any particular assignment on any one thing; the other secures to the creditors their security on certain things, and not on the other goods.

Among creditors who are privileged, there is no priority of time, but each one takes in the order of his privilege, and all creditors who have a privilege of the same kind take proportionately, although their debts be of different dates. And all privileges have equally a preference over those of an inferior class, and over debts which do not have this favored character, whether subsequent or antecedent in point of time.

The vendor of immovable property, for which payment has not been made, is preferred before creditors of the purchaser, and all other persons, as to the thing sold. By the Roman law, this principle applies equally to movables and immovables; and the seller may seize upon the property in the hands of his vendee, or wherever he can find it.

So, too, a person who has lent money to repair a thing, or to make improvements, has this privilege. And this, though he lends to workmen or architects, etc., if it be done with the knowledge of the owner.

Carriers have a privilege not only for the price of carriage, but for money paid on account of the goods.

Landlords have a privilege for the rents due from their tenants even on the furniture of the under-tenants, if there be a sub-lease. But not if payment has been made to the tenant by an immediate lessor; although a payment made by the sub-tenant to the landlord would be good as against the tenant.

The privilege was lost by a novation, or by any thing in the original contract which showed that the vendor had taken some other security inconsistent with the privilege. See Domat, part i. lib. iii. tit. i. sec. v.

Mortgages in the civil law are of two kinds, conventional and legal. A conventional mortgage results from the direct act or covenant of the parties. A legal mortgage arises by mere act of law.

A mortgage may be acquired in three ways.

First, with the consent of the debtor, by his agreement.

Second, without the owner's consent, by the quality and bare effect of the engagement, the nature of which is such that the law has annexed to it the security of a mortgage.

Third, where a mortgage is acquired by the authority of justice: as where a creditor who had no mortgage obtains a decree of condemnation in his favor.

When the creditor is put into possession of the thing, movable or immovable, he has a right to keep it until he is paid what is owing him; and the debtor cannot turn the creditor out of possession, nor make use of his own thing without the consent of the creditor.

Effect of a Mortgage. First, the creditor has a right to sell the thing pledged, whether the creditor has it in his possession or not. Under the French law, it was a right to have it sold. Cushing's Domat, p. 647.

Second, a right on the part of the creditor to follow the property, into whosesoever hands it has come, whether movable or immovable.

Third, a preference of the first creditor to whom the property is mortgaged, and a right on his part to follow the property into the hands of the other creditors.

Fourth, the mortgage is a security for all the consequences of the original deb' as damages, interest, expenses in preserving, etc.

See, generally, Domat, part i. lib. iii. tit. i.; Guyot, Rep. Univ. tit. Privilegium; Cushing's Domat; Massi, Droit Commerciel.

Equitable Liens are such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance.

A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem; it is not property in the thing, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing to which they are attached as an incumbrance; and they can be enforced only in courts of equity; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1215.

An equitable lien on a sale of realty is very different from a lien at law; for it operates after the possession has been changed, and is available by way of charge instead of detainer. Adams, Eq. Jur. 127.

The vendor of land has a lien for the unpaid purchase-money. The principle is stated, "where a conveyance is made prematurely before payment of the price, the money is a charge on the estate in the hands of the vendee;" 4 Kent, 151; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1217; 1 W. Blackst. 950; 15 Ves. 329; 2 Sugd. Vend. 671; 2 Dart, V. & P. 729; also 1 Whi. & T. Lead. Cas. 324; 1 Perry, Trusts, § 232; 1 Sch. & L. 132; 6 Johns. Ch. 402; 7 Wheat. 46; 17 Ves. 433; 10 Pet. 625; and in the hands of heirs or subsequent purchasers with notice; 15 Ves. 337; 3 Russ. 488; 1 Sch. & L. 135; against assignees in bankruptcy, under a general assignment; Bump, Bankr.; 2 B. R. 183; 1 Bro. Ch. 420; 9 Ves. 100; 2 V. & B. 306; 1 Vern. 267; 1 Madd. 356; and whether the estate is actually conveyed or only contracted to be conveyed; Sugd. Vend. c. 12, p. 541; 2 Dick. Ch. 730; 12 Ad. & E. 632.

So, too, where money has been paid prematurely before conveyance made, the purchaser and his representatives have a lien; 3 Y. & J. 264; 11 Price, 58; 1 P. Wms. 278.

So where the purchase-money has been deposited in the hands of a third person, to cover incumbrances; 1 T. & R. 469; 1 Ves. 478. Yet a lien will not be created for a third party, who was to receive an annuity under a covenant as a part of the consideration for the conveyance; 3 Sim. 499; 1 M. & K. 297; 2 Keen, 81.

The deposit of the title-deeds of an estate gives an equitable lien on the estate; 4 Bro. C. C. 269; s. c. 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 931; L. R. 3 P. C. C. 299; without any express agreement either by parol or in writing. But not when the circumstances of the deposit were such as to show that no such lien was intended; 36 Beav. 27. This equitable lien has been recognized in 2 Sandf. Ch. 9; 2 Hill, Ch. 166; 12 Wisc. 413; 10 Sm. & M. 418; but denied in 2 Disn. 9; 1 Rawle, 325. See 8 B. Monr. 435. This lien is not favored, and is confined strictly to an actual, immediate, and bonâ fide deposit of the title-deeds with the creditor, as a security, in order to create the lien; 12 Ves. 197; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1020; 4 Kent, 150.

It is a general principle that if one party has a lien on two funds for a debt, and another party has a lien on one only of the funds for another debt, the latter has a right in equity to compel the former to resort to the other fund in the first instance for satisfaction; 8 Ves. 388; 1 Johns. Ch. 318; 1 Story, Eq. § 633.

When there is a lien upon different parcels of land for the payment of the same debt, and some of these lands still belong to the person who ought to pay the debt, and other parcels have been transferred by him to third persons, his part of the land as between them and him is primarily chargeable with the debt; and it has been further held that if he has sold or transferred different parcels at different times to different persons, as encumbrancers or purchasers, there or between themselves, they are to be charged with the lien in the reverse order of time of the transfers to them; 5 Johns. Ch. 440; 1 Penn. 275; but see contra, 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1233.

One joint tenant has, in many cases, a lien on the common estate for repairs put on by himself above his share of the liability; 1 Ball & B. 199; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1236; Sugd. Vend. 611.

And equity applies this principle even to cases where tenant for life makes permanent improvements in good faith; 1 Sim. & S. 552. So where a party has made improvements under a defective title; 6 Madd. 2; 9 Mod. 11.

So, too, there is a lien where property is conveyed inter vivos, or is bequeathed or devised by last will and testament, subject to a charge for the payment of debts; or to other charges in favor of third persons; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1244. A distinction must be kept in mind between a devise in trust to pay certain sums, and a devise subject to charges.

A covenant to convey and settle lands does not give the covenantee a lien; but was held to do so in case of a covenant to settle lands in lieu of dower; 3 Bro. Ch. 489; 1 Ves. 451; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 471.

Waiver. The lien may be waived by agreement; but postponement of the day of payment is not a waiver, not being inconsistent with the nature of the lien; nor taking personal security; Adams, Eq. Jur. 128; 1 Johns. Ch. 308; 2 Rand. 428; 2 Humphr. 248; 1 Mas. 192; 2 Ohio, 383; 1 Blackf. 246; 6 B. Monr. 174; 6 Yerg. 50; 3 Ga. 333; 1 Ball & B. 514; 15 Ves. 348. An acknowledgment of the payment of the purchase-money in the body of the deed, or by a receipt, will not operate as a waiver or discharge of the vendor's lien if the purchase-money has not in fact been paid; 30 N. J. Eq. 569; 50 Ala. 228; 29 Ark. 357. Taking the note or other personal security of the vendee payable at a future day is generally held merely a means of payment, and not a security destroying the lien; 1 Sch. & L. 135; 2 V. & B. 306; 1 Madd. 349; 2 Rose, 79; 2 Ball & B. 514; 12 W. Va. 575; 50 Ala. 34; 26 N. J. Eq. 311; 44 Miss. 508; 20 N. J. Eq. 109; 25 Ark. 510; 21 Vt. 271; 1 Johns. Ch. 308. But if it be the note of a third party, or an independent security on real estate, it would generally be a waiver; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1223, n.; 4 Kent, 151; 4 Wheat. 290; 1 Paige, Ch. 20; 9 Cow. 316; 1 Mas. 212; 4 Mo. App. 292; 67 Ill. 599; 10 R. I. 334; 10 Heisk. 477; 49 Mo. 64; 43 Miss. 570; 46 Texas, 204; 30 Md. 422; 4 Wheat. 255; 20 Ohio, 546; 15 Ind. 435; 16 N. H. 592; 17 Cal. 70; 2 Mich. 243; 4 N. Y. 312; 66 Mo. 44. And, generally, the question of relinquishment will turn upon the facts of each case; 6 Ves. 752; 15 id. 329; 3 Russ. Ch. 488; 3 Sugd. Vend. c. 18; 8 J. J. Marsh. 553.

Maritime Liens. Maritime liens do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession; 22 E. L. & Eq. 62. See 15 Bost. Law Rep. 555; 16 id. 1, 264; 17 id. 93, 421. A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession; 7 How. 729; 21 Am. Law Reg. 1.

The shipper of goods has a lien upon the ship, for the value of the goods sent, which can be enforced in admiralty; 1 Blatchf. & H. 300; Olcott, 43; 1 Blatchf. 173; Ware, 188, 322; Daveis, 172; 22 How. 491; Crabbe, 534; 3 Blatchf. 271, 289; 1 Sumn. 551; and, generally, every act of the master binds the vessel, if it be done within the scope of his authority; 2 Pars. Sh. & Ad. 7; 17 Me. 147; 1 W. Rob. 392; 2 E. L. & Eq. 536; 18 How. 182; where the possession of the master is not tortious, but under a color of right; 6 McLean, 484. This does not apply to contracts of material men with the master of a domestic ship; 1 Conkl. Adm. 73; and the act must have been within the scope of the master's employment; 18 How. 182. See 1 C. Rob. 84. This lien follows the ship even in the hands of a purchaser, without notice before the creditor has had a reasonable opportunity to enforce his lien; Ware, 188. If the master borrow money for the ship's necessity, the lender has a lien on the ship for the amount; 4 Dall. 225; 8 Me. 298. A sale of the vessel by the master through necessity cuts off the lien of the shipper of the cargo in the vessel; 6 Wall. 18.

The owner of a ship has a lien on the cargo carried for the freight earned, whether reserved by a bill of lading or not; 12 Mod.

447; 4 B. & Ald. 630; 2 B. & B. 410; 6 Pick. 248; 18 Johns. N. Y. 157; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 97; 5 Ohio, 88; 4 Wash. C. C. 110; 8 Wheat. 605; Ware, 149; 1 Sumn. 551; 2 W. & M. 178.

This lien is, at most, only a qualified maritime lien; see 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 174, n. The lien exists in case of a chartered ship; 4 Cow. 470; 1 Paine, 358; 4 B. & Ald. 630; 20 Bost. L. Rep. 669; 8 Wheat. 605; to the extent of the freight due under the bill of lading; 2 Atk. 621; 1 B. & Ald. 711; 4 id. 630; 1 Sumn. 551. But if the charterer takes possession and management of the ship, he has the lien; 1 Cowp. 143; 3 Cra. 39; 6 Pick. 248; 4 Cow. 470; Ware, 149; 4 M. & G. 502. No lien for freight attaches before the ship has broken ground; 1 B. & P. 634; 5 Binn. 392; 3 Gray, 92. But see, as to the damages for removing goods from the ship before she sails, 28 E. L. & Eq. 210; 1 C. B. 328; 2 C. & P. 334; 19 Bost. L. Rep. 579; 2 Gray, 92.

No lien exists for dead freight; 15 East, 547; 3 Maule & S. 205. The lien attaches only for freight earned; 3 Maule & S. 205; Ware, 149; 2 Brev. 233. The lien is lost by a delivery of the goods; 6 Hill, 43; but not if the delivery be involuntary or procured by fraud; id. So it is by stipulations inconsistent with its exercise; 17 How. 53; 10 Conn. 104; 6 Pick. 248; 4 B. & Ald. 50; 32 E. L. & Eq. 210: as, by an agreement to receive the freight at a day subsequent to the entire delivery of the goods,—a distinction being, however, taken between the unloading or arrival of the ship, and the delivery of the goods; 1 Sumn. 551; 18 Johns. 157; 14 M. & W. Exch. 794; 2 Sumn. 589; 10 Mass. 510.

A third person cannot take advantage of the existence of such lien; 3 East, 85. A vendor, before exercising the right of stoppage in transitu, must discharge this lien by payment of freight; 1 Pars. Mar. L. 495; 15 Me. 314; 3 B. & P. 42.

Master's Lien. In England, the master has no lien, at common law, on the ship for wages, nor disbursements; 33 E. L. & Eq. 600; 1 B. & Ald. 575; 5 D. & R. 552; 6 How. 112.

But now, by the one-hundred-and-ninety-first section of the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, it is provided that "Every master of a ship shall, so far as the case permits, have the same rights, liens, and remedies for the amount of his wages, which, by this act, or any law or custom, any seaman, not being a master, has for the money of his wages." And it has been properly held by Judge Sprague, of the United States district court, that this lien of the master on an English vessel may be reinforced in the admiralty courts of the United States; 22 Bost. L. Rep. 150. See 9 Wall. 495; 3 Fed. Rep. 577; 7 id. 247, 674.

In the United States, he has no lien for his wages; 2 Paine, 201; 1 Pet. Adm. 223; 11 id. 175; 3 Mas. 91; 14 Penn. 34; 18 Pick. 550. This does not apply to one not master in fact; Bee, 198. As to lien for disbursements, see 2 Curt. C. C. 427; 14 Penn. 34; 11 Pet. 175. He may be substituted if he discharge a lien; 1 Pet. Adm. 223; Bee, 116; 3 Mas. 255. But he has a lien on the freight for disbursements; 4 Mass. 91; 11 id. 72; 5 Wend. 315; 2 Pars. Sh. & Ad. 25, n.; for wages in a peculiar case; Ware, 149; and on the cargo, where it belongs to the shipowners; 14 Me. 180. He may, therefore, detain goods against the shipper or consignee, even after payment to owner, if the master give reasonable notice; 11 Mass. 72; 5 Wend. 315; 4 Esp. 22. But see 5 D. & R. 552. The master may retain goods till a contribution bond is signed; 11 Johns. 23; 11 Me. 150; 13 id. 357.

The seamen's lien for wages attaches to the ship and freight, and the proceeds of both, and follows them into whosesoever hands they come; 2 Sumn. 443; 2 Par. Mar. L. 60; and lies against a part, or the whole, of the fund; 3 Sumn. 50, 286; but not the cargo; 5 Pet. 675. It applies to proceeds of a vessel sold under attachment of a state court; 2 Wall. C. C. 592; overruling 1 Newb. 215.

This lien of a seaman is of the nature of the privilegium of the civil law, does not depend upon possession, and takes precedence of a bottomry bond or hypothecation; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 62, and cases cited; 15 Bost. L. Rep. 555; 16 id. 264; Ware, 134. Taking the master's order does not destroy the lien; Ware, 185. And see 2 Hagg. Adm. 136. Fishermen on shares have it, by statute. Generally, all persons serving in a way directly and materially useful to the navigation of the vessel; Gilp. 505; 3 Hagg. Adm. 376; 2 Pet. Adm. 268; Ware, 83; 1 Blatchf. & H. 423; 1 Sumn. 384; 1 Ld. Raym. 397. A woman has it if she performs seaman's service; 1 Hagg. Adm. 187; 18 Bost. L. Rep. 672; 1 Newb. 5. It lies against ships owned by private persons, but not against government ships employed in the public service; 9 Wheat. 409; 3 Sumn. 308.

A ship broker, who obtains a crew, has been held to have a lien for his services and advances for their wages; 1 Blatchf. & H. 189. One who performs towage service on the navigable waters of the United States acquires a lien, which may be enforced by proceedings in rem, and cannot be destroyed by the sale of the vessel under a state law; 9 Fed. Rep. 777.

Stevedores have no lien; Olcott, 120; 1 Wall. Jr. 370.

Material men have a lien by admiralty law. They are those whose trade it is to build, repair, or equip ships, or to furnish them with tackle and provisions necessary in any kind; 3 Hagg. Adm. 129. In regard to foreign ships, it has been held that material men have a lien on the ship only when the supplies were necessary and could be obtained only on the credit of the ship; 19 How. 359;

13 Wall. 329. The lien for repairs continues only as long as they retain possession, on domestic ships; Wright, Ohio, 660; 4 Wheat. 438; 1 Stor. 68; and is gone if possession is left; 14 Conn. 404; 4 Wheat. 438; 4 Wash. C. C. 453. And see supra.

The several states of the United States are foreign to each other in this respect. Where repairs are made at the home port of the owner, the maritime law of the United States gives no maritime lien, the rights of the parties being altogether governed by the local law. The liens given by the state laws have, however, been enforced by the federal courts, not as rights which they were bound to enforce, but as discretionary powers which they might lawfully exercise, when the controversies were within the admiralty jurisdiction; 1 Black, 522; 21 Wall. 558; 95 U. S. 69; 1 Fed. Rep. 218; 2 id. 364; 8 id. 366. The state legislatures cannot create a maritime lien, nor can they confer jurisdiction upon a state court to enforce such a lien by a proceeding in rem; but they can authorize their enforcement by common law remedies; 4 Wall. 480, 571; 16 id. 534; 9 Am. L. Rev. 638; 2 Pars. Shipp. & Ad. 157; 24 Iowa, 192; Field & M. Fed. Pr. 561; 43 N. Y. 554; 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 88; 16 Am. L. Rev. 193.

As to the order of precedence of these liens, see Daveis, 199; Ware, 565; 2 Curt. C. C. 421; 8 Fed. Rep. 331, 333.

Giving credit will not be a waiver of a lien on a foreign ship, unless so given as to be inconsistent with the exercise of the lien; 7 Pet. 324; 1 Sumn. 73; 5 Sandf. 342; 4 Ben. 151.

Builders' liens may be placed on the common-law ground that a workman employing skill and labor on an article has a lien upon it; 2 Rose, 91; 4 B. & Ald. 341; Wright, Ohio, 660; 4 Wheat. 438; 1 Stor. 68; and a lien for the purpose of finishing the ship, where payments are made by instalments; 1 Pars. Shipp. & Ad. 64 n.; 5 B. & Ald. 942.

Collision. In case of collision the injured vessel has a lien upon the one in fault for the damage done; 22 E. L. & Eq. 62; Crabb, 580; and the lien lasts a reasonable time; 18 Bost. L. Rep. 91; 1 Pars. Shipp. & Ad. 531.

A part-owner, merely as such, has no lien whatever, but acquires such a lien when any of the elements of partnership or agency, with bailment upon which his lien may rest, enter into his relation with the other part-owners; 1 Pars. Sh. & Ad. 115.

A part-owner who has advanced more than his share towards building a vessel has no lien on her for such surplus; 6 Pick. Mass. 46; and none, it is said, for advances on account of a voyage; 4 Pick. 456; 7 Bingh. 709.

That the relation of partners must exist to give the lien; 20 Johns. 61; 4 B. Monr. 458; 8 B. & C. 612; Gilp. 467; 4 Johns. Ch. 522; 6 Pick. 120; 5 Mann. & R. 25.

And part-owners of a ship may become partners for a particular venture; 1 Ves. Sr. 497; 3 W. & M. 193; 10 Mo. 701; 9 Pick. 334. But see 14 Penn. 34.

The ship's husband, if a partner, has a partner's lien; if not, he may have a lien on the proceeds of the voyage; 8 B. & C. 612; 16 Conn. 12, 23; 3 W. & M. 193; or of the ship herself, if sold, or on her documents, if any of these have come into his actual possession. And the lien applies to all disbursements and liabilities for the ship. But it is doubtful if his mere office gives him a lien; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 113; 2 Curt. C. C. 427; 2 V. & B. 242; Cowp. 469.

Deposit of a bill of lading gives a lien for the amount advanced on the strength of the security; 5 Taunt. 558; 2 Wash. C. C. 283; B. & L. Adm. 38.

These liens of part-owners and by deposit of a bill of lading are not maritime liens, however, and could not be enforced in admiralty. See COLLISION; SEAMEN'S WAGES; MARSHALLING OF ASSETS; MASTER; CAPTAIN; PRIVILEGE.

Statutory Lien. Under this head it is convenient to consider some of those liens which subsist at common law, but have been extensively modified by statutory regulations, as well as those which subsist entirely by force of statutory regulations.

The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and liens of material men and builders.

Judgment Lien. At common law, a judgment is merely a general security and not a specific lien on land; 2 Sugd. Vend. *517; but by stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, it is made a charge upon all lands, tenements, etc., of which the debtor is owner or in which he is in any way interested, and it binds all persons claiming under him after such judgment, including his issue, and other persons whom he could bar; id. *523. And now by stat. 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, judgments are not liens upon lands until such lands have been actually delivered in execution.

In Alabama. Judgments are not liens; 57 Ala. 448. It requires an execution in the hands of the sheriff to create a lien either on real or personal property; 58 Ala. 577; 59 id. 625.

In Arizona. Judgments are liens on real property, and attach to after-acquired property, binding for two years after being docketed; Comp. Laws, 440, § 209.

In Arkansas. The lien attaches to real estate situate in the county in which the court is held. It begins from the delivering of execution to the officer; 12 Ark. 421; 18 id. 414; and binds after-acquired lands; 13 Ark. 74. The limitation is ten years; Gantt's Dig. ch. 79, § 3603; 26 Ark. 352; 33 Ark. 378.

In California. The lien attaches immediately upon the judgment being docketed, and binds all lands of the debtor including those after acquired for two years; C. C. P. § 671; 37 Cal. 131. The perfecting of an appeal does not discharge the lien; 25 Cal. 337.

In Colorado. The lien attaches to real estate when an abstract of the judgment certified by the clerk of court is filed in the county where the real estate is situated, and binds for seven years from the last day of the term when rendered; Col. Laws, ch. 48; 1 Col. 84.

In Connecticut. Judgments are not liens unless made so by being recorded against particular real estate; Gen. Stat. tit. 1, § 24; 17 Conn. 278.

In Dakota. The lien of a judgment attaches to all real estate, excepting homesteads, as soon as it is docketed, and lasts for five years; C. C. P. § 300.

In Delaware. The lien attaches immediately upon entering of the judgment. The limitation is twenty years; Del. Laws, ch. 110.

In District of Columbia. Judgments are liens on real estate, but not on equitable interests, from the date of rendition, and on personal property for twelve years; R. S. D. C. 265.

In Florida. Judgments are liens upon real estate in the county where rendered, and may be made in other counties by filing a transcript there; McClellan, Dig. 618; 12 Fla. 633.

In Georgia. Domestic judgments are a lien from their date upon both real and personal property for seven years, and may be revived for three years additional; Code, § 2913, 2914; foreign judgments bind for five years; 42 Ga. 212, 218.

In Idaho. The lien of a judgment begins from the time it is docketed, and binds all the property of the debtor not exempt for two years; Rev. Laws, 1874–75, § 225.

In Illinois. When execution is not issued on a judgment within one year from the time of rendition, it ceases to be a lien, but execution may issue at any time within seven years, and becomes a lien immediately upon delivery to the sheriff; R. S. ch. 77; 84 Ill. 557.

In Indiana. Judgments of the supreme, circuit, and superior courts are a lien upon all real estate in the county where rendered for ten years, and may be made so in other counties by filing a transcript; 2 Ind. Stat. § 264, p. 527; 9 Ind. 92; 73 Ind. 235.

In Iowa. Judgments of the supreme, district, and circuit courts are liens on real estate, owned or after acquired for ten years from the date of the judgment, including equitable as well as legal; Stat. ch. 9; 40 Ia. 425.

In Kansas. For five years, and may be continued by revival; Com. Laws, § 3972; 5 Kan. 280; 13 id. 53.

In Kentucky. Judgments are liens upon the real estate from the time the writ of fieri facias is delivered to the officers for execution; 1 Gen. Stat. 417; 1 B. Mon. 109.

In Louisiana. Judgments recorded in the office of the parish recorder operate as mortgages upon all real estate from the date of record; Civ. Code, § 3189.

In Maine. Except under an attachment on mesne process for thirty days, judgments are not a lien; R. S. ch. 81, § 64.

In Maryland. The lien of a judgment lasts for twelve years; Rev. Code, art. 64, § 135; 18 Md. 504; 37 id. 443.

In Massachusetts. Judgments do not constitute a lien. All attachments on mesne process continue in force for thirty days after judgment; Mass. Stat. 625.

In Michigan. Judgments have no effect on the debtor's property until execution has been issued and levy made; 2 Comp. Laws, 1871, ch. 165.

In Minnesota. Judgments are a lien upon all real estate in the county where rendered, either owned or after-acquired for ten years; R. S. ch. 66; 10 Minn. 303.

In Mississippi. When enrolled in the office of the clerk of the circuit court, judgments become liens and bind the property within the county where rendered; Miss. Rev. Code, § 830.

In Missouri. Judgments of courts of record are liens upon all present and after-acquired real estate in the county where rendered for three years, and may be made so in other counties by filing a transcript. Liens may be revived by scire facias for two years; Mo. Code, § 2729; 67 Mo. 201.

In Montana. From the time of docketing, judgments become a lien upon all real property owned or after acquired in the county where rendered for six years; Code C. P. § 295.

In Nebraska. Judgments in the district court are liens upon the lands of the debtor in the county where rendered from the first day of the term, but judgments by confession, and those rendered at the same time the action was commenced, bind only from the day when rendered; Comp. Stat. § 477. By filing a transcript in the district court of another county, a judgment may be made a lien there; Comp. Stat. § 429.

In Nevada. Judgments are liens for two years from the time of docketing, and may be made so in other counties by filing a transcript; 1 Comp. Laws, § 1267; 1 Nev. 398.

In New Hampshire. Judgments are not liens; as to attachments, see Gen. Laws, 517.

In New Jersey. Judgments are liens from the date of actual entry for twenty years; N. J. Rev. Stat. 520; 1 Zabr. 714, 751; 2 Vroom, 171.

In New Mexico. Judgments are liens on the real estate in the county where docketed, and may be made so in other counties by filing a transcript; Gen. Laws.

In New York. A judgment of a court of record or justice's court exceeding $25 is a lien on real estate for ten years from the time of docketing; Code, § 1251; 50 N. Y. 655; 6 Barb. 470.

In North Carolina. Judgments of the superior court are liens upon real property, except homesteads, for ten years, from the time of docketing. Transcripts may be filed and thus become liens in other counties; Battle's Rev. ch. 17, § 259; 71 N. C. 135.

In Ohio. Lands and tenements are bound by the lien of a judgment in the county where rendered for five years from the first day of the term; R. S. 5375. The lien then becomes dormant, but may be revived by scire facias at any time within twenty-one years; R. S. 5368.

In Oregon. Judgments are liens upon real estate within the county, whether owned or after acquired, for ten years; Code, § 267.

In Pennsylvania. Judgments bind all the real estate in the county where rendered for five years, and may be continued by revival; but are not liens on after-acquired real estate unless revived, and after-acquired real estate can be reached by execution. A verdict for a specific sum is also a lien; 1 Purd. Dig. § 18; Act of March 23, 1877.

In Rhode Island. A judgment is not a lien; Gen. Stats. ch. 145, § 15.

In South Carolina. Judgments are made a lien on lands by the acts of 1873–74, for a period of ten years from the date of entry.

In Tennessee. Judgments are liens, if rendered in the county where the defendant resides, against all his real estate wherever situate, for twelve months; but, in counties of 4000 or more inhabitants, they become liens only from the date of filing an abstract of the judgment in the register's office of the county where the land is situated, unless actual notice of judgment has been given; Ten. Stat. § 2980. The lien extends to after-acquired lands; 13 Humphr. 177.

In Texas. Judgments are liens for ten years from the date of record.

In Utah. Judgments are liens upon all real property for two years from the time of docketing.

To bind land in other counties, a transcript must be filed. After five years, liens cannot be revived by scire facias; Comp. Laws, 45.

In Vermont. Judgments are not liens.

In Virginia. Judgments are liens for one year, and can be revived by scire facias within ten years from time of docketing; Code, 1166; 21 Gratt. 112.

In Washington. Judgments become liens for five years upon land situated within the county from the time a transcript is filed in the county auditor's office; Stat. § 825.

In West Virginia. Judgments are liens for ten years from the time they are docketed; R. S. ch. 163, § 5.

In Wisconsin. Judgments of the circuit court become a lien on all real estate within the county for ten years from the time of docketing, and bind real estate in other counties when a transcript is filed; R. S. ch. 128, § 2901.

In Wyoming. Judgments constitute a lien from the first day of the term when rendered; they become dormant in five years and cease to be liens; Comp. Laws, tit. xiv. § 427.

Judgments rendered in the federal courts have the same lien as those rendered in the courts of the respective states wherein they are held. Judgments in the circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania have been decided to be liens against land in both the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania.

Mechanics' Liens.

The lien of mechanics and material men on buildings and for work done and materials furnished is unknown either at common law or in equity; 13 Penn. 167; 6 Wall. 561; but it exists in all of the United States by statute, to a greater or less extent. Each state has its own mechanics' lien law, differing often in minor particulars, but alike in their general provisions. In most of the states, this lien is equal to that of a judgment or mortgage, and can be assigned and enforced in a similar manner; 26 Conn. 317. The lien affects only real estate, and attaches to the materials only when they become real estate by being erected into a building and attached to the land; 2 Vroom, 477; but should the building be removed or destroyed, the lien does not remain upon the land; 26 Penn. 246; nor upon any portion of the materials of which the building was composed; 28 Penn. 161.

The benefits of the statute apply only to the class of persons named therein. The contractor seems to be universally secured by the lien, and in most of the states the sub-contractor and material man are also protected either by a lien or a right of action against the owner of the land. In some states these provisions extend to workmen, but generally they do not; Phill. Mech. Liens, 53. Mechanics' lien laws extend to non-residents as well as residents; 2 Swan, 130; 17 Minn. 353; where the statute was silent on the subject of assigning a mechanic's lien, it was held that an assignee could not prosecute in his own name and avail himself of its privileges; 10 Wisc. 331; 35 Me. 384; but in other states it has been held that the lien may be assigned precisely as any other chose in action, the assignee taking subject to the equities of the parties; 15 Gratt. 83; 13 Penn. 339; 14 All. 139; 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. 231. The right of lien survives to an executor or administrator; 14 Minn. 145.

A lien cannot be acquired against certain classes of property which are exempted on the ground of public policy. Thus public school-houses; 37 How. Pr. 520; 10 Penn. 275; court-houses, public offices, or jails, are exempt; 7 W. & S. 197; 47 N. Y. 666. So also are graveyards; 3 Penn. L. J. 343. Railroad depots are not exempt; 11 Wisc. 214; 10 Ohio St. 372; 37 N. H. 410. On the foreclosure of a mortgage surplus moneys take the place of the land and are subject to a lien; 17 Abb. Pr. 256; so also is a balance in court on sale of a lessee's interest in land and buildings; 63 Penn. 405. See, generally, Phillips, Mechanics' Liens.

Remedy is by scire facias, in some states; 14 Ark. 370; 1 Dutch. 317; 14 Tex. 37; 22 Mo. 140; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 186; 14 How. 434; 12 Penn. 45; by petition, in others; 11 Cush. 308; 4 Wisc. 451; 14 Ala. N. S. 33; 11 Ill. 519; 1 Iowa, 75. Judgment, when obtained, has the effect of a common-law judgment; 3 Wisc. 9.

Many of the states have made full provisions, by statute, for the liens of repairers of domestic ships and builders of ships and steamboats. These liens are generally held to be distinct from maritime liens, though in some respects partaking of the nature of such. For a full discussion of this subject, and a classification of the laws of the different states, see 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 106, and note.

LIEUTENANT. This word has now a narrower meaning than it formerly had: its true meaning is a deputy, a substitute, from the French lieu (place or post) and tenant (holder). Among civil officers we have lieutenant-governors, who in certain cases perform the duties of governors (see the names of the several states), lieutenants of police, etc. Among military men, lieutenant-general was formerly the title of a commanding general, but now it signifies the degree above major-general. Lieutenant-colonel is the officer between the colonel and the major. Lieutenant, simply, signifies the officer next below a captain. In the navy, a lieutenant is the second officer next in command to the captain of a ship.

LIFE. "The sum of the forces by which death is resisted." Bichat.

A state in which energy of function is ever resisting decay and dissolution.

It commences, for many legal purposes, at the period of quickening, when the first motion of the fœtus in utero is perceived by the mother. 1 Bla. Com. 129; Co. 3d Inst. 50. It ceases at death. See DEATH.

But physiology pronounces life as existing from the period of conception, because fœtuses in utero do die prior to quickening, and then all the signs of death are found to be perfect; Dean, Med. Jur. 129, 130.

For many important purposes, however, the law concedes to physiology the fact that life commences at conception, in ventre sa mère. See FŒTUS. Thus, it may receive a legacy, have a guardian assigned to it, and an estate limited to its use; 1 Bla. Com. 130. It is thus considered as alive for all beneficial purposes; 1 P. Wms. 329.

But for the transfer of civil rights the child must be born alive. The ascertainment of this, as a fact, depends upon certain signs which are always attendant upon life: the most important of these is crying. As to conditions of live birth, see BIRTH; INFANTICIDE.

Life is presumed to continue for one hundred years; 9 Mart. La. 257. As to the presumption of survivorship in case of the death of two persons, at or about the same time, see DEATH; 14 Cent. L. J. 367, a full article reprinted from the Irish L. Times.

LIFE-ANNUITY. An annual income to be paid during the continuance of a particular life. See ANNUITY.

LIFE-ASSURANCE. An insurance of a life upon the payment of a premium: this may be for the whole life, or for a limited time. On the death of the person whose life has been insured during the time for which it is insured, the insurer is bound to pay to the insured the money agreed upon. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1231; ASSURANCE; POLICY; LOSS.

LIFE-RENT. In Scotch Law. A right to use and enjoy a thing during life, the substance of it being preserved.

A life-rent cannot, therefore, be constituted upon things which perish in the use; and though it may upon subjects which gradually wear out by time, as household furniture, etc., yet it is generally applied to heritable subjects. Life-rents are divided into conventional and legal.

The conventional are either simple or by reservation. A simple life-rent, or by a separate constitution, is that which is granted by the proprietor in favor of another. A life-rent by reservation is that which a proprietor reserves to himself in the same writing by which he conveys the fee to another. Life-rents by law are the terce and the courtesy. See TERCE; COURTESY.

LIFE-RENTER. In Scotch Law. A tenant for life without waste. Bell, Dict.

LIGAN, LAGAN. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. 5 Co. 108; Hargr. St. Tr. 48; 1 Bla. Com. 292.

LIGEANCE. The true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. It signifies, also, the territory of a sovereign. See ALLEGIANCE.

LIGHT. The English doctrine of presumptive title to light and air, arising from the uninterrupted enjoyment of it for twenty years and upward, has not been followed in a majority of the United States; 19 Wend. 309; 19 Ohio St. 135; 33 Penn. 368; contra, 15 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 6 (a Delaware case); see, also, 1 Green, Ch. 57. See AIR. Nor in the United States does the doctrine of an implied reservation of an easement apply to an easement of light and air; 115 Mass. 204; 24 Iowa, 35; 33 Penn. 371; otherwise, if it is an easement of necessity; 58 Ga. 268; 5 W. Va. 1. See ANCIENT LIGHTS; AIR.

LIGHTERMAN. The owner or manager of a lighter. A lighterman is considered a common carrier. See LIGHTERS.

LIGHTERS. Small vessels employed in loading and unloading larger vessels.

The owners of lighters are liable like other common carriers for hire. It is a term of the contract on the part of the carrier or lighterman, implied by law, that his vessel is tight and fit for the purpose or employments for which he offers and holds it forth to the public; it is the immediate foundation and substratum of the contract that it is so: the law presumes a promise to that effect on the part of the carrier, without actual proof; and every principle of sound policy and public convenience requires it should be so; 5 East, 428; Abb. Shipp. 225; 1 Marsh. Ins. 254; Weskett, Ins. 328; Pars. Mar. Law.

LIGHTNING. An insurance policy provided that the insurer should be liable "for any loss or damage by lightning." The property insured was destroyed in a tornado. It was held, in an action for the loss, that the word lightning applies to any sudden and violent discharge of electricity occurring in nature, and that, as the evidence tended strongly to show the presence in the tornado of electrical disturbance presenting the usual characteristics of lightning, it was error to nonsuit the plaintiff; 11 N. W. Rep. 894.

LIGHTS. Those openings in a wall which are made rather for the admission of light than to look out of. 6 J. B. Moore, 47; 9 Bingh. 305. See ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Lamps carried on board vessels, under statutory regulations or otherwise, for the purpose of preventing collisions at night. See NAVIGATION RULES.

Lamps or lights placed in lighthouses, or other conspicuous positions, as aids to navigation at night. See NAVIGATION RULES.

LIMITATION IN LAW. A limitation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be holden only during the continuance of the condition under which it was granted, upon the determination of which the estate vests immediately in him in expectancy; 2 Bla. Com. 155.

LIMITATIONS. Of Civil Remedies. In general, by the theory and early practice of the common law, a party who had any legal ground of complaint against another might call the latter to answer in court at such time as suited his convenience; 13 East, 449. This privilege, however, it was soon found, might be productive of great inconvenience, and not unfrequently of great injustice. Parties might, and often did, wait till witnesses were dead or papers destroyed, and then proceeded to enforce claims to which at an earlier date a successful defence might have been made. Titles were thus rendered uncertain, the tenure of property insecure, and litigation fostered. To prevent these evils, statutes were passed limiting the time within which a party having a cause of action should appeal to the courts for redress,— hence called statutes of limitation. The doctrine of fines, of very great antiquity in the history of the common law, the purpose of which was to put an end to controversies, grew out of the efforts to obviate these evils, and frequent attempts, prior to the accession of James I., by statutes of restricted application, were made to the same end. But till the reign of that prince no general enactment applicable alike to personal and real actions had been passed.

In 1623, however, by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 16, entitled "An Act for Limitation of Actions, and for avoiding of Suits in Law," known and celebrated ever since as the Statute of Limitations, the law upon this subject was comprehensively declared substantially as it exists at the present day in England, whence our ancestors brought it with them to this country; and it has passed, with some modifications, into the statute-books of every state in the Union except Louisiana, whose laws of limitation are essentially the Prescriptions of the civil law, drawn from the Partidas, or Spanish Code.

The similarity between the statutes of the several states and those of England is such that the decisions of the British courts and those of this country are for the most part illustrative of all, and will be cited indiscriminately in this brief summary of the law as it now stands. Vide 5 B. & Ald. 204; 4 Johns. 317; 2 Caines, Cas. 143. One preliminary question, however, has arisen in this country, growing out of the provision of the national constitution prohibiting states from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, for which there is no English precedent. Upon this point the settled doctrine is that unless the law bars a right of action already accrued without giving a reasonable time within which to bring an action, it pertains to the remedy merely, and is valid; 4 Wheat. 122; 3 Dall. 386; 11 Pet. 420; 3 Whart. 15; 8 Mass. 423; 2 Gall. 141; 19 Pick. 578; 2 Mas. 169. Subject to this qualification, a law may extend or reduce the time already limited. But a cause of action already barred by pre-existing statutes will not be revived by a statute extending the time; 5 Metc. Mass. 400; 7 Penn. 292; 25 Vt. 41; 8 Blackf. 506; 2 Sandf. Ch. 61; 18 Pick. 532; 2 Greene (Iowa), 181; 2 Allen, 445; 11 Wisc. 432; 1 Oregon, 176; though if it be not already barred a statute extending the time will apply; 21 Ark. 95; 24 Vt. 620; 1 T. B. Monr. 424; 6 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 93.

Whatever may have been the disposition in the past, the courts are now inclined to construe these statutes liberally, so as to effectuate their intent; they are little inclined to fritter away their effect by refinements and subtleties; 1 Pet. 360; 8 Cra. 84; Ang. Lim. § 23.

Courts of equity, though not within the terms of the statute, have nevertheless uniformly conformed to its spirit, and have, as a general rule, been governed by its provisions, unless special circumstances of fraud or the like require, in the interests of justice, that they should be disregarded; 12 Pet. 56; 7 Johns. Ch. 90; 9 Pick. 242; 3 All. 42; 17 Ves. 96; 6 Pet. 61; Baldw. 419; 10 Wheat. 152; 4 How. 591; 10 Ohio, 424; 9 N. J. Eq. 425; 28 Ill. 44; 3 R. I. 237; Ang. Lim. § 183. And in some cases when claims are not barred by the statute of limitations, a court of equity will refuse to interfere, on the grounds of public policy, and the difficulty of doing entire justice between the parties when the original transaction may have become obscure by the lapse of time and the evidence lost. This is what is known as the doctrine of laches, q. v.; 94 U. S. 806; Ambl. 645; Bisph. Eq. § 260.

But in a proper case where there are no laches and where there is fraud undiscovered till the statute has become a bar, or it is the fault and wrong of the defendant that the plaintiff did not enforce his legal rights within the limited time, courts of equity will not hesitate to interfere in the interest of justice, and entertain suits long since barred at law; 4 How. 503; 11 Cl. & F. 714; 23 Iowa, 467; 12 Minn. 522; L. R. 8 Ch. App. 398; 11 Wall. 443. But here, again, courts of equity will proceed with great caution; 7 How. 819; and hold the complainant to allegation and proof of his ignorance of the fraud and when and how it was discovered; 1 Curt. C. C. 390; 1 Watts, 401.

And courts of admiralty are governed by substantially the same rules as courts of equity; 3 Mas. 91; 2 Sumn. 212; 3 Sumn. 286; 2 Gall. 477; Sprague, 163; 3 Salk. 227. And, although the statute does not apply in terms to probate courts, there seems to be no reason why it should not be applied according to the principles of equity; 1 Bradf. Surr. 1; contra, 61 Penn. 9, as to assets not administered.

AS TO PERSONAL ACTIONS.

It is generally provided that personal actions shall be brought within a certain specified time—usually six years or less—from the time when the cause of action accrues, and not after; 3 Binn. 374; 3 T. B. Mon. 113; 13 La. An. 161; and hereupon, the question at once arises when the cause of action in each particular case accrues.

Cause of action accrues when. The rule, that the cause of action accrues when and so soon as there is a right to apply to the court for relief, by no means solves the difficulty. When does the right itself so to apply accrue? Upon this point the decisions are so numerous and so conflicting, or, perhaps more accurately speaking, so controlled by particular circumstances, that no inflexible rule can be extracted therefrom. In general, it may be said that in actions of contract the cause of action accrues when there is a breach of the contract.

When a note is payable on demand, the statute begins to run from its date; 2 M. & W. 467; 9 Pick. 488; 10 N. H. 489; 5

Jones (Law), N. C. 139; 39 Me. 492; 7 Halst. 247; 50 Barb. 334; 17 Ohio, 9; 3 Grant's Cas. 138; 3 Rich. (S. C.) 182. The rule is the same if the note is payable "at any time within six years;" 39 Me. 492; or borrowed money is to be paid "when called on;" 1 Harr. & G. 439. But this is not true of a premium note payable in such portions and at such times as may be necessary to cover losses. There the statute only runs from the time of loss, and the assessment thereof; 40 N.Y. 320; and the statute runs in the case of an ordinary bank note, only from demand and refusal; 2 Sneed, 482. If the note be payable in certain days after demand, sight, or notice, the statute begins to run from the demand, sight, or notice; 13 Wend. 267; 2 Taunt. 323; 8 Dowl. & Ry. 374; 5 Halst. 114; 4 Harr. Del. 246; 24 Am. Rep. 605; s. c. 36 Mich. 487; demand of a note payable on demand should be made within the time limited for bringing the action on the note; else a note limited to six years might be kept open indefinitely by a failure to make a demand; 10 Pick. 120. Demand of a bill payable "after sight" or "after notice," should be within a reasonable time; 4 Mas. 336; 9 M. & W. 506. And when the note is on interest, this does not become barred by the statute till the principal, or some distinct portion of it, becomes barred; 2 Cush. 92. Demand upon a note or due bill, payable on demand, is not a condition precedent to a right of action; 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 294. The rule, that a promissory note payable on demand with interest, is a continuing security, does not apply between holder and maker; 41 N. Y. 581; s. c. 1 Am. Rep. 461. If the note be entitled to grace, the statute runs from the last day of grace; 1 Shipl. 412; 13 La. An. 602.

Where money is payable in instalments the statute runs as to each instalment from the time of the failure to pay it; 10 Shepl. (Me.) 400; 71 Penn. 208. But if the contract provides that on failure to pay one instalment the whole amount shall fall due, the statute runs as to the whole from such failure; 3 Gale & D. 402.

Where money is paid by mistake, the statute begins to run from the time of payment; 9 Cow. 674; 25 Penn. 164; also in case of usury; 6 Ga. 228; 35 Vt. 503; but a shorter time is frequently limited by statute, and where money is paid for another as surety; 6 Cow. 225; 45 N. Y. 268; 110 Mass. 345.

Where a contract takes effect upon some condition or contingency, or the happening of some event, the statute runs from the performance of the condition; 5 Pick. 384; 17 Pick. 407; Ang. Lim. § 113; or the happening of the contingency or event; 3 Penn. 149; 9 Wend. 287; 1 Whart. 292; and not from the date of the contract. On an agreement to devise, the statute runs from the death of the promissor; 9 Penn. 260. When money is paid, and there is afterwards a failure of consideration, the statute runs from the failure; 14 Mass. 425; 9 Bing. 748.

Where continuous services are rendered, as by an attorney in the conduct of a suit, or by a mechanic in doing a job; 7 Allen, 274; 55 Penn. 434; 36 N. Y. 255; 16 Ill. 341; 1 B. & Ad. 15; 4 Watts, 334; the statute begins to run from the completion of the service. On a promise of indemnity, when the promissee pays money or is damnified, the statute begins to run; 12 Metc. 130; 8 M. & W. 680; 14 Johns. 368; 3 Rawle, 275; 7 Pet. 113.

As to torts quasi ex contractu, the rule is that in cases of negligence, carelessness, unskilfulness, and the like, the statute runs from the time when these happen respectively, and not from the time when damages accrue therefrom; 4 Pet. 172; 4 Ala. 495; 36 Md. 501; 61 Barb. 136; 2 Strobb. 344. Thus, where an attorney negligently invests money in a poor security, the statute runs from the investment; 2 Brod. & B. 73; so, where a party neglected to remove goods from a warehouse, whereby the plaintiff was obliged to pay damages, the statute runs from the neglect, and not from the payment of damages; 3 Johns. 137; so, where the defendant agreed to go into another state and collect some money, and on his return to pay off a certain judgment, the statute was held to run from the return and demand upon him; 3 Ired. 481.

The breach of the contract is the gist of the action, and not the damages resulting therefrom; 5 B. & C. 259; 1 Sandf. 98; 3 B. & Ald. 288. Thus, where the defendant had contracted to sell the plaintiff a quantity of salt, but was unable, by reason of the destruction of the salt, to deliver on demand, and prolonged negotiations for settlement till the statutory limitation had expired, and then refused, the statute was held to run from the demand, the non-delivery being a breach of the contract; 1 E. L. & Eq. 44. So, where a notary public neglects to give seasonable notice of non-payment of a note, and the bank employing him was held responsible for the failure, upon suit brought by the bank against the notary to recover the damages it had been obliged to pay, the action was held to be barred, it not being within six years of the notary's default, though within six years of the time when the bank was required to pay damages; 6 Cow. 278.

So, where an attorney makes a mistake in a writ, whereupon, after prolonged litigation, nonsuit follows, but not till an action against the indorser on the note originally sued has become barred, the mistake was held to set the statute in motion; 4 Pet. 172; 4 Ala. 495.

A captain who barratrously loses his vessel is freed from his liability to the underwriter in six years after the last act in the barratrous proceeding; 1 Campb. 539. Directors of a bank liable by statute for mismanagement are discharged in six years after the insolvency of the bank is made known; 16 Mass. 68.

In some states a distinction has been taken in cases where a public officer has neglected duties imposed on him by law, and the statute is in such cases said to run only from the time when the injury is developed; 26 Conn. 324; but see 8 Shepl. 314; 97 Penn. 47; and it has been held that if a sheriff make an insufficient return, and there is in consequence a reversal of judgment, the statute runs from the return, and not from the reversal of judgment; 16 Mass. 456. So where a sheriff collects money and makes due return but fails to pay over, the statute runs from the return; 11 Ala. 679; or from the demand by the creditor; 10 Metc. 244. If he suffers an escape, it runs from the escape; 2 Mod. 212; if he takes insufficient bail, from the return of non est inventus upon execution against the principal debtor; 17 Mass. 60; 20 Me. 93; if he receive money in scire facias, from its reception; 9 Ga. 413; if he neglects to attach sufficient property, on the return of the writ, and not from the time when the insufficiency of the property is ascertained; 27 Me. 443.

The same principle applies in cases of torts pure and simple; 24 Penn. 186; 16 Pick. 241; 1 Rawle, 27; 4 Ohio, 331; 6 Ohio St. 276.

An action against a recorder of deeds for damages caused by a false certificate of search against encumbrances on real property, must be brought within six years from the date of the search, and not from the date of the discovery of the lien overlooked or of the loss suffered by the plaintiff; 97 Penn. 47.

In cases of nuisance, the statute begins to run from the injury to the right, without reference to the question of the amount of the damage, the law holding the violation of a right as some damage; 8 East, 4; 16 Pick. 241; 1 Rawle, 27; 10 Wend. 260. And so when a party having a right to use land for a specific purpose puts it to other uses, or wrongfully disposes of property rightfully in possession, the statute begins to run from the perversion; 24 Penn. 186. In trover, the statute runs from the conversion; 7 Mod. 99; 4 H. & J. 393; 21 Ga. 454; 15 Mass. 82; 5 B. & C. 149; in replevin, from the unlawful taking or detention. The limitation in the statute of James of actions for slander to two years next after the words spoken, applies only to cases where the words are actionable in themselves, and not when they become actionable by reason of special damage arising from the speaking thereof; 1 Salk. 206; 10 Wend. 167; 5 Watts, 308. The limitation extends neither to slander of title; Cro. Car. 140; nor to libel; Arch. Pl. 29. In cases of trespass, crim. con., etc., the statute runs from the time the injury was committed; 5 N. H. 314.

Adverse possession of personal property gives title in six years after the possession becomes adverse; 16 Vt. 124; 1 Brev. 111; 16 Ala. N. S. 696; 9 Tex. 123; 3 Metc. 137; 17 Tex. 206. But one who holds by consent of true owners is not entitled to have the statute run in his favor until denial of the true owner's claim; 34 Ala. 188; Ang. Lim. 304, n.; 55 N. H. 61. But different adverse possessions cannot be linked together to give title; 3 Strobh. 31; 1 Swan, 501; 11 Humphr. 369. The statute acts upon the title, and, when the bar is perfect, transfers the property to the adverse possessor; while in contracts for the payment there is no such thing as adverse possession, but the statute simply affects the remedy, and not the debt; 18 Ala. N. S. 248.

Computation of time. In computing the time limited, much discussion has been had in the courts whether the day when the statute begins to run is to be included or excluded, but without any satisfactory result. It is most generally held that when the computation is from an act done the day upon which the act is done is to be included, and when it is from the date simply, then if a present interest is to commence from the date the day of the date is included, but if merely used as a terminus from which to compute time, then the day of the date is excluded; 9 Cra. 104; 3 Term, 623; 1 Ld. Raym. 280; 17 Penn. 48; Price, Lim. & Liens, 361; Hob. 139; 15 Mass. 193; 2 Cow. 605. This rule, however, of including the day upon which an act is done, is subject to so many exceptions and qualifications that it can hardly be said to be a rule, and many of the cases are wholly irreconcilable with it. It has been well said that whether the day upon which an act is done or an event happens is to be included or excluded, depends upon the circumstances and reasons of the thing, so that the intention of the parties may be effected; and such a construction should be given as will operate most to the ease of the party entitled to favor, and by which rights will be secured and forfeitures avoided; 1 Tex. 107; Ang. Lim. c. VI. Fractions of a day are not regarded, unless it becomes necessary in a question of priority; 2 Story, 571; 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 499; 8 Ves. 83; 3 Denio, 12; 6 Gray, 316; and then only in some cases, usually in questions concerning private acts and transactions; 20 Vt. 653.

Exceptions to general rule. If, when the right of action would otherwise accrue and the statute begin to run, there is no person who can exercise the right, the statute does not begin to run till there is such a person; 8 Cra. 84; for this would be contrary to the intent of the various statutes. Thus, if a note matures after the decease of the promisee, and prior to the issue of letters of administration, the statute runs from the date of the letters of administration unless otherwise specified in the statute; 5 B. & Ald. 204; 13 Wend. 267; 9 Leigh, 79; 7 H. & Johns. 14; 4 Whart. 180; 32 Vt. 176; 15 Conn. 145, 149; and there must be a person in being to be sued, otherwise the statute will not begin to run; 12 Wheat. 129; 5 Harr. 299.

But the courts will not recognize exemptions, where the statute has once begun to run. So where the statute begins to run before the death of the testator or intestate, it is not interrupted by his death; 4 M. & W. 43; 3 M. & C. 455; 4 Edw. Ch. 733; 3 McLean, 568; nor by the death of the administrator; 17 Ala. N. S. 291; nor by his removal from the state; 15 Ala. N. S. 545. So an insolvent's discharge as effectually removes him from pursuit by his creditor as absence from the state; but it is not an exception within the statute, and cannot avail; 1 Whart. 106; 1 Penn. 332; 1 Cow. 356; 6 Gray, 517. A creditor's absence makes it inconvenient for him to return and sue; but as he can so do, he must, or be barred; 17 Ves. Ch. 87; 1 Wils. Ch. 134; 1 Johns. 165. And it has ever been held that a statutory impediment to the assertion of title will not help the party so impeded; 2 Wheat. 25; but when a state of war exists between the governments of the debtor and creditor, the running of the statute is suspended; 22 Wall. 576; Chase, Dec. 286; 29 Ark. 238; 53 Ga. 274; 62 Mo. 140; 11 Bush, 191; 13 Wall. 158; and revives in full force on the restoration of peace.

There are many authorities, however, to show that if, by the interposition of courts, the necessity of the case, or the provisions of a statute, a person cannot be sued for a limited time, the currency of the statute is suspended during that period. In other words, if the law interposes to prevent suit, it will see to it that he who has a right of action shall not be prejudiced thereby; 4 Md. Ch. Dec. 368; 5 Ga. 66; 3 McLean, 568; 12 Wheat. 129; 2 Denio, 577; 20 How. 128. But see 21 Penn. 220. Thus, an injunction suspends the statute; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 182; 12 Gratt. 579; 2 Stockt. 347; 10 Humphr. 365; 31 N. Y. 345; 13 La. An. 57; 106 Mass. 347. And so does an assignment of an insolvent's effects, as between the estate and the creditors; 7 Metc. 435; 7 Rich. (S. C.) 43; 12 La. An. 216; though not, as has just been said, as between the debtor and his creditor; 6 Gray, 517. But when the statute does not in terms exclude and limit a particular case, the court will not extend it, although the case comes within the reason of the statute; 15 Ala. 194; 2 Curt. 480; 17 Ohio St. 548; 53 Penn. 382.

By the special provisions of the statute, infants, married women, persons non compos mentis, those imprisoned, and those beyond seas, out of the state, out of the realm, or out of the country, are regarded as affected by the incapacity to sue, or, in other words, as being under disability, and have, therefore, the right of action secured to them until the expiration of the time limited, after the removal of the disability. These personal exceptions have been strictly construed, and the party alleging the disability has been very uniformly held to bring himself exactly within the express words of the statute to entitle himself to the benefit of the exception. To bring himself within the spirit or supposed reason of the exception is not enough; 1 Cow. 356; 3 Green, N. J. 171; 2 Curt. C. C. 480; 17 Ves. Ch. 87; 4 Ben. 459. And this privilege is accorded although the person laboring under the statute disability might in fact bring suit. Thus, an infant may sue before he arrives at his majority, but he is not obliged to, and his right is saved if he does not; 2 Saund. 117. The disability must, however, be continuous and identical. One disability cannot be superadded to another so as to prolong the time, and if the statute once begins to run, whether before a disability exists or after it has been removed, no intervention of another and subsequent disability can stop it; 29 Penn. 495; 15 B. Mon. 30; 54 Ill. 101; 2 McCord, 269. When, however, there are two or more coexisting disabilities at the time the right of action accrues, suit need not be brought till all are removed; Plowd. 375; 20 Mo. 530; 1 Atk. Ch. 610; 1 Shepl. 397; 3 Johns. Ch. 129.

"Beyond seas" means, generally, without the jurisdiction of the state or government in which the question arises; 1 Show. 91; 32 E. L. & Eq. 84; 3 Cra. 174; 3 Wheat. 341; 1 H. & M'H. 350; 14 Pet. 141; 2 McCord, 331; 13 N. H. 79; 24 Conn. 432; 52 N. H. 41; 6 Allen, 428. In Pennsylvania, Missouri, Illinois, and Michigan, however, and perhaps other states, contrary to the very uniform current of authorities, beyond seas is held to mean out of the limits of the United States; 2 Dall. 217; 9 S. & R. 285; 14 Mo. 431; 20 id. 530; 2 Greene (Iowa), 602; 24 Ill. 159. And the United States courts adopt and follow the decisions of the respective states upon the interpretation of their respective laws; 11 Wheat. 361. What constitutes absence out of the state within the meaning of the statute, is wholly undeterminable by any rule to be drawn from the decisions. It seems to be agreed that temporary absence is not enough; but what is a temporary absence is by no means agreed. Vide Ang. Lim. § 200, n.

The word return, as applied to an absent debtor, applies as well to foreigners, or residents out of the state coming to the state, as to citizens of the state who have gone abroad and have returned; 3 Johns. 267; 11 Pick. 36; 3 R. I. 178. And in order to set the statute in motion the return must be open, public, and such and under such circumstances as will give a party, who exercises ordinary diligence, an opportunity to bring his action; 1 Pick. 263; 3 Gill & J. 158; 15 Vt. 727; 26 Barb. 208. Such a return, though temporary, will be sufficient; 3 Cra. 174. But if the return is such and under such circumstances as to show that the party does not intend that his creditor shall take advantage of his presence, or such, in fact, that he cannot without extraordinary vigilance avail himself of it,—if it is secret, concealed, or clandestine,—it is insufficient. The absence of one of several joint-plaintiffs does not prevent the running of the statute; 4 Term, 516; but the absence of one of several joint-defendants does; 29 E. L. & Eq. 271. This at least seems to be the settled law of England; but the cases in the several states of the Union are conflicting upon these points. See 1 Dutch. 219; 18 N. Y. 567; 18 B. Mon. 312; 4 Sneed, 99. The exception as to being beyond seas does not apply to defendants in Pennsylvania; 1 Miles, 164.

Commencement of process. The question sometimes arises as to what constitutes the bringing an action or the commencement of process, and this is very uniformly held to be the delivery or transmission by mail in due course of the writ or process to the sheriff, in good faith, for service; 14 Wend. 649; 15 Mass. 359; 1 S. & R. 236; 20 Md. 479; 8 Greenl. (Mo.) 447; 1 W. Chip. 94. The date of the writ is primâ facie evidence of the time of its issuance; 17 Pick. 407; 7 Me. 370; but is by no means conclusive; 2 Burr. 950; 15 Mass. 364.

If the writ or process seasonably issued fail of a sufficient service or return by any unavoidable accident, or by any default or neglect of the officer to whom it is committed, or is abated, or the action is otherwise avoided by the death of any party thereto, or for any matter of form, or judgment for plaintiff be arrested or reversed, the plaintiff may, either by virtue of the statutory provision or by reason of an implied exception to the general rule, commence a new action within a reasonable time; and that reasonable time is usually fixed by the statute at one year, and by the courts in the absence of statutory provision at the same period; 1 Ld. Raym. 434; 2 Penn. 382; 1 Bailey (S. C.), 542; 10 Wend. 278. Irregularity of the mail is an inevitable accident within the meaning of the statute; 8 Me. 447. And so is a failure of service by reason of the removal of the defendant, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, from the county in which he had resided and to which the writ was seasonably sent; 12 Metc. 15. But a mistake of the attorney as to time of the sitting of the court, and consequent failure to enter, is not; 29 Me. 458. An abatement by the marriage of the female plaintiff is no abatement within the statute; it is rather a voluntary abandonment; 8 Cra. 84. And so, generally, of any act of the party or his attorney whereby the suit is abated or the action fails; 3 M'Cord, 452; 29 Me. 458; 1 Mich. 252; 6 Cush. 417.

A nonsuit is in some states held to be within the equity of the statute; 13 Ired. 123; 4 Ohio St. 172; 12 La. An. 672; but generally otherwise; 1 S. & R. 236; 3 M'Cord, 452; 3 Harr. N. J. 269; 6 Cush. 417. If there are two defendants, and by reason of a failure of service upon one an alias writ is taken out, this is no continuance, but a new action, and the statute is a bar; 6 Watts, 528. So of amending bill introducing new parties; 6 Pet. 61; 10 B. Mon. 84; 3 Me. 535. A dismissal of the action because of the clerk's omission seasonably to enter it on the docket is for matter of form, within the Massachusetts statute, and a new suit may be instituted within one year thereafter; 7 Gray, 165; and so is a dismissal for want of jurisdiction, where the action is brought in the wrong county; 1 Gray, 580. In Maine, however, a wrong venue is not a matter of form; 38 Me. 217. The statute is a bar to an action at law after a dismissal from chancery for want of jurisdiction; 1 Vern. 74; 16 Wend. 572; 2 Munf. 181.

Lex fori governs. Questions under the statute are to be decided by the law of the place where the action is brought, and not by the law of the place where the contract is made or the wrong done. If the statute has run against a claim in one state, the remedy is gone, but the right is not extinguished; and therefore the right may be enforced in another state where the remedy is still open, the time limited by the statute not having expired; 15 East, 439; 11 Pick. 36, 522; 7 Md. 91; 23 How. 132; 13 Gray, 535; 13 Pet. 312. So if the statute of the place of the contract is still unexpired, yet an action brought in another place is governed by the lex fori, and may be barred; 1 Caines, 402; 8 Dow, P. C. 516; 5 Cl. & F. 1. But statutes giving title by adverse possession are to be distinguished from statutes of limitation. Adverse possession gives title; lapse of time bars the remedy only. And a right acquired by adverse possession in the place where the adverse possession is had is good elsewhere; 11 Wheat. 361; 5 Cranch, 358; 9 How. 407; Story, Confl. Laws, 582.

Public rights not affected. Statutes of limitation do not on principles of public policy run against the state or the United States, unless it is expressly so provided in the statute itself. No laches is to be imputed to the government; 2 Mas. 312; 18 Johns. 228; 4 Mass. 528. But this principle has no application when a party seeks his private rights in the name of the state; 4 Ga. 115; but see 6 Penn. 290. Counties, towns, and municipal bodies not possessed of the attributes of sovereignty have no exemption; 4 Dev. 568; 22 Me. 445; 12 Ill. 38; 13 Wall. 62; but see 8 Ohio, 298. If, however, the sovereign becomes a party in a private enterprise, as, for instance, a stockholder in a bank, he subjects himself to the operation of the statute; 3 Pet. 30; 2 Brock. 393.

Particular classes of actions. Actions of trespass, trespass quare clausum, detinue, account, trover, replevin, and upon the case (except actions for slander), and action of debt for arrearages of rent, and of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, or simple contract debt, are usually limited to six years. Actions for slander, libel, assault, and the like, are usually limited to a less time, generally two years. Judgments of courts not of record, as courts of justices of the peace, and county commissioners' courts, are in some states, either by statute or the decisions of the highest courts, included in the category of debts founded on contract without specialty, and accordingly come within the statute; 13 Metc. 251; 2 Bail. 58; 37 Me. 29; 2 Grant, Cas.

353; 6 Barb. 583; 3 Living. 367. In others, however, they are excluded upon the ground that the statute applies only to debts founded on contracts in fact, and not to debts founded on contracts implied by law; 14 Johns. 480.

Actions of assumpsit, though not specifically named in the original statute of James I. as included within the limitation of six years, were held in England, after much discussion, to be fairly embraced in actions of "trespass;" 4 Mod. 105; 4 B. & C. 44; 4 Ad. & E. 912. The same rule has been adopted in this country; 5 Ohio, 444; 3 Pet. 270; 1 Morr. Iowa, 59; 8 Cra. 98; but see 12 M. & M. 141; and, in fact, assumpsit is expressly included in most of the statutes. And it has also been held in this country that statutes of limitation apply as well to motions made under a statute as to actions; 11 Humphr. 423. Such statutes are in aid of the common law, and furnish a general rule for cases that are analogous in their subject-matter, but for which a remedy unknown to the common law has been provided by statutes; as where compensation is sought for land taken for a railroad; 23 Penn. 371; 32 Conn. 521.

But it must be remembered that in all such cases the debt is not discharged though the right of action to enforce it may be gone. So, where a creditor has a lien on goods for a balance due, he may hold them, though the statute has run against his debt; 3 Esp. 81; 11 Conn. 160; 26 Me. 330; 28 Ill. 44. And an acceptor may retain funds to indemnify him against his acceptances, though the acceptances may have been outstanding longer than the time limited by statute; 3 Campb. 418.

A set-off of a claim against which the statute has run cannot usually be pleaded in bar; 5 East, 16; 3 Johns. 261; 8 Watts, 260; 5 Gratt. 360; 14 Penn. 531; though when there are cross-demands accruing at nearly the same time, and the plaintiff has saved the statute by suing out process, the defendant will be allowed to set off his demand; 2 Esp. 569; 2 Green, N. J. L. 545; and, generally, when there is any equitable matter of defence in the nature of set-off, or which might be the subject of a cross-action, growing out of the subject-matter for which the action is brought, courts will permit it to be set up although a cross-action or an action on the claim in set-off might be barred by the statute; 8 Rich. So. C. 113; 9 Ga. 398; 11 E. L. & Eq. 10; 8 B. Monr. 580; 3 Stockt. 44.

Debts by specialty, as contracts under seal, judgments of courts of record (except foreign judgments, and judgments of courts out of the state, upon which the decisions are very discordant), liabilities imposed by statute, awards under seal, or where the submission is under seal, indentures reserving rent, and actions for legacies, are affected only by the general limitation of twenty years; Angell, Lim. § 77. A mortgage, though under seal, does not take the note, not witnessed, secured thereby, with it, out of the limitation of simple contracts; 7 Wend. 94. And though liabilities imposed by statute are specialties, a liability under a by-law made by virtue of a charter is not; 6 E. L. & Eq. 309; on the ground that by becoming a member of the company enacting the by-laws the party consents and agrees to assume the liabilities imposed thereby.

In Massachusetts, Vermont, and Maine, the statute is regulated in its application to witnessed promissory notes. In Massachusetts an action brought by the payee of a witnessed promissory note, his executor or administrator, is excepted from the limitation of simple contracts, and is only barred by the lapse of twenty years. But the indorsee of such a note must sue within six years from the time of the transfer to him; 4 Pick. 384; though he may sue after that time in the name of the payee, with his consent; 1 Gray, 261; 2 Curtis, C. C. 448. If there are two promissees to the note, and the signature of only one is witnessed, the note as to the other is not a witnessed note; 115 Mass. 599; 18 Shepl. 49. And the attestation of the witness must be with the knowledge and consent of the maker of the note; 8 Pick. 246; 1 Williams, Vt. 26. An attested indorsement signed by the promissee, acknowledging the note to be due, is not a witnessed note; 23 Pick. 282; but the same acknowledgment for value received, with a promise to pay the note, is; 1 Metc. Mass. 21. If the note be payable to the maker's own order, witnessed and indorsed by the maker in blank, the indorsement being without attestation, an action by the first indorsee is barred in six years; 4 Metc. Mass. 219. And even if the indorsement be attested, a second indorsee or holder by delivery, not being the original payee, is barred; 13 Metc. 128.

Statute bar avoided, when. Trusts in general are not within the operation of the statute, where they are direct and exclusively within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, and the question arises between the trustees and the cestui que trust; 7 Johns. Ch. 90; 1 Watts, 275; 23 Penn. 472; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 53; 5 R. I. 79; 9 Pick. 212. And of this character are the trusts of executors, administrators, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and the like. The claim or title of such trustees is that of the cestui que trust; 2 Sch. & L. 607, 633; 4 Whart. 177; 71 Penn. 106; 1 Johns. Ch. 314; 4 Pick. 288. Special limitations to actions at law are made in some states in favor of executors and administrators, modifying or abrogating the rule in equity; and as these laws are made in the interest of the trust funds, it is the duty of the executor or administrator to plead the special statute which applies to him as such and protects the estate he represents, though he is not bound to plead the general statute; 13 Mass. 203; 3 N. H. 491; 15 id. 6; 15 S. & R. 231; 2 Dess. 577; 4 Wash. C. C. 639.

If, however, the trustee deny the right of his cestui que trust, and claim adversely to him, and these facts come to the knowledge of the cestui que trust, the statute will begin to run from the time when the facts become known; 9 Pick. 212; 10 Pet. 223; 3 Gill & J. 389; 22 Md. 142; 52 Mo. 182; 11 Penn. 207.

Principal and agent. The relation of an agent to his principal is a fiduciary one, and the statute does not begin to run so long as there is no breach of the trust or duty. When, however, there is such a breach, and the principal has knowledge of it, the statute will begin to run; 3 Gill & J. 389; 5 Cra. 560; 4 Jones (N. C.), 155; 12 Barb. 293; 32 Conn. 520. In many cases, a lawful demand upon the agent to perform his duty, and neglect or refusal to comply, are necessary to constitute a breach. As when money is placed in the hands of an agent with which to purchase property, and the agent neglects to make the purchase, there must be a demand for the money before the statute will begin to run; 5 Ired. 507; 6 Cow. 376; 24 Penn. 52; 48 id. 524; so where property is placed in the hands of an agent to be sold, and he neglects to sell; 2 Gill & J. 389. If, however, the agent's conduct is such as to amount to a declaration on his part that he will not perform his duty, or if he has disabled himself from performing it, it is tantamount to a repudiation of the trust, or an adverse claim against the cestui que trust, and the same consequences follow. No demand is necessary; the right of action accrues at once upon the declaration, and the statute then begins to run; 10 Gill & J. 422.

But where a demand is necessary, it should itself be made within the limited time; otherwise an agent might be subject all his lifetime to demands, however stale; 15 Wend. 302; 17 Mass. 145; 66 Penn. 192; see 10 Johns. 285; unless the agent, by his own act, prevents a demand; 6 Cush. 501. The rendering an untrue account by a collection or other agent would seem to be such a breach of duty as to warrant an action without demand, and would therefore set the statute in motion; 17 Mass. 145. If the custom of trade or the law makes it the clear duty of an agent to pay over money collected without a demand, then if the principal has notice the statute begins to run from the time of collection; and when there is no such custom or law, if the agent having funds collected gives notice to his principal, the statute will begin to run after the lapse of a reasonable time within which to make the demand, though no demand be made; 4 Sandf. 590.

In equity, as has been seen, fraud practised upon the plaintiff so that the fact of his right to sue does not come to his knowledge till after the expiration of the statute of limitations, is held to open the case so that he may bring his action within the time limited, dating from the discovery of the fraud. But herein the courts proceed with great caution, and require not only a clear case of fraudulent concealment, but the absence of negligence on the part of the party seeking to obviate the statute limitation by the replication of fraud; 7 How. 819; 12 Penn. 49; 1 Curt. C. C. 390; 5 Johns. Ch. 522; 2 Denio, 577; 11 Ohio, 194; 20 N. H. 187. In some states, fraudulent concealment of the cause of action is made by statute a cause of exemption from its effect in courts of law as well as of equity. And the courts construe the saving clause with great strictness, and hold that means of knowledge of the concealment are equivalent to knowledge in fact; 8 Allen, 130; 39 Me. 404. In the absence of statutory provision, the admissibility of the replication of fraud in courts of law has been the subject of contradictory decisions in the different states. In New York (20 Johns. 30), in Virginia (4 Leigh, 474), and in North Carolina (3 Murph. 115), it is inadmissible. But in the United States courts (1 McLean, 185), Pennsylvania (12 S. & R. 128), Indiana (4 Black, 85), New Hampshire (8 Foster, 26), South Carolina (8 Rich. Eq. 130), it is held to be admissible; 5 Mas. 143; and this is the rule generally prevalent in the United States.

Running accounts. Such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant were by the original statute of James I. exempted from its operation. The earlier statutes of limitation in this country contained the same exception. But it has been very generally omitted in late revised codes. Among the accounts excepted from the operation of the statute all accounts current were early held to be included; 6 Term, 189; if they contained upon either side any item upon which the right of action accrued within six years, whether the accounts were between merchant and merchant or other persons. And this construction of the law, based, as is said in some cases, upon the ground that such accounts come within the equity of the exception in respect to merchants' accounts, and in others upon the ground that every new item and credit in an account given by one party to another is an admission of there being some unsettled account between them, and, as an acknowledgment, sufficient to take the case out of the statute, has taken the form of legislative enactment in many states in this country, and, in the absence of such enactment, has been generally followed by the courts; 20 Johns. 576; 6 Pick. 364; 6 Me. 308; 6 Conn. 246; 4 Rand. 488; 12 Pet. 300; 11 Gill & J. 212; 4 M'Cord, 215; 3 Harr. N. J. 266; 5 Cra. 15; 7 id. 350; 1 Md. 333; 25 Penn. 296; 30 Cal. 126.

But there must be a reciprocity of dealing between the respective parties, and the accounts must be such that there may be a fair implication that it is understood that the items of one account are to be a set-off so far as they go against the items of the other account; 2 Sumn. 410; 40 Mo. 244; 2 Hals.

357; 4 Cra. 696; 1 Edw. Ch. 417; 25 Penn. 296. Where the items of account are all on one side, as between a shopkeeper and his customer, or where goods are charged and payments credited, there is no mutuality, and the statute bars the account; 4 M'Cord, 215; 1 Sandf. 220; 17 S. & R. 347; 18 Ala. 274. And where, in the case of mutual account, after a statement, the balance has been struck and agreed upon, the statute at once applies to such balance as a distinct demand; 2 Saund. 125; 6 Me. 308; 1 Daveis, 294; 12 Pet. 300; 7 Cra. 147; unless it was made the first item of a new mutual account; 3 Pick. 96; 1 Mod. 270; 8 Cl. & F. 121.

A closed account is not a stated account. In order to constitute the latter, an account must have been rendered by one party, and expressly or impliedly assented to by the other; 8 Pick. 187; 6 Me. 308; 12 Pet. 300; 7 Cra. 147. Accounts between merchant and merchant are exempted from the operation of the statute, if current and mutual, although no item appears on either side within six years; 19 Ves. 180; 2 Saund. 124; 8 Bligh, 352; 6 Pick. 364; 5 Cra. 15; 13 Penn. 310; 1 Smith (Ind.), 217. A single transaction between two merchants is not within the exception; 17 Penn. 238; nor is an account between partners; 3 R. I. 87; nor an account between two joint-owners of a vessel; 10 B. Monr. 112; nor an account for freight under a charter-party, although both parties are merchants; 6 Pet. 151.

New promise to pay debt barred. There is another important class of exceptions, not made by the statute, but by the courts, wherein, although the statutory limitation may have expired, parties bringing themselves within the exception have always been allowed to recover. In actions of assumpsit, a new express promise to pay, or an acknowledgment of existing indebtedness made under such circumstances as to be equivalent to a new promise and within six years before the time of action brought, will take the case out of the operation of the statute, although the original cause of action accrued more than six years before that time. And this proceeds upon the ground that as the statutory limitation merely bars the remedy and does not discharge the debt, there is something more than a merely moral obligation to support the promise,—to wit, a pre-existent debt, which is a sufficient consideration for the new promise; 2 Mas. 151; 8 Gill, 155; 19 Ill. 109; 26 Vt. 230; 9 S. & R. 128. The new promise upon this sufficient consideration constitutes, in fact, a new cause of action; 4 East, 399; 6 Taunt. 210; 1 Pet. 351.

This was undoubtedly a liberal construction of the statute; but it was early adopted, and has maintained itself, in the face of much adverse criticism, to the present time. While, however, at an early period there was an inclination of the courts to accept the slightest and most ambiguous expressions as evidence of a new promise, the spirit and tendency of modern decisions are towards greater strictness, and seem to be fairly expressed in the learned judgment of Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351. "It has often been matter of regret, in modern times, that, in the construction of the statute of limitations, the decisions had not proceeded upon principles better adapted to carry into effect the real objects of the statute; that, instead of being viewed in an unfavorable light, as an unjust and discreditable defence, it had [not] received such support as would have made it, what it was intended to be, emphatically a statute of repose. It is a wise and beneficial law, not designed merely to raise a presumption of payment of a just debt from lapse of time, but to afford security against stale demands after the true state of the transactions may have been forgotten, or be incapable of explanation, by reason of the death or removal of witnesses. It has a manifest tendency to produce speedy settlement of accounts, and to suppress those prejudices which may rise up at a distance of time and baffle every honest effort to counteract or overcome them. Parol evidence may be offered of confessions (a species of evidence which, it has been often observed, it is hard to disprove and easy to fabricate) applicable to such remote times as may leave no means to trace the nature, extent, or origin of the claim, and thus open the way to the most oppressive charges. If we proceed one step further, and admit, that loose and general expressions, from which a probable or possible inference may be deduced of the acknowledgment of a debt by a court or jury, that, as the language of some cases has been, any acknowledgment, however slight, or any statement not amounting to a denial of the debt, that any admission of the existence of an unsettled account, without any specification of amount or balance, and however indeterminate and casual, are yet sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and let in evidence, aliunde, to establish any debt, however large and at whatever distance of time; it is easy to perceive that the wholesome objects of the statute must be in a great measure defeated, and the statute virtually repealed." . . . "If the bar is sought to be removed by the proof of a new promise, that promise, as a new cause of action, ought to be proved in a clear and explicit manner, and be in its terms unequivocal and determinate; and, if any conditions are annexed, they ought to be shown to be performed."

And to the same general purport are the following cases, although it is undeniable that in the application of the rule there seems in some cases to be a looseness and liberality which hardly comport with the rule. 32 Me. 260; 14 N. H. 422; 22 Vt. 179; 7 Hill, N. Y. 45; 16 Penn. 210; 12 Ill. 146; 4 Fla. 481; 5 Ga. 486; 9 B. Monr. 614; 10 Ark. 134; 11 Ired. 445; 8 Gratt. 110; 20 Ala. N. s. 687; 4 Zabr. 427; 14 N. H. 422; 12 Ill. 146; 4 Gray, 606; 33 Vt. 9; 5 Nev. 206; 54 Penn. 172; 11 How. 493; 8 Fost. 26.

A new provision to pay the principal only, does not except the interest from the operation of the statute; 29 Penn. 189. Nor does an agreement to refer take the claim out of the statute; 1 Sneed, 464; nor the insertion, by an insolvent debtor, of an outlawed claim in a schedule of his creditors required by law; 2 Miles, 424; 10 Penn. 129; 7 Gray, 274 (but this is not so in Louisiana; 14 La. An. 612); 12 Metc. 470; nor an agreement not to take advantage of the statute; 29 Me. 47; 17 Penn. 232; 8 Md. 374; 9 Leigh, 381. If such an agreement were valid, it might be made part of the contract, and thus the object of the law would be defeated; 32 Me. 169. Nor will a devise of property to pay debts exempt debts upon which the statute has run prior to the testator's death; 13 Ala. 611; 4 Whart. 445; 4 Penn. 56; 13 Gratt. 329; 4 Sandf. 427.

Nor, in general, will any statement of a debt, made officially, in pursuance of special legal requirement, or with another purpose than to recognize it as an existing debt; 5 Me. 140; 12 E. L. & Eq. 191; 9 Cush. 390; 30 Me. 425; 32 Ala. 134. Nor will a deed of assignment made by the debtor for the payment of certain debts, and of his debts generally, and a partial payment by the assignor to a creditor; 1 R. I. 81; 6 E. L. & Eq. 520; nor the entry of a debt in an unsigned schedule of the debtor's liabilities, made for his own use; 30 Me. 425; nor an undelivered mortgage to secure a debt against which the statute has run, though duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded; 6 Cush. 151. But if the mortgage be delivered, it will be a sufficient acknowledgment to exempt the debt secured thereby from the operation of the statute; 4 Cush. 559; 18 Conn. 257; 14 Tex. 672. And so will the answer to a bill in chancery which expressly sets forth the existence of such a debt; 4 Sandf. 427; 3 Gill. 166.

If there is any thing said to repel the inference of a promise, or inconsistent therewith, the statute will not be avoided; 1 Harr. & J. 219; 23 Penn. 452; 6 Pet. 86; 2 Cra. C. C. 120; 5 Blackf. 436; 11 La. An. 712; 14 Me. 300; 4 Mo. 100; 15 Wend. 137. "The account is due, and I supposed it had been paid, but did not know of its being ever paid," is no new promise; 8 Cra. 72. If the debtor admits that the debt is due, but intimates his purpose to avail himself of the bar of the statute, the acknowledgment is insufficient; 2 Dev. & B. 82; 2 Browne, 35; 29 Conn. 457. So if he says he will pay if he owes, but denies that he owes; 3 Me. 97; 2 Pick. 368. So if he states his inability to pay; 22 Pick. 291; 13 N. H. 486. So if he admits the claim to have been once due, but claims that it is paid by an account against the claimant; 3 Fairf. 72; 5 Conn. 480; 11 Conn. 160. "I am too unwell to settle now; when I am better, I will settle your account:" held insufficient; 9 Leigh, 381. So of an offer to pay a part in order to get the claim out of the hands of the creditor; 2 Bail. So. C. 283; and of an admission that the account is right; 4 Dana, 505.

If the new promise is subject to conditions or qualifications, is indefinite as to time or amount, or as to the debt referred to, or in any other way limited or contingent, the plaintiff will be held to bring himself strictly within the terms of the promise, and to show that the condition has been performed, or the contingency happened, and that he is not excluded by any limitation, qualification, or uncertainty; 11 Wheat. 309; 6 Pet. 86; 10 Allen, 438; 8 Metc. 432; 15 Johns. 511; 3 Bingh. 638; 3 Hare, 299. If the promise be to pay when able, the ability must be proved by the plaintiff; 4 Esp. 36; 13 N. H. 486; 9 Penn. 410; 11 Barb. 254. But see 19 Vt. 308; 30 Ill. 429; 7 Hill, 45; 15 Ga. 395. So if it be to pay as soon as convenient, the convenience must be proved; 2 Cr. & M.; or, "if E will say that I have had the timber," the condition must be complied with; 1 Pick. 370.

And if there be a promise to pay in specific articles, the plaintiff must show that he offered to accept them; 8 Johns. 318. The vote of a town to appoint a committee to "settle the dispute" was held to be a conditional promise, requiring, to give it force as against the statute, proof that the committee reported something due; 11 Mass. 452. If the original promise be conditional, and the new promise absolute, the latter will not alter the former; 3 Wash. C. C. 404. But where the promise by A, was to pay if the debtor could not prove that B had paid it, it was held that the onus was upon A to prove that B had paid it; 11 Ired. 445. The offer must be accepted altogether or rejected altogether. The liability of the defendant is to be tried by the test he has himself prescribed; 4 Leigh, 603; 10 Johns. 35; 1 Gill & J. 497.

It must appear clearly that the promise is made with reference to the particular demand in suit; 6 Pet. 86; 6 Ga. 21; 1 Kay, 650; 11 Ired. 86; though a general admission would seem to be sufficient, unless the defendant show that there were other demands between the parties; 21 Pick. 2125; 4 Gray, 606; 8 Gill, 82; 19 Penn. 388; 23 Conn. 453. If the admission be broad enough to cover the debt in suit, according to some authorities the plaintiff can prove the amount really due aliunde. But the authorities are not at one on this point; 12 C. & P. 104; 6 N. H. 367; 19 Penn. 388; 22 Penn. 308; 22 Pick. 291; 27 Me. 433; 1 Pet. 351; 9 Leigh, 381; 2 D. & B. 390; 23 Penn. 413.

Part payment of a debt is evidence of a new promise to pay the remainder; 2 Dougl. 552; 19 Vt. 28; 6 Barb. 583. It is, however, but prima facie evidence, and may be rebutted by other evidence; 28 Vt. 642; 27 Me. 370; 4 Mich. 508; L. R. 7 Q. B. 493; 13 Wall. 254; 53 N. Y. 442; 33 Miss. 41; 5 Ark. 638. Payment of the interest has the same effect as payment of part of the principal;

8 Bingh. 309; 2 Tyrwh. 121; 7 Blackf. 537; 17 Cal. 574; 14 Pick. 387. And the giving a note for part of a debt; 2 Metc. 168; or for accrued interest, is payment; 13 Wend. 267; 6 Metc. 553; and so is the credit of interest in an account stated; 6 Johns. 267; and the delivery of goods on account; 4 Ad. & E. 71; 30 Me. 253; 11 How. 493. But the payment of a dividend by the assignee of an insolvent debtor is no new promise to pay the remainder; 7 Gray, 387; 6 E. L. & Eq. 520; and it has been held by respectable authorities that new part payment is no new promise, but that in order to take the case out of the statute, the payment must be made on account of a sum admitted to be due, accompanied with a promise to pay the remainder; 6 M. & W. 824; 6 E. L. & Eq. 520; 20 Miss. 663; 7 Gray, 274.

Part payment by a surety in the presence of his principal, and without dissent, is payment by the principal; 2 Fost. 219; but part payment by the surety after the statute has barred the debt, is not a new promise to pay the other part; 18 B. Monr. 643. A general payment on account of a debt for which several notes were given, without direction as to the application of the payment, may be applied by the creditor to either of the notes, so as to take the note to which the payment is applied out of the statute; but the payment cannot be apportioned to the several notes with the same effect; 19 Vt. 26; 31 E. L. & Eq. 55; 1 Gray, 630. With respect to promissory notes and bonds, the general proof of part payment or of interest, is the indorsement thereon; 2 Stra. 826; 1 Ad. & E. 102; 9 Pick. 42; 42 Barb. 18; 17 Johns. 182. But it must be made bona fide, and with the privity of the debtor; 2 Campb. 321; 7 Wend. 408; 45 Mass. 578; 4 Leigh, 519.

The payment may be made to an agent, or even a stranger not authorized to receive it, but erroneously supposed to be authorized. It is as much an admission of the debt as if made to the principal himself; 1 Bingh. 480; 4 Tyrw. 94; 10 B. & C. 122. And so with reference to acknowledgments or new promises; 4 Pick. 110; 9 id. 488; 9 Wend. 293; 11 Me. 152; 21 Barb. 351; 36 Iowa, 576; 19 Ill. 189. And the weight of authority is in favor of the rule that part payment of a witnessed note or bond will avoid the statute; 30 Me. 164; 9 B. Monr. 438; 12 Mo. 94; 18 Ark. 521. Whether the new promise or payment, if made after the debt is barred by the statute, will remove the bar, is also a mooted point, the weight of authority perhaps being in favor of the negative; 14 Pick. 387; 10 Ala. N. s. 959; 13 Miss. 564; 2 Comst. 523; 2 Kern. 635; 13 La. An. 353, 635; 14 Ark. 199. In Ohio it is so, by statute; 17 Ohio, 9. For the affirmative, see 18 Vt. 440; 20 Me. 176; 5 Ired. 341; 2 Tex. 501; 8 Humphr. 656; 47 Penn. 333; 9 Penn. 258; 6 Barb. 583.

It was long held that an acknowledgment or part payment by one of several joint-contractors would take the claim out of the statute as to the other joint-contractors; 2 Dougl. 652; 2 H. Blackst. 340; and such is the law in some parts of the Union; 4 Pick. 382; 25 Vt. 390; 19 Conn. 37; 1 R. I. 88; 3 Munf. 240; 1 M'Cord, 541; 7 Ired. 513; 30 Me. 310; 45 Miss. 367; 18 N. Y. 559. But in the courts of the United States and New Hampshire, South Carolina, Tennessee, Indiana, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and some other states, the contrary rule prevails; 8 Cra. 721; 1 Pet. 351; 6 N. H. 124; 7 Yerg. 534; 1 M'Mullin, 297; 12 Md. 228; 17 S. & R. 126; 41 Ala. 222.

Of course an acknowledgment or part payment made by an agent acting within the scope of his authority is, upon the familiar maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se, an acknowledgment or part payment by the principal; and hence if a partner has been appointed specially to settle the affairs of a dissolved partnership, his acknowledgment or part payment by virtue of his authority as such agent will take the claim out of the statute; 6 Johns. 267; 1 Pet. 351; 20 Me. 347; 3 S. & R. 345. And the wife may be such agent as to a claim for goods sold to her during the absence of her husband; 1 Campb. 394; 3 Bing. 119; but a wife during coverture, not made specially or by implication of law an agent, cannot make a new promise effectual to take a claim to which she was a party dum sola out of the statute; 1 B. & C. 248; 24 Vt. 89; 12 E. L. & Eq. 398; not even though the coverture be removed before the expiration of six years after the alleged promise; 2 Penn. 490.

Nor is the husband an agent for the wife for such a purpose; 15 Vt. 471; but he is an agent for the wife, payee of a note given to her dum sola, to whom a new promise or part payment may be made; 6 Q. B. 937. So a new promise to an executor or administrator is sufficient; 8 Mass. 134; 17 Johns. 330; 7 Coms. 179; and the weight of authority seems to be in favor of the binding force of a promise or part payment made by an executor or administrator; 12 Cush. 324; 12 B. Monr. 408; 9 Ala. 502; 17 Ga. 96; 9 E. L. & Eq. 80; 10 Md. 242; 4 B. Monr. 36; particularly if the promise be express; 15 Johns. 3; 15 Me. 360; 36 N. J. L. 44. But there are highly respectable authorities to the contrary; 1 Whart. 71; 7 Ind. 442; 9 Md. 317; 14 Tex. 312; 35 Penn. 259; 11 Sm. & M. 9; 7 Conn. 172; see 12 Wheat. 565.

To put an end to all litigation in England as to the effect of a new promise or acknowledgment, it was enacted by stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, commonly known as Lord Tenderden's Act, that the new promise or acknowledgment by words only, in order to be effectual to take a case out of the statute of limitations, should be in writing, signed by the party chargeable thereby; and this statute has been substantially adopted by most, if not all, of the states in this country. This statute affects merely the mode of proof. The same effect is to be given to the words reduced to writing as would before the passage of the statute have been given to them when proved by oral testimony; 7 Bingh. 163. If part payment is alleged, "words only," admitting the fact of payment, though not in writing, are admissible to strengthen the proof of the fact of payment; 2 Gale & D. 59. See Ang. Lim. § 298 et seq.

Lord Tenderden's Act has been re-enacted substantially in Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, Virginia, and Wisconsin. In construing these statutes it has been held that the return, under citation, by an administrator of the maker of a note, showing the note as one of his intestate's debts, is, in writing, within the meaning of this statute; 12 Sim. 17; and so is the entry by an insolvent debtor of the debt in his schedule of liabilities; 12 Metc. 470. It was held in the last case that the mere entry was not in itself a sufficient acknowledgment, but being in writing, within the meaning of the statute, it might be used with other written evidence to prove a new promise. But the making one note and tendering it in payment of another is not a new promise in writing; 3 Cush. 355; not even if the note be delivered, if it be re-delivered to the maker for the purpose of restoring matters between the parties to the state they were in before the note was given; 1 Metc. 394.

A and B had an unsettled account. In 1845, A signed the following: "It is agreed that B, in his general account, shall give credit to A for £10, for books delivered in 1834." Held, no acknowledgment in writing, so as to give B a right to an account against A's estate more than six years before A's death; 35 E. L. & Eq. 195. The writing must be signed by the party himself. The signature of the husband's name by the wife, though at his request, is not a signing by the party to be charged; 2 Bingh. N. C. 776. Nor is the signature by a clerk sufficient; 8 Scott, 147. Nor is a promise in the handwriting of the defendant sufficient; it must be signed by him; 12 Ad. & E. 493. And a request by the defendant to the plaintiff to get certain moneys due the defendant from third parties, does not charge the party making the request, because it is not apparent that the defendant intended to render himself personally liable; 8 Ad. & E. 221; 5 C. & P. 209. Since this statute, mutual accounts will not be taken out of the operation of the statute by any item on either side, unless the item be the subject of a new promise in writing; 2 Cro. M. & R. 45; 116 Mass. 529. The effect of part payment is left by the statute as before; 10 B. & C. 122. And the fact of part payment, it is now held, contrary to some earlier cases, may be proved by unsigned written evidence; 4 E. L. & Eq. 514; or by oral testimony; 9 Metc. 482.

AS TO REAL PROPERTY AND RIGHTS.

The general if not universal limitation of the right to bring action or to make entry, is to twenty or twenty-one years after the right to enter or to bring the action accrues, i. e. to twenty or twenty-one years after the cause of action accrues. As the rights and interests of different parties in real property are various, and attach at different periods, and successively, it follows that there may be a right of entry in a particular person, accruing after the expiration of antecedent rights at a period from the beginning of the adverse possession, much exceeding twenty or twenty-one years.

Thus, if an estate be limited to one in tail, and the tenant in tail be barred of his remedy by the statute, yet, as the statute only affects the remedy, and the right or estate still exists, the right of entry in the remainder-man does not accrue until the failure of the issue of the tenant in tail, which may not happen for many years. The estate still existing in the tenant in tail or his issue supports and keeps alive the remainder-man's right of action till the expiration of twenty years after his right of entry accrues; 1 Burr. 60; 3 Binn. 374; 1 Salk. 339; 5 Bro. P. C. 689; Price, Lim. & Liens, 129; 15 Mass. 471.

The laches of the owner of a prior right in an estate cannot prejudice the owner of a subsequently accruing right in the same estate; 4 Johns. 390; 3 Cruise, Dig. 403; 2 Stark. Ev. 887. And where there exist two distinct rights of entry in the same person, he may claim under either. He is not obliged to enter under his earlier right; 1 Pick. 318; 5 C. & P. 563; 29 Ga. 355; 2 Gill & J. 173.

Where it is necessary to prove that an actual entry has been made upon the land within a certain time before bringing suit, such entry must be proved to have been made upon the land in question; 13 East, 489; 3 Me. 316; Doug. 477; 4 Cra. 367; 11 Gill & J. 283; unless prevented by force or fraud, when a bona fide attempt is equivalent; 4 Johns. 389. If the land lie in two counties, there must be an entry in each county; though if the land be all in one county an entry upon part, with a declaration of claim to the whole, is sufficient; Co. Litt. § 419; 3 Johns. Cas. 115. The intention to claim the land is essential to the sufficiency of the entry; and whether this intention has existed is to be left in each case to the jury; 9 Watts, 567; 4 Wash. C. C. 367; 21 Ga. 113; 9 Watts, 28; 27 Ala. 364. An entry may be made by the guardian for his ward, by the remainder-man or reversioner for the tenant, and the tenant for the reversioner or remainder-man, being parties having privity of estate; 9 Co. 106; 2 Penn. 180. So a cestui que trust may enter for his trustee; 1 Ld. Raym. 716; and an agent for his principal; 11 Penn. 212; even without original authority, if the act be adopted and ratified; 9 Penn. 40. And the entry of one joint-tenant, coparcener, or tenant in common will inure to the benefit of the other; 10 Watts, 296.

Adverse possession for the necessary statutory period gives title against the true owner; but it must be open, uninterrupted, and with intent to claim against the true owner. The possession must be an actual occupation, so open that the true owner ought to know it and must be presumed to know it, and in such manner and under such circumstances as amount to an invasion of his rights, thereby giving him cause of action; 11 Gill & J. 371; 5 Cow. 219; 2 Penn. 438; 9 Cush. 476; 13 Allen, 408; 5 Pet. 438; 4 Wheat. 230; 12 S. & R. 334; in Pennsylvania this rule has been announced with special distinctness. "The owner of land," says the supreme court in 1 Watts, 341, "can only be barred by such possession as has been actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile or adverse."

It must be open, so that the owner may know it or might know of it. Many acts of occupation would be unequivocal, such as fencing the land or erecting a house on it; 7 Wheat. 59; 5 Pet. 402; actual improvement and cultivation of the soil; 1 Johns. 156; building on land and putting a fence around it; 6 Pick. 172; digging stones and cutting timber from time to time; 14 East, 332; 6 S. & R. 21; driving piles into the soil covered by a mill-pond, and thereon erecting a building; 6 Mass. 229; cutting roads into a swamp, and cutting trees and making shingles therefrom; 1 Ired. 56; and setting fish-traps in a non-navigable stream, building dams across it, and using it every year during the entire fishing-season for the purpose of catching fish; 1 Ired. 535; but entering upon uninclosed flats, when covered by the tide, and sailing over them with a boat or vessel for the ordinary purposes of navigation, is not an adverse possession; 1 Cush. 395; though the filling up the flats, and building a wharf there, and using the same, would be if the use were exclusive; 1 Cush. 313; 10 Bosw. 249; nor is the entering upon a lot and marking its boundaries by splitting the trees; 14 N. H. 101; nor the getting rails and other timber for a few weeks each year from timber-land; 4 Jones, 295; nor the overflowing of land by the stoppage of a stream; 4 Dev. 158; nor the survey, allotment, and conveyance of a piece of land, and the recording of the deed; unless there is open occupation; 22 Me. 29. As a rule the nature of the acts necessary to constitute adverse possession varies with the region and character of the ground. If the latter is uncultivated and the region sparsely populated, much less unequivocal acts are necessary on the part of the adverse holder.

It must be continuous for the whole period. If one trespasser enters and leaves, and then another trespasser, a stranger to the former and without purchase from or respect to him, enters, the possession is not continuous; 2 S. & R. 240; 34 Penn. 38; 17 How. 601; 4 Md. 143; 30 Mo. 99; 20 Pick. 465; 10 Johns. 475. But a slight connection of the latter with the former trespasser, as by a purchase by parol contract, will be sufficient to give the possession continuity; 6 Penn. 355; 1 Meigs, 613; 31 Me. 583; 22 Ohio St. 42; 1 Term, 448. And so will a purchase at a sale or execution; 5 Penn. 126; 24 How. 284. To give continuity to the possession by successive occupants, there must be privity of estate; 5 Metc. Mass. 15; Ang. Lim. § 414; and such a privity that each possession may be referred to one and the same entry: as that of a tenant to his landlord, or of the heir of a disseisor to his ancestor; 1 Rice, 10.

So an administrator's possession may be connected with that of his intestate; 11 Humphr. 457; and that of a tenant holding under the ancestor, with that of the heir; Cheeves, 200. In some states, however, it is held that whether the possession be held uniformly under one title, or at different times under different titles, can make no difference, provided the claim of title is always adverse; as in Connecticut; 3 Day, 269; and in Kentucky; 1 A. K. Marsh. 4.

The possession must be adverse. If it be permissive; 2 Jac. & W. 1; or by mistake; 3 Watts, 280; or unintentional; 11 Mass. 296; or confessedly in subordination to another's right; 5 B. & Ald. 223; 9 Wheat. 241; 4 Wend. 558; 6 Penn. 210; 9 Metc. 418; 8 Shepl. 240; 10 B. & C. 866; 2 Ad. & E. 520; 12 East, 141; it does not avail to bar the statute. If the occupation is such and by such a person that it may be for the true owner, it will be presumed to be for him, unless it be shown that the adverse claimant gave notice that he held adversely and not in subordination; 1 Batt. Ch. 373; 5 Burr. 2604. And this notice must be clear and unequivocal. If the act of the tenant or adverse claimant may be a trespass as well as a disseisin, the true owner may elect which he will consider it, regardless of the wishes of the trespasser, who cannot be allowed to qualify his own wrong; 1 Burr. 60-107; 3 Pick. 575; 12 Mass. 325; 4 Mas. 329.

So that if the adverse claimant sets up his trespasses as amounting to an adverse possession, the true owner may reply they are no disseisin, but trespasses only; while, on the other hand, the true owner may elect, if he please, for the sake of his remedy, to treat them as a disseisin; 19 Me. 383; 8 N. H. 67. This is called a disseisin by election, in distinction from a disseisin in fact,—a distinction which was taken for the benefit of the owner of the land. Whenever the act done of itself necessarily works an actual disseisin, it is a disseisin in fact: as, when a tenant for years or at will conveys in fee. On the other hand, those acts which are susceptible of being made a disseisin by election are no disseisin till the election of the owner makes them so; 1 Johns. Cas. 36.

The claim by adverse possession must have some definite boundaries; 1 Metc. Mass. 528; 10 Johns. 447; 10 S. & R. 334; 4 Vt. 155; 3 H. & S. 13. There ought to be something to indicate to what extent the adverse possessor claims. A sufficient inclosure will establish the limits, without actual continued residence on the land; 3 S. & R. 291; 14 Johns. 405; 3 H. & M'H. 595; 10 Mass. 93; 4 Wheat. 213. But it must be an actual, visible, and substantial inclosure; 7 N. H. 436; 2 Aik. 364; 4 Bibb, 455. An inclosure on three sides, by a trespasser as against the real owner, is not enough; 8 Me. 239; 5 Md. 256; nor is an unsubstantial brush fence; 10 N. H. 397; nor one formed by the lapping of fallen trees; 3 Metc. Mass. 125; 2 Johns. 230. And where the claim is by possession only, without any color or pretence of title, it cannot extend beyond the actual limits of the inclosure; 3 H. & M'H. 621; 5 Conn. 305; 28 Vt. 142; 6 Ind. 273. And this must be fixed, not roving from part to part; 11 Pet. 53.

Extension of the inclosure within the time limited will not give title to the part included in the extension; 2 H. & J. 391; 8 Ill. 238.

Where, however, the claim rests upon color of title as well as possession, the possession will be regarded as coextensive with the powers described in the title-deed; 11 Pet. 41; 3 Mas. 330; 3 Ired. 578; 2 Ill. 181; 13 Johns. 406; 5 Dana, 232; 4 Mass. 416; 23 Cal. 431; unless the acts or declarations of the occupant restrict it. But the constructive possession of land arising from color of title cannot be extended to that part of it whereof there is no actual adverse possession, whether with or without a proper title; 28 Penn. 124; 16 B. Monr. 472; 7 Watts, 442; nor will a subsequent conflicting possession, whether under color of title or not, be extended by construction beyond the limits of the actual adverse possession for the purpose of defeating a prior constructive possession; 6 Cow. 677; 11 Vt. 521. Nor can there be any constructive adverse possession against the owner when there has been no actual possession which he could treat as a trespass and bring suit for; 3 Rich. 101. A trespasser who afterwards obtains color of title can claim constructively only for the time when the title was obtained; 16 Johns. 293.

This doctrine of constructive possession, however, applies only to land taken possession of for the ordinary purpose of cultivation and use, and not to a case where a few acres are taken possession of in an uncultivated township for the mere purpose of thereby gaining title to the entire township; 22 Vt. 388; 1 Cow. 286; 6 B. Monr. 463; 14 Vt. 400.

In fine, with a little relaxation of strictness in the case of wild, remote, and uncultivated lands, the sort of possession necessary to acquire title is adverse, open, public, and notorious, and not clandestine and secret; possession, exclusive, uninterrupted, definite as to boundaries, and fixed as to its locality.

Color of title is any thing in writing, however defective, connected with the title, which serves to define the extent of the claim; 2 Caines, 183; 21 How. 493; 30 Ill. 279; 34 Wisc. 425; 16 N. H. 374; 19 Ga. 8; and it may exist even without writing, if the facts and circumstances show clearly the character and extent of the claim; 17 Ill. 498; Ang. Lim. § 404, note.

A fraudulent deed, if accepted in good faith, gives color of title; 8 Pet. 244; so does a defective deed; 4 H. & M'H. 222; 6 Wisc. 527; unless defective in defining the limits of the land; 1 Cow. 276; so does an improperly executed deed, if the grantor believes he has title thereby; 6 Metc. 337; so does a sheriff's deed; 7 B. Monr. 236; 22 Ga. 56; 7 Hill, 476; and a deed from a collector of taxes; 4 Ired. 164; 24 Ill. 577; unless defective on its face; 29 Wisc. 256; and a deed from an attorney who has no authority to convey; 2 Murph. 14; 28 N. Y. 9; and a deed founded on a voidable decree in chancery; 1 Meigs, 207; and a deed, by one tenant in common, of the whole estate, to a third person; 4 D. & B. 54; 2 Head, 674; and a deed by an infant; 4 D. & B. 289.

So possession, in good faith, under a void grant from the state, gives color of title; 4 Ga. 115. And if A purchases under an execution against B, takes a deed, and on the same day conveys to B, though the purchase and conveyance be at the request of B, and no money is paid, B has a colorable title; 4 D. & B. 201; 7 Humphr. 367. A will gives color of title; but if it has but one subscribing witness, and has never been proved, it does not; 5 Ired. 711. Nor does the sale by an administrator of the land of his solvent intestate, under a license of the probate court, unless accompanied by a deed from the administrator; 34 N. H. 544; 13 Md. 105. Nor does the sale of property by an intestate to his son, of which the possession is held by the wife, who is administratrix, while the son lives in the family, as against the intestate's creditors; 30 Miss. 472.

If there is no written title, then the possession must be under a bonâ fide claim to a title existing in another; 3 Watts, 72. Thus, if under an agreement for the sale of land the consideration be paid and the purchaser enter, he has color of title; 5 Metc. Mass. 173; 10 Post. 531; 37 Miss. 138; 36 Ala. 308; 2 Strobh. 24; 12 Tex. 195; 17 Ga. 600; though if the consideration be not paid, or be paid only in part, he has not; 2 Bail. 59; 11 Ohio, 455; 20 Ga. 311; 2 Dutch. 351; because the fair inference in such case is that the purchaser is in by consent of the grantor, and holds subordinately to him until the payment of the full consideration. There is, in fact, a mutual understanding, and a mutual confidence, amounting to an implied trust; 9 Wheat. 241; 12 Mass. 325; 1 Wash. C. C. 207; 1 Spear, 291.

In New York, a parol gift of land is said not to give color of title; 1 Johns. Cas. 36; but it is at least doubtful if that is the law of New York; 6 Cow. 677; and in Massachusetts and other states, a parol gift is held to give color of title if accompanied by actual entry and possession. It manifests, equally with a sale, the intent of the donee to enter, and not as tenant; and it equally proves an admission on the part of the donor that the possession is so taken; 6 Metc. 337; 13 Conn. 227; 2 B. Monr. 282; 39 Conn. 98; 4 Allen, 425; 32 N. J. 239; but see, contra, 24 Ga. 494. The element of good faith, and the actual belief on the part of the claimant that he has title, give the claimant by color of title his advantage over the mere trespasser, who, as we have seen, is restricted carefully to his actual occupation; and it may be said, generally, that whenever the facts and circumstances show that one in possession, in good faith and in the belief that he has title, holds for himself and to the exclusion of all others, his possession must be adverse, and according to his assumed title, whatever may be his relations in point of interest or priority, to others; 5 Pet. 440; 1 Paine, 467; 11 Pet. 41. When a man enters under such a claim of title, his entry on a part is an entry on the whole; but if he claims no such title he has no seisin by his entry but by the ouster of him who was seised, which can only be by the actual and exclusive occupation of the land; 4 Mass. 416.

In cases of mixed possession, or a possession at the same time by two or more persons, each under a separate colorable title, the seisin is in him who has the better or prior title; 4 Wheat. 213; 20 How. 235; 3 Wend. 149; for, though there may be a concurrent possession, there cannot be a concurrent seisin; and, one only being seised, the possession must be adjudged to be in him, because he has the better right; 3 Mass. 219; 10 Mass. 151; 3 S. & R. 509; 1 D. & B. 5. Of course, in such a case, if one has color of title, and the other is a mere trespasser or intruder, the possession is in him who has color of title; 2 Harr. & J. 112; 4 S. & R. 465; 5 Du. 272.

But, with all the liberality shown by the courts in giving color of title, it has been denied that a grant from a foreign government confers it, on the ground that the possession under such a title was rather a question between governments than individuals; 3 H. & McH. 621. Thus, the courts of New York have refused to recognize claims under a grant of the French government in Canada, made prior to the treaty between Great Britain and France in 1763; 4 Johns. 163; 12 id. 365; as conferring color of title. But the soundness of the exception has since been questioned in the same court; 8 Cow. 589; and the grant of another state has been expressly held to give color of title in Pennsylvania, even as against one claiming under her own grant; 2 Watts, 37. For political reasons, it has been held that a grant from the Indians gives no color of title; 8 Wheat. 571.

One joint-tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener cannot dismiss another but by actual ouster, as the seisin and possession of one are the seisin and possession of all, and inure to the benefit of all; 2 Salk. 422; 7 Wheat. 59; 12 Metc. 357; 11 Gratt. 505; 3 S. & R. 381; 4 Day, 473; 3 Grant, Cas. 247; actual ouster implies exclusion or expulsion. No force is necessary; but there must be a denial of the right of the co-tenant; Cowp. 217; 5 Burr. 2604; 9 Cow. 530; 22 Tex. 663; 1 Me. 89; 12 Wend. 404; and, like a grant, after long lapse of time it may be presumed; 1 East, 568; 3 Metc. 101; 29 Wisc. 226; and inferred from acts of an unequivocal character importing a denial; 3 Watts, 77; 1 Me. 89; 3 A. K. Marsh. 77; but the possession of the grantee of one tenant in common is adverse to all; 13 B. Monr. 436; 3 Metc. 101; 4 Paige, Ch. 178.

The possession of the tenant is likewise the possession of his landlord, and cannot be adverse unless he distinctly renounce his landlord's title; 2 Campb. 11; 2 Binn. 468; 10 N. Y. 9; 3 Pet. 43; 6 Watts, 500.

Mere non-payment of rent during the time limited, there having been no demand, does not prejudice the landlord's right to enter and demand it, even though the lease contains a clause giving the right of re-entry in case of non-payment of rent; 5 Cow. 123; 7 East, 299; and payment of rent is conclusive evidence that the occupation of the party paying was permissive and not adverse; 3 B. & C. 135; 12 L. J. N. s. Q. B. 236. The defendant in execution after a sale is a quasi tenant at will to the purchaser; and his possession is not therefore adverse; 1 Johns. Cas. 153; 3 Mass. 128. And a mere holding over after the expiration of a lease does not change the character of the possession; 2 Gill & J. 173. Nor does the assignment of the lease, or a sub-letting. The assignee and sub-lessees are still tenants, so far as the title by adverse possession is concerned; 4 S. & R. 467; 3 Pet. 43; 6 Cow. 751.

If the tenant convey the premises, as we have before seen, the landlord may treat the grantee as a disseisor by election; but the grantee cannot set up the act as the basis of a title by adverse possession; 5 Cow. 123; unless in the case where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists by operation of law; as where one makes a grant and by the omission of the word "heirs" an estate for life only passes. In such case, after the death of the tenant for life an adverse possession may commence; 7 Cow. 323. So in case the tenant has attorned to a third person and the landlord has assented to the attornment; 6 Cow. 133; 4 How. 289; 10 Sm. & M. 440; 4 Gilm. 336. But a mere parol disclaimer, by the lessor, of the existence of the relationship, and of all right in the premises, is not equivalent to an attornment. To admit such disclaimer would lead to fraud and perjury, and is in direct violation of the principles of the Statute of Frauds; 7 Johns. 186; 16 id. 305; 5 Cow. 74; but see 18 S. & R. 133.

The possession of the mortgagor is not adverse to the mortgagee (the relation being in many respects analogous to that of landlord and tenant); 3 Pet. 43; 4 Cra. 415; 11 Mass. 125; 30 Miss. 49; 27 Penn. 504; Dougl. 275; not even if the possession be under an absolute deed, if intended as a mortgage; 19 How. 289. The relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is very peculiar and sui generis. It is sometimes like a tenancy for years; Cro. Jac. 659; sometimes like a tenancy at will; Dougl. 275; and sometimes like a tenancy at sufferance; 1 Salk. 245; but, whatever it may be like, it is always presumed to be by permission of the mortgagor until the contrary be shown. The assignee of the mortgagor, with notice, is in the same predicament with the mortgagor; but if he purchase without notice, and particularly if the mortgage be forfeited at the date of his purchase; his possession will be adverse; 2 Car. L. R. 614; 19 Vt. 526; 6 B. Mon. 479; 2 Sandf. 636; 34 Mo. 285; 32 Miss. 312; 19 How. 289.

But, although the possession of the mortgagor be not adverse so as to give title under the statute against the mortgagee, the courts have nevertheless practically abrogated this rule, by holding that where the mortgagor has held during the statutory limit, and has meantime paid no interest nor otherwise recognized the rights of the mortgagee, this raises a presumption that the debt has been paid, and is a good defence in an action to foreclose; 12 Johns. 242; 9 Wheat. 497; 8 Metc. 87. And the reasons for so holding seem to be equally cogent with those upon which rests the well-settled rule that, with certain exceptions, the mortgagee's possession for the time limited bars the mortgagor's right to redeem; 2 J. & W. 434; 6 E. L. & Eq. 355; 1 Johns. Ch. 385; 9 Wheat. 489; 3 Harr. & M'H. 328; 2 Sumn. 401; 13 Ala. 246; 20 Me. 269.

The exceptions to this rule are—first, where an account has been settled within the limited time; 2 Vern. 377; 5 Bro. C. C. 187; 5 Johns. Ch. 522; second, where within that time the mortgagee, by words spoken or written, or by deed, has clearly and unequivocally recognized the fact that he held as mortgagee; 2 Bro. 397; 1 Sim. & Stu. 347; 1 Johns. Ch. 594; 10 Wheat. 152; 3 Sumn. 160; by which recognition a subsequent purchaser, with actual or constructive notice of the mortgage, is barred; 7 Paige, Ch. 465; third, where no time is fixed by payment, as in the case of a mortgage where the mortgagee is by agreement to enter and hold till he is paid out of the rents and profits; 1 Vt. 418; fourth, where the mortgagor continues in possession of the whole or any part of the premises; Sel. Ca. in Ch. 55; 1 Johns. Ch. 594; 1 Neb. 342; and, fifth, where there is fraud on the part of the mortgagee, or at the time of the inception of the mortgage he has taken advantage of the necessities of the mortgagor; 1 Johns. Cas. 402, 595; 2 Cruise, 161.

The trustee of real estate, under a direct trust, as well as of personal, as we have seen, holds for his cestui que trust, and the latter is not barred of his right unless it be denied and repudiated by the trustee; in which case the statute will begin to run from the denial or repudiation; 5 How. 233; 3 Gray, 1; 2 M'Lean, 376. In cases of implied construction and resulting trusts, the rule is also the same as with reference to personal property. The statute is a bar even in cases where the conduct of the trustee was originally fraudulent; 5 Johns. Ch. 184; 17 Ves. 151; 2 Bro. C. C. 438.

The same general rules as regards persons under disabilities apply in cases of real estate as have already been described as applicable to personalty at the time the right descends or the cause of action accrues, and prevent the running of the statute, till their removal; but only such as exist at that time. When the statute once begins to run, no subsequent disability can stop it; 1 How. 37; 4 Mass. 182; 16 Johns. 513; 1 Wheat. 292; 2 Binn. 374; and there is no distinction in this respect between voluntary and involuntary disabilities; 4 Term, 301; 3 Brev. 286. The disability of one joint-tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener does not inure to the benefit of the other tenants; 8 Johns. 262, 265; 2 Taunt. 441; 10 Ohio, 11; 10 Ga. 218; 5 Humphr. 117; 4 Strobh. Eq. 167; 13 S. & R. 350.

It would be wholly impracticable here to give a compend, or even an analysis, of the different statutes of the several states. Nor, indeed, would such an analysis be of much service, as, from frequent revision, changes, and modifications, what is the law to-day might not be the law to-morrow, and it could not be referred to, therefore, as a reliable index of the actual state of the law in any particular state. As, however, the statutes of the several states are substantially and in principle the same, differing only in immaterial details, and as all are derived directly or indirectly from the same source, it will doubtless prove both convenient and useful to be able to refer to the text of the original English statutes which have been the occasion of so much comment. These are, accordingly, appended, except Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, of which there is room only for a synopsis.

Statute 21 James I. c. 16.

For quieting of men's estates, and avoiding of suits, be it enacted, etc., that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, and formedon in reverter, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought, of or for any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereunto any person or persons now hath or have any title, or cause to have or pursue any such writ, shall be sued or taken within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament: and after the said twenty years expired, no person or persons, or any of their heirs, shall have or maintain any such writ, of or for any of the said manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments; (2) and that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, formedon in reverter, of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments whatsoever, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought by occasion or means of any title or cause hereafter happening, shall be sued or taken within twenty years next after the title and cause of action first descended or fallen, and at no time after the said twenty years; (3) and that no person or persons that now hath any right or title of entry into any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments now held from him or them, shall thereinto enter but within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within twenty years next after any other title of entry accrued; (4) and that no person or persons shall at any time hereafter make any entry into any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, but within twenty years next after his or their right or title, which shall hereafter first descend or accrue to the same; and in default thereof, such persons so not entering, and their heirs, shall be utterly excluded and disabled from such entry after to be made, any former law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

II. Provided, nevertheless, That if any person or persons that is or shall be entitled to such writ or writs, or that hath or shall have such right or title of entry, be, or shall be, at the time of the said right or title first descended, accrued, come or fallen within the age of one-and-twenty years, feme covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned, or beyond the seas, that then such person and persons, and his and their heir and heirs, shall or may, notwithstanding the said twenty years be expired, bring his action or make his entry as he might have done before this act: (2) so as such person and persons, or his or their heir and heirs, shall, within ten years next after his and their full age, discoverture, coming of sound mind, enlargement out of prison, or coming into this realm, or death, take benefit of and sue forth the same, and at no time after the said ten years.

III. And be it further enacted, That all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, action sur trover, and replevin for taking away of goods and cattle, all actions of account, and upon the case, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, all actions of debt for arrearages of rent, and all actions of assault, menace, battery, wounding, and imprisonment, or any of them, which shall be sued or brought at any time after the end of this present session of parliament, shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereafter expressed, and not after; (that is to say,) (2) the said actions upon the case (other than for slander), and the said actions for account, and the said actions for trespass, debt, detinue, and replevin for goods or cattle, and the said action of trespass quare clausum fregit, within three years next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within six years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after; (3) and the said action of trespass, of assault, battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any of them, within one year next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within four years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after; (4) and the said action upon the case for words, within one year after the end of this present session of parliament, or within two years next after the words spoken, and not after.

IV. And, nevertheless, be it enacted, That if in any the said actions or suits, judgment be given for the plaintiff, and the same be reversed by error, or a verdict pass for the plaintiff, and upon matter alleged in arrest of judgment the judgment be given against the plaintiff, that he take nothing by his plaint, writ, or bill; or if any the said actions shall be brought by original, and the defendant therein be outlawed, and shall after reverse the outlawry, that in all such cases the party plaintiff, his heirs, executors, or administrators, as the case shall require, may commence a new action or suit, from time to time, within a year after such judgment reversed, or such judgment be given against the plaintiff, or outlawry reversed, and not after.

V. And be it further enacted, That in all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, hereafter to be brought, wherein the defendant or defendants shall disclaim in his or their plea to make any title or claim to the land in which the trespass is by the declaration supposed to be done, and the trespass be by negligence or involuntary, the defendant or defendants shall be admitted to plead a disclaimer, and that the trespass was by negligence or involuntary, and a tender or offer of sufficient amends for such trespass before the action brought, whereupon, or upon some of them, the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be enforced to join issue; (2) and if the said issue be found for the defendant or defendants, or the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be nonsuited, the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be clearly barred from the said action or actions, and all other suits concerning the same.

VI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in all actions upon the case for slanderous words, to be sued or prosecuted by any person or persons in any of the courts of record at Westminster, or in any courts whatsoever that hath power to hold plea of the same, after the end of this present session of parliament, if the jury upon the trial of the issue in such action, or the jury that shall inquire of the damages, do find or assess the damages under forty shillings, then the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such action shall have and recover only so much costs as the damages so given or assessed amount unto, without any farther increase of the same, any law, statute, custom, or usage to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

VII. Provided, nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That if any person or persons that is or shall be entitled to any such action of trespass, detinue, action sur trover, replevin, actions of account, actions of debt, actions of trespass for assault, menace, battery, wounding, or imprisonment, actions upon the case for words, be, or shall be, at the time of any such cause of action given or accrued, fallen or come within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned or beyond the seas, that then such person or persons shall be at liberty to bring the same actions, so as they take the same within such times as are before limited, after their coming to or being of full age, discovert, of sane memory, at large, and returned from beyond the seas, as other persons having no such impediment should have done.

Statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, known as Lord Tenterden's Act. Sect. 1. Whereas by an act passed in England in the twenty-first year of the reign of King James the First, it was among other things enacted that all actions of account and upon the case, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, and all actions of debt for arrearages of rent, should be commenced within three years after the end of the then present session of parliament, or within six years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after;

and whereas a similar enactment is contained in an act passed in Ireland in the tenth year of the reign of King Charles the First; and whereas various questions have arisen in actions founded on simple contract, as to the proof and effect of acknowledgments and promises offered in evidence for the purpose of taking cases out of the operation of the said enactments, and it is expedient to prevent such questions, and to make a provision for giving effect to the said enactments and to the intention thereof; Be it therefore enacted, etc., and by the authority of the same, that in actions of debt, or upon the case, grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, whereby to take any case out of the operation of the said enactments, or either of them, or to deprive any party of the benefit thereof, unless such acknowledgment or promise shall be made or contained by or in some writing, to be signed by the party chargeable thereby; and that where there shall be two or more joint-contractors, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such joint-contractor, executor, or administrator shall lose the benefit of the said enactments or either of them, so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of any written acknowledgment or promise made and signed by any other or others of them: Provided, always, that nothing herein contained shall alter or take away or lessen the effect of any payment of any principal or interest made by any person whatsoever; Provided also, that in actions to be commenced against two or more such joint-contractors, or executors or administrators, if it shall appear at the trial or otherwise that the plaintiff, though barred by either of the said recited acts, or this act, as to one or more of such joint-contractors or executors or administrators, shall, nevertheless, be entitled to recover against any other or others of the defendants, by virtue of a new acknowledgment, or promise or otherwise, judgment may be given and costs allowed for the plaintiff as to such defendant or defendants against whom he shall recover, and for the other defendant or defendants against the plaintiff.

Sect. 2. If any defendant or defendants, in any action on any simple contract, shall plead any matter in abatement to the effect that any other person or persons ought to be jointly sued and issue be joined on such plea; and it shall appear at the trial that the action could not by reason of the said recited acts, or of this act, or of either of them, be maintained against the other person or persons named in such plea, or any of them, the issue joined on such plea shall be found against the party pleading the same.

Sect. 3. No indorsement or memorandum of any payment written or made after the time appointed for this act to take effect upon any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing, by or on the behalf of the party to whom such payment shall be made, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such payment, so as to take the case out of the operation of either of the said statutes.

Sect. 4. That the said recited act, and this act, shall be deemed and taken to apply to the case of any debt on simple contract alleged by way of set-off on the part of any defendant, either by plea, notice, or otherwise.

Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. Section 1. The time within which actions to recover realty, etc., must be brought, is regulated by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. By the first section of the act the meaning of the words in the act is defined; it enacts, inter alia, that the word "land" shall extend to manors, messuages and all other corporeal hereditaments whatsoever, and also to tithes (other than tithes belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole), and also to any share or interest in them, whether the same be a freehold or chattel interest, and whether they be of freehold, copyhold, or any other tenure; and that the word "rent" shall extend to all heriots, services, and suits for which a distress may be made, and to annuities charged upon land (except moduses or compositions belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole), and that the word "person" shall extend to a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, and to a class of creditors or other persons, as well as to an individual; and that the singular number shall embrace the plural, and the masculine gender the feminine.

Section 2 enacts that after the 31st day of December, 1833, no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, but within twenty years next after the time at which the right to make such entry or distress, or to bring such action, shall have first accrued.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, define the period from which the statute begins to run (where a party is not under disability), which may be thus briefly stated: viz., where the claimant was, in respect of the estate or interest claimed, himself once in possession or claims through a party who was once in possession of the property or in receipt of the rents or profits, the statute runs from the time when he was dispossessed, or discontinued such possession or receipts.

Where the claimant claims on the death of one who died in possession of the land or receipt of the rents or profits thereof, the statute runs from the time of the death, and this even in the case of an administrator, by section 6, which see, post.

Where the claimant derives his right under any instrument (other than a will), the statute runs from the time when under the instrument he was entitled to the possession.

In the case of remainders or reversions, the statute runs from the time when the remainder or reversion becomes an estate in possession.

Where the claimant claims by reason of a forfeiture or breach of condition, the statute runs from the time of the forfeiture incurred or breach of condition broken.

But section 4 provides that when any right to make any entry or distress, or to bring any action to recover any land or rent, by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition, shall have first accrued in respect of any estate or interest in reversion or remainder, and the land or rent shall not have been recovered by virtue of such right, the right to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued in respect of such estate or interest at the time when the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession, as if no such forfeiture or breach of condition had happened.

And by section 8 it is provided that a right to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover any land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued in respect of an estate or interest in reversion at the time at which the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession by the determination of any estate or estates in respect of which such land shall have been held, or the profits thereof, or such rent shall have been received, notwithstanding the person claiming such land, or some person through whom he claims, shall, at any time previously to the creation of the estate or estates which shall have determined, have been in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent.

Section 6 enacts that, for the purpose of this act, an administrator claiming the estate or interest of the deceased person of whose chattels he shall be appointed administrator, shall be deemed to claim as if there had been no interval of time between the death of such deceased person and the grant of letters of administration.

In case of a tenancy from year to year (without lease in writing), the statute runs from the end of the first year or the last payment of rent (which shall last happen).

In case of a lease in writing reserving more than 20*s.* rent, if the rent be received by a party wrongfully claiming the land, subject to the lease, and no payment of the rent be afterwards made to the party rightfully entitled, the statute runs from the time when the rent was first so received by the party wrongfully claiming; and the party rightfully entitled has no further right on the determination of the lease.

In the case of a tenancy at will, the statute runs from the determination of such tenancy, or at the expiration of one year next after the commencement of such tenancy, at which time the tenancy at will shall be deemed to have determined. But the clause provides that no mortgagor or cestui que trust shall be deemed a tenant at will, within the meaning of the act, to his mortgagee or trustee.

Section 10 enacts that no person shall be deemed to have been in possession of any land within the meaning of this act merely by reason of having made an entry thereon.

Section 11 enacts that no continual or other claim upon or near any land shall preserve any right of making an entry or distress, or of bringing an action.

Section 12 enacts that when any one or more of several persons entitled to any land or rent as coparceners, joint-tenants, or tenants in common, shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety, or more than his or their undivided share or shares of such land, or of the profits thereof, or of such rent, for his or their own benefit, or for the benefit of any person or persons other than the person or persons entitled to the other share or shares of the same land or rent, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of or by such last-mentioned person or persons, or any of them.

Section 14 provides and enacts that when any acknowledgment of the title of the person entitled to any land or rent shall have been given to him or his agent in writing signed by the person in possession or in receipt of the profits of such land, or in respect of such rent, then such possession or receipt of or by the person by whom such acknowledgment shall have been given, shall be deemed, according to the meaning of this act, to have been the possession or receipt of or by the person to whom or to whose agent such acknowledgment shall have been given at the time of giving the same, and the right of such last-mentioned person, or any person claiming through him, to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued at, and not before, the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments, if more than one, was given.

Section 15 gives a party claiming land or rent, of which he had been out of possession more than twenty years, five years from the time of passing the act within which to enforce his claim, where the possession was not adverse to his right or title at the time of passing the act.

By section 16, persons under disability of infancy, lunacy, coverture, or beyond seas, and their representatives, are to be allowed ten years from the termination of their disability or death to enforce their rights.

But by section 17, even though a person be under disability when his claim first accrues, he must enforce it within forty years, even though the disability continue during the whole of the forty years.

And by section 18 no further time is to be allowed for a succession of disabilities.

By section 20, when the right of any person to recover any land or rent to which he may have been entitled, or an estate or interest in possession, shall have been barred by time, any right in reversion, or otherwise, which such person may during that time have had to the same land or rent, shall also be barred, unless in the mean time the land or rent shall have been recovered by some person entitled to an estate which shall have taken effect after or in defeasance of such estate or interest in possession.

Section 22 enacts that when any tenant in tail shall have died before the bar as against him is complete, no person claiming an estate or interest, etc., which such tenant in tail might have barred, shall enforce his claim but within the period which the tenant in tail, had he lived, might have recovered.

Section 24 enacts that no suit in equity shall be brought after the time when the plaintiff, if entitled at law, might have brought an action.

Section 25 enacts that in cases of express trust the right of the cestui que trust, or any person claiming through him, shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time when the land or rent may have been conveyed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only against such purchaser, or any person claiming through him.

Section 26 enacts that in case of fraud the right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time when such fraud shall be, or with reasonable diligence might have been, discovered, but that nothing in that clause shall affect a bona fide purchaser for value, not assisting in, and, at the time he purchased, not knowing, and having no reason to believe, such fraud had been committed

Section 27 provides that the act shall not prevent the courts of equity refusing relief on the ground of acquiescence, or otherwise, to any person whose right to bring a suit may not be barred by the act.

Section 28 enacts that a mortgagor shall be barred by twenty years' possession of the mortgagee, unless there be an acknowledgment in writing.

Section 29 enacts that no land or rent shall be recovered by an ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporation sole, but within the period during which two persons in succession shall have held the benefice, etc. in respect whereof such land or rent is claimed, and six years after a third person shall have been appointed thereto, if such two incumbencies and six years taken together shall amount to the full period of sixty years, but if they do not amount to sixty years, then during such further time in addition to the two incumbencies and six years as will make up the sixty years.

Section 35 enacts that the receipt of the rent payable by any tenant from year to year, or other lessee, shall, as against such lessee or any person claiming under him (but subject to the lease), be deemed to be the receipt of the profits of the land for the purposes of this act.

Section 40 enacts that money secured by mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise, charged upon or payable out of any land or rent at law or in equity, or any legacy, shall not be recovered but within twenty years next after a present right shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or releasing the same, unless there have been part payment in the meantime of principal or interest, or an acknowledgment in writing have been given, signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, in which case the time runs from such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of them, if more than one.

Section 41 enacts that no arrears of dower, or any damages on account of such arrears shall be recovered but within six years before commencement of action or suit.

Section 42 enacts that no arrears of rent, or of interest in respect of any money charged upon any land or rent, or in respect of any legacy, or any damages in respect of such arrears of rent or interest, shall be recovered but within six years next after the same became due, or next after an acknowledgement of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable, or his agent, except where any prior mortgagee or incumbrancer shall have been in possession of the land mortgaged, or profits thereof, within one year next before any action or suit by a subsequent mortgagee or incumbrancer of the same land; in which case such subsequent mortgagee or incumbrancer may in such action or suit recover all arrears of interest which shall have become due during the time that the prior mortgagee or incumbrancer was in possession of the land or profits thereof.

Of Criminal Proceedings. The time within which indictments may be found, or other proceedings commenced, for crimes and offences, varies considerably in the different jurisdictions. In general, in all jurisdictions, the length of time is extended in some proportion to the gravity of the offence. Indictments for murder, in most, if not all, of the states, may be found at any time during the life of the criminal after the death of the victim. Proceedings for less offences are to be commenced within periods varying from ten years to sixty days. See Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. §§ 316–329.

Of Estates. A description either by express words or by intendment of law of the continuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, marking the period at which the time of enjoyment is to end; Preat. Est. 25.

The definition or circumscription, in any conveyance, of the interest which the grantee is intended to take. The term is used by different writers in different senses. Thus, it is used by Lord Coke to denote the express definition of an estate by the words of its creation, so that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail; Co. Litt. 23 b. In the work of Mr. Sanders on Uses, the term is used, however, in a broader and more general sense, as given in the second definition above; 1 Sanders, Uses, 68–122. And, indeed, the same writers do not always confine themselves to one use of the term; see Fearne, Cont. Rem. Butler's note n, 9th ed. 10; 1 Steph. Com. 5th ed. 304, note. For the distinctions between limitations and remainders, see CONDITIONAL LIMITATION; CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

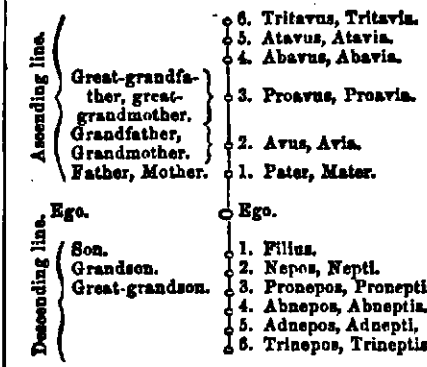
LIMITED COMPANY. A company in which the liability of each shareholder is limited by the number of shares he has taken, so that he cannot be called on to contribute beyond the amount of his shares. In England, the memorandum of association of such company may provide that the liability of the directors, manager, or managing director, thereof, shall be unlimited; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 131; 1 Lindl. Part. 383; Mozley & W. Dict.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP. A form of partnership created by statute in many of the United States, wherein the liability of certain special partners, who contribute a specific amount of capital, is limited to the amount so contributed, while the general partners are jointly and severally responsible as in ordinary partnership. All the partners are liable as general partners, unless the statutes upon the subject are strictly, or as some cases say, substantially complied with; 5 Allen, 91; 39 Barb. 283; 3 Col. 342; 67 Penn. 330; 62 N. Y. 513; see 1 Lindley, Partn. 383, n.

LINE. In Descents. The series of persons who have descended from a common ancestor, placed one under the other, in the order of their birth. It connects successively all the relations by blood to each other. See CONSANGUINITY; DEGREE.



The line is either direct or collateral. The direct line is composed of all the persons who are descended from each other. If, in the direct line, any one person is assumed as the propositus, in order to count from him upwards and downwards, the line will be divided into two parts, the ascending and descending lines. The ascending line is that which, counting from the propositus, ascends to his ancestors, to his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, etc. The descending line is that which, counting from the same person, descends to his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc. The preceding table is an example.

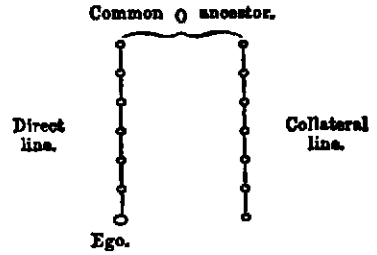
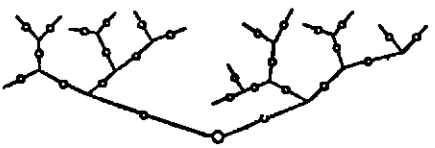
The collateral line, considered by itself and in relation to the common ancestor, is a direct line; it becomes collateral when placed alongside of another line below the common ancestor, in whom both lines unite. For example:—



These two lines are independent of each other; they have no connection except by their union in the person of the common ancestor. This reunion is what forms the relation among the persons composing the two lines.

A line is also paternal or maternal. In the examination of a person's ascending line, the line ascends first to his father, next to his paternal grandfather, his paternal great-grandfather, etc., so on from father to father; this is called the paternal line. Another line will be found to ascend from the same person to his mother, his maternal grandmother, and so from mother to mother: this is the maternal line. These lines, however, do not take in all the ascendants; there are many others who must be imagined. The number of ascendants is double at each degree, as is shown by the following diagram:—



See 2 Bla. Com. 200, b.; Pothier, Des Successions, c. 1, art. 3, § 2; ASCENDANTS.

Estates. The division between two estates. Limit; border; boundary.

When a line is mentioned in a deed as ending at a particular monument (q. v.), it is to be extended in the direction called for, without regard to distance, until it reach the boundary; 1 Tayl. 110, 303; 2 id. 1; 2 Hawks, 219; 3 id. 21. And a marked line is to be adhered to although it depart from the course; 7 Wheat. 7; 2 Ov. 304; 3 Call. 239; 4 T. B. Monr. 29; 7 id. 333; 2 Bibb. 261; 4 id. 503. See, further, 2 Dan. 2; 6 Wend. 467; 3 Murph. 82; 13 Pick. 145; 13 Wend. 300; 5 J. J. Marsh. 587.

Where a number of persons settle simultaneously or at short intervals in the same neighborhood, and their tracts, if extended in certain directions, would overlap each other, the settlers sometimes by agreement determine upon dividing lines, which are called consentible lines. These lines, when fairly agreed upon, have been sanctioned by the courts; and such agreements are conclusive upon all persons claiming under the parties to them, with notice, but not upon bonâ fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, actual or constructive; 3 S. & R. 323; 5 id. 273; 17 id. 57; 9 W. & S. 66.

Lines fixed by compact between nations are binding on their citizens and subjects; 11 Pet. 209; 1 Ov. 269; 1 Ves. Sen. 450; 1 Atk. 2; 2 id. 592; 1 Ch. Cas. 85; 1 P. Wms. 723–727; 1 Vern. 48; 1 Ves. 19; 2 id. 284; 3 S. & R. 331.

Measures. A line is a lineal measure, containing the one-twelfth part of an inch.

LINEA RECTA (Lat.). The perpendicular line; the direct line. The line of ascent, through father, grandfather, etc., and of descent, through son, grandson, etc.; Co. Litt. 10, 158; Bracton, fol. 67; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11. This is represented in a diagram by a vertical line.

Where a person springs from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, they are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called ascendants and descendants. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 129.

LINEA TRANSVERSALIS (Lat.). A line crossing the perpendicular lines. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called collaterals, and are said to be related in the collateral line (linea transversa or obliqua).

LINEAL. In a direct line.

LINEAL WARRANTY. A warranty by an ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to the heir. 2 Bla. Com. 301; Rawle, Cov. 30; 2 Hill. R. P. 360. Thus, a warrant by an elder son during lifetime of his father was lineal to a younger son, but a warranty by a younger son was collateral to the elder; for, though the younger might take the paternal estate through the elder, the elder could not take it through the younger; Litt. § 703. Abolished in England by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, § 14.

LINES AND CORNERS. In deeds and surveys. Boundary-lines and their angles with each other. 17 Miss. 459; 21 Ala. 66; 9 Fost. & H. 471; 10 Gratt. 445; 16 Ga. 141.

LIQUIDATE. To pay; to settle. Webster, Dict.; 8 Wheat. 322. Liquidated damages are damages ascertained or agreed upon. Sedgw. Dam. 427 et seq.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. In Practice. Damages whose amount has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties.

Where there is an agreement between parties for the doing or not doing particular acts, the parties may, if they please, estimate beforehand the damages to result from a breach of the agreement, and prescribe in the agreement itself the sum to be paid by either by way of damages for such breach. See 1 H. Bla. 283; 2 B. & P. 335, 350; 2 Bro. P. C. 431; 4 Burr. 2225; 2 Term, 32. The civil law appears to recognize such stipulations; Inst. 3. 16. 7; Toullier, 1. 3, no. 809; La. Civ. Code, art. 1928, n. 5; Code Civile, 1152, 1153. Such a stipulation on the subject of damages differs from a penalty in this, that the parties are holden by it; whereas a penalty is regarded as a forfeiture, from which the defaulting party can be relieved.

The sum named in an agreement as damages to be paid in case of a breach will, in general, be considered as liquidated damages, or as a penalty, according to the intent of the parties; and the mere use of the words "penalty" or "liquidated damages" will not be decisive of the question, if on the whole the instrument discloses a different intent; Story, Eq. Jur. 1318; 6 B. & C. 224; 6 Bingh. 141; 6 Ired. 186; 15 Me. 273; 2 Ala. N. S. 425; 8 Mo. 467; 69 N. Y. 45; 4 H. & N. 511. It has been said, however, that if the parties use the word "penalty," it will control the interpretation of the contract; 3 B. & P. 630; 7 Wheat. 13; 38 N. Y. 75; 13 N. H. 275; but in 16 N. Y. 469, the sum named was stated to be "liquidated damages," but was held to be a penalty. Whether the sum mentioned in the agreement to be paid for a breach is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages is a question of law, to be determined by the judge upon a consideration of the whole instrument; 7 C. B. 716. The construction must be the same in law and equity; 5 H. L. C. 105. The tendency of the court is to regard the sum named as a penalty rather than liquidated damages; 5 Metc. Mass. 57; 2 B. & P. 346.

Such a stipulation in an agreement will be considered as a penalty, in the following cases:—

Where the parties in the agreement have expressly declared it or described it as a "penalty," and no other intent is clearly to be deduced from the instrument; 2 B. & P. 340, 350, 630; 1 Campb. 78; 7 Wheat. 14; 1 M'Mull. 106; 2 Ala. N. S. 425; 6 Metc. Mass. 61; 1 Pick. 451; 3 Johns. Cas. 297; 17 Barb. 260; 24 Vt. 97.

Where it is doubtful on the language of the instrument whether the stipulation was intended as a penalty or as liquidated damages; 3 C. & P. 240; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 186; 5 Sandf. 192; 24 Vt. 97; 16 Ill. 475.

Where the agreement was evidently made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulation is wholly collateral; 11 Mass. 488; 15 id. 488; 1 Bro. C. C. 418.

Where the agreement imposes several distinct duties, or obligations of different degrees of importance, and yet the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently; 6 Bingh. 141; 5 Bingh. N. C. 890; 7 Scott, 264; 5 Sandf. 192. But see 7 Johns. 72; 15 id. 200; 9 N. Y. 551; 77 Ill. 452; 7 Nev. 339; L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 731.

Where the agreement is not under seal, and the damages are capable of being certainly known and estimated; 2 B. & Ald. 704; 6 B. & C. 216; 1 Mood. & M. 41; 4 Dall. 150; 5 Cow. 144.

Where the instrument provides that a larger sum shall be paid upon default to pay a lesser sum in the manner prescribed; 5 Sandf. 192, 640; 16 Ill. 400; 14 Ark. 329; 2 B. & P. 346.

Where the stipulation is made in respect of a matter certain in value, as the payment of a debt or liquidated money demand, and the sum fixed upon is greater than the debt or demand; 6 Bingh. 148; L. R. 8 Ch. 1022. If a debt be secured by a stipulation that in case of its not being paid at the appointed time, a larger sum shall become payable, the stipulation for the larger sum is in the nature of a penalty; L. R. 4 H. L. 1; Leake, Contr. 1092.

The stipulation will be sustained as liquidated damages in the following cases:—

Where the agreement is of such a nature that the damages are uncertain, and are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory and known rule; 1 Alc. & N. 389; 2 Burr. 2225; 10 Ves. 429; 13 M. & W. 702; 1 Ex. 665; 3 C. & P. 240; 8 Mass. 223; 7 Cow. 307; 4 Wend. 468; 5 Sandf. 192; 12 Barb. 137, 366; 14 Ark. 315; 2 Ohio St. 519; L. R. 15 Eq. 36; 101 Mass. 334.

Where, from the tenor of the agreement or from the nature of the case, it appears that the parties have ascertained the amount of damages by fair calculation and adjustment; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1318; 2 Greenl. Ev. 259; 1 Bingh. 302; 7 Conn. 291; 11 N. H. 234; 6 Blackf. 206; 13 Wend. 507; 26 id. 630; 10 Mass. 459; 7 Metc. 583; 2 Ala. N. S. 425; 14 Me. 250; 49 Mo. 406.

The penal sum in a bond is usually a penalty, but if a sum be agreed upon in the condition of a bond to be payable upon a breach, the question may arise whether it is liquidated damages or a penalty, and it will be subject to the same principles of construction as in any other forms of contract; Leake, Contr. 1091; 2 Ves. Sen. 530. See 5 H. L. C. 105.

Where the language used is explicit, the extravagance of the sum named as liquidated damages will not be considered; 5 Sandf. 192; 11 Rich. 550.

See 5 Sandf. 192; 75 Penn. 157; 30 Am. Rep. 26; 12 Am. L. Rev. 287; 1 Am. Dec. 331; Sedgw.; Mayne; Damages.

LIQUIDATION. A fixed and determinate valuation of things which before were uncertain.

LIQUOR. This term, when used in statutes forbidding the sale of liquors, refers only to spirituous or intoxicating liquors; 18 N. J. L. 311; 20 Barb. 246; 3 Denio, 407.

Ale, beer, porter, rum, gin, brandy, whisky, and wine are in Missouri held to be intoxicating liquors; 12 Mo. 407. Lager beer is included in the term in many of the states; 8 Alb. L. J. 397; and evidence of its properties in this respect is unnecessary, as the court will take judicial notice of them; 55 Ala. 158; so, also, with wine; 80 N. C. 439. In Iowa, wine manufactured from grapes, currants, or fruits grown within the state is not included in the term intoxicating liquors; 38 Iowa, 465. See Rogers, Drinks, etc., 71, and an interesting case in 25 Kan. 751.

LIRA. The name of a foreign coin.

In all computations at the custom-house, the lira of Sardinia shall be estimated at eighteen cents and six mills, Act of March 22, 1846; the lira of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, and the lira of Tuscany at sixteen cents, Act of March 22, 1846.

LIS MOTA (Lat.). A controversy begun, i. e. on the point at issue, and prior to commencement of judicial proceedings. Such controversy is taken to arise on the advent of the state of facts on which the claim rests; and after such controversy has arisen (post litem motam) no declarations of deceased members of family as to matters of pedigree are admissible; 6 C. & P. 560; 4 Campb. 417; 2 Russ. & M. 161; Greenl. Ev. §§ 131, 132; 4 Maule & S. 497; 1 Pet. 337; 26 Barb. 177.

LIS PENDENS (Lat.). A pending suit. Suing out a writ and making attachment (on mesne process) constitutes a lis pendens at common law. 21 N. H. 570.

Filing the bill and serving a subpœna creates a lis pendens in equity; 1 Vern. 318; 7 Beav. 444; 27 Mo. 560; 4 Sneed, 672; 26 Miss. 397; 9 Paige, Ch. 512; 22 Ala. N. S. 743; 7 Blackf. 242; which the final decree terminates; 1 Vern. 318. In the civil law, an action is not said to be pending till it reaches the stage of contestatio litis. The phrase is sometimes incorrectly used as a substitute for autre action pendant, q. v. See 1 La. An. 46; 21 N. H. 570.

The proceedings must relate directly to the specific property in question; 1 Strobh. Eq. 180; 7 Blackf. 242; 7 Md. 537; Story, Eq. § 351; 1 Hill. Vend. 411; and the rule applies to no other suits; 1 M'Cord, Ch. 252.

Filing a judgment creditor's bill constitutes a lis pendens; 4 Edw. Ch. 29. A petition by heirs to sell real estate is not a lis pendens; 14 B. Monr. 164. The court must have jurisdiction over the thing; 1 McLean, 167. Generally, suit is not pending till service of process; 57 Mo. 362; 14 Pet. 322; 1 Sandf. 731; Wade, Notice, 152; but see 30 Tex. 494; 10 Ark. 479; 64 Mo. 519.

Only unreasonable and unusual negligence in the prosecution of a suit will take away its character as a lis pendens; 18 B. Monr. 230; 11 id. 297; there must be an active prosecution to keep it alive; 1 Vern. 286; 1 Russ. & M. 617; 30 Mo. 432; 9 Paige, 512; 21 Iowa, 421.

Lis pendens is said to be general notice to all the world; Ambl. 676; 2 P. Wms. 282; 3 Atk. 343; 1 Vern. 286; 3 Hayw. 147; 1 Johns. Ch. 558 (a leading case); but it has been said that it is not correct to speak of it as a part of the doctrine of notice; the purchaser pendente lite is effected, not by notice, but because the law does not allow litigating parties to give to others, pending the litigation, rights to the property in dispute so as to prejudice the opposite party. Per Cranworth, C., in 1 De G. & J. 566. The doctrine rests upon public policy, not notice; 2 Rand. 93; 10 W. N. C. (Pa). 389.

A voluntary assignment during the pendency of a suit does not affect the rights of other parties, if not disclosed, except so far as the alienation may disable the party from performing the decree of the court; Story, Eq. Pl. § 351; 15 Tex. 495; 22 Barb. 666: as in the case of mortgage by tenant in common of his undivided interest, and subsequent partition; 2 Sandf. Ch. 98.

An involuntary assignment by a plaintiff, as under the bankrupt or insolvent laws, renders the suit so defective that it cannot be prosecuted if the defendent objects; 7 Paige, Ch. 287; 1 Atk. 88; 4 Ves. 387; 9 Wend. 649; 1 Hare, 621; Story, Eq. Pl. § 349. Not if made under the bankrupt law of 1841; 27 Barb. 252.

The same may be said of a voluntary assignment of all his interest by a sole complainant; 5 Hare, 223; Story, Eq. Pl. § 349.

An alienee, during the pendency of a suit, is bound by the proceedings therein subsequent to the alienation, though before he became a party; 4 Beav. 40; 5 Mich. 456; 22 Barb. 166; 27 Penn. 418; 5 Du. N. Y. 631; 7 Blackf. 242.

Purchasers during the pendency of a suit are bound by the decree in the suit without being made parties; 1 Swanst. 55; 4 Russ. 372; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 375; Story, Eq. Pl. § 351 a; 32 Ala. N. S. 451; 11 Mo. 519; 30 Miss. 27; 12 La. An. 776; 6 Barb. 133; 22 id. 166; 27 Penn. 418; 7 Eng. 421; 16 Ill. 225; 5 B. Monr. 323; 9 B. Monr. 220; 11 Ind. 443; and will not be protected because they paid value and had no notice of the suit; 35 Conn. 250; 6 Iowa, 258.

So also is a purchaser during a suit to avoid a conveyance as fraudulent; 5 T. B. Monr. 373; 6 B. Monr. 18.

A citizen of the United States resident in a different state from that in which the suit is pending, is bound by the rule regarding purchasers pendente lite; 9 Pet. 86; and actual notice of the pendency of the suit is not necessary; 9 Dana, 372. See 12 Cent. L. J. 101.

Lis pendens by a mortgagor under a prior unrecorded mortgage is notice to a second mortgagee; 9 Ala. N. S. 921. But see 2 Rand. 93.

The rule does not apply where a title imperfect before suit brought is perfected during its pendency; 4 Cow. 687; 14 Ohio, 323.

A debtor need not pay to either party pendente lite; 1 Paige, Ch. 490.

The doctrine of lis pendens has been said to be an equitable doctrine only; 28 Conn. 593; but when one comes into possession of the subject of litigation, during proceedings in ejectment, he will be bound by the judgment, though not a party, and may be ejected under the judgment against his assignor; Wade, Notice; 1 McLean, 87; 9 Cow. 233.

In law, the same effect is produced by the rule that each purchaser takes the title of his vendor only; 11 Md. 519; 27 Penn. 418; 6 Barb. 133; 30 Miss. 27; 5 Mich. 456; 1 Hill. Vend. 411. This doctrine has generally been confined to controversies over real estate; 22 Ala. 760; 30 Mo. 462; 2 Johns. Ch. 444; but a purchaser of securities pendente lite has been decreed to surrender them upon receiving the sum he had paid for them; 1 Desau. 167; and the principle has been extended to a bond and mortgage, assigned by a trustee, pending a suit by the cestui que trust; 2 Johns. Ch. 441.

The doctrine does not apply to stocks; 48 N. Y. 586; or to negotiable instruments, no matter by what form of action it is sought to subject them to adverse claims, when such instruments are in the hands of bona fide purchasers who acquired them before maturity; 68 Penn. 72; 20 How. 343; 38 Ga. 18; 22 Ala. 760; 23 Wisc. 21; 14 Wall. 283; 97 U. S. 96.

The doctrine of lis pendens is modified in many of the states of the United States, and by statutes requiring records of the attachment to preliminary proceedings to be made, and constituting such records notice. See stat. 2 Vict. c. 11, § 7; and Rev. Statutes of the various states.

See Wade, Notice; 4 Cent. L. J. 27; 14 Am. Dec. 774.

LIST. A table of cases arranged for trial or argument: as, the trial list, the argument list. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3031.

LISTERS. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables. See Vt. Rev. Stat. 538.

LITERÆ PROCURATORIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Letters procuratory. A written authority, or power of attorney (litera attornati), given to a procurator. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.; Bracton, fol. 40–43.

LITERAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration. Leç. Elém. § 887.

LITERARY PROPERTY. The general term which describes the interest of an author in his works, or of those who claim under him, whether before or after publication, or before or after a copyright has been secured. 9 Am. L. Reg. 44; 4 Du. N. Y. 379; 11 How. Pr. 49. See COPYRIGHT; MANUSCRIPT; Curtis, Copyright; 2 Bla. Com. 405, 406; 4 Viner, Abr. 278; Bacon, Abr. Prorogation (F 5); 2 Kent, 306–315; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. Jr. 360, 376; 2 id. 469; Nickl. Lit. Prop.; Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Chitty, Pr. 98; 2 Am. Jur. 248; 10 id. 62; 1 Bell, Com. b. 1, part 2, c. 4, s. 2, p. 115; Shortt, Copy.; Morgan, Law of Lit.

LITIGANT. One engaged in a suit; one fond of litigation.

LITIGATION. A contest, authorized by law, in a court of justice, for the purpose of enforcing a right.

In order to prevent injustice, courts of equity will restrain a party from further litigation, by a writ of injunction: for example, after two verdicts on trials at bar, in favor of the plaintiff, a perpetual injunction was decreed; Stra. 404. And not only between two individuals will a court of equity grant this relief, as in the above case of several ejectments, but also, when one general legal right, as a right of fishery, is claimed against several distinct persons, in which case there would be no end of bringing actions, since each action would only bind the particular right in question between the plaintiff and defendant in such action, without deciding the general right claimed. 2 Atk. 484; 2 Ves. 587. See CIRCUITY OF ACTIONS.

LITIGIOSITY. In Scotch Law. The pendency of a suit: it is an implied prohibition of alienation, to the disappointment of an action, or of diligence, the direct object of which is to obtain possession, or to acquire the property of a particular subject. The effect of it is analogous to that of inhibition. 2 Bell, Com. 5th ed. 152.

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, litigious signifies a disposition to sue; a fondness for litigation.

In Ecclesiastical Law.

A church is said to be litigious, when two rival presentations are offered to the bishop upon the same avoidance of the living; Mos. & W.; 3 Steph. Com. 417.

LITIGIOUS RIGHTS. In French Law. Those which are or may be contested either in whole or in part, whether an action has been commenced, or when there is reason to apprehend one. Pothier, Vente, n. 584; 9 Mart. La. 183; Troplong, De la Vente, n. 984 à 1003; Eva. Civ. Code, art. 2623; id. 3522, n. 22. See CONTENTIOUS JURISDICTION.

LITISPENDENCIA. In Spanish Law. Litispendency. The condition of a suit pending in a court of justice.

In order to render this condition valid, it is necessary that the judge be competent to take cognizance of the cause; that the defendant has been duly cited to appear, and fully informed, in due time and form, of the nature of the demand, or that, if he has not, it has been through his own fault or fraud.

The litispendencia produces two effects: the legal impossibility of alienating the property in dispute during the pendency of the suit; the accumulation of all the proceedings in the cause, in the tribunal where the suit is pending, whether the same be had before the same judge or other judges or notaries. This cumulation may be required in any stage of the cause, and forms a valid exception to the further proceeding, until the cumulation is effected. Escriche, Dict.

LITRE. A French measure of capacity. It is of the size of a cubic décimètre, or the cube of one-tenth part of a metre. It is equal to 61.027 cubic inches, or a little more than a quart. See MEASURE.

LITTORAL (littus). Belonging to shore: as, of sea and great lakes. Webst. Corresponding to riparian proprietors on a stream or small pond are littoral proprietors on a sea or lake. But riparian is also used coextensively with littoral. 7 Cush. 94. See 17 How. 426.

LITUS MARIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Shore; beach. Quâ fluctus eluderet. Cic. Top. c. 7. Quâ fluctus adludit. Quinct. lib. 5, c. ult. Quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. Celsus; said to have been first so defined by Cicero, in an award as arbitrator. L. 92, D, de verb. signif. Quâ maximus fluctus exæstuat. L. 112, D, eod. tit. Quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. lib. 2, de rer. divis. et qual. § 3. That is to say, as far as the largest winter wave runs up. Vocab. Jur. Utr.

At Common Law. The shore between common high-water mark and low-water mark. Hale, de Jure Maris, cc. 4, 5, 6; 3 Kent, 427; 2 Hill. R. P. 90.

Shore is also used of a river. 5 Wheat. 385; 20 Wend. 149. See 13 How. 381; 28 Me. 180; 14 Penn. 171.

LIVE.

Under statute providing a punishment for those "living together" in fornication or adultery, occasional acts of intercourse are not sufficient; 14 Ind. 280; 37 Tex. 346; 25 Ga. 477; see 39 Ala. 554; 11 Mass. 153; 2 Ired. Eq. 226; 47 How. Pr. 446. "Live animals" has been held to include singing birds; 7 Blatchf. 285. "Live stock" has been held not to include live fowls; 5 Blatchf. 520.

LIVERY. In English Law. The delivery of possession of lands to those tenants who hold of the king in capite or by knight's service.

The name of a writ which lay for the heir of age to obtain possession of the seisin of his lands at the king's hands; abolished by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24; Fitzh. N. B. 155; 2 Bla. Com. 68.

The distinguishing dress worn by the servants of a gentleman or nobleman, or by the members of a particular guild. "Livery or clothing." Say. 274. By stat. 1 Rich. II. c. 7, and 16 Rich. II. c. 4, none but the servants of a lord, and continually dwelling in his house, or those above rank of yeomen, should wear the lord's livery.

Privilege of a particular company or guild. The members of such company are called liverymen; Whart. Lex.

LIVERY OF SEISIN. In Estates. A delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments unto one entitled to the same. This was a ceremony used in the common law for the conveyance of real estate; and livery was in deed, which was performed by the feoffor and the feoffee going upon the land and the latter receiving it from the former; or in law, where the same was not made on the land, but in sight of it; 2 Bla. Com. 315, 316.

In America, livery of seisin is unnecessary, it having been dispensed with either by express law or by usage. The delivery and recording of the deed have the same effect; Washb. R. P. 14, 35. In Maryland, until quite recently, it seems that a deed could not operate as a feoffment without livery of seisin; but under the Rev. Code of 1878, art. 44, § 6, neither livery of seisin nor indenting is necessary; 5 H. & J. 158. See 4 Kent, 381; 1 Mo. 553; 1 Pet. 508; 1 Bay, 107; 5 H. & J. 158; 11 Me. 318; 8 Cra. 229; Dane, Abr.; Bingh. Act. and Def. 96. SEISIN.

LIVRE TOURNOIS. In Common Law. A coin used in France before the revolution. It is to be computed in the ad valorem duty on goods, etc., at eighteen and a half cents. Act of March 2, 1798, § 61, 1 Story Laws, 629. See FOREIGN COINS.

LLOYDS. An association in the city of London, the members of which underwrite each other's policies; 2 Steph. Com. 129.

The name is derived from Lloyd's coffee house, the great resort for seafaring men and those doing business with them in the time of William III. and Anne. Lloyd's underwriters now carry on business in rooms over the Royal Exchange, still called Lloyd's. The affairs of subscribers to these rooms are managed by a committee, called Lloyd's Committee, who appoint agents in all the principal ports of the world, whose business it is to forward all such maritime news as may be of importance in guiding the judgment of the underwriters. These accounts, which arrive almost hourly from some part of the world, are at once posted up, and are called Lloyd's Written Lists. They are subsequently copied into three books, called Lloyd's Book. See Moz. & W.; Arn. Ins.

LLOYD'S BONDS. A kind of bond much used in commercial transactions in England. They are under the seal of a company admitting the indebtedness of the company to a specified amount to the obligee, with a covenant to pay him such amount with interest on a future day. Their validity depends on the considerations for which they are given; 2 Steph. Com. 108, n.; Lind. Part. 284; L. R. 2 Ex. 225; 4 Ch. App. 748.

LOAD-LINE. The depth to which a ship is loaded so as to sink in salt water.

Every owner of a British ship before entering his ship outwards from any port in the United Kingdom shall mark, in white or yellow on a dark ground, a circular disc, twelve inches in diameter, with a horizontal line eighteen inches long, through its centre, and the centre of this disc is to indicate the maximum load-line in salt water, to which the owner intends to load the ship for that voyage; Moz. & W.

LOADMANAGE. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail or row before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way. Pothier, Des Avaries, n. 137; Guidon de la Mer, c. 14; Bacon, Abr. Merchant and Merchandise (F). It is not in use in the United States.

LOAN. A bailment without reward. A bailment of an article for use or consumption without reward. The thing so bailed.

A loan, in general, implies that a thing is lent without reward; but, in some cases, a loan may be for a reward: as, the loan of money. 7 Pet. 109.

It would be an inquiry too purely speculative, whether this use of the term loan originated in the times when taking interest was considered usury and improper, the bailment of money which was to be returned in kind. The supposition would furnish a reasonable explanation of the exception to the general rule that loan includes properly only those bailments where no reward is given or received by the bailee.

In order to make a contract usurious, there must be a loan; Cowp. 112, 770; 1 Ves. 527; 3 Wils. 390; and the borrower must be bound to return the money at all events; 2 Sch. & L. 470. The purchase of a bond or note is not a loan; 3 Sch. & L. 469; 9 Pet. 103; but if such a purchase be merely colorable, it will be considered as a loan; 2 Johns. Cas. 60, 66; 12 S. & R. 46; 15 Johns. 44.

LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION. A contract by which the owner of a personal chattel, called the lender, delivers it to the bailee, called the borrower, to be returned in kind.

For example, if a person borrows a bushel of wheat, and at the end of a month returns to the lender a bushel of equal value. This class of loans is commonly considered under the head of bailments; but it lacks the one essential element of bailment, that of a return of the property: it is more strictly a barter or an exchange: the property passes to the borrower; 4 N. Y. 76; 8 id. 483; 4 Ohio St. 98; 3 Mas. 478; 1 Blackf. 353; Story, Bailm. § 439. Those cases sometimes called venturum (the corresponding civil law term), such as where corn is delivered to a miller to be ground into wheat, are either cases of hiring of labor and service, as where the miller grinds and returns the identical wheat ground into flour, retaining a portion for his services, or constitute a mere exchange, as where he mixes the wheat with his own, undertaking to furnish an equivalent in corn. It amounts to a contract of sale, payment being stipulated for in a specified article instead of money.

LOAN FOR USE (called, also, commodatum). A bailment of an article to be used by the borrower without paying for the use. 2 Kent, 573.

Loan for use (called commodatum in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called mutuum in the civil law) in this, that the commodatum must be specifically returned, the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

The loan, like other bailments, must be of some thing of a personal nature; Story, Bailm. § 223; it must be gratuitous; 2 Ld. Raym. 913; for the use of the borrower, and this as the principal object of the bailment; Story, Bailm. § 225; 13 Vt. 161; and must be lent to be specifically returned at the determination of the bailment; Story, Bailm. § 228.

The general law of contracts governs as to the capacity of the parties and the character of the use; Story, Bailm. §§ 50, 162, 302, 380. He who has a special property may loan the thing, and this even to the general owner, and the possession of the general owner still be that of a borrower; 1 Atk. 235; 8 Term, 199; 2 Taunt. 268.

The borrower may use the thing himself, but may not, in general, allow others to use it; 1 Mod. 210; 4 Sandf. 8; during the time and for the purposes and to the extent contemplated by the parties; 5 Mass. 104; 1 Const. S. C. 121; 3 Bingh. N. C. 468; Bracton, 99, 100. He is bound to use extraordinary diligence; 3 Bingh. N. C. 468; 14 Ill. 84; 4 Sandf. 8; Story, Bailm. § 237; is responsible for accidents, though inevitable, which injure the property during any excess of use; 5 Mass. 194; 16 Ga. 25; must bear the ordinary expenses of the thing; Jones, Bailm. 67; and restore it at the time and place and in the manner contemplated by the contract; 16 Ga. 25; 12 Tex. 373; Story, Bailm. § 99; including, also, all accessories; 16 Ga. 25; 2 Kent, 566. As to the place of delivery, see 9 Barb. 189; 1 Me. 120; 1 N. H. 295; 1 Conn. 255; 5 id. 76; 16 Mass. 453. He must, as a general rule, return it to the lender; 7 Cow. 278; 1 B. & Ad. 450; 11 Mass. 211.

The lender may terminate the loan at his pleasure; 9 East. 49; 1 Term, 480; 8 Johns. N. Y. 432; 16 Ga. 25; is perhaps liable for expenses adding a permanent benefit; Story, Bailm. § 274. The lender still retains his property as against third persons, and, for some purposes, his possession; 11 Johns. 285; 6 id. 195; 13 id. 141, 561; 1 Pick. 389; 5 Mass. 303; 1 Term, 480; 1 B. & Ald. 59; 2 Cr. M. & R. 659. As to whether the property is transferred by a recovery of judgment for its value, see 26 E. L. & Eq. 328; Metc. Yelv. 67, n.; 5 Me. 147; 1 Pick. 62. See, generally, Edwards, Jones, Story, on Bailments; Kent, Lect. 46.

LOAN SOCIETIES. In English Law. A kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes. They are of comparatively recent origin in England, and are authorized and regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. ch. 110, and 21 Vict. ch. 19.

LOCAL ACTION. In Practice. An action the cause of which could have arisen in some particular county only.

All local actions must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose.

In general, all actions are local which seek the recovery of real property; 2 W. Blackst. 1070; 4 Term, 504; 7 id. 589; whether founded upon contract or not; or damages for injury to such property, as waste, under the statute of Gloucester, trespass quare clausum fregit, trespass or case for injuries affecting things real, as for nuisances to houses or lands, disturbance of rights of way or of common, obstruction or diversion of ancient water-courses; 1 Chitty, Pl. 271; Gould, Pl. ch. 3, §§ 105, 106, 107; but not if there was a contract between the parties on which to ground an action; 15 Mass. 284; 1 Day, Conn. 263.

Many actions arising out of injuries to local rights are local: as, quare impedit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 241. The action of replevin is also local; 1 Wms. Saund. 247, n. 1; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 111. See Gould, Chitty, Pleading; Comyns, Dig. Action; TRANSITORY ACTION.

LOCAL ALLEGIANCE. The allegiance due to a government from an alien while within its limits. 1 Bla. Com. 370; 2 Kent, 63, 64.

LOCAL OPTION. This term is used to designate a right granted by legislative enactments to the inhabitants of particular districts, to determine by ballot whether or not licenses should be issued for the sale of intoxicating liquors within such districts.

An act of this character passed in Delaware, in 1847, was declared unconstitutional as an attempted delegation of the trust to make laws, confided to the legislature; 4 Harr. 479; so, also, in Indiana and Iowa; 4 Ind. 342; 42 Ind. 547; 5 Iowa, 495. This kind of legislation has been supported, however, as falling within the class of police regulations; 108 Mass. 27. In Pennsylvania, Agnew, J., in a leading opinion on this subject, says, the true distinction is this: "The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend;" 72 Penn. 491. At this time the weight of authority is in favor of the constitutionality of local option laws; 36 N. J. 720; 42 Conn. 304; 42 Md. 71. See 12 Cent. L. J. 123; 13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 133; Cooley, Const. Lim. 125.

LOCAL STATUTES. Statutes whose operation is intended to be restricted within certain limits. Dwarr. on Stat. p. 384. It may be either public or private. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 85, 86, n. Local statutes is used by Lord Mansfield as opposed to personal statutes, which relate to personal transitory contracts; whereas local statutes refer to things in a certain jurisdiction alone: e. g., the Statute of Frauds relates only to things in England; 1 W. Blackst. 246.

LOCALITY. In Scotch Law. This name is given to a life rent created in marriage contracts in favor of the wife, instead of leaving her to her legal life rent of terce. 1 Bell, Com. 55. See JOINTURE.

LOCATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Letting for hire. Calvinus, Lex.; Voc. Jur. Utr. The term is also used by text-writers upon the law of bailment at common law. 1 Parsons, Contr. 602. In Scotch law it is translated location. Bell, Dict.

LOCATIO OPERIS MERCIUM VEHENDARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The carriage of goods for hire.

In respect to contracts of this sort entered into by private persons not exercising the business of common carriers, there does not seem to be any material distinction varying the rights, obligations, and duties of the parties from those of other bailees for hire. Every such private person is bound to ordinary diligence and a reasonable exercise of skill; and of course he is not responsible for any losses not occasioned by ordinary negligence, unless he has expressly, by the terms of his contract, taken upon himself such risk; 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 917, 918; 4 Taunt. 787; 6 id. 577; 2 Marsh. 293; Jones, Bailm. 103, 106, 121; 2 B. & P. 417. See COMMON CARRIERS.

LOCATIO OPERIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The hiring of labor and services.

It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, which he who gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it. Pothier, Louage, n. 392. This is divided into two branches: first, locatio operis faciendi; and, secondly, locatio operis mercium vehendarum. See these titles.

LOCATIO OPERIS FACIENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Hire of services to be performed.

There are two kinds: first, the locatio operis faciendi strictly so called, or the hire of labor and services; such as the hire of tailors to make clothes, and of jewellers to set gems, and of watchmakers to repair watches. Jones, Bailm. 90, 96, 97. Secondly, locatio custodiæ, or the receiving of goods on deposit for a reward, which is properly the hire of care and attention about the goods. Story, Bailm. §§ 422, 442.

In contracts for work, it is of the essence of the contract, first, that there should be work to be done; secondly, for a price or reward; and, thirdly, a lawful contract between parties capable and intending to contract. Pothier, Louage, nn. 395–403.

LOCATIO REI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The hiring of a thing. It is a contract by which one of the parties obligates himself to give to the other the use and enjoyment of a certain thing for a period of time agreed upon between them, and in consideration of a price which the latter binds himself to pay in return. Poth. Contr. de Louage, n. 1. See BAILMENT; HIRE; HIRER; LETTER.

LOCATION. In Scotch Law. A contract by which the temporary use of a subject, or the work or service of a person, is given for an ascertained hire. 1 Bell, Com. b. 2, pt. 3, c. 2, s. 4, art. 2, § 1, page 255. See BAILMENT; HIRE.

At Common Law. The act of selecting and designating lands which the person making the location is authorized by law to select.

It is applied among surveyors who are authorized by public authority to lay out lands by a particular warrant. The act of selecting the land designated in the warrant and surveying it is called its location. In Pennsylvania, it is an application made by any person for land, in the office of the secretary of the late land office of Pennsylvania, and entered in the books of said office, numbered and sent to the surveyor-general's office. Act June 25, 1781, § 2. It is often applied to denote the act of selecting and marking out the line upon which a railroad, canal, or highway is to be constructed.

LOCATIVE CALLS. Calls or requirements of a deed, etc., for certain landmarks, describing certain means by which the land to be located can be identified.

Reference to physical objects in entries and deeds, by which the land to be located is exactly described; 2 Bibb, 145; 3 id. 414.

Special, as distinguished from general, calls or descriptions; 3 Bibb, 414; 2 Wheat. 211; 10 id. 463; 7 Pet. 171; 18 Wend. 157; 10 Gratt. 445; Jones, Law, 469; 16 Ga. 141; 5 Ind. 302; 15 Mo. 80.

LOCATOR. In Civil Law. He who leases or lets a thing to hire to another. His duties are, first, to deliver to the hirer the thing hired, that he may use it; second, to guarantee to the hirer the free enjoyment of it; third, to keep the thing hired in good order in such manner that the hirer may enjoy it; fourth, to warrant that the thing hired has not such defects as to destroy its use. Pothier, Contr. de Louage, n. 53. One who locates, or surveys lands.

The claim of a "locator" is peculiar to Kentucky, and is for a portion of the land located in compensation for his services; 4 Pet. 446.

LOCK-UP HOUSE. A place used temporarily as a prison.

LOCO PARENTIS. See IN LOCO PARENTIS.

LOCUM TENENS. Holding the place. A deputy. See LIEUTENANT.

LOCUS CONTRACTUS. See LEX LOCI.

LOCUS DELICTI. The place where the tort, offence, or injury has been committed.

LOCUS PŒNITENTIÆ (Lat. a place of repentance). The opportunity of withdrawing from a projected contract, before the parties are finally bound; or of abandoning the intention of committing a crime, before it has been completed. 2 Bro. C. C. 569. Until an offer is accepted by the offeree the party making it may withdraw it at any time. So of a bid at auction. "An auction is not inaptly called locus pœnitentiæ." 3 Term, 148. See ATTEMPT.

LOCUS IN QUO (Lat. the place in which). In Pleading. The place where any thing is alleged to have been done. 1 Salk. 94.

LOCUS REI SITÆ. See LEX REI SITÆ.

LOCUS SIGILLI (Lat.). The place of the seal.

In many of the states, instead of sealing deeds, writs, and other papers or documents requiring it, a scroll is made, in which the letters L. S. are printed or written, which is an abbreviation of Locus sigilli. This, in some of the states, has all the efficacy of a seal, but in others it has no such effect. See SCROLL; SEAL.

LOCUS STANDI. (A place of standing.) A right of appearance in a court of justice or before a legislative body, on a given question. A right to be heard.

LODE MANAGE. The hire of a pilot, for conducting a ship from one place to another. Cowel.

LODGER. One who inhabits a portion of a house of which another has the general possession and custody.

It is difficult, in the present state of the law, to state exactly the distinctions between a lodger, a guest, and a boarder. A person may be a guest at an inn without being a lodger; 1 Salk. 388; 9 Pick. 280; 25 Wend. 653; 242; 16 Ala. N. S. 666; 8 Blackf. 535; 14 Barb. 193; 6 C. B. 132. And boarder includes one who regularly takes his meals with, and forms in some degree a part of, the householder's family. See BOARDER; GUEST; INN; INNKEEPER; 25 E. L. & Eq. 76. A lodger does not take meals in the house as lodger; but the duration of the inhabitancy is of no importance as determining his character. The difficulty in this respect is in deciding whether a person is an under-tenant, entitled to notice to quit, or merely a lodger, and not entitled to such notice. See Wood, Landl. & T. 177; 7 M. & G. 87.

LODGING HOUSE ACTS. Various acts for the well ordering of common lodging houses, beginning in 1851 with the stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 28. The last act on the subject was 31 & 32 Vict. c. 130.

LODS ET RENTES. A fine payable to the seigneur upon every sale of lands within his seigniory. 1 Low. C. 59.

Any transfer of lands for a consideration gives rise to the claim; 1 Low. C. 79; as, the creation of a rente viagire (life-rent); 1 Low. C. 84; a transfer under bail emphyteotique; 1 Low. C. 295; a promise to sell, accompanied by transfer of possession; 9 Low. C. 272. It does not arise on a transfer by a father to his son subject to a payment by the son of a life-rent to the father, and of the father's debts; 8 Low. C. 5, 34, 324; nor where property is required for public uses. 1 Low. C. 91.

LOG-BOOK. A ship's journal. It contains a minute account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. 1 Marsh. Ins. 408.

The part of the log-book relating to transactions in the harbor is termed the harbor log; that relating to what happens at sea, the sea log. Young, Naut. Dic.

When a log-book is required by law to be kept, it is an official register so far as regards the transactions required by law to be entered in it, but no further. Abbott, Shipp. 468, n.

1; 1 Sumn. 373; 2 id. 19, 78; 4 Mas. 544; 1 Esp. 427; 1 Dods. 9; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 159; Gilp. 147.

All vessels making foreign voyages from the United States, or, of the burden of seventy-five tons or more, from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, must have an official log-book; Rev. Stat. § 4290.

In suits for seamen's wages, the log-book is to be produced if required, or otherwise the complainant may state its contents. The neglect of a seaman to render himself on board, and his absence without leave, are also to be entered on the log-book in certain cases, or the sailor's fault will not forfeit his wages. Acts 20 July, 1790, sects. 2, 5, & 6; 7 June, 1872; 27 Feb. 1877.

It is the duty of the mate to keep the log-book. Dana, Seaman's Friend, 145, 200.

Every entry shall be signed by the master and mate or some other one of the crew, and shall be made as soon as possible after the occurrence to which it relates. For keeping the log in an improper manner the master is punishable by fine; Rev. Stat. §§ 4291, 4292.

LONDON AND MIDDLESEX SITTINGS. The nisi prius sittings held at Westminster or in the Guildhall of London for the trial of causes arising for the most part in London or Middlesex. 3 Steph. Com. 514; Stat. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66. By the Judicature Act, 1875, the sittings of the Court of Appeal and those in London and Middlesex of the High Court of Justice are to be four in every year: (1) The Michaelmas sittings, from Nov. 2 to Dec 21. (2) The Hilary sittings, from Jan. 11 to the Wednesday before Easter. (3) The Easter sittings, from the Tuesday after Easter week to the Friday before Whitsunday. (4) The Trinity sittings, from the Tuesday after Whitsun week to the 8th of August. Moz. & W.

LONDON COURT OF BANKRUPTCY. By the Judicature Act of 1875, sec. 9, this court is not to be consolidated with the Supreme Court of Judicature. See COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

LONG PARLIAMENT. The parliament which met November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved (informally) by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. The same name is also given to the parliament which met in 1661 and was dissolved Dec. 30, 1678. The latter is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "Long Parliament of Charles II." Moz. & W.

LONG QUINTO, THE. An expression used to denote part II. of the year book which gives reports of cases in 5 Edw. IV. Wall. Reporters.

LONG VACATION. The recess of the English courts from August 10th to October 24th.

LOQUELA (Lat.). In Practice. An imparlance, loquela sine die, a respite in law to an indefinite time. Formerly by loquela was meant the allegations of fact mutually made on either side, now denominated the pleadings. Steph. Pl. 29.

LORD'S DAY. Sunday. Co. Litt. 135. See MAXIMS, Dies Dominicus.

LORD MAYOR'S COURT. In English Law. One of the chief courts of special and local jurisdiction in London. It is a court of the queen, held before the lord mayor and aldermen. Its practice and procedure are amended and its powers enlarged by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 157. In this court, the recorder, or, in his absence, the common serjeant, presides as judge; and from its judgments error may be brought in the exchequer chamber. 3 Steph. Com. 449, note l.

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. See CHANCELLOR.

LOSS. In Insurance. The destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the perils insured against, according to the express provisions and construction of the contract.

These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy. And no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils. Marsh. Ins. 1, c. 12.

Loss under a life policy is simply the death of the subject by a cause the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and where the loss is not fraudulent, as where one assured, who assures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death.

Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of policy, be by the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured by fire.

In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively total, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average.

A partial loss is any loss or damage short of, or not amounting to, a total loss; for if it be not the latter it must be the former. See 4 Mass. 374; 6 id. 102, 122, 317; 12 id. 170, 288; 8 Johns. 237; 10 id. 487; 5 Binn. 595; 2 S. & R. 553.

A total loss is such destruction of, or damage to, the thing insured that it is of little or no value to the owner.

Partial losses are sometimes denominated average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; and they are distinguished into general and particular averages. See AVERAGE.

Total losses, in maritime insurance, are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See ABANDONMENT.

Consult Phillips, Arnold, May, Insurance; Pars. Mar. Law; TOTAL LOSS.

LOST INSTRUMENT. The "copy" of a lost instrument intended by the Act of Congress of January 23, 1874 (for stamping unstamped instruments), is a substantial copy, or such a draft of the original instrument as will identify the subject of the tax; 82 Penn. 280.

LOST PAPERS. Papers which have been so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search.

When deeds, wills, agreements, and the like, have been lost, and it is desired to prove their contents, the party must prove that he has made diligent search, and in good faith exhausted all sources of information accessible to him. For this purpose his own affidavit is sufficient; 1 Atk. 446; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 349. On being satisfied of this, the court will allow secondary evidence to be given of its contents. See EVIDENCE.

Even a will proved to be lost may be admitted to probate upon secondary evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 84, 509, 575; 1 P. D. 154; s. c. 17 Eng. Rep. 45, note; declarations, written or oral, made by a testator, both before and after the execution of the will, are admissible as secondary evidence; id. But the fact of the loss must be proved by the clearest evidence; 8 Metc. 487; 2 Add. Eccl. 223; 6 Wend. 173; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 115.

When a bond or other deed was lost, formerly the obligee or plaintiff was compelled to go into equity to seek relief, because there was no remedy at law, the plaintiff being required to make profert in his declaration; 1 Ch. Cas. 77. But in process of time courts of law dispensed with profert in such cases, and thereby obtained concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of chancery: so that now the loss of any paper, other than a negotiable note, will not prevent the plaintiff from recovering at law, as well as in equity; 3 Atk. 214; 1 Ves. 341; 7 id. 19; 3 V. & B. 54.

When a negotiable note has been lost, equity alone will, in the absence of statutory provisions, grant relief. In such case the claimant must tender an indemnity to the debtor, and file a bill in chancery to compel payment; 7 B. & C. 90; Ry. & M. 90; 4 Taunt. 602; 2 Ves. Sen. 317; 16 Ves. 430.

LOST, OR NOT LOST. A phrase in policies of insurance, signifying the contract to be retrospective and applicable to any loss within the specified risk, provided the same is not already known to either of the parties, and that neither has any knowledge or information not equally obvious or known to the other. The clause has been adopted only in maritime insurance; though a fire or life policy is not unfrequently retrospect, or, under a different phraseology, by a provision that the risk is to commence at some time prior to its date. 1 Phill. Ins. § 925.

LOST PROPERTY. See FINDER.

LOT. That which fortuitously determines what we are to acquire.

When it can be certainly known what are our rights, we ought never to resort to a decision by lot; but when it is impossible to tell what actually belongs to us, as if an estate is divided into three parts and one part given to each of three persons, the proper way to ascertain each one's part is to draw lots. Wolff, Dr. etc. de la Nat. § 669.

Verdicts reached by a jury by drawing lots will be set aside; 1 Ky. L. J. 500. See also 1 Wash. Ty. 329; s. c. 34 Am. Rep. 808, n.

LOT OF GROUND. A small piece of land in a town or city, usually employed for building, a yard, a garden, or such other urban use. Lots are in-lots, or those within the boundary of the city or town, and out-lots, those which are out of such boundary and which are used by some of the inhabitants of such town or city.

The holder of a lot of ground in a cemetery for burial purposes has not a property in the soil, but only an easement, and takes such easement subject to any change that the altered circumstances of the congregation or of the neighborhood may render necessary; 19 Am. L. Reg. 65; 88 Penn. 42; Washb. R. P.; Boone, Corp.

LOTTERY. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance. Lotteries were formerly often resorted to as a means of raising money by states as well as individuals, and are still authorized in many foreign countries and in a few of our states, but have been abolished as immoral in England, and generally throughout this country. They were declared a nuisance and prohibited by 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 17, and foreign lotteries were forbidden to be advertised in England by the 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 66; 1 C. B. 974; Brown, Dict.

As to what constitutes a lottery: the disposal of any species of property by any of the schemes or games of chance popularly regarded as innocent, comes within this term of the law. Raffles at fairs, etc., are as clearly violations of the criminal law as the most elaborate and carefully organized lotteries; 8 Phila. 457. Thus, the American Art Union is a lottery; 8 N. Y. 228, 240; so a "gift-sale" of books; 33 N. H. 329; so "prize-concerts;" 97 Mass. 593; and "gift-exhibitions;" 32 N. J. L. 398; 12 Abb. Pr. N. s. 210; 59 Ill. 160; 62 Ala. 334; 74 N. Y. 63. The payment of prizes need not be in money; 7 N. Y. 228.

The legislature of a state cannot, by chartering a lottery company, defeat the will of the people expressed in the constitution, in relation to the continuance of such business in their midst; hence, a provision of a state constitution prohibiting the legislature from authorizing any lottery, passed subsequently to the chartering a lottery, is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts; 101 U. S. 814; overruling 3 Woods, 222, and 66 Ind. 588. Nor is a statute which prohibits lotteries rendered inoperative, because it virtually deprives a foreign government of the privilege of selling its bonds within the state; 21 Hun, 466.

Under the act of 12 July, 1876, Rev. Stat. § 3894, any person who shall deposit or send lottery circulars by mail is punishable by fine; 14 Blatchf. 245; and a court of equity will not grant relief where letters addressed to the secretary of a lottery company are detained by a postmaster under the direction of the postmaster-general, if the pleadings fail to show that the letters had no connection with the lottery business; 1 Fed. Rep. 417; see id. 426. The act of 8 June, 1872, Rev. Stat. § 4041, authorizes the postmaster-general to forbid the payment by any postmaster of a money order to any person engaged in the lottery business. But this does not authorize any person to open any letter not addressed to himself. Lottery ticket dealer is defined by the act of July 13, 1866, § 9; 14 Stat. at L. 116.

LOUAGE. In French Law. The contract of hiring and letting. It may be of things or of labor. (1) Letting of things.

(a) Bail à loyer, the letting of houses; (b) Bail à ferme, the letting of land; (2) Letting of labor,—(a) Loyer, the letting of personal service; (b) Bail à chaptel, the letting of animals; Brown, Dict.

LOUISIANA. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

It was first explored by the French in 1682, under Robert Chevalier de la Salle, and named Louisiana, in honor of Louis XIV. In 1699, a French settlement was begun at Iberville by Lemoyne d'Iberville. His efforts were followed up in 1712 by Anthony Crozat, a man of wealth, who upheld the trade of the country for several years. About 1717 all his interest in the province was transferred to the "Western Company," a chartered corporation, at the head of which was the celebrated John Law, whose speculations involved the ruin of one-half the French nobility. In 1732 the "Company" resigned all their rights to the Crown, by whom the whole of Louisiana was ceded to Spain in 1762. By the treaty of St. Ildefonso, signed October 1, 1800, Spain re-conveyed it to France, from whom it was purchased by the United States, April 30, 1803, for $15,000,000. Louisiana was admitted into the Union by an act of congress, approved April 8, 1812.

It covers a part of the territory ceded by France to the United States, and was admitted into the Union with the following limits: Beginning at the mouth of the river Sabine; thence by a line to be drawn along the middle of said river, including all islands, to the thirty-second degree of latitude; thence due north to the northernmost part of the thirty-third degree of north latitude; thence along the said parallel of latitude to the river Mississippi; thence down the said river to the river Iberville, and from thence along the middle of said river to lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain to the Gulf of Mexico; thence bounded by said Gulf to the place of beginning, including all islands within three leagues of the coast. These limits were enlarged by virtue of an act of congress, with the consent of the legislature of the state, April 14, 1813, by adding all that tract of country comprehended within the following bounds, to wit: Beginning with the junction of the Iberville with the river Mississippi; thence along the middle of the Iberville, the river Amite, and the lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain to the eastern mouth of the Pearl River; thence up the eastern branch of Pearl River to the thirty-first degree of north latitude; thence along the said degree of latitude to the river Mississippi; thence down the said river to the place of beginning. The territory thus added to the limits of the state had, up to that time, been subject to the dominion of Spain, and the parishes into which it has been divided are, for this reason, still called in popular language "the Florida Parishes."

The first constitution of Louisiana was adopted on January 22, 1812, and was substantially copied from that of Kentucky. This constitution was superseded by that of 1845, which was in its turn replaced by the one adopted July 31, 1852. Next in order came the constitution of 1864, which yielded to that of 1868, which last was finally succeeded by the constitution adopted July 23, 1879, now in force.

Every male citizen of the United States, and every male person of foreign birth who has been naturalized, or who may have legally declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States before he offers to vote, who is twenty-one years old or upwards, is an elector, and is entitled to vote at any election by the people, provided he be: 1. An actual resident of the state, at least one year next preceding the election at which he offers to vote. 2. An actual resident of the parish in which he offers to vote, at least six months next preceding the election. 3. An actual resident of the ward or precinct in which he offers to vote, at least thirty days next preceding the election.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER is vested in a general assembly which consists of a senate and house of representatives. Every elector is eligible to a seat in the house of representatives, and every elector who has reached the age of twenty-five years is eligible to the senate. No person is eligible to the general assembly, unless at the time of his election he was a citizen of the state for five years, and an actual resident of the district or parish from which he may be elected, for two years immediately preceding his election. All members of the general assembly are elected for a term of four years. Representation in the house of representatives is equal and uniform, and is regulated and ascertained by the total population. A representative number is fixed and each parish and election district has as many representatives as the aggregate number of its population entitles it to, and an additional representative for any fraction exceeding one-half the representative number. The number of representatives can not be more than ninety-eight nor less than seventy; but each parish must have at least one representative. The state is divided into senatorial districts. The number of senators can not be more than thirty-six nor less than twenty-four, and they are apportioned by the constitution among the senatorial districts according to the total population contained in the several districts.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER consists of a governor, lieutenant-governor, auditor, treasurer, and secretary of state.

The supreme executive power of the state is vested in the governor. He is elected by the qualified electors for representatives at the time and place of voting for representatives, and holds office during four years. If two persons have an equal and the highest number of votes, a selection is to be made between these by the joint vote of the general assembly. The governor must be thirty years of age; must have been ten years a citizen of the United States, and resident of the state for the same space and time preceding his election; and must not be a member of congress or hold office under the United States at the time of or within six months immediately preceding the election for such office. He is commander-in-chief of the militia of the state except when they are called into the active service of the United States; is to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; must give to the general assembly information respecting the situation of the state, and recommend such measures as he may deem expedient; has power to grant reprieves for all offences against the state, and, except in cases of impeachment or treason, has, upon the recommendation in writing of the lieutenant-governor, attorney-general, and presiding judge of the court before which conviction was had, or any two of them, power to grant pardons, commute sentences, and remit fines and forfeitures after conviction. In cases of treason he may grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which body the power of pardoning is vested. He nominates, and by and with the advice and consent of the senate appoints all officers whose appointments are not expressly otherwise provided for by the constitution or the legislature; has power to fill vacancies during the recess of the senate, provided he appoint no one whom the senate has rejected for the same office. He may require information in writing from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices; and has power on extraordinary occasions to convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place, if that should have become dangerous from an enemy or from an epidemic. He has the veto power, but must return the bill vetoed, with his objections, to the house where it originated, and it may still become a law, by a vote of two-thirds of the members of that house. (Const. arts. 58–79).

The lieutenant-governor is elected by the people at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications as the governor. He is president of the senate by virtue of his office, but has only a casting vote therein. In case of the impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, refusal or inability to qualify, disability, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor absent or impeached shall return or be acquitted, or the disability be removed.

The treasurer, auditor, secretary of state, and also the attorney-general, are elected by the qualified electors of the state for the term of four years.

THE JUDICIAL POWER is vested in a supreme court, in courts of appeal, in district courts, and in justices of the peace.

The supreme court is composed of one chief justice and four associate justices, appointed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate. They must be citizens of the United States, and of the state, over thirty-five years of age, learned in the law, and must have practised law in the state for ten years preceding their appointment. The judges of the first supreme court, organized under the constitution of 1879, were appointed as follows: The chief justice for the term of twelve years; one associate justice for the term of ten years; one associate justice for the term of eight years; one for the term of six years; and one for the term of four years. After the expiration of the short term a vacancy will occur every two years. The state is divided into four supreme court districts, and the court is composed of judges appointed from those districts. The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction, which extends to all cases where the matter in dispute or the fund to be distributed, whatever may be the amount therein claimed, exceeds one thousand dollars exclusive of interest; to suits for divorce and separation from bed and board, and to all cases in which the constitutionality or legality of any tax, toll, or impost whatever, or of any fine, forfeiture, or penalty imposed by a municipal corporation is in contestation, whatever may be the amount thereof, and in such cases, the appeal on the law and the facts shall be directly from the court in which the case originated to the supreme court; and to criminal cases on questions of law alone, whenever the punishment of death or imprisonment at hard labor may be inflicted, or a fine exceeding three hundred dollars is actually imposed. Its civil remedial jurisdiction extends to both law and facts. It has appellate jurisdiction only, but exercises control and general supervision over all inferior courts; and may issue writs of habeas corpus, certiorari, prohibition, mandamus, quo warranto, and other remedial writs.

Courts of Appeal.—The state, with the exception of the Parish of Orleans, is divided into five circuits, in each of which there is a court of appeals, composed of two judges elected by the two houses of the general assembly in joint session—one judge for a term of eight years, and one for a term of four years. The judges must be learned in the law, and must have resided and practised law in the state for six years, and must have been actual residents of the circuit from which they are elected, for at last two years next preceding their election. This court of appeals has appellate jurisdiction which extends to all cases civil or probate, when the matter in dispute or fund to be distributed exceeds two hundred dollars exclusive of interest, and does not exceed one thousand dollars exclusive of interest. This jurisdiction is appellate only, but the judges have power to grant writs of habeas corpus within their circuits, and may also issue remedial writs in aid of their appellate jurisdiction. Whenever the judges composing the courts of appeal concur, their judgment is final; in case of disagreement, the judgment appealed from stands affirmed.

District Courts.—The state (with the exception of the Parish of Orleans) is divided into twenty-six judicial districts, in each of which there is a district court, presided over by one judge. The district judges are elected for the term of four years by the people of their respective districts, where they must have resided for two years next preceding their election. They must be learned in the law, and must have practised law in the state for five years previous to their election. The district courts have original jurisdiction in all civil matters where the amount in dispute exceeds fifty dollars, exclusive of interest. They have unlimited original jurisdiction in all criminal, probate, and succession matters, and when a succession is a party defendant; they have also jurisdiction of appeals from justices of the peace in all matters where the amount in controversy exceeds ten dollars exclusive of interest.

Courts of the Parish and City of New Orleans.—There are in the Parish of Orleans:—

1. A court of appeals, the jurisdiction of which is of the same nature as, and coextensive with that of the courts of appeal in the other parishes. The appeals to this court are upon questions of law alone in all cases involving less than five hundred dollars exclusive of interest, and upon the law and the facts in other cases. The court is presided over by two judges, who must have the same qualifications, and who are elected in the same manner and for the same term of office as the judges of the other appellate courts in the state.

2. Two district courts, the civil district court and the criminal district court. The former consists of five, and the latter of two judges, who must have the qualifications prescribed for district judges throughout the state, and are appointed by the governor by and with the advice of the senate. Three judges of the civil district court are appointed for four years, and two for eight years; one judge of the criminal district court for eight years, and the other for four years. The civil district court has exclusive and general probate, and exclusive civil jurisdiction in all cases where the amount in dispute exceeds one hundred dollars exclusive of interest. The criminal district court has general criminal jurisdiction only.

Justices of the Peace.—In each parish (that of Orleans excepted) there are justices of the peace who are elected for the term of four years. They have exclusive original jurisdiction in all civil matters when the amount in dispute does not exceed fifty dollars exclusive of interest, and original jurisdiction concurrent with the district court when the amount in dispute exceeds fifty dollars, and does not exceed one hundred dollars exclusive of interest. They have, also, criminal jurisdiction as committing magistrates, with power to bail or discharge in cases not capital, or necessarily punishable at hard labor.

The justices of the peace ceased to exist in the parish of Orleans with the adoption of the constitution of 1879, and in their stead were substituted the city courts—four in number—presided over by judges having all the qualifications required for district judges, and elected by the people of the parish for the term of four years. They have exclusive and final jurisdiction over all sums not exceeding one hundred dollars exclusive of interest.

SYSTEM OF LAWS. Louisiana is governed by the civil law, unlike the other states of the Union. The first body of civil laws was adopted in 1808, and was substantially the same as the Code Napoleon, with some modifications derived from the Spanish law. It was styled the "Digest of the Civil Law," and has been afterwards frequently revised and enlarged to suit the numerous statutory changes in the law, and since 1825 has become known as the "Civil Code of Louisiana. There is no criminal offence in this state but such as is provided for by statute; the law does not define crimes, but prescribes their punishment by reference to their name; for definitions we turn to the common law of England. The civil code lays down the general leading principles of evidence, and the courts refer to treatises on that branch of the law for the development of those principles in their application to particular cases, as they arise in practice. Most of these rules have been borrowed from the English law, as having a more solid foundation in reason and common sense. The usages of trade sanctioned by courts of different countries at different times, or the lex mercatoria, also exist entirely distinct and independent of the civil code, and are recognized and duly enforced. When Louisiana was ceded to the United States, some of the lawyers from the old states spared no efforts to introduce the laws with which they were familiar, and of which they sought to avail themselves, rather than undergo the toil of learning a new system in a foreign language. But of those conversant with the common law, the most eminent did not favor its introduction as a general system to the exclusion of the civil law." 7 Ann. 395. The laws of the state on public and personal rights, criminal and commercial matters were assimilated to those of the other states; but in relation to real property and its tenures, the common law or English equity system has never had place in Louisiana.

LOW-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest; i. e. the line to which the ebb-tide usually recedes, or the ordinary low-water mark unaffected by drought; 26 Me. 384; 60 Penn. 339. See HIGH-WATER MARK; RIVER; SEA-SHORE; Dane, Abr.; 1 Halst. Ch. 1.

LOYAL. Legal, or according to law: as, loyal matrimony, a lawful marriage.

"Uncore n'est loyal a homme de faire un tort" (it is never lawful for a man to do a wrong), Dyer, fol. 36, § 38. "Et per curiam n'est loyal" (and it was held by the court that it was not lawful). T. Jones, 24. Also spelled loayl. Dy. 36, § 38; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. The Norman spelling is "loyse." Kelh. Norm. Dict.

Faithful to a prince or superior; true to plighted faith or duty. Webster, Dict.

LOYALTY. Adherence to law. Faithfulness to the existing government.

LUCID INTERVALS. In Medical Jurisprudence. Periods in which an insane person is so far free from his disease that the ordinary legal consequences of insanity do not apply to acts done therein.

Correct notions respecting the lucid interval are no less necessary than correct notions respecting the disease itself. By the earlier writers on insanity, lucid intervals were regarded as a far more common event than they have been found to be in recent times. They were also supposed to be characterized by a degree of mental clearness and vigor not often witnessed now. These views of medical writers were shared by distinguished legal authorities, by whom the lucid interval was described as a complete, though temporary, restoration. D'Agnesseau, in his pleading in the case of the Abbé d'Orléans, says, "It must not be a superficial tranquillity, a shadow of repose, but, on the contrary, a profound tranquillity, a real repose; it must not be a mere ray of reason, which makes its absence more apparent when it is gone,—not a flash of lightning, which pierces through the darkness only to render it more gloomy and dismal,—not a glimmering which joins the night to the day,—but a perfect light, a lively and continued lustre, a full and entire day interposed between the two separate nights of the fury which precedes and follows it; and, to use another image, it is not a deceitful and faithless stillness which follows or forebodes a storm, but a sure and steadfast tranquillity for a time, a real calm, a perfect serenity. In fine, without looking for so many metaphors to represent our idea, it must not be a mere diminution, a remission of the complaint, but a kind of temporary cure, an intermission so clearly marked as in every respect to resemble the restoration of health." Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 579. So Lord Thurlow says, by a perfect interval, "I do not mean a cooler moment, an abatement of pain or violence or of a higher state of torture,—a mind relieved from excessive pressure; but an interval in which the mind, having thrown off the disease, had recovered its general habit." 3 Bro. Ch. 234. That there sometimes occurs an intermission in which the person appears to be perfectly rational, restored, in fact, to his proper self, is an unquestionable fact. It is equally true that they are of rare occurrence, that they continue but for a very brief period, and that with the apparent clearness there is a real loss of mental force and acuteness. In most cases of insanity there may be observed, from time to time, a remission of the symptoms, in which excitement and violence are replaced by quiet and calm, and, within a certain range, the patient converses correctly and properly. A superficial observer might be able to detect no trace of disease; but a little further examination would show a confusion of ideas and singularity of behavior, indicative of serious, though latent, disease. In this condition the patient may hold some correct notions, even on a matter of business, and yet be quite incompetent to embrace all the relations connected with a contract or a will, even though no delusion were present to warp his judgment. The revelations of patients after recovery furnish indubitable proof that during this remission of the symptoms the mind is in a state of confusion utterly unreliable for any business purpose. Georget, Des Mal. Men. 46; Reid, Essays on Hypochondriacal Affections, 21 Essay; Combe, Men. Derang. 241; Ray, Med. Jur. 376.

Of late years—whatever may have been the earlier practice—courts have not required that proof of a lucid interval which consists of complete restoration of reason, as described above. They have been satisfied with such proof as was furnished by the transaction in question. They cared less to consider the general state of mind than its special manifestations on a particular occasion. In 1 Phill. Lect. 90, the court said, "I think the strongest and best proof that can arise as to a lucid interval is that which arises from the act itself;" if that "is a rational act, rationally done, the whole case is proved;" "if she could converse rationally, that is a lucid interval." 2 C. & P. 415. This is a mere begging of the question, which is whether the act so rational and so rationally done—and not for that reason necessarily incompatible with insanity—was or was not done in a lucid interval. Persons very insane, violent, and full of delusions frequently do and say things evincing no mark of disease, while no one supposes that there is any lucid interval in the case. Correcter views prevailed in 2 Hagg. 433, where the court pronounced against two wills which showed no trace of folly, because the testator had been confessedly so insane as to require an attendant from an asylum, until within a few months of the date of the last will, and had manifested delusions during the period that intervened between the two wills in question. "It is clear," said the court, "that persons essentially insane may be calm, may do acts, hold conversations, and even pass in general society as perfectly sane. It often requires close examination by persons skilled in the disorder, to discover and ascertain whether or not the mental derangement is removed and the mind become again perfectly sound. Where there is calmness, where there is rationality on ordinary subjects, those who see the party usually conclude that his recovery is perfect. . . . When there is not actual recovery, and a return to the management of himself and his concerns by the unfortunate individual, the proof of a lucid interval is extremely difficult."

In criminal cases, the proof of a lucid interval must be still more difficult, in the very nature of the case. For although the mental manifestations may be perfectly right, it cannot be supposed that the brain has resumed its normal condition. In its outward expression, insanity, like many other nervous diseases, is characterized by a certain periodicity, whereby the prominent symptoms disappear for a time, only to return within a very limited period. An epileptic, in the intervals between his fits, may evince to the closest observer not a single trace of mental or bodily disease; and yet, for all that, nobody supposes that he has recovered from his malady. No more does a lucid interval in a case of insanity imply that the disease has disappeared because its outward manifestations have ceased. There unquestionably remains an abnormal condition of the brain, by whatever name it may be called, whereby the power of the mind to sustain provocations, to resist temptations, or withstand any other causes of excitement, is greatly weakened.

Lucid intervals, properly so called, should not be confounded with those periods of apparent recovery which occur between two successive attacks of mental disease, nor with those transitions from one phasis of insanity to another, in which the individual seems to be in his natural condition. They may not be essentially different, but the suddenness and brevity of the former would be likely to impart to an act a moral complexion very different from that which it would bear if performed in the larger and more indefinite intermissions of the latter. Still, great forbearance should be exercised towards persons committing criminal acts while in any of these equivocal conditions. Those who have suffered repeated attacks of mental disease habitually labor under a degree of nervous irritability, which renders them peculiarly susceptible to many of those incidents and influences which lead to crime. The law may make no distinction, but executive and judicial tribunals are generally intrusted with discretionary powers, whereby they are enabled to apportion the punishment according to the moral guilt of the party. Ray, Med. Jur. chap. Luc. Int.

It is the duty of the party who contends for a lucid interval, to prove it; for a person once insane is presumed so, until it is shown that he had a lucid interval, or has recovered; Swinb. 77; Co. Litt. 185, n.; 3 Bro. Ch. 443; 1 Const. 225; 1 Pet. 163; 1 Litt. 102; and yet, on the trial of Hadfield, whose insanity, both before and after the act, was admitted, the court, Lord Kenyon, said that, "were they to run into nicety, proof might be demanded of his insanity at the precise moment when the act was committed." See INSANITY.

LUCRATIVE SUCCESSION. In Scotch Law. The passive title of præceptio hæreditatis, by which, if an heir apparent receive gratuitously a part, however small, of the heritage which would come to him as heir, he is liable for all the grantor's precontracted debts. Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 87–89; Stair, Inst. 3. 7.

LUCRI CAUSA (Lat. for the sake of gain). In Criminal Law. A term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny.

According to the tenor of the latest authorities, lucri causâ would appear to be immaterial; though, in recent cases, judges have sometimes thought it advisable not to deny, but rather to confess and avoid it, however sophistically. The prisoner, a servant of A, applied for, and received, at the post-office, all A's letters, and delivered them to A, with the exception of one, which the prisoner destroyed in the hope of suppressing inquiries respecting her character. This was held to be a larceny; "for, supposing that it was a necessary ingredient in that crime that it should be done lucri causâ (which was not admitted), there were sufficient advantages to be obtained by the prisoner in making away with the written character." 1 Den. C. C. 180. In a case where some servants in husbandry had the care of their master's team, they entered his granary by means of a false key, and took out of it two bushels of beans, which they gave to his horses. Of eleven judges, three were of opinion that there was no felony. Of the eight judges who were for a conviction, some (it is not stated how many) alleged that by the better feeding of the horses the men's labor was lessened, so that they took the beans to give themselves ease,— which was, constructively at least, lucri causâ; Russ. & R. 307. When a similar case afterwards came to be decided by the judges, it was said to be no longer res integra; 1 Den. C. C. 193. The rule with regard to the lucri causâ is stated by the English criminal law commissioners in the following terms: "The ulterior motive by which the taker is influenced in depriving the owner of his property altogether, whether it is to benefit himself or another, or to injure any one by the taking, is immaterial." Co. 17. In this country, these cases have not been considered as authority; 18 Ala. 461.

But the American courts have not discussed very much the question of lucri causa. "The rule is now well settled, that it is not necessary to constitute larceny that the taking should be in order to convert the thing stolen to the pecuniary gain of the taker; and that it is sufficient if the taking be fraudulent, and with an intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property." 35 Miss. 214; 14 Ind. 36; 32 Ala. 411.

See 16 Miss. 401; 10 Ala. N. S. 814; 3 Strobh. 508; 1 C. & K. 532; C. & M. 547; Inst. lib. 4, t. 1, § 1; 2 Bish. C. L. §§ 842–848.

LUCRUM CESSANS. In Scotch Law. A cessation of gain. Opposed to damnum emergens, an actual loss.

LUGGAGE. Such articles of personal comfort and conveniences as travellers usually find it desirable to carry with them. This term is synonymous with baggage: the latter being in more common use in this country, while the former seems to be almost exclusively used in England. See BAGGAGE.

LUNACY. See INSANITY.

LUNAR. Belonging to or measured by the moon.

LUNAR MONTH. See MONTH.

LUNATIC. One who is insane. See INSANITY; DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.

LUSHBOROW. A counterfeit coin, made abroad like English money, and brought in during Edward III.'s reign. To bring any of it into the realm was made treason. Cowel.

LYEF-GELD. In Saxon Law. Leave-money. A small sum paid by customary tenant for leave to plough, etc. Cowel; Somn. on Gavelk. p. 27.

LYING IN GRANT. Incorporeal rights and things which cannot be transferred by livery of possession, but which exist only in idea, in contemplation of law, are said to lie in grant, and pass by the mere delivery of the deed. See GRANT; LIVERY OF SEISIN; SEISIN.

LYING IN WAIT. Being in ambush for the purpose of murdering another.

Lying in wait is evidence of deliberation and intention. Where murder is divided into degrees, as in Pennsylvania, lying in wait is such evidence of malice that it makes the killing, when it takes place, murder in the first degree. See Dane, Abr. Index.

LYNCH-LAW. A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting an injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some offence. In England this is called Lidford Law.

All who consent to the infliction of capital punishment by lynch law are guilty of murder in the first degree when not executed in hot blood. The act strikingly combines the distinctive features of deliberation and intent to take life; 38 Conn. 126; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, § 899.

Lynch law differs from mob law in disregarding the forms of ordinary law, while intending to maintain its substance; while mob law disregards both.

M.

M. The thirteenth letter of the alphabet. Persons convicted of manslaughter, in England, were formerly marked with this letter on the brawn of the thumb.

This letter was sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signifies that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest.

MACE BEARER. In English Law. One who carries the mace, an ornamented staff, before certain functionaries. In Scotland an officer attending the court of session, and usually called a macer.

MACE-GREFF. In old English law, one who willingly bought stolen goods, especially food. Brit. c. 29.

MACE-PROOF. Secure against arrest. Wharton.

MACEDONIAN DECREE. In Roman Law. A decree of the Roman senate, which derived its name from that of a certain usurer, who was the cause of its being made, in consequence of his exactions.

It was intended to protect sons who lived under the paternal jurisdiction from the unconscionable contracts which they sometimes made on the expectations after their fathers' deaths; another, and perhaps the principal, object, was to cast odium on the rapacious creditors. It declared such contracts void. Dig. 14, 6, 1; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 6, § 4; Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 2, § 12, note. See CATCHING BARGAIN; POST OBIT.

MACHINATION. The act by which some plot or conspiracy is set on foot.

MACHINE. In Patent Law. Any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight.

In its broadest signification, this term is applied to any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight. "The term machine includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result;" 15 How. 267; but when the effect is produced by chemical action, or by the application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, such methods or operations are called processes; 4 Fish. Pat. Cas. 175.

What are sometimes called the simple machines are six in number: the lever, the pulley, the wheel and axle, the wedge, the screw, and the inclined plane. These are sometimes known as the mechanical powers, though neither these nor any other machinery can ever constitute or create power. They can only economize, control, direct, and render it useful.

Machines, as generally seen and understood, are compounded of these simple machines in some of their shapes and modifications. Such a combination as, when in operation, will produce some specific final result, is regarded as an entire machine. It is so treated in the patent law; for, although a new machine, or a new improvement of a machine, is an invention, and although only one invention can be included in a single patent, still several different contrivances, each of which is in one sense a machine, may all be separately claimed in a single patent, provided they all contribute to improve or to constitute one machine and are intended to produce a single ultimate result; and a new combination of machines is patentable whether the machines themselves be new or old. 3 Wash. C. C. 69; 1 Stor. 273, 568; 2 id. 609; 1 Mas. 474; 1 Sumn. 482; 8 Wheat. 454; 2 Fish. Pat. Cas. 600.

MACHINERY. A more comprehensive term than machine; including the appurtenances necessary to the working of a machine; 111 Mass. 540; 108 id. 78; as the mains of a gas company; 12 Allen, 75; or even a rolling-mill; 2 Sandf. 202. The question of what machinery will pass under a mortgage of realty has been variously decided and will be found discussed under FIXTURES. The cases are collected in 11 Am. Rep. 314, note, and 24 id. 726, note.

MADE KNOWN. Words used as a return to a writ of scire facias when it has been served on the defendant.

MAEGBOTE. A recompense for the slaying of a kinsman. Cowel.

MAGISTER (Lat.). A master; a ruler; one whose learning and position make him superior to others; thus, one who has attained to a high degree or eminence in science and literature is called a master; as, master of arts.

MAGISTER AD FACULTATES (Lat.). In English Ecclesiastical Law. The title of an officer who grants dispensations: as, to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, and the like. Bacon, Abr. Eccles. Courts (A 5.)

MAGISTER NAVIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Master of a ship; he to whom the whole care of a ship is given up, whether appointed by the owner, or charterer, or master. L. 1, ff. de exercit.; Idem, § 3; Calvinus, Lex.; Story, Ag. § 36.

MAGISTER SOCIETATIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Managing partner. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calv. Lex. Especially used of an officer employed in the business of collecting revenues, who had power to call together the tything-men (decumands), as it were a senate, and lay matters before them, and keep account of all receipts, etc. He had, generally, an agent in the province, who was also sometimes called magister societatis. Id.; Story, Partn. § 95.

MAGISTRACY. In its most enlarged signification, this term includes all officers, legislative, executive, and judicial. For example, in some of the state constitutions will be found this provision; "the powers of the government are divided into three distinct departments, and each of these is confided to a separate magistracy, to wit: those which are legislative, to one; those which are executive, to another; and those which are judicial, to another." In a more confined sense, it signifies the body of officers whose duty it is to put the laws in force; as, judges, justices of the peace, and the like. In a still narrower sense, it is employed to designate the body of justices of the peace. It is also used for the office of a magistrate.

MAGISTRALIA BREVIA (Lat.). Writs adapted to special cases, and so called because drawn by the masters in chancery. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 239. For the difference between these and judicial writs, see Bracton, 413 b.

MAGISTRATE. A public civil officer, invested with some part of the legislative, executive, or judicial power given by the constitution. In a narrower sense this term includes only inferior judicial officers, as justices of the peace.

The president of the United States is the chief magistrate of this nation; the governors are the chief magistrates of their respective states.

It is the duty of all magistrates to exercise the power, vested in them for the good of the people, according to law, and with zeal and fidelity. A neglect on the part of a magistrate to exercise the functions of his office, when required by law, is a misdemeanor See 15 Viner, Abr. 144; Ayliffe, Pand. tit.

22; Dig. 30. 16. 57; Merlin, Rep.; 13 Pick. 523.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT. In American Law. Courts in the state of South Carolina, having exclusive jurisdiction in matters of contract of and under twenty dollars.

The constitution of Pennsylvania of 1874, art. v. § 12, abolishes the office of alderman in the city of Philadelphia, and establishes in its place magistrates' courts, not of record, of police and civil causes, with jurisdiction not exceeding one hundred dollars.

MAGNA ASSISA ELIGENDA. An ancient writ to summon four lawful knights before the justices of assize, there to choose twelve others, with themselves to constitute the grand assize or great jury, to try the matter of right. The trial by grand assize was instituted by Henry II. in parliament, as an alternative to the duel in a writ of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. Whart.

MAGNA CHARTA. The Great Charter of English liberties, so called (but which was really a compact between the king and his barons, and almost exclusively for the benefit of the latter, though confirming the ancient liberties of Englishmen in some few particulars), was wrung from king John by his barons assembled in arms, on the 19th of June, 1215, and was given by the king's hand, as a confirmation of his own act, on the little island in the Thames, within the county of Buckinghamshire, which is still called "Magna Charta Island."

The preliminary interview was held in the meadow of Running Mede, or Runny Mede (fr. Sax. runa, council), that is, council meadow, which had been used constantly for national assemblies, and which was situated on the southwest side of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor. Though such formalities were observed, the provisions of the charter were disregarded by John and succeeding kings, each of whom, when wishing to do a popular thing, confirmed this charter. There were thirty-two confirmations between 1215 and 1416, the most celebrated of which were those by Hen. III. (1225) and Edw. I., which last confirmation was sealed with the great seal of England at Ghent, on the 5th November, 1297. Confirmatio Chartarum. The Magna Charta printed in all the books as of 9 Hen. III. is really a transcript of the roll of parliament of 25 Edw. I. There were many originals of Magna Charta made, two of which are preserved in the British Museum.

Magna Charta consists of thirty-seven chapters, the subject-matter of which is very various. C. 1 provides that the Anglican church shall be free and possess its rights unimpaired, probably referring chiefly to immunity from papal jurisdiction. C. 2 fixes relief which shall be paid by king's tenant, of full age. C. 3 relates to heirs and their being in ward. C. 4: guardians of wards within age are by this chapter restrained from waste of ward's estate, "vasto hominum et rerum," waste of men and of things, which shows that serfs were regarded as slaves even by this much-boasted charter; and as serfs and freemen were at this time the divisions of society, and as freemen included, almost without exception, the nobility alone, we can see somewhat how much this charter deserves its name. C. 5 relates to the land and other property of heirs, and the delivering them up when the heirs are of age. C. 6: the marriage of heirs. C. 7 provides that widow shall have quarantine of forty days in her husband's chief house, and shall have her dower set out to her at once, without paying anything for it, and in meanwhile to have reasonable estovers; the dower to be one-third of lands of husband, unless wife was endowed of less at the church-door; widow not to be compelled to marry, but to find surety that she will not marry without consent of the lord of whom she holds.

C. 8: the goods and chattels of crown-debtor to be exhausted before his rents and lands are distrained; the surety not to be called upon if the principal can pay; if sureties pay the debt, they to have the rents and lands of debtor till the debt is satisfied. C. 9 secures to London and other cities and boroughs and town barons of the five ports, and all other ports, to have their ancient liberties. C. 10 prohibits excessive distress for more services or rent than was due. C. 11 provides that court of common pleas should not follow the court of the king, but should be held in a certain place. They have been, accordingly, located at Westminster. C. 12 declares the manner of taking assizes of novel desseisin and mort d'ancestor. These were actions to recover lost seisin (q. v.), now abolished. C. 13 relates to assizes darrein presentment brought by ecclesiastics to try right to present to ecclesiastical benefice. Abolished. C. 14 provides that amercement of a freeman for a fault shall be proportionate to his crime, and not excessive, and that the villein of any other than the king shall be amerced in same manner, his farm, utensils, etc. being preserved to him (salvo wanagio suo). For otherwise he could not cultivate lord's land. C. 15 and c. 16 relate to making of bridges and keeping in repair of sewers and sea-walls. This is now regulated by local parochial law.

C. 17 forbids sheriffs and coroners to hold pleas of the crown. Pleas of the crown are criminal cases which it is desirable should not be tried by an inferior and perhaps ignorant magistrate. C. 18 provides that if any one holding a lay fee from crown die, the king's bailiff, on showing letters patent of summons for debt from the king, may attach all his goods and chattels, so that nothing be moved away till the debt to crown be paid off clearly, the residue to go to executors to perform the testament of the dead; and if there be no debt owing to crown, all the chattels of the deceased to go to executors, reserving, however, to the wife and children their reasonable parts. C. 19 relates to purveyance of king's house; C. 20, to the castle-guard; C. 21, to taking horses, carts, and wood for use of royal castles. The last three chapters are now obsolete. C. 22 provides that the lands of felons shall go to king for a year and a day, afterwards to the lord of the fee. So in France. The day is added to prevent dispute as to whether the year is exclusive or inclusive of its last day. C. 23 provides that the wears shall be pulled down in the Thames and Medway, and throughout England, except on the sea-coast. These wears destroyed fish, and interrupted the floating of wood and the like down stream. C. 24 relates to the writ of præcipe in capite for lords against their tenants offering wrong, etc. Now abolished. C. 25 provides a uniform measure. See 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63. C. 26 relates to inquisitions of life and member, which are to be granted freely. Now abolished. C. 27 relates to knight-service and other ancient tenures, now abolished.

C. 28 relates to accusations, which must be under oath. C. 29 provides that "no freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised from his freehold, or liberties, or immunities, nor outlawed, nor exiled, nor in any manner destroyed, nor will we come upon him or send against him, except by legal judgment of his peers or the law of the land. We will sell or deny justice to none, nor put off right or justice." This clause is very much celebrated, as confirming the right to trial by jury. C. 30 relates to merchant-strangers, who are to be civilly treated, and, unless previously prohibited, are to have free passage through, and exit from, and dwelling in, England, without any manner of extortions, except in time of war. If they are of a country at war with England, and found in England at the beginning of the war, they are to be kept safely until it is found out how English merchants are treated in their country, and then are to be treated accordingly. C. 31 relates to escheats; C. 32, to the power of alienation in a freeman, which is limited. C. 33 relates to patrons of abbeys, etc. C. 34 provides that no appeal shall be brought by a woman except for death of her husband. This was because the defendant could not defend himself against a woman in single combat. The crime of murder or homicide is now inquired into by indictment. C. 35 relates to rights of holding county courts, etc. Obsolete. C. 36 provides that a gift of lands in mortmain shall be void, and lands so given go to lord of fee. C. 37 relates to escuage and subsidy. C. 38 confirms every article of the charter.

The object of this statute was to declare and reaffirm such common law principles as, by reason of usurpation and force, had come to be of doubtful force, and needed therefore to be authoritatively announced, that king and subject might alike authoritatively observe them. Cooley, Const. Lim. 30.

Magna Charta is said by some to have been so called because larger than the Charta de Foresta, which was given about the same time. Spelman, Gloss. But see Cowel. Magna Charta is mentioned casually by Bracton, Fleta, and Britton. Glanville is supposed to have written before Magna Charta. The Mirror of Justices, c. 315 et seq., has a chapter on its defects. See Co. 2d Inst.; Burrington, Stat.; 4 Bla. Com. 423. See a copy of Magna Charta in 1 Laws of South Carolina, edited by Judge Cooper, p. 78. In the Penny Magazine for the year 1833, p. 229, there is a copy of the original seal of King John affixed to this instrument; a specimen of a fac-simile of the writing of Magna Charta, beginning at the passage, Nullus liber homo capietur vel imprisonetur, etc. A fac-simile has been published by Chatto & Windess, London. A copy of both may be found in the Magasin Pittoresque for the year 1834, pp. 52, 53. See 8 Encyc. Brit. 722; 6 id. 332; Wharton, Lex.; Wells, Magna Charta.

MÄHL BRIEF.

A term confined to the German law of shipping. It is a contract for building a ship, specifying her description, quality of materials, the denomination, and size, with reservation generally that contractor or his agent (who is in most cases the master of a vessel) may reject such material as he deems uncontract-worthy, and oblige builder to supply other materials. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 2, 3.

MAIDEN. An instrument formerly used in Scotland for beheading criminals.

MAIDEN ASSIZE. In English Law. Originally an assize at which no person was condemned to die. Now it is a session of a criminal court at which there are no prisoners to be tried. Wharton.

MAIDEN RENTS. In Old English Law. A fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant. Cowel.

MAIHEM. See MAYHEM; MAIM.

MAIL (Fr. malle, a trunk). The bag, valise, or other contrivance used in conveying through the post-office letters, packets, newspapers, pamphlets, and the like, from place to place, under the authority of the United States. The things thus carried are also called the mail.

By the act of March 3, 1879, ch. 180, mailable matter is divided into four classes. 1. Written matter, embracing letters, postal cards, and all matters wholly or partly in writing, with certain exceptions. 2. Periodical publications issued as often as four times a year. 3. Books, transient newspapers and periodicals, circulars, proof sheets, etc., wholly in print. 4. Merchandise, comprising all matter not embraced in the above classes, which is not liable to injure the contents of the mail bags, or harm the person of any one engaged in the postal service, and is not above the weight of four pounds, except in the case of single books. Obscene books, pictures, etc., scurrilous and disloyal letters, and lottery circulars are not mailable (8 June, 1872, Rev. Stat. § 3893), and all such matter reaching the office of delivery, shall be held by the postmaster, subject to the order of the postmaster-general; March 3, 1879, § 21; Supplement to Rev. Stat. p. 457. In an indictment under § 3893, of the act of 8 June, 1872, it is no defence that the non-mailable matter was mailed to a fictitious name used as a decoy, nor that the thing sent, in the case of a nostrum, was ineffective; 10 Fed. Rep. 92. Numerous provisions will be found under the acts of June 8, 1872, and Feb. 27, 1877, for the punishment of crimes against the mail, such as forging money-orders, counterfeiting postage stamps, opening, stealing, or destroying letters, robbing or attempting to rob the mail, deserting the mail when in charge of it, injuring the mail bags, etc.; Rev. Stat. §§ 5463, 5480.

A neutral merchant vessel carrying the mail is not privileged by that fact from examination; 7 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 762.

MAILE. In Old English Law. A small piece of money. A rent.

MAILS AND DUTIES. In Scotch Law. Rents of an estate. Stair, Inst. 2. 12. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 235, 381, 431–439.

MAIM. In Criminal Law. To deprive a person of such part of his body as to render him less able in fighting or defending himself than he would have otherwise been. In New York, under the Rev. Stat., a blow aimed at and delivered upon the head, does not constitute the crime of assault and battery, with intent to maim; 50 N. Y. 598. Distinguished from wounding; 11 Cox, Cr. Cas. 125; 11 Iowa, 414.

In Pleading. The words "feloniously did maim" must of necessity be inserted, because no other word nor any circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 244.

MAINE. The name of one of the states of the United States of America, formed out of that part of the territory of Massachusetts called the district of Maine.

The territory embraced in the new state was not contiguous to that remaining in the state from which it was taken, and was more than four times as large. The legislature of Massachusetts, by an act passed June 19, 1819, gave its consent for the people of the district to become a separate and independent state. They met in convention, by delegates elected for the purpose, and formed a separate state, by the style of the State of Maine, and adopted a constitution for the government thereof, October 19, 1819, and applied to congress, at its next session, for admission into the Union.

The petition was presented in the house of representatives of the United States, December 8, 1819, and the state was admitted into the Union by the act of congress of March 3, 1820, from and after the fifteenth day of March, 1820.

Every male citizen of the United States, twenty-one years of age, excepting paupers, persons under guardianship, and Indians not taxed, who has resided in the state three months next before any election, has a right to vote, except United States troops in service at stations of the United States, who do not by such stay gain any residence.

The election of governor, senators, and representatives is on the second Monday of September.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is vested in two distinct branches: a house of representatives and a senate, each having a negative upon the other, and both together being styled the Legislature of Maine. Const. Art. 4, part 1, § 1.

The House of Representatives consists of one hundred and fifty-one members. Art. 4, part 1, § 2.

They are to be apportioned among the counties according to law: to be elected biennially by the qualified electors, for two years from the day of the meeting of the legislature. Amendment 1879.

The legislature convenes on the first Wednesday of January biennially, from and after the first Wednesday of January, 1881. Amendment 1879.

A representative must be twenty-one years old at least, for five years a citizen of the United States, for one year a resident of the state, and for three months immediately preceding his election a resident of the town or district which he represents. He must continue a resident during his term of office.

The Senate consists of not less than twenty nor more than thirty-one members, elected, one from each district, at the same time, and for the same term, as the representatives, by the qualified electors of the districts into which the state shall from time to time be divided. Art. 4, part 2, § 1. A senator must be at least twenty-five years old, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as representatives.

Every bill or resolution having the force of law, to which the concurrence of both branches is necessary, except on a question of adjournment, must be approved by the governor, unless, upon its return to the house in which it originated, with his objections, it shall there be passed over his veto by receiving in each house the votes of two-thirds thereof; or unless he shall retain it for more than five days. Art. 4, part 3, § 2.

The senate has power to try all impeachments. Art. 4, part 2, § 7.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the qualified electors, and holds his office for two years from the first Wednesday of January. Art. 5, part 1, § 2. Amendment 1879.

He must, at the commencement of his term, be not less than thirty years of age, a natural-born citizen of the United, five years a resident of the state, and at the time of his election, and during his term, be a resident of the state. Art. 5, part 1, § 4.

A Council consisting of seven persons, citizens of the United States, and resident within the state, to advise the governor in the executive part of government, is to be chosen biennially by joint ballot of the senators and representatives in convention. Art. 5, part 2, §§ 1 and 2.

The governor nominates, and with the advice and consent of the council appoints all judicial officers, coroners, and notaries public; is to inform the legislature of the condition of the state, and recommend measures; may, after conviction, with the advice and consent of council, remit forfeitures, and grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment; may convene the legislature at unusual times or places, if necessary, and adjourn them, in case of disagreement as to the time of adjournment.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Judicial Court is composed of one chief and seven assistant judges, appointed by the governor and council for the term of seven years. It is the highest court, and also the court of general original jurisdiction,—having the jurisdiction of the former district court. It has exclusive civil jurisdiction in law and equity, except over cases involving small amounts, of which jurisdiction is given to trial justices. Five judges are necessary to constitute a quorum for the decision of questions of law. Annual law terms are held in each of the three districts into which the state is divided for the purpose. For purposes of jury trials, including civil and criminal cases, the court is held by a single judge. Two or more terms are held annually in each county in the state, as provided by statute, from time to time. The justices receive a stated salary, and are to give their opinions upon important questions of law upon solemn occasions when required by the governor, senate, or house of representatives.

Superior Courts are established in the counties of Cumberland and Kennebec with an exclusive criminal and a limited civil jurisdiction.

Probate Courts are held in each county by judges elected for four years by the people. They are to appoint guardians; take probate of wills; grant letters of administration; attend to the settlement of estates of persons in state prison, under sentence of death or imprisonment for life; and to have jurisdiction generally for these and similar purposes. The supreme court is the supreme court of probate, and an appeal lies to it from the decision of the judge of probate.

Justices of the Peace and Quorum are appointed by the governor and council for the term of seven years. They may administer oaths; issue subpœnas; take depositions; take the disclosures of poor debtors arrested on reissue process or execution; and have certain other powers of less general interest.

Trial justices are appointed in the same manner as justices of the peace and quorum, and have ex-officio all the powers of those officers and also have jurisdiction over all civil cases (except those involving the title to land) where the amount involved does not exceed twenty dollars. They have a limited criminal jurisdiction.

Police Courts are created by special enactment in the larger towns, with a jurisdiction substantially that of the trial justices, and exclusive thereof, except in specified cases.

County Commissioners are chosen by the people, three in each county, to attend to the internal police of the county. They have the care of roads, bridges, etc., the public buildings of the county, and the control of the county money. One is elected annually for the term of three years.

No city or town can create any liability exceeding five per centum of its last regular valuation. Amendment of 1878.

MAINOUR. In Criminal Law. The thing stolen found in the hands of the thief who has stolen it.

Hence, when a man is found with property which he has stolen, he is said to be taken with the mainour, that is, it is found in his hands.

Formerly there was a distinction made between a larceny, when the thing stolen was found in the hands of the criminal, and when the proof depended upon other circumstances not quite so irrefragable; the former properly was termed pris ove maynovere, or ove mainer, or mainour, as it is generally written. Barrington, Stat. 315, 316, note.

MAINPERNABLE. Capable of being bailed; one for whom bail may be taken; bailable.

MAINPERNORS. In English Law. Those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearance.

Mainpernors differ from bail; a man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither; but are merely sureties for his appearance at the day; bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for all the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 6 Mod. 231; 7 id. 77, 85, 98; 3 Bla. Com. 128. See Dane, Abr.

MAINPRISE. In English Law. The taking a man into friendly custody, who might otherwise be committed to prison, upon security given for his appearance at a time and place assigned. Wood, Inst. b. 4, c. 4. The writ of mainprise, q. v., is now obsolete. See BAIL.

MAINSWORN. Forsworn, by making false oath with hand (main) on book. Used in the North of England. Brownl. 4; Hob. 125.

MAINTAINED. In Pleading. A technical word indispensable in an indictment for maintenance. 1 Wils. 325.

MAINTAINORS. In Criminal Law. Those who maintain or support a cause depending between others, not being retained as counsel or attorney. For this they may be fined and imprisoned. 2 Swift, Dig. 328; 4 Bla. Com. 124; Bacon, Abr. Barrator.

MAINTENANCE. Aid, support, assistance; the support which one person, who is bound by law to do so, gives to another for his living: for example, a father is bound to find maintenance for his children; and a child is required by law to maintain his father or mother, when they cannot support themselves, and he has ability to maintain them. 1 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 284–286.

In Criminal Law. A malicious, or, at least, officious, interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties to it against the other, with money or advice to prosecute or defend the action, without any authority of law. 1 Russ. Cr. 176

The intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation; 2 Pars. Contr. 266. See 4 Term, 340; 6 Bingh. 299; 4 Q. B. 883.

But there are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are done. They may be justified, first, because the party has an interest in the thing in variance; as when he has a bare contingency in the lands in question, which possibly may never come in esse; Bacon, Abr. Maintenance; and see 11 M. & W. 675; 9 Metc. 489; 13 id. 262; 1 Me. 292; 6 id. 361; 11 id. 111; second, because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son, or heir apparent, or husband or wife; 3 Cow. 623; third, because the relation of landlord and tenant or master and servant subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him; fourth, because the money is given out of charity; 1 Bail. 401; fifth, because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is not more justified in giving his client money than another man; 1 Russ. Cr. 179; Bacon, Abr. Maintenance; Brooke, Abr. Maintenance. This offence is punishable criminally by fine and imprisonment; 4 Bla. Com. 124; 2 Swift, Dig. 328. Contracts growing out of maintenance are void; 11 Mass. 549; 5 Humphr. 379; 20 Ala. N. s. 521; 5 T. B. Monr. 413; 5 Johns. Ch. 44; 4 Q. B. 883. See 1 Me. 292; 11 Mass. 553; 5 Pick. 359; 3 Cow. 647; 6 id. 431; 4 Wend. 306; 3 Johns. Ch. 508; 7 Dowl. & R. 846; 5 B. & C. 188; 2 Bish. Cr. Law, 122.

MAISON DE DIEU (Fr. house of God; a hospital). A hospital; an almshouse; a monastery. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5.

MAJESTY. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor. It sometimes means power: as when we say, the majesty of the people. See Wolff. § 998.

MAJOR. One who has attained his full age and has acquired all his civil rights; one who is no longer a minor; an adult.

In Military Law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

For the use of the word in Latin maxims, see MAXIMS.

MAJOR-GENERAL. In Military Law. An officer next in rank above a brigadier-general. He commands a division consisting of several brigades, or even an army.

MAJORES (Lat.). The male ascendants beyond the sixth degree. The term was used among the Romans; and the term is still retained in making genealogical tables.

MAJORA REGALIA. The king's dignity, power, and royal prerogative, as opposed to his revenue, which is comprised in the minora regalia. 2 Steph. Com. 475; 1 Bla. Com. 240.

MAJORITY. The state or condition of a person who has arrived at full age. He is then said to be a major, in opposition to minor, which is his condition during infancy. FULL AGE.

The greater number. More than all the opponents.

Some question exists as to whether a majority of any body is more than one-half the whole number or more than the number acting in opposition. Thus, in a body of one hundred voters, in which twenty did not vote on any particular question, on the former supposition fifty-one would be a majority, on the latter forty-one. The intended signification is generally denoted by the context, and where it is not the second sense is generally intended; a majority on a given question being more than one-half the number of those voting.

In every well-regulated society, the majority has always claimed and exercised the right to govern the whole society, in the manner pointed out by the fundamental laws; and the minority are bound whether they have assented or not, for the obvious reason that opposite wills cannot prevail at the same time, in the same society, on the same subject; 1 Tucker, Bla. Com. Appx. 168, 172; 9 Dane, Abr. 37-43; 1 Story, Const. § 330.

As to the rights of the majority of part-owners of vessels, see 3 Kent, 114 et seq.; Parsons, Marit. Law; PART-OWNERS. As to the majority of a church, see 16 Mass. 488.

In the absence of all stipulations, the general rule in partnerships is that each partner has an equal voice, and a majority acting bonâ fide have the right to manage the partnership concerns and dispose of the partnership property notwithstanding the dissent of the minority; but in every case when the minority have a right to give an opinion, they ought to be notified. 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1954. See PARTNER.

As to the conflict of laws relating to majority, see 19 Am. Dec. 180.

In corporations, in the absence of any provision in the charter or constitution, the general rule is that, within the scope of the corporate affairs, the acts of a majority bind the corporation; 30 Penn. 42; 4 Biss. 78; 33 Conn. 396. It is not necessary that those present at a meeting constitute a majority of all the members; 7 Cow. 42; a majority of those who appear may act; 88 Penn. 42; 104 Mass. 378; 5 Blatch. 525; 57 Ill. 416; s. c. 11 Am. Rep. 24; 33 Beav. 595. When, however, an act is to be performed by a select and definite body, such as a board of directors, a majority of the entire body is required to constitute a meeting; 9 Wend. 394; 16 Iowa, 284; but if a quorum is present, a majority of such quorum may act; 23 N. H. 555; 13 Ind. 58.

In political elections, a majority of the votes cast at an election on any question means the majority of those who voted on that question; 10 Minn. 107; 1 Sneed, 637; 20 Ill. 159; 20 Wisc. 544; 95 U. S. 369. "All qualified voters who absent themselves from an election duly called are presumed to assent to the express will of the majority of those voting, unless the law providing for the election otherwise declares. Any other rule would be productive of the greatest inconvenience, and ought not to be adopted unless the legislative will to that effect is clearly expressed." Ibid. (Miller and Bradley, JJ., dissenting). The opposite view is held in 35 Mo. 103; 16 Minn. 249; 69 Ind. 505. In the last case an amendment to the constitution received less than a majority of all those who voted at the election, but had a majority of those cast for or against the adoption of the amendment; it was held (two judges dissenting) that the amendment had been neither ratified nor rejected. See 22 Alb. L. J. 44.

MAKE. To perform or execute: as, to make his law, is to perform that which a man had bound himself to do; that is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him, by his oath and the oath of his neighbors. Old Nat. Brev. 161. To make default, is to fail to appear in proper trial. To make oath, is to swear according to the form prescribed by law. It is also used intransitively of persons and things, to have effect; to tend; e. g.

"That case makes for me." Hardr. 133; Webster, Dict.

MAKER. A term applied to one who makes a promissory note and promises to pay it when due.

He who makes a bill of exchange is called the drawer; and frequently in common parlance and in books of reports we find the word drawer inaccurately applied to the maker of a promissory note. See PROMISSORY NOTE.

MAKING HIS LAW. A phrase used to denote the act of a person who wages his law. Bacon, Abr. Wager of Law.

MALA FIDES (Lat.). Bad faith. It is opposed to bona fides, good faith.

MALA PRAXIS (Lat.). Bad or unskilful practice in a physician or other professional person, whereby the health of the patient is injured.

Wilful malpractice takes place when the physician purposely administers medicines or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in damage or death to the individual under his care: as in the case of criminal abortion; Elwell, Malpract. 243 et seq.; 2 Barb. 216.

Negligent malpractice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires: as if a physician should administer medicines while in a state of intoxication, from which injury would arise to his patient.

Ignorant malpractice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, which a well-educated and scientific medical man would know were not proper in the case; Elwell, Malpract. 198 et seq.; 7 B. & C. 493, 497; 6 Bingh. 440; 6 Mass. 134; 5 C. & P. 333; 1 Mood. & R. 405; 5 Cox, C. C. 587.

This offence is a misdemeanor (whether it be occasioned by curiosity and experiment or neglect), because it breaks the trust which the patient has put in the physician, and tends directly to his destruction; 1 Ld. Raym. 213. See 3 Chitty, Cr. Law, 863; 4 Wentw. Pl. 360; 2 Russ. Cr. 277; 1 Chitty, Pr. 43; 6 Mass. 134; 8 Mo. 561; 3 C. & P. 629; 4 id. 423.

Besides the public remedy for malpractice, in many cases the party injured may bring a civil action; 9 Conn. 209; 3 Watts, 355; 7 N. Y. 397; 39 Vt. 447.

Civil cases of malpractice are of very frequent occurrence on those occasions where surgical operations are rendered necessary, or supposed to be so, by disease or injury, and are so performed as either to shorten a limb or render it stiff, or otherwise prevent the free, natural use of it, by which the party ever after suffers damages. This may embrace almost every kind of surgical operation; but nine-tenths of all such cases arise from amputations, fractures, or dislocations; Elwell, Malpract. 55.

To the performance of all surgical operations the surgeon is bound to bring at least ordinary skill and knowledge. He must apply without mistake what is settled in his profession. He must possess and practically exercise that degree and amount of knowledge and science which the leading authorities have pronounced as the result of their researches and experience up to the time, or within a reasonable time before the issue or question to be determined is made; Elwell, Malpract. 55; 6 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 774. Many cases, both English and American, have occurred, illustrating the nature and extent of this liability; 8 East, 347; 2 Wils. 259; 1 H. Bla. 61; Wright, Ohio, 466; 22 Penn. 261; 27 N. H. 460; 13 B. Monr. 219.

MALA PROHIBITA (Lat.). Those things which are prohibited by law, and therefore unlawful.

A distinction was formerly made, in respect of contracts, between mala prohibita and mala in se; but that distinction has been exploded, and it is now established that when the provisions of an act of the legislature have for their object the protection of the public, it makes no difference with respect to contracts whether the thing be prohibited absolutely or under a penalty. 5 B. & Ald. 335, 340; 10 B. & C. 98; 3 Stark. 61; 13 Pick. 518; 2 Bingh. N. C. 636, 646. The distinction is, however, important in criminal law in some cases with reference to the question of intent. See INTENT; 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 286–288; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 25.

MALE. Of the masculine sex; of the sex that begets young; the sex opposed to the female.

MALEDICTION (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches and religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

MALEFACTOR (Lat.). He who has been guilty of some crime; in another sense, one who has been convicted of having committed a crime.

MALEFICIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Waste; damage; tort; injury. Dig. 5. 18. 1.

MALFEASANCE. The unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not, to do. It differs from misfeasance and nonfeasance, which titles see. See 1 Chitty, Pr. 9; 1 Chitty, Pl. 134.

MALICE. In Criminal Law. The doing a wrongful act intentionally without just cause or excuse. 4 B. & C. 255; 9 Metc. 104. A wicked and mischievous purpose which characterizes the perpetration of an injurious act without lawful excuse. 4 B. & C. 255; 9 Metc. 104.

A conscious violation of the law, to the prejudice of another. 9 Cl. & F. 32.

That state of mind which prompts a conscious violation of the law to the prejudice of another. 9 Cl. & F. 32.

In a legal sense malice is never understood to denote general malevolence or unkindness of heart, or enmity towards a particular individual, but it signifies rather the intent from which flows any unlawful and injurious act committed without legal justification. 15 Pick. 337; 9 Mete. 410; 4 Ga. 14; 33 Me. 331; 7 Ala. N. s. 728; 2 Dev. 425; 2 Rich. 179; 1 Dall. 335; 4 Mas. 115; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 63; R. & R. 26, 465; 1 Mood. C. C. 93. It is not confined to the intention of doing an injury to any particular person, but extends to an evil design, a corrupt and wicked notion against some one at the time of committing the crime: as, if A, intending to poison B, conceals a quantity of poison in an apple and puts it in the way of B, and C, against whom he has no ill-will, and who, on the contrary, is his friend, happens to eat it and dies, A will be guilty of murdering C with malice aforethought. Bacon, Max. Reg. 15; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 727; 3 id. 1104.

Any formed design of mischief may be called malice. Malice is a wicked, vindictive temper, regardless of social duty, and bent on mischief. There may be malice, in a legal sense, in homicide, where there is no actual intention of any mischief, but the killing is the natural consequence of a careless action; Add. 156; 3 Cr. Law Mag. 216.

Express malice exists when the party evinces an intention to commit the crime; 3 Bulstr. 171.

Implied malice is that inferred by law from the facts proved; 11 Humphr. 172; 6 Blackf. 299; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 371. In cases of murder this distinction is of no practical value; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 675.

Malice is implied in every case of intentional homicide; and the fact of killing being first proved, all the circumstances of accident, necessity, or informality are to be satisfactorily established by the party charged, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him to prove the homicide, and the circumstances attending it. If there are, in fact, circumstances of justification, excuse, or palliation, such proof will naturally indicate them. But where the fact of killing is proved by satisfactory evidence, and there are no circumstances disclosed tending to show justification or excuse, there is nothing to rebut the natural presumption of malice. It is material to the just understanding of this rule that it applies only to cases where the killing is proved and nothing further is shown; for if the circumstances disclosed tend to extenuate the act, the prisoner has the full benefit of such facts; 9 Mete. 93; 3 Gray, 463.

It is a general rule that when a man commits an act, unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, the law presumes he has acted advisedly and with an intent to produce the consequences which have ensued. And therefore the intent to kill is conclusively inferred from the deliberate violent use of a deadly weapon; 9 Mete. 103; 5 Cush. 305. See 3 Maule & S. 15; 1 R. & R. Cr. Cas. 207; 1 Wood. Cr. Cas. 269; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 223, 232, 340; 15 Viner, Abr. 506.

In Torts. A malicious act is a wrongful act, intentionally done without cause or excuse; 48 Mo. 152.

This term, as applied to torts, does not necessarily mean that which must proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengful disposition, but a conduct injurious to another, though proceeding from an ill-regulated mind not sufficiently cautious before it occasions an injury to another; 11 S. & R. 39, 40. Indeed, in some cases it seems not to require any intention in order to make an act malicious. When a slander has been published, therefore, the proper question for the jury is, not whether the intention of the publication was to injure the plaintiff, but whether the tendency of the matter published was so injurious; 10 B. & C. 472. Again, take the common case of an offensive trade, the melting of tallow, for instance: such trade is not itself unlawful, but if carried on to the annoyance of the neighboring dwellings, it becomes unlawful with respect to them, and their inhabitants may maintain an action, and may charge the act of the defendant to be malicious; 3 B. & C. 584.

See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. This is a technical phrase employed in indictments; and with the word murder must be used to distinguish the felonious killing called murder from what is called manslaughter; Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 242; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 429. In the description of murder the words do not imply deliberation, or the lapse of considerable time between the malicious intent to take life and the actual execution of that intent, but rather denote purpose and design in contradistinction to accident and mischance; 5 Cush. 306; but premeditation may be an element showing malice when otherwise it would not sufficiently appear; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 677; see 8 C. & P. 616; 2 Mas. 60; 1 D. & B. 121, 163; 6 Blackf. 299; 3 Ala. N. s. 497.

MALICIOUS ABANDONMENT. The forsaking without a just cause a husband by the wife, or a wife by her husband. See ABANDONMENT; DIVORCE.

MALICIOUS ARREST. A wanton arrest made without probable cause by a regular process and proceeding. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

MALICIOUS INJURY. An injury committed wilfully and wantonly, or without cause. 1 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 136. See Wharton, Cr. Law, 226 et seq., as to malice. See 4 Bla. Com. 143, 198, 199, 200, 206; 2 Russ. Cr. 544, 547.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF. An expression applied to the wanton or reckless destruction of property, and the wilful perpetration of injury to the person.

The term is not sufficiently defined as the wilful doing of any act prohibited by law, and for which the defendant has no lawful excuse. In order to a conviction of the offence of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty or of wicked revenge. Jacob, Law Dict. Mischief, Malicious; Alison, Sc. Law, 448; 3 Cush. 558; 2 Metc. Mass. 21; 3 Dev. & B. 130; 5 Ired. 364; 8 Leigh, 719; 3 Me. 177.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. A wanton prosecution made by a prosecutor in a criminal proceeding, or a plaintiff in a civil suit, without probable cause, by a regular process and proceeding, which the facts did not warrant, as appears by the result.

Where the defendant commenced a criminal prosecution wantonly, and in other respects against law, he will be responsible; Add. Penn. 270; 12 Conn. 219. The prosecution of a civil suit, when malicious, is a good cause of action, even when there has been no arrest; 11 Conn. 582; 1 Wend. 345. See 106 Mass. 300; Bigel. Torts, 71. But see 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 261; 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 287. In such cases the want of probable cause must be very palpable; very slight grounds will not justify an action; Bigel. Torts, 71. See L. R. 4 Q. B. 730.

The action lies against the prosecutor, and even against a mere informer, when the proceedings are malicious; 9 Ala. 367. But grand jurors are not liable to an action for a malicious prosecution for information given by them to their fellow-jurors, on which a prosecution is founded; Hard. 556. Such action lies against a plaintiff in a civil action who maliciously sues out the writ and prosecutes it; 16 Pick. 453; but an action does not lies against an attorney at law for bringing the action, when regularly retained; 16 Pick. 478. See 6 Pick. 193.

The action lies against a corporation aggregate if the prosecution be commenced and carried on by its agents in its interest and for its benefit, and they acted within the scope of the authority conferred on them by the corporation; 29 Eng. Rep. 621 (s. c. 6 Q. B. D. 287), note, citing 22 Alb. L. J.; 9 Phila. 189; 22 Conn. 530; 130 Mass. 443; 73 Ind. 430. See also Cooley, Torts, 121; 7 C. B. N. S. 290.

The proceedings under which the original prosecution or action was held must have been regular, in the ordinary course of justice, and before a tribunal having power to ascertain the truth or falsity of the charge and to punish the supposed offender, the now plaintiff; 3 Pick. 379, 383. When the proceedings are irregular, the prosecutor is a trespasser; 3 Blackf. 210.

The plaintiff must prove affirmatively that he was prosecuted, that he was exonerated or discharged, and that the prosecution was both malicious and without probable cause; 35 Md. 194; s. c. 11 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 531; 48 Barb. 30; s. c. 6 Am. L. Reg. 717; 1 Wend. 140, 345; 7 Cow. 281; Cooke, 90; 4 Litt. Ky. 334; 3 Gill & J. 377; 1 N. & M'C. 36; 2 id. 54, 143; 12 Conn. 219; 3 Call, 446; 3 Mas. 112. Malice is a question of fact for the jury, and is generally inferred from a want of probable cause, but such presumption is only prima facie and may be rebutted. From the most express malice, however, want of probable cause cannot be inferred; 35 Md. 194; 36 Md. 246; 37 Md. 282. Probable cause means the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind that the plaintiff was guilty of the offence for which he was prosecuted; 37 Md. 282. In a late English case in the court of appeal, the jury were instructed that in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove affirmatively the absence of probable cause and the existence of malice; and that if they came to the conclusion that the plaintiff (who had been prosecuted by the defendant for perjury) had spoken the truth, but that the defendant had a very treacherous memory, and went on with the prosecution under the impression that the plaintiff had committed perjury, yet if that was an honest impression, the upshot of a fallacious memory, and acting upon it, he honestly believed the plaintiff had sworn falsely, they would not be justified in finding that the defendant had prosecuted the plaintiff maliciously and without probable cause; this was held a right direction; see 16 Am. L. Rev. 426. See, also, L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 167.

Probable cause is a question of law for the court; 10 Q. B. 272; 47 Penn. 94. Evidence that the prosecution was to obtain possession of goods, is proof of want of probable cause; 47 Penn. 194; s. c. 4 Am. L. Reg. 443; so is evidence that the plaintiff began the prosecution for the purpose of collecting a debt. Probable cause depends upon the prosecutor's belief of guilt or innocence; 48 Barb. 30; see supra; rumors are not, but representations of others are, a foundation for belief of guilt; 52 Penn. 419. Malice may be inferred from the zeal and activity of the prosecutor conducting the prosecution; 36 Md. 246; s. c. 12 Am. L. Reg. 192. The advice of counsel who has been fully informed of the facts, is a complete justification; 25 Penn. 275; 4 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 281 (S. C. of Illinois); otherwise, where the defendant acts on the advice of a magistrate or one not learned in law; 36 Md. 246.

The malicious prosecution or action must be ended, and the plaintiff must show it was groundless, either by his acquittal or by obtaining a final judgment in his favor in a civil action; 1 Root, 553; 1 Nott & M'C. 36; 7 Cow. 715; 2 Dev. & B. 492. But see contra, as to civil suits, Bigel. Torts, 73; 14 East, 216; because the plaintiff in a civil suit can terminate it whenever he wishes to do so. Any act which is tantamount to a discontinuance of a civil suit has the same effect; as in a case where the plaintiff had been arrested in a civil suit, and the defendant had failed to have the writ returned, and to appear and file a declaration at the return term; 109 Mass. 158.

In criminal cases also, when the prosecuting officer enters a dismissal of the proceedings before the defendant is put in jeopardy, this act gives no right to the prisoner against the prosecutor; for instance, where, in a prosecution for arson, the prosecuting officer enters a nolle prosequi before the jury is sworn; 4 Cush. 217.

The remedy for a malicious prosecution is an action on the case to recover damages for the injury sustained; 5 Stew. & P. 367; 2 Conn. 700; 11 Mass. 500; 6 Me. 421; 3 Gill & J. 377. See CASE. If the prosecution was begun without probable cause, and persisted in for some private end, punitive damages may be given; 37 Md. 282. See full article in 21 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 281.

MALPRACTICE. See MALA PRAXIS.

MALUM IN SE (Lat.). Evil in itself.

An offence malum in se is one which is naturally evil, as murder, theft, and the like; offences at common law are generally mala in se. An offence malum prohibitum, on the contrary, is not naturally an evil, but becomes so in consequence of its being forbidden: as playing at games which, being innocent before, have become unlawful in consequence of being forbidden. See Bacon, Abr. Assumpsit (a); MALA PROHIBITA.

MALVEILLES. Ill will. In some ancient records this word signifies malicious practices, or crimes and misdemeanors.

MALVERSATION. In French Law. This word is applied to all punishable faults committed in the exercise of an office, such as corruptions, exactions, extortions, and larceny. Merlin, Répert.

MAN. A human being. A person of the male sex. A male of the human species above the age of puberty.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children: examples: "of offences against man, some are more immediately against the king, others more immediately against the subject." Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 2, s. 1. "Offences against the life of man come under the general name of homicide, which in our law signifies the killing of a man by a man." Id. book 1, c. 8, s. 2.

It was considered in the civil or Roman law that although man and person are synonymous in grammar, they had a different acceptation in law; all persons were men, but all men—for example, slaves—were not persons, but things. See Barrington, Stat. 216, note.

MANAGER. A person appointed or elected to manage the affairs of another. A term applied to those officers of a corporation who are authorized to manage its affairs. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 190.

One of the persons appointed on the part of the house of representatives to prosecute impeachments before the senate.

In banking corporations these officers are commonly called directors, and the power to conduct the affairs of the company is vested in a board of directors. In other private corporations, such as railroad companies, canal and coal companies, and the like, these officers are called managers. Being agents, when their authority is limited, they have no power to bind their principal beyond such authority; 17 Mass. 29; 1 Me. 81.

In England and Canada the chief executive officer of a branch bank is called a manager. His duties are those of our presidents and cashiers combined. His signature is necessary to every contract binding on the bank, except entries in the pass-books of customers. He indorses bills, signs bills of exchange and drafts, and conducts the correspondence of the bank. He is under the control of the board of directors of the bank, and there is usually a local or branch board of directors, at which he acts as presiding officer. Sewell, Bank.

MANBOTE. A compensation paid the relations of a murdered man by the murderer or his friends.

MANCIPIUM. The power acquired over a freeman by the mancipatio.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater familias, viz.: the manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per æs et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. Si pater filium ter venum duit, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quædam venditio, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation. See ADOPTION; PATER FAMILIAS; 1 Ortolan, 112 et seq.

MANDAMUS. In Practice. This is a high prerogative writ, usually issuing out of the highest court of general jurisdiction in a state, in the name of the sovereignty, directed to any natural person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within its jurisdiction, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, and which appertains to their office or duty. 3 Bla. Com. 110; 4 Bacon, Abr. 495; per Marshall, Ch. J., in Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cra. 137, 168.

Its use is well defined by Lord Mansfield, in Rex. vs. Barker, 3 Burr. 1265: "It was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used upon all occasions when the law has established no specific remedy, and where in justice and good government there ought to be one." "If there be a right, and no other specific remedy, this should not be denied." The same principles are declared by Lord Ellenborough, in Rex vs. Archbishop of Canterbury, 8 East, 219. See 6 Ad. & E. 321. The writ of mandamus is the supplementary remedy when the party has a clear right, and no other appropriate redress, in order to prevent a failure of justice. 12 Petersd. Abr. 438 (309). It is the absence of a specific legal remedy which gives the court jurisdiction; 2 Selw. N. P. Mandamus, 29 Penn. 131; 34 id. 496; 41 Me. 15; 2 Pat. & H. 385; but the party must have a perfect legal right; 27 Mo. 225; 11 Ind. 205;

20 Ill. 525; 25 Barb. 73; 2 Dutch. 135; 3 Cal. 167.

The remedy extends to the control of all inferior tribunals, corporations, public officers, and even private persons in some cases. But more generally, the English court of king's bench, from which our practice on the subject is derived, declined to interfere by mandamus to require a specific performance of a contract when no public right was concerned; Ang. & A. Corp. 761; 2 Term, 260; 6 East, 356; Bacon, Abr. Mandamus; 28 Vt. 587, 592.

It is a proper remedy to compel the performance of a specific act where the act is ministerial in its character; 12 Pet. 524; 34 Penn. 293; 26 Ga. 665; 7 Iowa, 186, 390; but where the act is of a discretionary; 6 How. 92; 17 id. 284; 12 Cush. 403; 20 Tex. 60; 10 Cal. 376; 5 Harr. Del. 108; 12 Md. 329; 4 Mich. 187; 5 Ohio St. 528; or judicial nature; 14 La. An. 60; 7 Cal. 130; 18 B. Monr. 423; 7 E. & B. 366; it will lie only to compel action generally; 11 Cal. 42; 30 Ala. N. S. 49; 28 Mo. 259; and where the necessity of acting is a matter of discretion, it will not lie even to compel action; 6 How. 92; 5 Iowa, 380.

This remedy will be applied to compel a corporation or public officer; 14 La. An. 265; 41 Me. 15; 3 Ind. 452; see 7 Gray, 280; to pay money awarded against them in pursuance of a statute duty, where no other specific remedy is provided; 6 Ad. & E. 335; 8 id. 438, 910; 34 Penn. 496; but if debt will lie, and the party is entitled to execution, mandamus will not be allowed; Redf. Railw. § 158, citing 6 C. B. 70; 13 M. & W. 628; 4 B. & A. 360; 1 Q. B. 288. But mandamus will not be granted to enforce a matter of contract or right upon which an action lies in the common-law courts, as to enforce the duty of common carriers; 7 Dowl. P. C. 566; or where the proper remedy is in equity; 3 Term, 646; 16 M. & W. 451. But where compensation is claimed for damages done partly under the powers of a statute and partly not, mandamus is the proper remedy; 2 Railw. & C. Cas. 1; Redf. Railw. § 158, pt. 3, 4, and notes and cases cited.

Mandamus is the appropriate remedy to compel corporations to produce and allow an inspection of their books and records, at the suit of a corporator, where a controversy exists in which such inspection is material to his interests; 2 Stra. 1223; 3 Term, 141; 4 Maule & S. 162.

It lies to compel the performance by a corporation of a variety of specific acts within the scope of its duties; 34 Penn. 496; 26 Ga. 665; 2 Metc. Ky. 56; 84 Ill. 303; s. c. 25 Am. Rep. 461.

The general rule on this subject is, that, if the inferior tribunal or corporate body has a discretion, and acts and exercises it, this discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus; but if the inferior body refuse to act when the law requires them to act, and the party has no other legal remedy, and where in justice there ought to be one, a mandamus will lie to set them in motion, to compel action, and in proper cases, the court will settle the legal principles which should govern, but without controlling the discretion of the subordinate jurisdiction; Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 665; 52 Ala. 87.

It is the common remedy for restoring persons to corporate offices, of which they are unjustly deprived: the title to the office having been before determined by proceeding by quo warranto; but it will not lie to try the title to an office of which there is a de facto incumbent; 52 Ala. 87; 1 Burr. 402; 1 Ld. Raym. 426; 1 Salk. 314; 2 Head, 650; 54 Me. 95; unless quo warranto does not lie; 3 Johns. Cas. 79; but see 20 Barb. 302; 9 Md. 83; 15 Ill. 492. And see the cases fully reviewed in Redf. Railw. § 159.

This remedy must be sought at the earliest convenient time in those cases where important interests will be affected by the delay; 12 Q. B. 448. But it is often necessary to delay in order to determine definitely the rights and injuries of the several parties concerned, as until public works are completed; 9 Dowl. P. C. 614; 4 Q. B. 877.

It is no sufficient answer to the application that the party is also liable to indictment for the act complained of; 2 Railw. Cas. 599; 3 Q. B. 528. And where a railway company attempted to take up their rails, they were required by mandamus to restore them, notwithstanding they were also liable to indictment, that being regarded a less efficacious remedy; 2 B. & Ald. 646. But mandamus will always be denied when there is other adequate remedy; 11 Ad. & E. 69; 1 Q. B. 288; Redf. Railw. § 159, and cases cited in notes.

It is not a proper proceeding for the correction of errors of an inferior court; 13 Pet. 279, 404; 18 Wend. 79; 13 La. An. 481; 7 Dowl. & R. 334. Indeed, by statute 6 & 7 Vict. ch. 67, § 2, the decisions of the English courts upon proceedings in mandamus may be revised on writ of error, and upon principle a writ of error will lie when the decision is made to turn upon a question of law and not upon discretion merely; Redf. Railw. § 159, and notes.

The writ is not demandable, as matter of right, but is to be awarded in the discretion of the court; 1 Term, 331, 396, 404, 425; id. 31; 49 Barb. 259; 2 id. 336; Redf. Railw. § 159, and cases cited in notes.

The power of granting this writ in England seems originally to have been exercised by the court of chancery, as to all the inferior courts, but not as to the king's bench; 1 Vern. 175; Ang. & A. Corp. § 697. But see 2 B. & Ald. 646; 2 Maule & S. 80; 3 Ald. & E. 416. But for a great number of years the granting of the prerogative writ of mandamus has been confined in England to the court of king's bench.

In the United States the writ is generally issued by the highest court of judicature having jurisdiction at law; 34 Penn. 496; 20 Ill. 525.

The thirteenth section of the act of congress of Sept. 24, 1789, gives the supreme court power to issue writs of mandamus, in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law, to any courts appointed or persons holding office under the authority of the United States. The issuing of a mandamus to courts is the exercise of an appellate jurisdiction, and, therefore, constitutionally vested in the supreme court; but a mandamus directed to a public officer belongs to original jurisdiction, and, by the constitution, the exercise of original jurisdiction by the supreme court is restricted to certain specified cases, which do not comprehend a mandamus. The latter clause of the above section, authorizing this writ to be issued by the supreme court, to persons holding office under the authority of the United States, is, therefore, not warranted by the constitution, and void; 1 Cra. 175; see 5 Pet. 190; 13 id. 279, 404; 5 How. 103.

The circuit courts of the United States may also issue writs of mandamus; but their power in this particular is confined exclusively to those cases in which it may be necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction; 7 Cra. 504; 8 Wheat. 598; 1 Paine, 453.

The mode of proceeding in obtaining the writ is: first, to demand of the party to perform the act. And it would seem that the party should be made aware of the purpose of the demand; 3 Ad. & E. 217, 477. The refusal must be of the thing demanded, and not of the right merely; 5 B. & Ad. 978. The refusal should be absolute and unqualified; but it may be by silence only. But the party should understand that he is required to perform the duty upon pain of the legal redress being resorted to without further delay; 4 Railw. Cas. 112. But any exception to the demand should be taken as a preliminary question; 10 Ad. & E. 531; Redf. Railw. § 190, and notes.

The application for a mandamus may be by motion in court, and the production of ex parte affidavits, in support of the facts alleged; in which case an alternative writ issues, as matter of course, generally, and the case is heard upon the excuse alleged in the return to the alternative writ; see 2 Metc. Ky. 56. Or the party may apply for the writ by formal petition, setting forth the grounds in detail, in which case the merits of the question are determined upon the traverse of the petition, instead of the traverse of the return to the alternative writ; 9 Ohio St. 599. And in either form, if the application prevails, a peremptory mandamus issues; the only proper or admissible return to which is a certificate of compliance with its requisitions, without further excuse or delay; 1 Q. B. 616; 1 Iowa, 179. See Ang. & A. Corp. § 715.

The English practice is, if the first writ is denied, even on the ground of defects in the affidavits, not to permit a second application to be made; 8 Ad. & E. 413. So, also, if it fail for other defects of form. But a more liberal practice obtains in the American courts. Redf. Railw. § 190, notes.

Costs rest in the discretion of the court. In the English courts they are allowed when the application fails, but not always when it prevails; Redf. Railw. § 159. The more just rule in such cases is to allow costs to the prevailing party, unless there is some special reason for denying them; and this rule now generally prevails; 8 Ad. & E. 901, 905; 5 id. 804; 1 Q. B. 636, 751; 6 E. L. & Eq. 267.

By the Common-Law Procedure Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, any party requiring any order in the nature of specific performance may commence his action in any of the superior courts of common law, in Westminster Hall, except in replevin and ejectment, and may indorse upon the writ and copy to be served that he will claim a writ of mandamus, and may renew the claim in his declaration, and if the writ is awarded in the final judgment in the case, it will issue peremptorily in the first instance. It has been held that a plaintiff could not under this act enforce specific performance of a contract; but that the act contemplated a public duty in which the plaintiff among others was interested; and not a private obligation which the plaintiff alone could enforce; but under the judicature acts, it is allowable for the court by an interlocutory order to grant a mandamus in any cases in which it shall appear just and convenient; Mozl. & W. Dict. The form of this statutory mandamus is very brief, and its execution is enforced by attachment. The prerogative writ of mandamus is still retained in the English practice; but it is obvious that the foregoing statute must have very essentially abridged its use, as well as that of decrees in chancery, for specific performance. See 8 E. & B. 512; Redf. Railw. § 190, pl. 8.

Controverted questions of fact, arising in the trial of applications for mandamus in the English practice, are referred to the determination of a jury; 1 Railw. Cas. 377; 2 id. 714; 8 Ell. & B. 512; 1 East, 114. By the American practice, questions of fact, in applications for mandamus, are more commonly tried by the court; 2 Metc. Ky. 56. See Angell & Ames, Corp.; High, Extra. Leg. Rem.

MANCIPATIO. See MANUMISSION.

MANDANT. The bailor in a contract of mandate.

MANDATARY, MANDATARIUS. One who undertakes to perform a mandate. Jones, Bailm. 53. He that obtains a benefice by mandamus. Cowel.

MANDATE. A judicial command or precept issued by a court or magistrate, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. Jones, Bailm. 52.

A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward. Story, Bailm. § 137.

The contract of mandate in the civil law is not limited to personal property, nor does it require a delivery of personal property when it relates to that. Pothier, de Mand. n. 1; La. Civ. Code, 2954–2964. It is, however, restricted to things of a personal nature at common law, and of these there must be a delivery, actual or constructive. Story, Bailm. § 142; 3 Strobh. 343.

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory; while in deposits the custody is the principal thing, and the care and service are merely accessory. Story, Bailm. § 140.

For the creation of a mandate it is necessary,—first, that there should exist something, which should be the matter of the contract; secondly, that it should be done gratuitously; and, thirdly, that the parties should voluntarily intend to enter into the contract. Pothier, Pand. l. 17, t. 1, p. 1, § 1; Pothier, de Mandat, c. 1, § 2.

There is no particular form or manner of entering into the contract of mandate prescribed either by the common law or by the civil law, in order to give it validity. It may be verbal or in writing; it may be express or implied; it may be in solemn form or in any other manner. Story, Bailm. § 160. The contract may be varied at the pleasure of the parties. It may be absolute or conditional, general or special, temporary or permanent. Wood. Civ. Law, 242; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 15, §§ 1, 6, 7, 8; Pothier, de Mandat, c. 1, § 3, nn. 34–36.

The mandatary, upon undertaking his trust and receiving his article, is bound to perform it as agreed upon; 1 Taunt. 523; 5 B. & Ald. 117; 1 Sneed, 248; 6 Binn. 308; 5 Fla. 38; and is responsible only for gross negligence; 2 Kent, 571–573; 1 H. La. 68. Whether a bank is liable for neglect of its agents in collecting notes, see 22 Wend. 215; 3 Hill, N. Y. 560; 8 N. Y. 459; 3 Hill, 77; 4 Rawle, 384; 2 Gall. 565; 10 Cush. 583; 12 Conn. 303; 6 H. & J. 146; 4 Whart. 105; 1 Pet. 25. He must render an account of his proceedings, and show a compliance with the condition of the bailment; Story, Bailm. §§ 191 et seq.

The dissolution of the contract may be by renunciation by the mandatary before commencing the execution of the undertaking; 2 M. & W. 145; 1 Mood. & R. 38; 22 E. L. & Eq. 501; 8 B. Monr. 415; 3 Fla. 38; by revocation of authority by the mandator; 6 Pick. 198; 5 Binn. 316; 5 Term, 213; see 4 Taunt. 541; 16 East, 382; by the death of the mandator; 6 East, 356; 5 Esp. 118; 2 V. & B. 51; 2 Mas. 244; 8 Wheat. 174; by death of the mandatary; 2 Kent, 504; 8 Taunt. 403; and by change of state of the parties; Story, Ag. § 481; and in some cases by operation of law; Story, Ag. § 500.

The question of gross negligence is one for the jury; 2 Ad. & E. 256; 11 Wend. 25; and the plaintiff must show it; 2 Ad. & E. 80; 10 Watts, 335. See 3 Johns. 170; 2 Wheat. 100; 7 B. Monr. 661; 8 Humphr. 430.

In Civil Law. The instructions which the emperor addressed to a public functionary, and which were to serve as rules for his conduct. These mandates resembled those of the proconsuls, the mandata jurisdictio, and were ordinarily binding on the legates or lieutenants of the emperor of the imperial provinces, and there they had the authority of the principal edicts. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 3, § 24, n. 4.

MANDATOR. The person employing another to perform a mandate. Story, Bailm. § 138; 1 Brown Civ. Law, 382; Halif. Anal. Civ. Law, 70.

MANDATORY. In the construction of statutes, this word is applied to such as require to be obeyed, under penalty of having proceedings under them declared void. Directory statutes must be obeyed, but, if not, do not invalidate the act. See STATUTES.

MANDAVI BALLIVO. In English Practice. The return made by a sheriff when he has committed the execution of a writ to a bailiff of a liberty, who has the right to execute the writ.

MANHOOD. In Feudal Law. A term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was devenio vester homo, I become your man. 2 Bla. Com. 54; 1 Dev. & B. Eq. 585. See HOMAGE.

MANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. This is the most common of all the forms of recent insanity, and consists of one or both of the following conditions, viz.: intellectual aberration, and morbid or affective obliquity.

In other words, the maniac either misapprehends the true relations between persons and things, in consequence of which he adopts notions manifestly absurd, and believes in occurrences that never did and never could take place, or his sentiments, affections, and emotions are so perverted that whatever excites their activity is viewed through a distorting medium, or, which is the most common fact, both these conditions may exist together, in which case their relative share in the disease may differ in such a degree that one or the other may scarcely be perceived at all. According as the intellectual or moral element prevails, the disease is called intellectual or moral mania. Whether the former is ever entirely wanting has been stoutly questioned, less from any dearth of facts than from some fancied metaphysical incongruity. The logical consequence of the doubt is that in the absence of intellectual disturbance there is really no insanity,—the moral disorders proceeding rather from unbridled passions than any pathological condition. Against all such reasoning it will be sufficient here to oppose the very common fact that in every collection of the insane may be found many who exhibit no intellectual aberration, but in whom moral disorders of the most flagrant kind present a marked contrast to the previous character and habits of life.

Both forms of mania may be either general or partial. In the latter, the patient has adopted some notion having a very limited influence upon his mental movements, while outside of that no appearance of impairment or irregularity can be discerned. Pure monomania, as this form of insanity has been often called,—that is, a mania confined to a certain point, the understanding being perfectly sound in every other respect,—is, no doubt, a veritable fact, but one of very rare occurrence. The peculiar notions of the insane, constituting insane belief, are of two kinds: delusions and hallucinations. By the former is meant a firm belief in something impossible, either in the nature of things or in the circumstances of the case, or, if possible, highly improbable, and associated in the mind of the patient with consequences that have to it only a fanciful relation. By hallucination is meant an impression supposed by the patient, contrary to all proof or possibility, to have been received through one of the senses. For instance, the belief that one is the Pope of Rome is a delusion; the belief that one hears voices speaking from the walls of the room, or sees armies contending in the clouds, is a hallucination. The latter implies some morbid activity of the perceptive powers; the former is a mistake of the intellect exclusively.

The legal consequences of partial intellectual mania in criminal cases are not yet very definitely settled. In the trial of Hadfield, Mr. Erskine, his counsel, declared that delusion was the true test of the kind of mental disease which annuls criminal responsibility; and the correctness of the principle was unhesitatingly recognized by the court. In subsequent trials, however, it has been seldom mentioned, being discarded for other more favorite tests. In the authoritative statement of the law made by the English judges, in 1843, in reply to queries propounded by the house of lords, it is recognized as a sufficient plea in defence of crime, under certain qualifications. The effect of the delusion on the quality of the act will be precisely the same as if the facts in connection with it were real. "For example," they say, "if under the influence of delusion the person supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away life, and he kills that man, as he supposes, in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted a serious injury to his character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for such supposed injury, he would be liable to punishment." 10 Cl. & F. 200. "If a man had the delusion that his head was made of glass, that would be no excuse for his killing a man: he would know very well that, although his head was made of glass, that was no reason why he should kill another man, and that it was a wrong act; and he would be properly subjected to punishment for that act;" Baron Alderson, in Reg. vs. Pate, Times, July 12, 1850. In Com. vs. Rogers, 7 Metc. 500, this view was adopted, and has become authority in this country. At first sight this doctrine seems to be very reasonable; but herein consists its fallacy, in expecting sound logical reasoning from the insane. To suppose that one may kill another for some little affront or injury is no less an indication of insanity than to suppose that one's head is made of glass, and he is no more responsible for one than for the other. It is a characteristic trait of the insane that they do not gauge the measure of their retaliation for the fancied injuries which they suffer by the standards of sane men. The doctrine of the courts, therefore, is in direct conflict with the facts of science. It also indicates the unwillingness common among all classes of minds to regard any person as irresponsible who, notwithstanding some delusions, conducts himself with shrewdness and discretion in most of the relations of life.

In civil cases the prevailing doctrine is that partial intellectual mania invalidates, as it certainly should, any act performed under its influence. The principle was enforced with remarkable clearness and ability by Sir John Nicholl, in the celebrated case of Dew vs. Clark, 3 Add. Eccl. 79. See Johnson vs. Moore's heirs, 1 Litt. Ky. 371. This is noticeable as being opposed to the principle of what was then the leading case on the subject, Greenwood vs. Greenwood, 13 Ves. 88, sed contra, 3 Curt. Eccl. 337, where a will was established which was made under the direct influence of a delusion. More recently, however, Lord Brougham declared that, in regard to legal consequences, partial is not to be distinguished from general insanity, because it is impossible to assign limits to the action of the former in any given case. If the mind were an aggregate of various faculties, then it might be possible, perhaps, to indicate those which are diseased and trace the operation of the disease; but, the fact being that the mind is one and indivisible, insanity on one point renders it unreliable on any other, and, consequently, must invalidate any civil act, whether sensible and judicious or manifestly prompted by the delusion. If, for instance, a person believing himself to be Emperor of Germany should make his will, and, while so doing, something should occur to lead him to utter his delusion, then certainly that will cannot be established, however correct and rational its dispositions may be. In this view of the matter, his lordship said he had the concurrence of Lord Langdale, Dr. Lushington, and Mr. T. Pemberton Leigh. Waring vs. Waring, 6 Thornt. 388. It is not probable, however, that the common practice, founded as it is on our maturest knowledge of insanity, will be readily abandoned on the strength of a showy speculation. It may now be considered as the settled doctrine of English and American courts that partial insanity may or may not invalidate a will.

In general intellectual mania, excepting that form of it called raving, it is not to be understood that the mind is irrational on every topic, but rather that it is the sport of vague and shifting delusions, or, where these are not manifest, has lost all nicety of intellectual discernment, and the ability to perform any continuous process of thought with its customary steadiness and correctness. It is usually accompanied by feelings of estrangement or indifference towards those who at other times were objects of affection and interest. A common feature of the disease is either more or less nervous exaltation, manifested by loquacity, turbulence, and great muscular activity, or depression, indicated by silence, gloom, painful apprehensions, and thoughts of self-destruction.

The legal consequences of general intellectual mania depend somewhat on the violence of the disease, the instructions of the court, the opinions of experts, and the intelligence of the jury. In its higher grades, where all reason has disappeared, and the person knows nothing correctly, responsibility is unquestionably annulled. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 30. In cases where reason has not completely gone,—where the person converses rationally on some topics, and conducts himself with propriety in some relations of life,—the law does not regard him as necessarily irresponsible. It lays down certain criteria, or tests, and the manner in which he stands these decides the question of guilt or innocence. On these points the practice varied to such a degree that it was impossible to say with any confidence what the law actually was. Ray, Med. Jur. 42. In this dilemma, the house of lords propounded to the judges of England certain queries, for the purpose of obtaining an authoritative exposition of the law. 10 Cl. & F. 200. These queries had reference chiefly to the effect of delusions; and the reply of the judges has been just considered. In regard to the effect of insanity generally, they reply that "to establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong." In regard to this criterion, it is enough to say that had it been always used it would have produced the conviction of most of those who are universally regarded as having been properly acquitted. Hadfield, for instance, knew that in attempting the life of the king he was doing wrong, and that the act, if successful, would be murder; but he thought it would lead to the accomplishment of great ends, and he was ready to meet the punishment he deserved. So, too, in regard to the common case of a person killing his children to prevent their coming to want: he is perfectly aware of the nature and quality of the act, but considers himself justified by the end proposed. And yet such persons have been generally acquitted. The truth is, these criteria have no foundation in nature, and do not truly indicate the extent to which the disease has affected the operations of the mind. Insanity once admitted, in any degree, it is only sheer presumption, not wisdom, to say that it could not have perverted the action of the mind in regard to any particular criminal act. Ray, Med. Jur. Ins. 60, 64, 273–284.

In moral or effective mania, the disorder is manifested chiefly, if not entirely, in the sentiments or propensities, which are essential parts of our mental constitution, and, of course, as liable to disease as the intellectual faculties. It may be partial or general. In the former, a single propensity is excited to such a degree of activity as to impel the person to its gratification by an irresistible force, while perfectly conscious of the nature of the act and deploring the necessity that controls him. Our limits allow us to do but little more than to indicate the principal of these morbid impulses:—propensity to kill, homicidal monomania; propensity to steal, kleptomania; sexual propensity, aidoiomania; propensity to burn, pyromania; propensity to drink, dipsomania. In the first, the patient is impelled by an inward necessity to take life, without provocation, without motive. The victim is often the patient's child, or some one to whom he has been tenderly attached. In most cases there has been some derangement of health, or some deviation from the ordinary physiological condition, such as delivery, suppressed menstruation; but occasionally no incident of this kind can be detected; the patient has been, apparently, in his ordinary condition, both bodily and mental. Kleptomania occurs in persons of a previously irreproachable life, who may be in easy circumstances, and, by education and habit, above all petty dishonesty. The objects stolen are usually, not always, of trifling value, and put away out of sight as soon as obtained. It generally occurs in connection with some pathological or other abnormal conditions,—as a sequel of fever or blows on the head, of pregnancy and disordered menstruation, and the precursor of mania and organic disease of the brain. Pyromania always occurs in young subjects, and is supposed to be connected with disordered menstruation, or that physiological evolution which attends the transition from youth to manhood. Doubts have been inconsiderately expressed as to the maniacal character of these singular impulses, which are attributed to depravity of character rather than disease. Nothing, however, is better established by an abundance of cases related by distinguished observers. In spite of all metaphysical cavils, there are the cases on record; and there they will remain, to be increased in number with every year's observation.

Nothing can be more contrary to the spirit of the common law than to show any favor to the plea of this kind of insanity in defence of crime. Occasionally, however, this defence has prevailed in minor offences, owing more to favorable accessory circumstances than to its intrinsic merits. Juries have been loath to convict of theft a man who towards the close of an exemplary life has been detected in stealing things of insignificant value, or a woman who when pregnant, and only then, forgets entirely the distinctions of meum and tuum, though at all other times a model of moral propriety. In cases of homicide, the defence of moral mania has been too seldom made, either in this country or England, to settle the law on the subject. But there is no reason to suppose that the old criteria would be dispensed with unless some peculiar features of the case conveyed unquestionable evidence of insanity. In 1846, C. J. Gibson, of Pennsylvania, admitted that "there is a moral or homicidal insanity, consisting of an irresistible inclination to kill or to commit some other particular offence," which would be a competent defence. Wharton, Ment. Unsound. 48. Just previously, C. J. Shaw, in Com. vs. Rogers, 7 Metc. 500, had mentioned an "uncontrollable impulse" as among the conditions which would annul criminal responsibility. In practice, the objection would always be urged that such impulses as those under consideration are not uncontrollable.

In general moral mania, it is not to be supposed that the sentiments and propensities are all and equally disordered. On the contrary, the propensities may not be excessively active, though occasionally one may crave unusual indulgence. The essential feature of general moral mania is that the moral relations, whereby the conduct is governed, more than by the deductions of reason, are viewed through a distorting medium. This condition is usually accompanied by a perversion of some of the sentiments that inspire hope, fear, courage, relf-reliance, self-respect, modesty, veracity, domestic affection. The patient is eager and sanguine in the pursuit of whatever strikes his fancy, ready with the most plausible reasons for the success of the wildest projects, viewing every prospect through a rose-colored medium, and regardless of the little proprieties and amenities of life. Love for others is replaced by aversion or indifference; the least contradiction or check is met by anger or impatience; he is restless, insensible to fatigue, and sleeps comparatively little. In some cases, and often at different periods in the same case, the very opposite moral condition occurs. Without cause, true or delusive, the person is completely wretched. The past affords him no pleasure, the future reveals not a single gleam of hope, and the ordinary sources of comfort and joy only serve to darken the cloud of doubt, apprehension, and despair in which he is enveloped.

There is no good reason why general moral mania should not be followed by the same legal consequences as those of intellectual mania. True, the intellect is supposed to be sound; but that is only one element of responsibility, which requires, besides a knowledge of the right and true, the power, supplied only by the moral faculties, to obey their dictates. If the latter are diseased, then is responsibility annulled just as effectually as if the knowing faculties were disordered by delusion. The conduct of most men is determined in a great degree as much by the state of their feelings as by the conclusions of their understandings; and when the former are affected by disease, nothing can be more unphilosophical, more contradictory to facts, than to ignore its existence altogether in settling the question of responsibility. Theoretically, this form of insanity is not recognized by courts. In Reg. vs. Barton, it was pronounced by Baron Parke to be "a dangerous innovation coming in with the present century." 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 275. "A man might say he picked a pocket from some uncontrollable impulse; and in that case the law would have an uncontrollable impulse to punish him for it." Baron Alderson, in Reg. vs. Pate, Lond. Times, July 12, 1850. See, also, Chitty, Med. Jur. 352; 3 C. & K. 185. In Frere vs. Peacocke, 1 Rob. Ec. 448, the court, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, said "he was not aware of any case decided in a court of law, where moral perversion of the feelings, unaccompanied with delusion, has been held a sufficient ground to invalidate and nullify the acts of one so affected." In this country, C. J. Hornblower, in State vs. Spencer, 1 Zabr. 196, declared himself strongly against the doctrine of moral insanity. On the other hand, C. J. Lewis, of Pennsylvania, in a case he was trying, declared emphatically that, "where its existence is fully established, this species of insanity relieves from accountability to human laws." Whart. Ment. Unsound. 44. In cases not capital, the verdict would probably be determined rather by the circumstances of the case than by any arbitrary rule of law. See INSANITY.

MANIA A POTU. See DELIRIUM TREMENS; Whart. & St. Med. Jur.

MANIFEST. In Commercial Law. A written instrument containing a true account of the cargo of a ship or a commercial vessel.

As to the requirements of the United States laws in respect to manifests, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 593, 594.

The want of a manifest, where one is required, and also the making a false manifest, are grave offences.

In Evidence. That which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious. See NOTORIETY.

MANIFESTO. A solemn declaration, by the constituted authorities of a nation, which contains the reasons for its public acts towards another.

On the declaration of war, a manifesto is usually issued, in which the nation declaring the war states the reasons for so doing. Vattel, l. 3, c. 4, § 64; Wolffius, § 1187.

MANKIND. Persons of the male sex; the human species. The statute of 25 Hen. VIII., c. 6, makes it felony to commit sodomy with mankind or beast. Females as well as males are included under the term mankind. Fortescue, 91; Bacon, Abr. Sodomy. See GENDER.

MANNER. See WORDS.

MANNER AND FORM. In Pleading. After traversing any allegation in pleading, it is usual to say, "in manner and form as he has in his declaration in that behalf alleged," which is as much as to include in the traverse not only the mere fact opposed to it, but that in the manner and form in which it is stated by the other party. These words, however, only put in issue the substantial statement of the manner of the fact traversed, and do not extend to the time, place, or other circumstances attending it, if they were not originally material and necessary to be proved as laid. 3 Bouvier, Inst. 297. See MODO ET FORMA.

MANNOPUS (Lat.). An ancient word, which signifies goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief.

MANOR.

This word is derived from the French manoir, and signifies a house, residence, or habitation. At present its meaning is more enlarged, and includes not only a dwelling-house, but also lands. See Co. Litt. 58, 108; 2 Rolle, Abr. 121; Merlin, Répert, Manoir. Serg. Land Laws of Penn. 195.

In English Law. A tract of land originally granted by the king to a person of rank, part of which (terræ tenementales) were given by the grantee or lord of the manor to his followers, the rest he retained, under the name of his demesnes (terræ dominicales). That which remained uncultivated was called the lord's waste, and served for public roads, and commons of pasture for the lord and his tenants. The whole fee was called a lordship, or barony, and the court appendant to the manor the court-baron. The tenants, in respect to their relation to this court and to each other, were called pares curiæ; in relation to the tenure of their lands, copyholders (q. v.), as holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court.

The franchise of a manor; i. e. the right to jurisdiction and rents and services of copyholders. Cowel. No new manors were created in England after the prohibition of sub-infeudation by stat. Quia Emptores, in 1290. 1 Washb. R. P. 30.

In American Law. A manor is a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to the oldest son of the proprietor, who in New York is called a patroon. 9 Seld. 291.

Manor is derived originally either from Lat. manendo, remaining, or from Brit. maer, stones, being the place marked out or inclosed by stones. Webst.

MANSE. Habitation; farm and land. Spelman, Gloss. Parsonage or vicarage house. Paroch. Antiq. 431; Jacob, Law Dict. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

MANSION-HOUSE. Any house of dwelling, in the law of burglary, etc. Coke, 3d Inst. 64.

The term "mansion-house," in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling-house, but also all the buildings within the curtilage, as the dairy-house, the cow-house, the stable, etc.; though not under the same roof nor contiguous. Burn, Inst. Burglary; 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 215, 216; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 558; 4 Bla. Com. 225. See 3 S. & R. 199; 4 Strobh. 372; 13 Bost. L. Rep. 157; 4 Call, 409; 14 M. & W. 181; 4 C. B. 105; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 783.

MANSLAUGHTER. In Criminal Law. The unlawful killing of another without malice either express or implied. 4 Bla. Com. 190; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 466.

The distinction between manslaughter and murder consists in the following. In the former, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful, or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, either express or implied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 218; Foster, 290; 5 Cush. 304.

It also differs from murder in this, that there can be no accessaries before the fact, there having been no time for premeditation; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 437; 1 Russ. Cr. 485; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 678.

Involuntary manslaughter is such as happens without the intention to inflict the injury.

Voluntary manslaughter is such as happens voluntarily or with an intention to produce the injury.

The distinction between voluntary and involuntary manslaughter is now obsolete, and unless where the terms are used in statutes defining the crimes, they are not used in indictment, verdict, or sentence. But where the distinction is made by statute, there can be no conviction of involuntary manslaughter on an indictment for voluntary; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 307.

Homicide may become manslaughter in consequence of provocation; mutual combat; in case of resistance to public officers, etc.; killing in the prosecution of an unlawful or wanton act; or killing in the prosecution of a lawful act improperly performed, or performed without lawful authority.

The provocation which reduces the killing from murder to manslaughter is an answer to the presumption of malice, which the law raises in every case of homicide: it is, therefore, no answer when express malice is proved; 1 Russ. Cr. 440; Foster, 132; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 239. And to be available the provocation must have been reasonable and recent; for no words or slight provocation will be sufficient, and if the party has had time to cool, malice will be inferred; 3 Wash. C. C. 515; 4 Penn. 264; 2 N. Y. 193; 25 Miss. 383; 3 Gratt. 594; 6 Blackf. 299; 8 Ired. 344; 18 Ala. N. s. 720; 15 Ga. 223; 10 Humphr. 141; 1 C. & K. 556; 5 C. & P. 324; 6 How. St. Tr. 769; 17 id. 57; 1 Leach, 151.

In cases of mutual combat, it is generally manslaughter only, when one of the parties is killed; J. Kel. 58, 119; 4 D. & B. 191; 1 Jones, No. C. 280; 2 C. & K. 814. When death ensues from duelling, the rule is different; and such killing is murder.

The killing of an officer by resistance to him while acting under lawful authority is murder; but if the officer be acting under a void or illegal authority, or out of his jurisdiction, the killing is manslaughter, or excusable homicide, according to the circumstances of the case; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 80, 132; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 458; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 314; 2 Stark. N. P. C. 205.

Killing a person while doing an act of mere wantonness is manslaughter: as, if a person throws down stones in a coal-pit, by which a man is killed, although the offender was only a trespasser; Lew. Cr. Cas. 179.

When death ensues from the performance of a lawful act, it may, in consequence of the negligence of the offender, amount to manslaughter. For instance, if the death had been occasioned by negligent driving; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 263; 1 C. & P. 320; 6 id. 129. Again, when death ensues from the gross negligence of a medical or a surgical practitioner, it is manslaughter. It is no crime for any to administer medicine; but it is a crime to administer it so rashly and carelessly, or with such criminal inattention, as to produce death; and in this respect there is no difference between the most regular practitioner and the greatest quack; 1 F. & F. 519, 521; 3 C. & K. 202; 4 C. & P. 440; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 46–48. And see 6 Mass. 134; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 429; 3 C. & P. 632.

MANSTEALING. A word sometimes used synonymously with kidnapping (q. v.). The latter is more technical. 4 Bla. Com. 219.

MANU FORTI (Lat. with strong hand). A term used in pleading in cases of forcible entry. No other words are of equal import. It implies greater force than the words vi et armis; 10 Ired. 39; 8 Term, 362; 4 Cush. 141; Dane, Abr. c. 132, a. 6, c. 203, a. 12.

MANU OPERA. See MANNOPUS.

MANUAL. That which is employed or used by the hand, of which a present profit may be made. Things in the manual occupation of the owner cannot be distrained for rent. See TOOLS.

MANUCAPTIO (Lat.). In Old English Practice. A writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise. Fitzh. N. B. 249.

MANUCAPTORS. The same as mainpernors.

MANUFACTURE. In Patent Law. A term which is used to denote whatever is made directly by the hand of man, or indirectly through the instrumentality of any machinery which is controlled by human power. It is also applied to the process by which those results are produced. A commodity may be regarded as being in itself a manufacture, or as being produced by manufacture.

The term is used in its widest sense in the patent law of Great Britain. The statute of that kingdom prohibits the granting of letters patent except for the making, using, or selling of some new manufacture. The term, therefore, must embrace every thing which can there be the subject-matter of a patent, whether machinery or substances or fabrics made by art and industry; by construction it has been extended to cover the process of making a thing, or the art of carrying on manufactures. See 2 B. & Ald. 349; 2 H. Blackst. 492; 1 Webst. Pat. Cas. 512. It has been defined there to be "anything made by the hand of man." 8 Term, 99.

By our law, a patent can not only be granted for a new manufacture, but also for a new and useful art, machine, or composition of matter. There are, consequently, with us four classes of patentable inventions; and we therefore give the word "manufacture," when used as the subject-matter of a patent, a meaning so narrow that it shall cover none of the ground occupied by either of the other classes. Now, all these classes together only include what is embraced by the word "manufacture" in the English law, inasmuch as nothing is the subject-matter of a patent with us which is not so also in England. It follows that the term "manufacture" has a very different signification in the patent laws of the two countries.

With us, it has been defined to be "any new combination of old materials constituting a new result or production in the form of a vendible article, not being machinery." The contriver of a substantially new commodity, which is not properly a machine or a composition of matter, can obtain a patent therefor as for a new manufacture. And although it might be properly regarded as a machine or a composition of matter, yet if the claim to novelty rests on either of those grounds, and if it really constitutes an essentially new merchantable commodity, it may be patented as a new manufacture. See PATENTS.

The vendible substance is the thing produced; and that which operates preserves no permanent form. In the first class the machine, and in the second the substance produced, is the subject of the patent. 2 H. Blackst. 492. See 8 Term, 99; 2 B. & Ald. 349; Dav. Pat. Cas. 278; Webs. Pat. 8; Perpigny, Manuel des Inv. c. 2, s. 1; Renouard, c. 5, s. 1; Westm. Rev. No. 44, April, 1835, p. 247; 1 Bell, Com. l. 1, part 2, c. 4, s. 1, p. 110, 5th ed.

MANUMISSION. The act of releasing from the power of another. The act of giving liberty to a slave.

The modern acceptation of the word is the act of giving liberty to slaves. But in the Roman law it was a generic expression, equally applicable to the enfranchisement from the manus, the mancipium, the dominica potestas, and the patria potestas. Manumittere signifies to escape from a power,—manus. Originally, the master could only validly manumit his slave when he had the dominium jure Quiritium over him: if he held him merely in bonis, the manumission was null, according to the civil law; but by the jus honorarium the slave was permitted to enjoy his liberty de facto, but whatever he acquired belonged to his master. By the law Junia Norbana, passed under Tiberius in the year of Rome 772, the position of this class of quasi slaves was fixed, by conceding to them the same rights which were formerly enjoyed by the people of the colonies established by Latium; and they were called Latini Juniani,—Latini because they enjoyed the jus latii,—jus latinitatis,—Juniani because they owed this status to the law Junia. They did not possess the rights of Roman citizens: they could neither vote nor perform any public functions; they were without the capacity of being instituted heirs or legatees, except indirectly by a fideicommissum; they could make no valid will or act as tutors; but they had the commercium, or right of buying and selling, and might witness a will made per æs et libram. But at their death their masters were entitled to all their property, as if they had never ceased to be slaves. In the language of the law, with their last breath they lost both their life and their liberty: in ipso ultimo spiritu simul animam atque libertatem amittebant. Inst. 3. 7. 4; Gaius, 3, § 56 et seq. At first there were only three modes of manumission, viz.: 1, vindicta; 2, census; and, 3, testamentum. The vindicta consisted in a fictitious suit, in which the assertor libertatis, as plaintiff, alleged that the slave was free; the master not denying the claim, the prætor rendered a decision declaring the slave free. In this proceeding figured a rod,—festuca vindicta,—a sort of lance (the symbol of property), with which the assertor libertatis touched the slave when he claimed him as free: hence the expression vindicta manumissio. Census, the second mode, was when the slave was inscribed at the instance of his master, by the censor, in the census as a Roman citizen. Testamento was when the testator declared in express terms that the slave should be free,—servus meus Cratinus liber esto,—or by a fideicommissum,—heres meus rogo te ut Sanum vicini mei servum, manumittas, fideicommitto heredis mei ut iste eum servum manumittat.

Afterwards, manumission might take place in various other ways; in sacrosanctis ecclesiis, of which we have a form: Ex beneficiis S. ✠ per Joannem episcopum et per Albertum S. ✠ Casatum, factus est liber Lembertus, teste hac sancta ecclesia. Per epistolam. Justinian required the letter containing the manumission to be signed by five witnesses. Inter amicas, a declaration made by the master before his friends that he gave liberty to his slave: five witnesses were required, and an act was drawn up in which it was stated that they had heard the declaration. Per codicillum, by a codicil, which required to be signed by five witnesses. There were many other modes of manumission, which were enumerated in a Constitution of Justinian. C. 76, 3–12; 1 Ortolan, 35 et seq.; 1 Etienne, 78 et seq.; Lagrange, 101 et seq.

Direct manumission may be either by deed or will, or any other act of notoriety done with the intention to manumit. A variety of these modes are described as used by ancient nations.

Indirect manumission was either by operation of law, as the removal of a slave to a non-slaveholding state animo morandi, or by implication of law, as where the master by his acts recognized the freedom of his slave.

In the absence of statutory regulations, it has been held in this country, in accordance with the principles of the common law, that no formal mode or prescribed words were necessary to effect manumission; it could be by parol; and any words were sufficient which evinced a renunciation of dominion on the part of the master; 8 Humphr. 189; 3 Halst. 275. But mere declarations of intention were insufficient unless subsequently carried into effect; Coxe, 259; 8 Mart. La. 149; 14 Johns. 324; 19 id. 53. Manumission could be made to take effect in future; Coxe, 4; 2 Root, 364. In the mean time the slaves were called statu liberi. See Cobb, Law of Slavery, passim; SERVUS; FREEDOM; BONDAGE.

MANURE. Manure made upon a farm in the ordinary manner, from the consumption of its products, is a part of the realty; 1 Washb. R. P. 18; 68 Me. 204; s. c. 28 Am. Rep. 36, n.; 15 Wend. 169; 13 Gray, 53; 11 Conn. 525; 44 N. H. 120. It has been also held to be personalty; 4 Dutch. 581; 2 Ired. 326; especially if it be made from hay purchased and brought upon the land by the tenant; 48 N. H. 147; and where a teamster owning a house and stable sold them with a small lot on which they stood, it was held that manure in the stable was personalty; 49 N. H. 62. Manure in heaps has been held to be personalty; 11 Conn. 525; and where the owner of land gathered manure into heaps and sold it, and then the land, the manure did not pass with the land; 43 Vt. 93; 110 Mass. 94. In 1 Cr. & M. 809, a custom for a tenant to receive compensation for manure left by him on the farm, was recognized. Manure dropped in the street belongs originally to the owners of the animals that dropped it, but, if abandoned by them, the first taker has a right to it; 37 Conn. 500; s. c. 9 Am. Rep. 350.

MANUS (Lat. hand), anciently, signified the person taking an oath as a compurgator. The use of this word probably came from the party laying his hand on the New Testament. Manus signifies, among the civilians, power, and is frequently used as synonymous with potestas. Leç. El. Dr. Rom. § 94.

MANUSCRIPT. An unpublished writing, or one that has been published without the consent of the person entitled to control it.

In every writing the author has a property at common law, which descends to his representative, but is not liable to seizure by creditors so that they can publish it; 1 Bell, Dict. 68. And an unauthorized publication will be restrained in equity; 4 Burr. 2320, 2408; 2 Bro. P. C. 138; 2 Atk. 342; 2 Edw. Ch. 329; 2 Mer. 434; Ambl. 694, 739; 1 Ball & B. 207; 2 Stor. 100; 5 McLean, 32. Letters are embraced within this principle; for, although the receiver has a qualified property in them, the right to object to their publication remains with the writer. It is held, however, that the receiver may publish them for the purposes of justice publicly administered, or to vindicate his character from an accusation publicly made; 2 V. & B. 19; 2 Swanst. 418; 2 Mer. 435; 2 Stor. 100; 2 Atk. 342; 2 Bush, 480; 1 Mart. La. 297; 4 Du. N. Y. 379. The receiver may destroy or give away the letters, as soon as received; 2 Bush, 480. The latter proposition has been doubted; see Drone, Copyright, 137. In the United States, the Copyright Act recognizes the right of property in "any manuscript whatever," which includes private letters; 5 McLean, 32; and gives a remedy for the unauthorized publication. These rights will be considered as abandoned if the author publishes his manuscripts without securing the copyright under the acts of congress. COPYRIGHT; Curtis, Copinger, Drone, Copyright.

MARAUDER. One who, while employed in the army as a soldier, commits a larceny or robbery in the neighborhood of the camp, or while wandering away from the army. Merlin, Répert. See Halleck, Int. Laws; Lieber, Guerrilla Parties.

MARC-BANCO. The name of a coin. The marc-banco of Hamburg, as money of account, at the custom-house, is deemed and taken to be of the value of thirty-five cents. Act of March 3, 1843.

MARCH. In Scotch Law. A boundary-line. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 2. 6. 4.

MARCHERS. In Old English Law. Nobles who lived on the Marches, and had their own laws, and power over life and death, as if they were petty princes. Camden; Jacob, Law Dict. Abolished by stat. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, 1 Edw. VI. c. 10, & 1, and 2 P. & M. c. 15. They were also called Lords Marchers.

MARCHES. Limits; confines; borders. Especially used of the limits between England and Wales and between England and Scotland.

MARESCALLUS (fr. Germ. march, horse, and schalch, master. Du Cange). A groom of the stables, who also took care of the diseases of the horse. Du Cange.

An officer of the imperial stable: magister equorum. Du Cange.

A military officer, whose duty it was to keep watch on the enemy, to choose place of encampment, to arrange or marshal the army in order of battle, and, as master of the horse, to commence the battle. This office was second to that of comes stabuli or constable. Du Cange.

An officer of the court of exchequer. 51 Hen. III. 5.

An officer of a manor, who oversaw the hospitalities (mansionarius). Du Cange; Fleta, lib. 2, 74.

Marescallus aulæ. An officer of the royal household, who had charge of the person of the monarch and peace of the palace. Du Cange.

MARETUM (Lat.). Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Co. Litt. 5.

MARGIN. A sum of money, or its equivalent, placed in the hands of a stock broker, by the principal, or person on whose account the purchase is to be made, as a security to the former against losses to which he may be exposed by a subsequent depression in the market value of the stock. 49 Barb. 462.

The effect of the contract is that the broker, upon the performance of certain conditions by the customer, will buy and hold a certain number of shares, and in case any advance accrues and is secured by a sale, made under the direction or authority of the customer, he shall enjoy the benefit of it, and in case a loss ensues, the broker having performed the contract on his part, the customer shall bear it; 49 Barb. 464; 66 N. Y. 518. See Lewis, Stocks; Biddle, Stock Brokers; Dos Passos, Stock Brokers, etc., and the Stock Exchange.

MARINARIUS (L. Lat.). An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitaneus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

MARINE. Belonging to the sea; relating to the sea; naval. A soldier employed, or liable to be employed, on vessels of war, under the command of an officer of marines, who acts under the direction of the commander of the ship. See MARINE CORPS. It is also used as a general term to denote the whole naval power of a state or country.

MARINE CONTRACT. One which relates to business done or transacted upon the sea and in sea-ports, and over which the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law. See MARITIME CONTRACT; Parsons, Marit. Law; 2 Gall. 398.

MARINE CORPS. A body of officers and soldiers under an organization separate and distinct from that of the army, and intended for service, in detached portions, on board of ships of war.

MARINE COURT IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK. See NEW YORK.

MARINE INSURANCE. A contract of indemnity by which one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other, to the extent of the amount insured, against all perils of the sea, or certain enumerated perils, to which his ship, cargo, and freight, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage or fixed period of time.

The party who takes the risk is called the insurer or underwriter; and the party to be protected is called the insured or assured. The sum paid as a consideration for the insurance is called the premium; and the instrument containing the contract is called the policy. See Phillips, Arnould, Duer, Marshall, Insurance; Parsons, Marit. Law; Emerigon on Insurance, by Meredith; and title Insurance in the Index of Kent's Commentaries and Bouvier's Institutes, and in this work.

MARINE INTEREST. A compensation paid for the use of money loaned on bottomry or respondentia. Provided the money be loaned and put at risk, there is no fixed limit to the rate which may be lawfully charged by the lender; but courts of admiralty, in enforcing the contract, will mitigate the rate when it is extortionate and unconscionable. See BOTTOMRY; MARITIME LOAN; RESPONDENTIA.

MARINE LEAGUE. A measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree of latitude. Boucher, Inst. n. 1845. It is generally conceded that a nation has exclusive territorial jurisdiction upon the high seas for a marine league from its own shores. 1 Kent, 29. See The Franconia, 2 Ex. Div. 63.

MARINER. One whose occupation it is to navigate vessels upon the sea. See SEAMEN; SHIPPING ARTICLES. Surgeons, engineers, clerks, stewards, cooks, porters, and chambermaids, on passenger-steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship or crew, are also deemed mariners, and permitted as such to sue in the admiralty for their wages. 1 Conkl. Adm. 107. See SEAMEN; LIEN.

MARITAGIUM (Lat.). A portion given with a daughter in marriage.

During the existence of the feudal law, it was the right which the lord of the fee had, under certain tenures, to dispose of the daughters of his vassal in marriage. Beames, Glanv. 138, n.; Bracton, 21 a; Spelm. Gloss.; 2 Bla. Com. 69; Co. Litt. 21 b, 76 a.

MARITAL. That which belongs to marriage: as, marital rights, marital duties.

Contracts made by a feme sole with a view to deprive her intended husband of his marital rights with respect to her property are a fraud upon him, and may be set aside in equity. By the marriage the husband assumes the duty of paying her debts contracted previous to the coverture, and of supporting her during its existence; and he cannot, therefore, be fraudulently deprived, by the intended wife, of those rights which enable him to perform the duties which attach to him; 1 Vern. 408; 2 id. 17; 2 P. Wms. 357, 674; 2 Bro. C. C. 345; 2 Cox, Ch. 28; 2 Beav. 528; White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. *277.

MARITAL PORTION. In Louisiana. The name given to that part of a deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled. La. Civ. Code, 334, art. 55; 3 Mart. La. N. S. 1.

MARITIME CAUSE. A cause arising from a maritime contract, whether made at sea or on land.

The term includes such causes as relate to the business, commerce, or navigation of the sea: as charter-parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreighment; bottomry and respondentia contracts; and contracts for maritime services in repairing, supplying, and navigating ships and vessels; contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons, when the party prosecuting has a maritime lien; and also those arising from torts and injuries committed on the high seas, or on other navigable waters within the admiralty jurisdiction.

Suits for the recovery of damages for the collision of ships and vessels constitute an important class of the causes founded upon marine torts; and in these cases the admiralty courts adopt a rule of decision entirely different from that acted upon in common-law courts. In the latter a plaintiff whose negligence has contributed to the injury of which he complains cannot recover damages, although the defendant has been equally, or even more, culpable; but in cases of collision the admiralty courts, when it is established that both vessels were in fault, or that the collision must be attributed to the fault of one or both of the vessels, and it cannot be determined which, if either alone, was in fault, aggregate the damage to both, and then divide it between them, decreeing that the owners of each shall bear half the whole loss; 2 Dods. 85; 3 W. Rob. 38; 17 How. 172; 1 Conkl. Adm. 374–380; Desty, Adm. § 388.

Cases of salvage are also within the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts; and they likewise exercise jurisdiction in favor of a part-owner who dissents from the determination of a majority of the owners to employ the ship in a particular manner, and seek to obtain security for the safe return of the vessel. They also exercise a jurisdiction (founded upon a rule of national comity) for the purpose of enforcing the decrees of foreign courts of admiralty, when the ends of justice require it; 1 Conkl. Adm. 26; 2 Gall. 191, 197.

The admiralty courts of the United States also have jurisdiction of controversies between part-owners and others in relation to the title or possession of ships and vessels; Ware, 232; 2 Curt. C. C. 426; 18 How. 267; also of all seizures under laws of import, navigation, or trade of the United States, where such seizures are made on the high seas or on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden. See Judiciary Act, sec. 9, 1 Stat. at L. 77.

In all cases of contract the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts depends upon the nature or subject-matter of the contract; but in cases of maritime tort and salvage their jurisdiction depends upon the place in which the cause of action accrued; 1 Conkl. Adm. 19, 32. In general, the courts of common law have a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of admiralty in those cases which, in legal parlance, are said to be prosecuted or promoted on the instance side of the court. But the admiralty also has jurisdiction of prize cases, or cases arising upon captures jure belli; and that jurisdiction is exclusive, except where affected by special statutes; 6 Wall. 759.

In the United States, the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts is not limited to the cases of contracts relating to the navigation of the high seas or other waters within the ebb and flow of the tide, and to causes of action for torts committed on tide-waters, as was generally supposed prior to 1845; 10 Wheat. 428; 7 Pet. 324, 343; but it is now held to extend to the great lakes and to the other navigable waters of the United States, in respect to commerce with foreign nations and among the states; 12 How. 443, 468; 5 McLean, 269, 359; 20 How. 296. See ADMIRALTY.

The admiralty jurisdiction has been held not to extend to preliminary contracts, merely leading to the execution of maritime contracts; 3 Mas. 6; 4 id. 380; 3 Sumn. 144; nor to matters of account between part-owners; 11 Pet. 175; nor to trusts, although they may relate to maritime affairs; Davis, 71; nor to enforce a specific performance of a contract relating to maritime affairs; nor to a contract not maritime in its character, although the consideration for it may be maritime services; 4 Mas. 380; nor to questions of possession and property between owner and mortgagee; 17 How. 399; nor to contracts of affreightment from one port of the great lakes to another port in the same state; 21 How. 244; nor to contracts for supplies furnished a vessel engaged in such trade only; and, of course, such causes cannot be considered maritime causes; 21 How. 248.

MARITIME CONTRACT. One which relates to the business of navigation upon the sea, or to business appertaining to commerce or navigation to be transacted or done upon the sea, or in sea-ports, and over which courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law.

Such contracts, according to civilians and jurists, include, among others, charter-parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreightment, marine hypothecations, contracts for maritime service in building, repairing, supplying, and navigating ships or vessels, contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons. See 2 Gall. 398, etc., in which Judge Story gave a very elaborate and learned opinion on the subject; 2 Pars. Marit. Law, 182. It is, however, very doubtful whether his views in respect to the admiralty jurisdiction in cases of marine insurance would now be concurred in by the supreme court of the United States. See 3 Mas. 27; 2 Story, 176; 2 Curt. C. C. 322; 7 How. 729.

The contract for building a vessel is not a maritime contract; 20 How. 393; 7 Am. Law Reg. 5; 22 How. 129; contra, 21 Law Rep. 281.

The term "maritime contract," in its ordinary and proper signification, does not strictly apply to contracts relating to the navigation of our great inland lakes and our great navigable rivers; and yet contracts in respect to their navigation from state to state are now within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States to the same extent as though they were arms of the sea and subject to tidal influences; 12 How. 443, 468. Such contracts are, therefore, frequently denominated maritime contracts, and may, perhaps, be properly denominated quasi maritime, as being within the jurisdiction of the admiralty or maritime courts.

MARITIME INTEREST. See MARINE INTEREST.

MARITIME LAW. That system of law which particularly relates to the affairs and business of the sea, to ships, their crews and navigation, and to the marine conveyance of persons and property. See ADMIRALTY, and the various titles in regard to which information is sought.

The following is a part of the syllabus of the opinion of the court (per Bradley, J.), in 21 Wall. 558.

Whilst the general maritime law is the basis of the maritime law of the United States, as well as of other countries, it is only so far operative in this, or any country, as it is adopted by the laws and usages thereof. It has no inherent force of its own.

In particular matters, especially such as approach a merely municipal character, the received maritime law may differ in different countries without affecting the integrity of the system as a harmonious whole.

The general system of maritime law which was familiar to the lawyers and statesmen of this country when the constitution was adopted, was intended, and referred to, when it was declared in that instrument that the judicial power of the United States shall extend "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Thus adopted, it became the maritime law of the United States, operating uniformly in the whole country.

The question as to the true limits of maritime law and admiralty jurisdiction is exclusively a judicial question, and no state law or act of congress can make it broader or narrower than the judicial power may determine those limits to be. But what the law is within those limits, assuming the general maritime law to be the basis of the system, depends on what has been received as law in the maritime usages of this country, and on such legislation as may have been competent to effect it.

The decisions of this court illustrative of these sources, and giving construction to the laws and constitution, are especially to be considered; and when these fail us, we must resort to the principles by which they have been governed.

MARITIME LOAN. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred. Emerigon, Mar. Loans, c. 1, s. 2. See BOTTOMRY; GROSS ADVENTURE; MARINE INTEREST; RESPONDENTIA.

MARITIME PROFIT. A term used by French writers to signify any profit derived from a maritime loan.

MARK. A sign, traced on paper or parchment, which stands in the place of a signature; usually made by persons who cannot write. The use of the mark in ancient times was not confined to illiterate persons; among the Saxons the mark of the cross, as an attestation of the good faith of the person signing, was required to be attached to the signature of those who could write, as well as to stand in the place of the signature of those who could not write. It was the symbol of an oath. It is most often the sign of the cross, made in a little space left between the Christian name and surname; 2 Bls. Com. 305; 2 Curt. 324; Mood. & M. 516; 12 Pet. 150; 2 Ves. Sen. 455; 1 V. & B. 382; 1 Ves. 11. The word his is usually written above the mark, and the word mark below it. A mark is now held to be a good signature though the party was able to write; 8 Ad. & E. 94; 3 Curt. 752; 5 Johns. 144; 2 Bradf. Surr. 385; 24 Penn. 502; 19 Mo. 609; 18 Ga. 396; 16 B. Monr. 102; 1 Jarm. Wills, 69, 112, note; 1 Will. Exec. 63.

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others; Poph. 144; 3 B. & C. 541; 2 Atk. 485; 2 V. & B. 218; 3 M. & C. Ch. 1; also to indicate the price; and if one use the mark of another to do him damage, an action on the case will lie, or an injunction may be had from chancery; 2 Cro. 47. See TRADE-MARKS.

By the act of July 8, 1870, patentees are required to mark patented articles with the word patented and the day and year when the patent was granted, and in any suit for infringement by the party failing so to mark, no damages can be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement, and continued, after such notice, to make, use, or vend the article patented.

MARK (spelled, also, Marc). A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver. When gold and silver are sold by the mark, it is divided into twenty-four carats. A money of accounts in England, and in some other countries a coin. The English mark is two-thirds of a pound sterling, or 13*s.* 4*d.*; and the Scotch mark is of equal value in Scotch money of account. Encyc. Amer.

MARKET (Lat. merx, merchandise; anciently, mercat). A public place and appointed time for buying and selling. A public place, appointed by public authority, where all sorts of things necessary for the subsistence or for the convenience of life are sold. All fairs are markets, but not vice versa; Bracton, l. 2, c. 24; Co. Litt. 22; Co. 2d Inst. 401; Co. 4th Inst. 272. Markets are generally regulated by local laws.

The franchise by which a town holds a market, which can only be by royal grant or immemorial usage.

By the term market is also understood the demand there is for any particular article: as, the cotton market in Europe is dull. See 15 Viner, Abr. 41; Comyns, Dig. Market; MARKET STALLS.

MARKET OVERT. An open or public market; that is, a place appointed by law or custom for the sale of goods and chattels at stated times in public. "An open, public, and legally constituted market." Jervis, C. J., 9 J. Scott, 601. As to what is a legally constituted market overt, see 5 C. B. N. S. 299. In 5 B. & S. 313, the doctrine of market overt was much discussed by Cockburn, C. J., and the opinion expressed that a sale could not be considered as made in market overt, "unless the goods were exposed in the market for sale, and the whole transaction begun, continued, and completed in the open market; so as to give the fullest opportunity to the man whose goods have been taken to make pursuit of them, and prevent their being sold."

The market-place is the only market overt, out of London; but in London every shop is a market overt; 5 Co. 83; F. Moore, 300. In London, every day except Sunday is market-day. In the country, particular days are fixed for market-days by charter or prescription; 2 Bls. Com. 449.

All contracts for any thing vendible, made in market overt, shall be binding; and sales pass the property, though stolen, if it be an open and proper place for the kind of goods, there be an actual sale for valuable consideration, no notice of wrongful possession, no collusion, parties able to contract, a contract originally and wholly in the market overt, toll be paid, if requisite, by statute, and the contract be made between sun and sun; 5 Co. 83 b. But sale in market overt does not bind the king, though it does infants, etc.; Cb. 2d Inst. 713; 2 Bls. Com. 449; Comyns, Dig. Market (E); Bacon, Abr. Fairs and Markets (E); 5 B. & Ald. 624. A London shop is not a market overt except for such goods as are usually sold there; 5 Co. 83. A sale by sample is not a sale in market overt; 5 B. & S. 313. A sale to a shop-keeper in London is a sale in market overt; 11 Ad. & E. 326; but see 5 B. & S. 313. Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100, upon the conviction of a thief, at the prosecution of a person from whom he has stolen goods, summary restitution of the stolen goods is provided for. Special provisions have been made in England touching the sale of horses in market overt.

There is no law recognizing the effect of a sale in market overt in Pennsylvania; 3 Yeates, 347; 5 S. & R. 180; in New York; 1 Johns. 480; in New Hampshire; 52 N. H. 158; in Maine; 59 Me. 111; in Massachusetts; 8 Mass. 521; in Ohio; 5 Ohio, 203; nor in Vermont; 1 Tyl. 341; nor, indeed, in any of the United States; 10 Pet. 161; 2 Kent, 324; 2 Tud. Lead. Cas. 734, where the subject is fully treated.

MARKET STALLS. The right acquired by a purchaser of a market stall is in the nature of an easement in, not a title to, a freehold in the land, and such right or easement is limited in duration to the existence of the market, and is to be understood as acquired subject to such changes and modifications in the market during its existence as the public needs may require. The purchase confers an exclusive right to occupy the particular stalls, with their appendages, for the purposes of the market, and none other, and subject to the regulation of the market. So held in a late case in 2 Md. Law Rec. 81, a case of a public market in Baltimore. In 33 Penn. 202, the court refused to enjoin the city of Philadelphia from demolishing the old market house with a view to building a new one on other property. See, also, 18 Ohio, 563; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 9.

MARKETABLE TITLE. See TITLE.

MARLBRIDGE, STATUTE OF. An important English statute, 52 Hen. III. (1267), relating to the tenures of real property, and to procedure. It derived its name from the town in Wiltshire in which parliament sat when it was enacted, now known as Marlborough. Compare 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 62; Crabb, Com. Law, 156; Barr. Stat. 66.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

MARRIAGE. A contract, made in due form of law, by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife.

Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for life, for the discharge to each other and the community, of the duties legally incumbent on those whose association is founded on the distinction of sex. 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 3.

The better opinion appears to be that marriage is something more than a mere civil contract. It has been variously said by different writers, to be a status, or a relation, or an institution. This view is supported by the following: Story, Confl. Laws, § 108 n.; 4 R. I. 87; 9 Ind. 37; 3 P. D. 1; s. c. 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 80; 4 P. D. 1; 5 id. 94; 5 Law Mag. & Rev. 4 Ser. 26. In New York, however, it has been held to be merely a civil contract; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 219.

All persons are able to contract marriage unless they are under the legal age, or unless there be other disability. The age of consent at common law is fourteen in males, and twelve in females; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 236; 2 Kent, 78; 1 N. Chipm. 254; 10 Humphr. 61; 1 Gray, 119. See 20 Ohio, 1. This is still the rule in the older states; but in Ohio, Indiana, and other western states, the age of consent is raised to eighteen for males, and fourteen for females; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 24. When a person under this age marries, such person can, when he or she arrives at the age above specified, avoid the marriage, or such person or both may, if the other is of legal age, confirm it. It has been held that the one who is of legal age may also disaffirm the marriage; Co. Litt. 79; East, P. C. 468; but see 15 Mich. 193. The disaffirmance may be either with or without a judicial sentence; 1 Bish. Marr. & D. § 150. If either of the parties is under seven, the marriage is void; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 436, note 9; 5 Ired. Eq. 487.

If either party is non compos mentis, or insane, the marriage is void; 21 N. H. 52; 22 id. 553; 4 Johns. Ch. 343.

If either party has a husband or wife living, the marriage is void; 4 Johns. 53; 22 Ala. N. S. 86; 1 Salk. 120; 1 Bla. Com. 438. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

Consanguinity and affinity within the rules prescribed by law in this country render a marriage void. In England they render the marriage liable to be annulled by the ecclesiastical courts; 10 Mete. 451; 2 Bla. Com. 434. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The parties must each be willing to marry the other.

If either party acts under compulsion, or is under duress, the marriage is voidable; 2 Hagg. Cons. 104, 246.

Where one of the parties is mistaken in the person of the other, this requisite is wanting. But a mistake in the qualities or character of the other party will not avoid the marriage; Poynt. Marr. & D. c. 9. If a man marries the woman he intends to marry, the marriage is valid, though she passes under an assumed name; 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 204; 3 Curt. Ec. 185; see Burke's Trials, 63.

If the apparent willingness is produced by fraud, the marriage will be valid till set aside by a court of chancery or by a degree of divorce; 5 Paige, Ch. 43. Fraud is sometimes said to render a marriage void; but this is incorrect, as it is competent for the party injured to waive the tort and affirm the marriage. Impotency in one of the parties is sometimes laid down as rendering the marriage void, as being a species of fraud on the other party; but it is only a ground for annulling the contract by a court, or for a divorce.

Dr. Wharton (Confl. Laws) gives three distinct theories as to the law which is to determine the question of matrimonial capacity.

It is determined by the law of the place of solemnization of the marriage. This view is supported by Judge Story (Confl. Laws, §§ 110, 112), and Mr. Bishop (Mar. & D. § 390); 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 219; but it is objected to this theory that it is subject to exceptions which destroy its applicability to the majority of litigated cases. Thus marriages which by our law are incestuous, are not validated by being performed in another land, where they would be lawful, and so the converse is true, that the marriage, in England, of an American with his deceased wife's sister, would be recognized as valid in such of our states as hold such a marriage to be legal, nor is it believed that an American court will ever hold a marriage of American citizens, solemnized abroad, to be illegal, simply because the consent of parents was withheld or because one of the parties, though of age at home, was a minor at the place of celebration. Further, to make the lex loci celebrationis supreme enables parties to acquire for themselves any kind of marital capacity they want, by having the marriage solemnized in a state where this kind of marital capacity is sanctioned by law.

A second theory of matrimonial capacity is that it is determined by the lex domicilii; Wheat. Int. Law (Lawr.), 172; 4 Phill. Int. Law, 284; 2 Cl. & F. 488; 9 H. L. C. 193. There are two serious objections to this theory. First, it would make the validity of the marriages in the United States of natives of other countries, depend upon the question whether such persons had acquired a domicil in the United States; for if they had not, they would be governed by the laws of their foreign domicil. Few aliens, who marry in this country, could be sure they were legally married. Second, it would be necessary upon this theory to sustain the polygamous marriages of Chinese; see, as sustaining this theory, L. R. 2 P. & M. 440; 4 P. D. 13; 3 P. D. 1; 29 L. J. P. & M. 97; Westl. 56; but see 125 Mass. 374. According to Savigny, all questions of capacity are to be determined by the husband's domicil, which, as the true seat of the marriage, absorbs that of the wife. It has been conceded that the law of domicil does not extend to the direction of the ceremonial part of the marriage rite, and that the lex domicilii is the law of the country in which the parties are domiciled at the time of the marriage, and in which their matrimonial residence is contemplated; Lord Campbell in 9 H. L. C. 193.

The third theory is that matrimonial capacity is a distinctive national policy, as to which judges are obliged to enforce the rules of the state of which they are the officers. So far as concerns the United States, our national policy in this respect is to sustain the matrimonial capacity in all classes of persons arrived at puberty, and free from the impediments of prior ties. This view is approved by Dr. Wharton, Confl. Laws, §§ 160–165. See 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 76, 219.

At common law, no particular form of words or ceremony was necessary. Mutual assent to the relation of husband and wife was sufficient. Any words importing a present assent to being married to each other were sufficient evidence of the contract. If the words imported an assent to a future marriage, if followed by consummation, this established a valid marriage by the canon law, but not by the common law; 10 Cl. & F. 534; 15 N. Y. 345; 2 Rop. Husb. & W. 445–475; 1 How. 219; 2 N. H. 268. But a betrothal followed by copulation does not make the common law marriage per verba de futuro cum copula when the parties looked forward to a formal ceremony, and did not agree to become husband and wife without it; 12 R. I. 485.

At common law the consent might be given in the presence of a magistrate or of any other person as a witness, or it might be found by a court or jury from the subsequent acknowledgment of the parties, or from the proof of cohabitation, or of general reputation resulting from the conduct of the parties. In the original United States the common-law rule prevails, except where it has been changed by legislation; 6 Binn. 405; 4 Johns. 52. See 10 N. H. 388; 4 Burr. 2058; 1 How. 219, 234; 1 Gray, 119; 2 Me. 102.

In civil cases a marriage can generally be proved by showing that the parties have held themselves out as husband and wife, and by general reputation founded on their conduct. This is sufficient, too, for purposes of administration; 2 Redf. 456. There is an exception, however, in the case of such civil suits as are founded on the marriage relation, such as actions for the seduction of the wife, where general reputation and cohabitation will not be sufficient; 4 N. Y. 230; 3 Bradf. Surr. 369, 373; 6 Conn. 446; 29 Me. 323; 14 N. H. 450.

In most of the states, the degrees of relationship within which marriages may not be contracted are prescribed by statute. This limit in cases of consanguinity is generally, though not always, that of first cousins. In some of the states, a violation of the rule renders, by statute, the marriage absolutely void. In others, no provision of this kind is made. Various statutes have been passed to guard against abuse of the marriage ceremony. Such of them as require license, or the publication of bans, or the consent of parents or guardians, are regarded as directory, and, unless explicitly declaring the marriage to be void, if not complied with, do not render it void. See 4 Iowa, 449; 26 Mo. 260; 2 Watts, 9; 1 How. 219; 2 Halst. 138; 2 N. H. 268. As to rights of married women, see HUSBAND AND WIFE; WIFE.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, in accordance with which the marriage settlement is afterwards to be drawn up. They are to be binding in case of marriage. They must be in writing, by the Statute of Frauds; Burt. R. P. 484; Crabb, R. P. § 1809; 4 Cruise, Dig. 274, 323.

MARRIAGE BROKAGE. The act by which a person interferes, for a consideration to be received by him, between a man and a woman, for the purpose of promoting a marriage between them. The money paid for such services is also known by this name.

It is a doctrine of the courts of equity that all marriage brokage contracts are utterly void, as against public policy, and are, therefore, incapable of confirmation; 1 Foubl. Eq. b. 1, c. 4, 10, note s; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 263.

MARRIAGE PORTION. That property which is given to a woman on her marriage. See DOWRY.

MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF. See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. An agreement made by the parties in contemplation of marriage, by which the title to certain property is changed, and the property to some extent becomes inalienable; 1 Rice, Eq. 315. See 2 Hill, Ch. 3; 8 Leigh, 29; 1 D. & B. Eq. 389; 2 id. 103; Baldw. 344; 15 Mass. 106; 1 Yeates, 221; 7 Pet. 348. See 2 Washb. R. P. Appx.; Atherly, Marr. Settl.

MARSHAL. An officer of the United States, whose duty it is to execute the process of the courts of the United States. His duties within the district for which he is appointed are very similar to those of a sheriff. See U. S. Stat. at Large, Index; Serg. Const. Law, ch. 25; 2 Dall. 402; Burr's Trial, 365; 1 Mas. 100; 2 Gall. 101; 4 Cra. 96; 7 id. 276; 9 id. 86, 212; 6 Wheat. 194; 9 id. 645.

MARSHAL. To arrange; put in proper order: e. g. "the law will marshal words, ut res magis valeat." Hill, B., Hardr. 92.

MARSHALLING ASSETS. The equity of marshalling seems capable of being carried into effect in one of two ways; either, first, by restraining the parties against whom it exists from using a security to the injury of another; or, secondly, by giving the party entitled to the protection of this equity the benefit of another security in lieu of the one of which he has been disappointed. In other words, the right might be enforced either by injunction against the paramount creditor, or by subrogation in favor of the former creditor. In practice, however, the latter of these two methods is the one most usually employed, and the sounder doctrine seems to be that the first of the two ought not to be resorted to except under very peculiar circumstances. But there are decisions to the contrary; 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 280. Of course, when both funds are in court or under its immediate control, the case is different. See Bisp. Eq. § 341 et seq. See ASSETS.

MARSHALSEA. In English Law. A prison belonging to the king's bench. It has now been consolidated with others, under the name of the queen's prison.

MARSHALSEA, COURT OF. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the royal household.

It was instituted to administer justice between the servants of the king's household, that they might not be drawn into other courts and their services lost. It was anciently ambulatory; but Charles I. erected a court of record, by the name of curia palatii, to be held before the steward of the household, etc., to hold pleas of all personal actions which should arise within twelve miles of the royal palace at Whitehall, not including the city of London. This court was held weekly, to determine causes involving less than twenty pounds, together with the ancient court of Marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark. A writ of error lay thence to the king's bench. Both courts were abolished by the stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13. See Jacob, Whishaw, Law Dict.

MARTIAL LAW. That military rule and authority which exists in time of war, and is conferred by the laws of war, in relation to persons and things under and within the scope of active military operations, in carrying on the war, and which extinguishes or suspends civil rights and the remedies founded upon them, for the time-being, so far as it may appear to be necessary in order to the full accomplishment of the purposes of the war. Prof. Joel Parker, in N. A. Rev., Oct. 1861.

It supersedes all civil proceedings which conflict with it; Benèt, Mil. Law; but does not necessarily supersede all such proceedings.

It extends, at least, to the camp, environs, and near field of military operations; 7 How. 83; 3 Mart. La. 530; 6 Am. Arch. 186; and see, also, 2 H. Blackst. 165; 1 Term, 549; 1 Knapp, P. C. 316; 18 How. 115; but does not extend to a neutral country; 1 Hill, N. Y. 377; 25 Wend. 483, 512, n. Nor in time of insurrection can it be applied to citizens in states in which the courts are open and their process unobstructed; 4 Wall. 2. It is founded on paramount necessity, and imposed by a military chief; 1 Kent, 377, n. For any excess or abuse of the authority, the officer ordering and the person committing the act are liable as trespassers; 18 How. 115, 154; 1 Cowp. 180.

Martial law must be distinguished from military law. The latter is a rule of government for persons in military service only, but the former when in force is indiscriminately applied to all persons whatsoever; De Hart, Mil. Law, 17. Consult the articles COURT MARTIAL, MILITARY LAW; Hall. Int. Law; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 347; 1 Lieb. Civ. Lib. 130; McArth. Courts Mart. 34; De Hart, Mil. Law, 13–17; Tytl. MARYLAND. One of the thirteen original states of the Union.

The territory of Maryland was included in the grants previously made to companies formed for the settlement of Virginia. These grants were annulled, and Maryland was granted by Charles the First, on the 20th of June, 1632, to Cecilius Calvert, Baron of Baltimore. The first settlement under the authority of Lord Baltimore was made on the 27th of March, 1634, in what is now St. Mary's county. Some settlements were previously made on Kent Island, under the authority of Virginia.

During its colonial period, Maryland was governed, with slight interruptions, by the lord proprietary, under its charter.

The government of Maryland was assumed by commissioners acting under the commonwealth of England; but in a few years Lord Baltimore was restored to his full powers, and remained undisturbed until the revolution of 1688, when the government was seized by the crown, and not restored to the proprietary till 1715. From this period there was no interruption to the proprietary rule until the revolution.

The territorial limits of Maryland seem to have been plainly described in the charter; still, long disputes arose about the boundaries, in the adjustment of which this state was reduced to her present limits.

The lines dividing Maryland from Pennsylvania and Delaware were fixed under an agreement between Thomas and Richard Penn and Lord Baltimore, dated 1760. These lines were surveyed by Mason and Dixon; and hence the line between Maryland and Pennsylvania is called Mason and Dixon's line.

By this agreement, the rights of grantees under the respective proprietaries were saved, and provision made for confirming the titles by the government in whose jurisdiction the lands granted were situated. The boundary between Maryland and Virginia has never been finally settled. Maryland claimed to the South branch of the Potomac; but Virginia has held to the north branch, and exercised jurisdiction up to that line. The rights of the citizens of the respective states to fish and navigate the waters which divide Maryland and Virginia were fixed by compact between the two states in 1785.

The first constitution of this state was adopted on the eighth day of November, 1776. The present constitution was adopted in 1867 and went into operation on the fifth of October in that year. It declared that no person ought to be molested on account of his religious belief, or compelled to frequent or maintain any place of worship or any ministry. Any person who believes in a God, and that he will be punished or rewarded for his acts either in this world or the next, is competent as a witness or a juror. The jury are the judges of the law and the fact in criminal cases. In civil cases the trial by jury is preserved where the amount in controversy exceeds five dollars. Lotteries are prohibited. No divorce can be granted by the legislature. No holder of public money, while indebted to the state, no person who fights a duel or sends or accepts a challenge, no person holding any office under the United states, no minister or preacher of the gospel, is eligible to any office of trust or profit. No debt can be created for purposes of internal improvement. Imprisonment for debt is not allowed. Slavery shall not be re-established in this state. Civil officers are nearly all elected by the people. Every male citizen twenty-one years of age, except lunatics, who has resided a year in the state and six months in the county or city, is entitled to vote.

The statute law of Maryland, from the earliest colonial times to 1878, inclusive, has been codified in one volume, which was adopted "in lieu of and as a substitute for all the public general laws, and public local laws heretofore passed by the legislature;" see Revised Code of Md. 1878; Acts 1878, ch. 196; and Acts 1880.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is lodged in "the general assembly of Maryland," composed of two branches: a senate and a house of delegates.

The senate is composed of members elected one from each county (the city of Baltimore also electing three, one from each legislative district therein) for the term of four years. One-half of the senate is elected every two years. A senator must be twenty-five years old, a citizen of the United States, have resided three years next before election in the state, and the last year thereof in the county or city from which he is elected.

The house of delegates consists of members elected from the various counties. They are apportioned according to population; but the smallest county is not to have less than two. Each legislative district of the city of Baltimore is entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall be entitled under the apportionment. A delegate must be twenty-one years of age, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as a senator.

The general assembly meets on the first Wednesday in January every even year, and the session lasts for a period not longer than ninety days. It can grant no act of incorporation which may not be repealed. It cannot authorize taking private property without first paying or tendering a just compensation to the owner.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The governor is elected every fourth year from 1867, for the term of four years, commencing on the second Wednesday in January next after his election. He must be thirty years old, ten years a citizen of the state, and for five years next preceeding his election a resident of the state. The governor is commander of the land and naval forces; appoints, with the consent of the senate, all military officers, and all civil officers whose appointment is not otherwise provided for; in case of the vacancy of any office during the recess of the senate, he is to appoint a person to said office, to hold until the end of the next session of the legislature; may suspend or arrest any military officer for any military offence, and may remove any civil officer appointed by the governor: may convene the legislature or the senate alone; has power to grant reprieves and pardons, but before granting a nolle prosequi or pardon, must give notice of the application, and of the day on or after which his decisions will be given. When required, he is to report to either branch of the legislature the reasons which influenced his decision. He may not appoint to an office a person who has been rejected by the senate. He must reside at Annapolis. If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the legislature, if in session, appoints a substitute; and if not in session, the president of the senate shall act as governor; and if there is no such president, the speaker of the house is to act.

A secretary of state is appointed by the governor, with the advice of the senate.

A treasurer is appointed by the two houses of the legislature every second year.

A comptroller of the treasury is elected by the voters of the state at the same time as members of the house of delegates.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The court of appeals consists of eight judges, one from each judicial district, one of whom is designated by the governor, with the approval of the senate, as chief justice. It has appellate jurisdiction only.

There are seven circuit courts, one in each of the seven districts of the state (Baltimore city forming the eighth district); each court has one chief and two associate judges. The judge of the court of appeals from the circuit (or district) is ex officio chief judge of the circuit court in his circuit, except in the city of Baltimore. The term of office of the judges is fifteen years.

An orphans' court exists in each county, and in the city of Baltimore, composed of three judges, elected for the term of four years by the people of the county or city.

The city of Baltimore constitutes a judicial circuit and has five courts, the judges of which are elected for fifteen years.

The superior court has civil jurisdiction in all common law cases.

The circuit court has an exclusive equity jurisdiction.

The court of common pleas has civil jurisdiction in all common law cases and all cases under the state insolvent law.

The city court has civil jurisdiction in all common law cases, and appellate jurisdiction in all appeals from justices of the peace.

Justices of the peace have civil jurisdiction in all cases when the debt or amount of damages claimed does not exceed $100.

The criminal court has jurisdiction of all crimes and offences committed in the city.

The governor, comptroller of the treasury, and the treasurer constitute the board of public works.

A commissioner of the land office is appointed by the governor for the term of four years. He is judge and clerk of the land office.

Justices of the peace are appointed by the governor.

The comptroller, sheriffs, county commissioners, etc., are elected every second year.

MASSACHUSETTS. One of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

In 1627, a company of Englishmen obtained from the council of the Plymouth colony a grant of "all that part of New England lying three miles south of Charles river and three miles north of Merrimac river, and extending from the Atlantic to the South sea." In 1628, Charles I. granted them a charter, under the name of "The Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England." This charter continued till 1684, when it was adjudged forfeited. From this time till 1691, governors appointed by the king ruled the colony. In 1691, William and Mary granted a new charter, by which the colonies of Massachusetts Bay and New Plymouth, the province of Maine, and the territory called Nova Scotia, were incorporated into one government, by the name of The Province of Massachusetts Bay. 1 Story, Const. § 71. This charter continued as the form of government until the adoption of the state constitution in 1780.

The constitution, as originally adopted, was drafted by John Adams. 4 Adams, Life and Works, 213. It contained a provision for calling a convention for its revision or amendment in 1795, if two-thirds of the voters at an election held for this purpose should be in favor of it. Const. Mass. c. 6, art. x. But at that time a majority of the voters opposed any revision; Bradford's Hist. Mass. 294; and the constitution continued without amendment till 1820, when a convention was called for revising or amending it. Mass. Stat. 1820, c. 15. This convention proposed fourteen amendments, nine of which were accepted by the people. Since then, sixteen additional articles of amendment have been adopted at different times, making twenty-five in all. In 1853, a second convention for revising the constitution was held, which prepared an entirely new draft of a constitution. This draft, upon submission to the people, was rejected.

The constitution, as originally drafted, consists of two parts, one entitled A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the other The Frame of Government. Const. Mass. Preamble.

THE DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.—The declaration of rights asserts that all men are born free and equal, and have certain natural, essential, and unalienable rights, among them the rights of life, liberty, and property, and, in fine, the right of seeking safety and happiness. Art. i. It declares the duty of public worship, and the right of religious liberty; art. ii.; and that all sects shall receive equal protection from the law. Amend. xi. That the commonwealth is a sovereign state, enjoying every power not expressly delegated to the United States. Art. iv. That all power is derived from the people, and all public officers are at all times accountable to them. Art. v. That no man has any title to exclusive privileges except from his public services; and this title is not heritable or transmissible. Art. vi. That government is for the protection of the people, and they alone have a right to change it when their safety requires. Art. vii. That, to prevent those in power from becoming oppressors, the people have a right to cause their public officers to return to private life, and to fill their places by election; art. viii.; and that all elections should be free, and every qualified voter have a right to vote and to be elected to office. Art. ix. Each individual has a right to be protected by law, and must, consequently, pay his share of the expense of this protection; but his property cannot be taken or applied to public uses without his consent, or that of the representative body; and wherever the property of any person is taken for public uses, he shall receive reasonable compensation therefor. Art. x. Every one should find in the laws a certain remedy for all wrongs to person, property, or character, and should obtain justice freely, promptly, and completely. Art. xi. Every person accused of an offence shall have a right to have it formally and clearly set forth; shall not be compelled to furnish evidence against himself; shall be allowed to produce proofs in his favor, and to be heard by himself or his counsel, and shall not be punished (unless in the army or navy) without trial by jury. Art. xii. The proof of facts in the vicinity where they happen is one of the greatest securities of life, liberty, and property. Art. xiii. All warrants should be supported by an oath, and, if for the search, arrest, or seizure of persons or property, should describe such persons or property. Art. xiv. In all civil suits (unless, in causes arising on the seas, or suits relating to mariners' wages, the laws provide otherwise) the trial by jury shall be held sacred. Art. xv. The liberty of the press ought not to be restrained. Art. xvi. The people have a right to keep and bear arms for the common defence; as, in peace, armies are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be maintained without legislative consent; the military power shall be in exact subordination to the civil authority. Art. xvii. Frequent recurrence to the fundamental principles of the constitution, constant adherence to piety, justice, moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality, are necessary to preserve liberty and to maintain a free government; the people ought especially to refer to these in choosing officers, and have a right to require of their officers an observance of them in making and executing the laws. Art. xviii. The people have a right to assemble peaceably, to consult on the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the legislative body. Art. xix. The power to suspend the laws should never be exercised but by the legislature, or by legislative authority in cases provided by law. Art. xx. Freedom of debate in the legislature is so essential to the rights of the people that it cannot be the foundation of any accusation, prosecution, action, or complaint in any court or place whatsoever. Art. xxi. The legislature ought to assemble frequently. Art. xxii. No tax ought to be laid without the consent of the people or their representatives. Art. xxiii. Laws to punish acts already done, and not declared crimes by preceding laws, are unjust, and inconsistent with the principles of a free government. Art. xxiv. No subject ought, in any case, to be declared guilty of treason by the legislature. Art. xxv. No magistrate shall take excessive bail, impose excessive fines, or inflict cruel or unusual punishments. Art. xxvi. In peace, no soldier should be quartered in any house without the owner's consent; and in war, such quarters should not be made but by the civil magistrate, in a manner provided by law. Art. xxvii. No person can be subjected to martial law, unless in the army or navy, or militia in actual service, except by legislative authority. Art. xxviii. An impartial interpretation of laws and administration of justice is essential to the preservation of every right. It is the citizen's right to be tried by judges as free, impartial, and independent as the lot of humanity will admit. It is not only the best policy, but for the security of the people, that the judges of the supreme court should hold office during good behavior, but that they should have honorable salaries established by standing laws. Art. xxix. Neither the legislative, judicial, nor executive department shall ever exercise any powers of government except its own, that it may be a government of laws, and not of men. Art. xxx.

THE FRAME OF GOVERNMENT.—The name of the state is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

No property qualification is required for voting or for eligibility to any office, except those of governor or lieutenant-governor. Const. Amend. iii., xiii. Every male citizen, twenty-one years or more of age, who has resided within the commonwealth twelve months, and in the town where he claims to vote six months, preceding an election, who has, unless exempt from taxation, paid a tax within two years (Amend. iii.), who can, unless physically disabled, read the constitution in the English language, and write his name (Amend. xx.), and who, if a naturalized foreigner, has resided in the United States two years subsequent to his naturalization (Amend. xxiii.), may vote at any election. The last two amendments, adopted respectively in 1857 and 1859, do not disqualify persons who had a legal right to vote at the time of their adoption.

Oaths of Office.—Every person chosen or appointed to any office is obliged to take an oath or affirmation faithfully to discharge the duties of his office (c. 6, a. 1), and to support the constitution of the commonwealth. Amend. vi. An oath to support the constitution of the United States is required by the laws of the United States of every member of a state legislature, and of all judicial and executive officers in the states. St. 1789, c. 1, § 3; 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 22.

Amendments.—Specific amendments may be proposed by the general court, and, if adopted in both houses, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, taken by yeas and nays, in two successive legislatures, and afterwards approved and ratified by a majority of the voters at a popular election, they become a part of the constitution. Amend. ix.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The Senate is composed of forty members, elected from single senatorial districts, each containing as nearly as possible the same number of legal voters. A senator must be an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen, and must have been an inhabitant of the state for five years next preceding his election, and ceases to be a senator on leaving the commonwealth. Amend. xxii. Any vacancy in the senate may be filled by vote of the people of the unrepresented district, upon the order of a majority of senators elected. Amend. xxiv.

The House of Representatives consists of two hundred and forty members, chosen in each of the representative districts into which the counties are divided for the purpose. The number of representatives sent by any district depends on the number of legal voters in it; but no district can send more than three representatives. A representative must have been an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen for at least one year next preceding his election, and ceases to represent his district on leaving the commonwealth.

The two houses together constitute the "General Court of Massachusetts." The members of both houses are elected annually, at the state elections, on Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Amend. xv. If the people of any representative district fail to elect a representative on the day of the annual election, they may hold a second meeting for this purpose on the fourth Monday of November. Amend. xv. The general court meets on the first Wednesday in January, and is dissolved on the day before the session of the next general court. Amend. x. It may be prorogued by the governor at any time, at the request of both houses, or without their request, by the advice of the council, for a period not exceeding ninety days (c. 2, § 1, art. 6); and he may call them together sooner than the time to which they were adjourned, if the interests of the commonwealth require. The legislature has power to create courts (c. 1, § 1, art. 3); to make all reasonable laws for the state; to provide for the election of officers, and to prescribe their duties; to impose taxes and duties (c. 1, § 1, a. 4); and, upon the application and with the consent of the inhabitants, to create cities, in towns of not less than twelve thousand inhabitants. Amend. v. That taxes may be equal, there shall be a new valuation of estates every ten years. C. 1, § 1, a. 4. The two houses are quite distinct, and have each the usual privileges in regard to judging of the qualifications, election, etc. of members, regulation of their conduct, etc. The members of the house are exempt from arrest on mesne process in going to, attending, or returning from the assembly. C. 1, § 3, a. 10, 11. Sixteen members of the senate and one hundred members of the house constitute a quorum for the transaction of business; but a less number may organize temporarily, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. Amends. xxi., xxii.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is the supreme executive magistrate. He is styled the "Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," and his title is "His Excellency." C. 2, § 1, a. 1. He is elected annually. C. 2, § 1, a. 2. Seven years' residence in the commonwealth, and the possession of a free-hold of the value of a thousand pounds, are the necessary qualifications for the office of governor or lieutenant-governor. C. 2, § 1, a. 1; § 2, a. 1. The governor has authority to call together the councillors, and shall, with them, or five of them at least, from time to time hold a council for ordering and directing the affairs of the commonwealth. C. 2, § 1, a. 4. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the commonwealth, has authority to train the militia for the defence of the commonwealth, and to assemble the inhabitants for this purpose, and is intrusted with all the powers incident to the office of commander-in-chief, except that no inhabitants are obliged to march out of the state without their own consent or that of the general court. C. 2, § 1, a. 7. The pardoning power is in the governor, with the advice of the council. C. 2, § 1, a. 8. No money can issue from the treasury without his warrant. C. 2, § 1, a. 11. He has the veto power, and, with the advice and consent of the council, the appointment of all judicial officers, coroners, and notaries public. C. 2, § 1, a. 9, amend. iv.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must have the same qualifications, as the governor. His title is "His Honor." He is a member of the council, and, in the absence of the governor, its president. In case of a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant-governor acts as governor. C. 2, § 2, a. 2, 3.

The Council consists of eight councillors, each chosen annually from a separate councillor district. The state is re-districted every ten years. Amend. xvi. Five councillors constitute a quorum, and their duty is to advise the governor in the executive part of the government. C. 2, § 3, a. 1. In case of vacancies in both the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor, the council, or the major part of them, shall have and exercise the powers of the governor. C. 2, § 3, a. 6. Vacancies in the council are filled by concurrent vote of the two branches of the legislature; or, if the legislature is not in session, by the governor's appointment. Amend. xxv.

The Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General, are chosen annually at the state election (Amend. xvii.); and, that the citizens of the commonwealth may be assured from time to time that the moneys remaining in the public treasury, upon the settlement and liquidation of the public accounts, are their property, no man shall be eligible as treasurer more than five successive years. C. 2, § 4, a. 1. Every councillor, the secretary, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general, must have been an inhabitant of the state for the five years immediately preceding his election or appointment. Amends. xvi., xvii., xxii. Sheriffs, registers of probate, clerks of courts, and district attorneys are chosen by the people of the several counties. Amend. xix.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Judicial Court consists of one chief and six associate justices. Four justices constitute a quorum to decide all matters requisite to be heard at law. Public Statutes, ch. 150, §§ 1 et seq. Gen. Stat. c. 112, § 1 et seq. A law term of the court for the commonwealth is held at Boston on the first Wednesday of January in each year, which may be adjourned from time to time, and to such places and times as may be convenient for determining questions of law arising in four of the eastern counties, (viz., Barnstable, Middlesex, Norfolk, and Suffolk), and one term a year in each of the remaining ten counties for cases in those counties respectively (except that one term only for Bristol, Dukes, and Nantucket is held in Bristol, and that the terms for both Franklin and Hampshire counties are held together in alternate years in the respective counties). These are regular terms of the court; but no jury is to be summoned except in certain special cases. Jury terms of the court are also held by a single justice, at times and places prescribed, once a year, in each county, except that one term only is held for Barnstable and Dukes counties, and two terms annually for Suffolk. Questions of law arising at the jury terms are reported by the presiding judge to the full bench. It is provided that the court shall have general superintendence of all courts of inferior jurisdiction, and may issue writs of error, certiorari, mandamus, prohibition, and quo warranto; shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of the trials of indictments for capital crimes, of petitions for divorce and nullity of marriage and original and concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court of petitions for partition and writs of entry, for foreclosure of mortgages, and of civil actions, except actions of tort, in which the damages demanded or the property claimed exceed in amount or value four thousand dollars if brought in the county of Suffolk, and one thousand dollars if brought in any other county, if the plaintiff, or some one in his behalf, before service of the writ, makes oath or affirmation before some justice of the peace that he verily believes the matter sought to be recovered equals in amount or value said sums respectively, a certificate of which oath or affirmation shall be endorsed on or annexed to the writ; and also that it shall have jurisdiction in equity of all cases and matters of equity, cognizable under the general principles of equity jurisprudence, and of certain specified cases when the parties have not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at the common law. Pub. Stat. ch. 151 §§ 2 et seq. Trials of indictments for capital crimes shall be had before two or more justices, and questions of law on exceptions, on appeals from the superior court, on cases stated by the parties, and on a special verdict, and all issues in law, are to be heard and determined by the full court.

The Superior Court is composed of one chief justice and ten associate justices. It is to be held at the times and places prescribed, being at least two terms annually in each county. The court has exclusive original jurisdiction of complaints for flowing land, of claims against the commonwealth, of actions of tort except those of which the police, district, or municipal courts or trial justices have concurrent original jurisdiction, and original jurisdiction of all civil actions except those of which the supreme judicial court, police, district, or municipal courts or trial justices have exclusive original jurisdiction; Pub. Stat. ch. 182, §§ 3 et seq.; jurisdiction of all civil actions and proceedings legally brought before it, by appeal or otherwise, from trial-justices, police, district, or municipal courts, or courts of insolvency, and from the decisions of commissioners on insolvent estates of deceased persons; original jurisdiction of all crimes, offences, and misdemeanors, except so far as the Supreme Judicial Court has exclusive jurisdiction in relation to capital crimes, and appellate jurisdiction of all offences tried and determined before a police, district, or municipal court or trial justice; and in criminal cases legally brought before it its jurisdiction shall be final, except as otherwise provided. It has concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme court, as stated above.

All the judicial officers are appointed by the governor, with the advice of the council. Every nomination for a judicial appointment must be made by the governor to the council at least seven days before the council can approve it. C. 2, § 1, a. 9. The judges hold office during good behavior, but may be removed by the governor, with the consent of the council, upon the address of both branches of the legislature. C. 3, a. 1. The governor and council, and either branch of the legislature, may require the opinion of the justices of the supreme judicial court upon important questions of law, and upon solemn occasions. C. 3, a. 2.

Judges of Probate and Insolvency are appointed to hold office according to the tenor of their commissions, so that there may be one judge for each county. They may interchange services or perform each other's duties when necessary or convenient. The courts of these judges are courts of record, and have original jurisdiction in their respective counties of all cases of insolvency arising under the Insolvent Act; Pub. Stat. ch. 157; and of the probate of wills, granting administration of the estates of persons who at the time of their decease were inhabitants of or resident in the county, and of persons who die without the state, leaving estate to be administered within such county; of the appointment of guardians to minors and others, and of all matters relating to the estates of such deceased persons and wards; and of petitions for the adoption of children and the change of names. Pub. St. ch. 156. The courts are to be held at such times and places as the statutes prescribe. They are held at other places as well as at the shire towns; and sessions occur very frequently. At the time of the adoption of the constitution, original jurisdiction in probate matters was exercised by deputies or surrogates appointed by the governor in the several counties, from whom there was an appeal to the governor with the council. 21 Boet. Law Rep. 78. Under a constitutional provision, in 1784, an act was passed establishing courts of probate in the several counties, and making the supreme judicial court the supreme court of probate. Sh. 1783, c. 46; 21 Boet. L. Rep. 80.

The Supreme Judicial Court has a general superintendence and jurisdiction of all cases arising under the Insolvent Act as a court of equity; Pub. Stat. ch. 157, § 16; and is the supreme court of probate with appellate jurisdiction of all matters determinable by the probate courts, and by the judges thereof except in cases in which other provisions are specially made; Pub. Stat. ch. 156, § 5.

Justices of the Peace are appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council. The commissions of justices of the peace shall continue only seven years, that the people may not suffer from the long continuance in place of any justice who shall fail of discharging the important duties of his office with ability or fidelity; but any such commission may be renewed. C. 3. A certain number in each county are designated as trial justices, who have jurisdiction over petty criminal offences, and who have original jurisdiction exclusive of the superior court of all actions of replevin for beasts destrained or impounded, and of all actions of contract, tort, or replevin where the debt or damages demanded or value of the property alleged to be detained does not exceed one hundred dollars. They also have original and concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court where the amount involved is more than one hundred and not more than three hundred dollars. Pub. Stat. ch. 155, § 12 et seq.

Police and District Courts consisting of one justice and two "special" justices, are established in many of the cities and large towns, but may not be hereafter in any town of less than ten thousand inhabitants. They have substantially the same jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters, as trial-justices, and their jurisdiction, when both plaintiff and defendant reside in the district, is exclusive of that of other police and district courts and of trial-justices. Pub. Stat. ch. 154, §§ 11 et seq. A speedy settlement of suits is obtained in these courts.

Municipal Courts are established in the city of Boston, the principal one having original concurrent civil jurisdiction with the superior court where the amount involved exceeds one hundred and does not exceed one thousand dollars.

Commissions.—All commissions are to be in the name of the commonwealth, and to be signed by the governor and attested by the secretary, and under the seal of the commonwealth. C. 6, a. 4.

Writs.—All writs are in the name of the commonwealth, under the seal of the court, bearing teste of the first justice, not a party to the suit, and signed by the clerk. C. 6, a. 5.

Habeas Corpus.—This writ shall be enjoyed in the most free, easy, cheap, expeditious, and ample manner; shall not be suspended, except by the legislature on the most urgent and pressing occasions, and for not more than twelve months. C. 6, a. 7.

MASTER. One who has control over an apprentice.

A master stands in relation to his apprentices in loco parentis, and is bound to fulfil that relation, which the law generally enforces. He is also entitled to be obeyed by his apprentices as if they were his children. Bouvier, Inst. Index. See APPRENTICESHIP.

One who is employed in teaching children: known, generally, as a schoolmaster. As to his powers, see CORRECTION.

One who has in his employment one or more persons hired by contract to serve him, either as domestic or common laborers.

Where the hiring is for a definite term of service, the master is entitled to their labor during the whole term, and may recover damages against any one who entices away or harbors them knowing them to be in his service; 6 Term, 221; 13 Johns. 322; 6 Wend. 436; 4 Pick. 425; 2 E. & B. 216; 107 Mass. 555; or who debauches a female servant; 4 Cow. 412; and if before the expiration of the term the servant leaves without just cause, he forfeits his wages; 2 C. & P. 510; 1 W. & S. 265; 34 Me. 102; 43 id. 463; 19 Pick. 529; 19 Mo. 60; 25 Conn. 188; 6 N. H. 481. The master may dismiss a servant so hired before the expiration of the term, either for immoral conduct, wilful disobedience, or habitual neglect, and the servant will not in such case be entitled to his wages; 4 C. & P. 518; 2 Stark. 256; 3 Esp. 235; but if the dismissal be without reasonable cause, the servant may recover damages from his master therefor, to such an amount as to indemnify him for the loss of wages during the time necessarily spent in obtaining a fresh situation, and for the loss of the excess of any wages contracted for above the usual rate; 2 H. L. C. 607; 13 C. B. 508; 20 E. L. & Eq. 157. Where a sailor hired for a whole voyage for a certain sum, for which he received a promissory note, and died before the end of the voyage, it was held that there could be no recovery; 6 Term, 320; s. c. Sm. Lead. Cas. 17 and note.

A master may justify an assault in defence of his servant, and a servant in defence of his master: the master, because he has an interest in his servant not to be deprived of his service; the servant, because it is a part of his duty, for which he receives his wages, to stand by and defend his master; 1 Bla. Com. 429; Lofft, 215. The master is liable to be sued for the injuries occasioned by the neglect or unskilfulness or the tortious acts of his servant whilst in the course of his employment; 3 Mass. 364; 19 Wend. 345; 40 E. L. & Eq. 329; 26 Vt. 178; 23 N. H. 157; although contrary to his express orders, if not done in wilful disregard of those orders; 14 How. 468; 7 Cush. 385; 10 Ill. 509; but he is not liable for acts committed out of the course of his employment; 20 Conn. 284; 17 Mass. 508; 8 Term, 533; 16 E. L. & Eq. 448; nor for the wilful trespasses of his servants; 1 East, 106; 24 Conn. 40; 1 Smith, Ind. 455; 2 Mich. 519. A master is not criminally liable for the acts of his servant unless committed by his command or with his assent; 8 Ind. 312; 2 Stra. 885.

Where a master uses due diligence in the selection of competent and trusty servants, and furnishes them with suitable means to perform the service in which he employs them, he is not amenable to one of them for an injury received by him in consequence of the carelessness of another while both are engaged in the same service; 3 M. & W. Exch. 1; 4 Metc. 49 (a leading case); 5 N. Y. 492; 3 Smith, Ind. 134, 153; 42 Me. 269; 100 U. S. 213; 40 E. L. & Eq. 376, 491. A distinction has been made to the effect that if the negligence is that of a superior or inferior servant, the servant injured may recover; 3 Ohio St. 201; 9 Bush, 81; 93 Ill. 302; s. c. 34 Am. Rep. 168. The negligence of officers invested with a controlling or superior duty, is imputed to the master; 100 U. S. 214. If the servant knows that he is running a risk, through defective machinery, or otherwise, he cannot recover, if he is injured. But the burden of proving contributory negligence is on the defendant; and if the servant, knowing a defect to exist, gave notice to his employer of it and was promised that it would be remedied and continued his work in reliance on this promise, he is not, in law, guilty of contributory negligence; 100 U. S. 213; where the injury results from the master's neglect to provide suitable means to perform the service or to use reasonable care in the selection of his servants, the master will be answerable; 100 U. S. 213; 20 Barb. 449; 26 id. 39; 6 Du. N. Y. 225; 6 Cal. 209; 33 E. L. & Eq. 1; 36 id. 486: 37 id. 281.

Important changes have been made in England by stat. 43 & 44 Vict. ch. 42, by which an employer is rendered liable for any injury to a servant caused (1) by reason of a defect in the machinery, etc., which arose from, or had not been discovered or remedied owing to, the negligence of the employer, or any person in his employ whose duty it was to see that such machinery, etc. was in proper order; (2) by reason of the negligence of any person in the service of the employer who has any superintendence intrusted to him; (3) by reason of the negligence of any person in the service of the employer, to whose order the workman was bound to conform and did conform, thereby receiving the injury; (4) by reason of the act or omission of a fellow servant in obedience to the rules or by-laws of the employer (provided the injury was caused by some defect in such rules, etc.), or in obedience to any particular instructions given by a fellow servant delegated with the employer's authority in that behalf; (5) by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant in charge of a railway signal, train, or locomotive.

All contracts made by the servant within the scope of his authority, express or implied, bind the master. See PRINCIPAL; AGENT.

The master may give moderate corporal correction to his menial servant while under age; for then he is considered as standing in loco parentis; 2 Kent, 261. See ASSAULT.

The master is bound to supply necessaries to an infant servant unable to provide for himself; 2 Campb. 650; 1 Leach, 137; 1 Bla. Com. 427, n.; but not to provide even a menial servant with medical attendance and medicines during sickness; 4 C. & P. 80; 7 Vt. 76.

MASTER IN CHANCERY. An officer of a court of chancery, who acts as an assistant to the chancellor. 3 Edw. Ch. 458; 19 Ill. 131.

The masters were originally clerks associated with the chancellor, to discharge some of the more mechanical duties of his office. They were called preceptores, and gradually increased in number until there were twelve of them. They obtained the title of masters in the reign of Edw. III. Their office is mainly judicial in its character, but sometimes includes ministerial offices. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 360-367; 1 Hurr. Ch. 436; 1 Bail. Ch. 77; 1 Des. Ch. 587. The office was abolished in England by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80. In the United States, officers of this name exist in many of the states, with similar powers to those exercised by the English masters, but variously modified, restricted, and enlarged by statute, and in some of the states similar officers are called commissioners and by other titles.

The duties of the masters are, generally: first, to take accounts and make computations; 18 How. 295; 2 Munf. 129; 14 Vt. 501; 27 id. 673; Walk. Ch. 532; second, to make inquiries and report facts; 3 W. & M. 258; 3 Paige, Ch. 305; 23 Conn. 529; 1 Stockt. Ch. 309; 2 Jones, Eq. 238; 5 Gray, 423; 5 Cal. 90; see 1 Freem. 502; 9 Paige, Ch. 372; third, to perform some special ministerial acts directed by the court, such as the sale of property; 11 Humphr. 278; 25 Barb. 440; settlement of deeds, see

1 Cow. 711; appointment of new trustees, and the like; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 468; fourth, to discharge such duties as are specially charged upon them by statute. See Dan. Ch. Pr.; POOR DEBTOR; INSOLVENCY.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. The queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of queen's bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20; Whart. Dict.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. In English Law. An officer of chancery, who has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal and the records of the chancery, and formerly exercised extensive judicial functions in a court which ranked next to that of the lord chancellor.

An officer with this title existed in the time of the Conqueror. He had from most ancient times an office in chancery, with distinct clerks. In early times no judicial authority was conferred by an appointment as master of the rolls. In the reigns of Hen. VI. and Edw. IV. he was found sitting in a judicial capacity, and from 1623 to 1873, had the regulation of some branches of the business of the court. He was the chief of the masters in chancery; and his judicial functions, except those specially conferred by commission, appear to have properly belonged to him in this character. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100, 357.

All orders and decrees made by him, except those appropriate to the great seal alone, were valid, unless discharged or altered by the lord chancellor, but had to be signed by him before enrolment; and he was especially directed to hear motions, pleas, demurrers, and the like. Stat. 3 Geo. II. c. 30; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 94; 3 Bla. Com. 443.

Under the Judicature Acts, he is a judge of the high court, and an ex-officio member of the court of appeal. His own judicial duties are not affected by these acts. Provision is, however, made for the abolition of this office when it shall become vacant, by order in council, on the recommendation of the council of judges, provided, that such order in council be laid before the houses of parliament for thirty days, and during that time, neither house address her majesty against it; Stat. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, §§ 5, 31, 32; Mozl. & W. Law Dict.

MASTER OF A SHIP. In Maritime Law. The commander or first officer of a merchant-ship; a captain.

The master of an American ship must be a citizen of the United States; 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 287; and a similar requirement exists in most maritime states. In some countries their qualifications in point of skill and experience must be attested by examination by proper authorities; but in the United States the civil responsibility of the owners for their acts is esteemed sufficient. A vessel sailing without a competent master is deemed unseaworthy, and the owners are liable for any loss of cargo which may occur, but cannot recover on a policy of insurance in case of disaster; 21 How. 7, 23; 6 Cow. 270; 12 Johns. 128, 136; 21 N. Y. 378; Desty, Sh. & Adm. § 232.

The master is selected by the owners, and, in case of his death or disability during the voyage, the mate succeeds; if he also dies in a foreign country, the consignee of the vessel, or the consul of the nation, may, in a case of necessity and in the absence of other authority, appoint a master. The master himself may, in similar circumstances of necessity and distance from the owners, appoint a substitute; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 387; 2 Sumn. 206; 13 Pet. 387. During a temporary absence of the master, the mate succeeds; 2 Sumn. 588.

He must, at the commencement of the voyage, see that his ship is seaworthy and fully provided with the necessary ship's papers, and with all the necessary and customary requisites for navigation, as well as with a proper supply of provisions, stores, etc.; Bee, 80; 2 Paine, 291; 1 Pet. Adm. 219; Ware, 454; for the voyage; 1 Pet. Adm. 407; 1 W. & M. 338. He must also make a contract with the seamen, if the voyage be a foreign one from the United States; 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 131; 2 id. 203. He must store safely under deck all goods shipped on board, unless by well-established custom or by express contract they are to be carried on deck; and he must stow them in the accustomed manner in order to prevent liability in case of damage. In respect to the lading or carriage of goods shipped as freight, he is required to use the greatest diligence; and his responsibility attaches from the moment of their receipt, whether on board, in his boat, or at the quay or beach; 3 Kent, 206; Abb. Shipp. 423.

He must proceed on the voyage in which his vessel may be engaged by direction of the owners, must obey faithfully his instructions, and by all legal means promote the interests of the owners of the ship and cargo; 3 Cra. 242. On his arrival at a foreign port, he must at once deposit, with the United States consul, vice consul, or commercial agent, his ship's papers, which are returned to him when he receives his clearance; R. S. § 4309. This does not apply, however, to those vessels merely touching for advice; 9 How. 372. He must govern his crew and prevent improper exercise of authority by his subordinates; 2 Sumn. 1, 584; 14 Johns. 19. He must take all possible care of the cargo during the voyage, and, in case of stranding, shipwreck, or other disaster, must do all lawful acts which the safety of the ship and the interests of the owners of the ship and cargo require; Bland. Shipp. 190; 19 How. 150; 13 Pet. 387. It is proper, but not indispensable, in case of an accident, to note a protest thereof at the first port afterwards reached; 6 McLean, 76; and to give information to the owners of the loss of the vessel as soon as he reasonably can; 4 Mas. 74. In a port of refuge, he is not authorized to sell the cargo as damaged unless necessity be shown; but where it is so much injured as to endanger the ship, or will become utterly worthless, it is his duty to sell it at the place where the necessity arises; 1 Blatch. 357; 1 Story, 342. When possible, he is bound to notify the owners before selling; 30 Me. 302.

In time of war, he must avoid acts which will expose his vessel and cargo to seizure and confiscation, and must do all acts required for the safety of the vessel and cargo and the interests of their owners. In case of capture, he is bound to remain by the vessel until condemnation, or until recovery is hopeless; 3 Mas. 161. He must bring home from foreign ports destitute seamen; Act of Congr. Feb. 28, 1803, § 4, Feb. 28, 1811; R. S. 4578; and must retain from the wages of his crew hospital-money; Act of Congr. Mar. 3, 1875; R. S. 4585.

He is liable to the owners, and he and they to all others whose interests are affected by his acts, for want of reasonable skill, care, or prudence in the navigation or management of the vessel; 1 Wash. C. C. 142; including injuries done to the cargo by the crew; 1 Mas. 104; and this rule includes the improper discharge of a seaman; Ware, 65.

His authority on shipboard (Ware, 506) is very great, but is of a civil character. He has a right to control and direct the efforts of the crew, and to use such force as may be necessary to enforce obedience to his lawful commands. He may even take life, if necessary, to suppress a mutiny. He may degrade officers; 1 Blatchf. & H. 195, 366; 1 Pet. Adm. 244; 4 Wash. C. C. 338; 6 Bost. L. Rep. 804; 21 id. 148; 2 C. Rob. 261. He may punish acts of insolence, disobedience, and insubordination, and such other offences, when he is required to do so for the safety and discipline of the ship. Flogging is, however, prohibited; 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, 515; and for any unreasonable, arbitrary, or brutal exercise of authority towards a seaman or passenger he is liable, criminally and in a civil suit; 4 U. S. Stat. at Large, 776, 1235. He may also restrain or even confine a passenger who refuses to submit to the necessary discipline of the ship; 3 Mas. 242; but without conferring with the officers and entering the facts in the log-book he can inflict no higher punishment on a passenger than a reprimand; 7 Penn. L. J. 77; 6 C. & P. 472; 1 Conkl. Adm. 430–439; 14 Johns. 119; Desty, Adm. § 129.

If the master has not funds for the necessary supplies, repairs, and uses (see 3 Wash. C. C. 484) of his ship when abroad, he may borrow money for that purpose on the credit of his owners; and if it cannot be procured on his and their personal credit, he may take up money on bottomry, or, in extreme cases, may pledge his cargo; 3 Mas. 255; but he cannot bind owners to pay for repairs done at the home port without special authority; 47 Me. 254; nor when they or their agents are so near that communication can be had with them without delay; 31 Conn. 51; Abb. Shipp. 162; 3 Kent, Lect. 49. See BOTTOMRY; RESPONDENTIA.

Generally, when contracting within the ordinary scope of his powers and duties, he is personally responsible, as well as his owners, when they are personally liable. On bottomry loans, however, there is ordinarily no personal liability in this country, or in England, beyond the fund which comes to the hands of the master or owners from the subject of the pledge; 6 Ben. 1; Abb. Shipp. 90; Story, Ag. §§ 116, 123, 294. In most cases, too, the ship is bound for the performance of the master's contract; Ware, 322; but all contracts of the master in chartering or freighting his vessel do not give such a lien; 19 How. 82.

He has a lien upon, and a consequent right to retain, the freight earned by his ship for the repayment of money advanced by him for necessary repairs and supplies; 9 Mass. 548; 4 Johns. Ch. 218; or for seamen's wages; and payment to the owner after notice of the master's lien does not discharge the consignee; 5 Wend. 315; but not, it would seem, upon the ship itself; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 389; nor has he any lien on the freight for his wages; 11 Pet. 175; 5 Wend. 315. His remedy is by an action in personam in admiralty; 2 Curt. C. C. 428. Consult Abbott, Flanders, Shipping; Parsons, Maritime Law; 3 Kent; Desty, Ship. & Adm.

MASTERS AT COMMON LAW. In English Law. Officers of the superior courts of common law, whose duty it is to tax costs, compute damages, take affidavits and the like. They are five in number in each court. See stat. 7 Will. IV., and 1 Vict. c. 30.

MATE. In Maritime Law. The officer next in rank to the master on board a merchant ship or vessel.

In such vessels there is always one mate, and sometimes a second, third, and fourth mate, according to the vessel's size and the trade in which she may be engaged. When the word mate is used without qualification, it always denotes the first mate; and the others are designated as above. On large ships the mate is frequently styled first officer, and the second and third mates, second and third officers. Parish, Sea Off. Man. 83–140.

The mate, as well as the inferior officers and seamen, is a mariner, and entitled to sue in the admiralty for his wages; and he has a lien on the vessel for his security. Even when he acts as master in consequence of the death of the appointed master, he can sue in the admiralty for his proper wages as mate, but not for the increased compensation to which he is entitled as acting master. And he is entitled, when sick, to be cured at the expense of the ship. The mate should possess a sufficient knowledge of navigation to take command of the ship and carry on the voyage in case of the death of the master; and it may well be doubted whether a vessel be seaworthy for a long voyage at sea when only the master is competent to navigate her; Blount,

Com. Dig. 32; Dana, Seaman's Friend, 146; Curtis, Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen, 96, note. It is the special duty of the mate to keep the log-book. The mate takes charge of the larboard watch at sea, and in port superintends the storage and breaking out of the cargo.

The mate succeeds, of course, to the station, rights, and authorities of the captain or master on the death of the latter, and he also has command, with the authority required by the exigencies of the case, during the temporary absence of the master. See MASTER OF A SHIP; Dana, Seaman's Friend; Parish, Sea-Officer's Manual; Curtis, Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen; Parsons, Maritime Law; Desty, Shipp. & Adm.

MATER FAMILIAS. In Civil Law. The mother of a family; the mistress of a family.

A chaste woman, married or single. Calvinus, Lex.

MATERIAL MEN. Persons who furnish materials to be used in the construction or erection of ships, houses, or buildings.

By the general maritime law, material men have a lien on a foreign ship for supplies or materials furnished for such ship, which may be recovered in the admiralty; 9 Wheat. 409; 19 How. 359; but no such lien exists in the case of domestic ships; 4 Wheat. 438; 20 How. 393; 21 id. 248. See LIEN.

By statutory provisions, material men have a lien on ships and buildings, in some of the states. See LIEN.

MATERIALITY. The property of substantial importance or influence, especially as distinguished from formal requirement. Capability of properly influencing the result of the trial.

MATERIALS. Matter which is intended to be used in the creation of a mechanical structure; 71 Penn. 293; 36 Wisc. 29. The physical part of that which has a physical existence.

The general property in materials furnished to a workman remains in the bailor where the contract is merely one for the employment of labor and services; otherwise where it is a sale. See BAILMENT; LOCATIO; MANDATE; TROVER; TRESPASS.

MATERNA MATERNIS (Lat. from the mother to the mother's).

In French Law. A term denoting the descent of property of a deceased person derived from his mother to the relations on the mother's side.

MATERNAL. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother: as, maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line. See LINE.

MATERNAL PROPERTY. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock. Domat, Liv. Prél. t. 3, s. 2, n. 12.

MATERNITY. The state or condition of a mother.

It is either legitimate or natural. The former is the condition of the mother who has given birth to legitimate children; while the latter is the condition of her who has given birth to illegitimate children. Maternity is always certain; while the paternity is only presumed.

MATERTERA. A mother's sister.

MATERTERA MAGNA. A grandmother's sister.

MATERTERA MAJOR. A great-grandmother's sister.

MATERTERA MAXIMA. A great-great-grandmother's sister.

MATHEMATICAL EVIDENCE. That evidence which is established by a demonstration. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.

MATIMA. A godmother.

MATRICIDE. The murder of a mother.

MATRICULA. In Civil Law. A register in which are inscribed the names of persons who become members of an association or society. Dig. 50. 3. 1. In the ancient church there was matricula clericorum, which was a catalogue of the officiating clergy, and matricula pauperum, a list of the poor to be relieved: hence, to be entered in the university is to be matriculated.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In the English ecclesiastical courts there are five kinds of causes which are classed under this head, viz.: causes for a malicious jactitation; suits for nullity of marriage, on account of fraud, incest, or other bar to the marriage; 2 Hagg. Cons. 423; suits for restitution of conjugal rights; suits for divorces on account of cruelty or adultery, or causes which have arisen since the marriage; suits for alimony.

Matrimonial causes were formerly a branch of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. By the Divorce Act of 1857, they passed under the cognizance of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes created by that act. This court is now included in the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the high court of justice. See JUDICATURE ACTS.

MATRIMONIUM. In Civil Law. A legal marriage. A marriage celebrated in conformity with the rules of the civil law was called justum matrimonium; the husband vir, the wife uxor. It was exclusively confined to Roman citizens, and to those to whom the connubium had been conceded. It alone produced the paternal power over the children, and the marital power—manus—over the wife. The farreum, the coemptio, or the usus, was indispensable for the formation of this marriage. See PATERFAMILIAS.

MATRON. A woman who is a mother.

By the laws of England, when a widow feigns herself with child, in order to exclude the next heir, and a supposititious birth is expected, then, upon the writ de ventre inspici- endo, a jury of women is to be impanelled to try the question, whether with child or not; Cro. Eliz. 566. Interesting cases will be found at the last reference, and in 3 Moore, 523, and Cro. Jac. 685. So when a woman was sentenced to death, and she pleaded in stay of execution that she was quick with child, a jury of matrons was impanelled to try whether she was or not with child; 4 Bla. Com. 395. See PREGNANCY; QUICK.

In the state of New York, if a female convict sentenced to death be pregnant, the sheriff is to summon a jury of six physicians, who, with the sheriff, are to make an inquisition; and, if she be found quick with child, sentence is to be suspended. 2 Rev. Stat. 658, §§ 20, 21.

MATTER IN CONTROVERSY, OR IN DISPUTE. The subject of litigation, in the matter for which a suit is brought and upon which issue is joined; 1 Wall. 337.

To ascertain the matter in dispute we must recur to the foundation of the original controversy; the thing demanded, not the thing found; 3 Dall. 405. An appeal will not lie on a claim insufficient in amount to give jurisdiction when suit was instituted, but which has been brought within the limitation by the after-accrued interest; 2 La. An. 793; id. 911; 12 id. 87. See 3 Cra. 159.

MATTER IN DEED. Such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. Co. Litt. 320; Steph. Pl. 197.

MATTER OF FACT. In Pleading. Matter the existence or truth of which is determined by the senses or by reasoning based upon their evidence. The decision of such matters is referred to the jury; Hob. 127; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49.

MATTER OF LAW. In Pleading. Matter the truth or falsity of which is determined by the established rules of law or by reasoning based upon them. The decision of such matters is referred to the court. Where special pleading prevails, it is a rule that matter of law must be pleaded specially. The phrase here means matter which, if established as true, goes to defeat the plaintiff's charges by the effect of some rule of law, as distinguished from that which operates as a direct negative.

MATTER IN PAIS (literally, matter in the country). Matter of fact, as distinguished from matter of law or matter of record.

MATTER OF RECORD. Those facts which may be proved by the production of a record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty.

MATURITY. The time when a bill or note becomes due. In order to bind the indorsers, such note or bill must be protested, when not paid, on the last day of grace. See DAYS OF GRACE.

MAXIM. An established principle or proposition. A principle of law universally admitted, as being just and consonant with reason.

Coke defines a maxim to be "conclusion of reason," and says that it is so called "quia maxima ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, et quod maxime omnibus probetur." Co. Litt. 11 a. He says in another place: "A maxime is a proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proofe, argument, or discourse." Id. 67 a.

Maxims in law are somewhat like axioms in geometry. 1 Bla. Com. 68. They are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength as acts of parliament, when the judges have determined what is a maxim. This determination belongs to the court and not the jury. Termes de la Ley; Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1, c. 8. Maxims of the law are holden for law, and all other cases that may be applied to them shall be taken for granted; Co. Litt. 11, 67. See Plowd. 27 b.

The alteration of any of the maxims of the common law is dangerous; 2 Inst. 210.

The application of the maxim to the case before the court is generally the only difficulty. The true method of making the application is to ascertain how the maxim arose, and to consider whether the case to which it is applied is of the same character, or whether it is an exception to an apparently general rule. This requires extended discussion, which it has received (so far as the more important maxims are concerned) in the able treatise on Legal Maxims by Broom.

As to books on the subject: Noy's Treatise of the Principal Grounds and Maxims of the Law was first published in 1641; Wingate's Maxims of Reasons, or the Reason of the Common Law of England, appeared in 1658; and Heath's Maxims and Rules of Pleadings in 1694. Then followed Lord Bacon's Maxims, and, subsequently, Francis' Maxims of Equity. To these may be added Grounds and Rudiments of the Law, the collection of maxims appended to Lofft's Reports and Halkerton's Maxims. In 1753, appeared Branch's Principia Legis et Equitatis, an alphabetical collection of maxims, principles, definitions, etc. Broom's Maxims is undoubtedly the most valuable and useful work on the subject, but he treats of comparatively few maxims. To this list we may add Trayner's Maxims, published in Edinburgh in 1876, and Peloubet's Maxims, published in New York in 1880, and a Digest of the Maxims, etc., of the Common Law, by J. S. Barton, which has been promised to the profession. See an article by Judge Cooper in 15 West. Jur. 337.

The following list comprises, it is believed, every legal maxim, properly so called, together with some that are in reality nothing more than legal phrases, accompanied by a translation, and, in most cases, a reference to one or more authorities which are intended to show the origin and true application of the rule. (Reference is made to the seventh American edition of Broom's Maxims.)

A communi observantia non est recedendum. There should be no departure from common observance (or usage). Co. Litt. 186; Wing. Max. 203; 2 Co. 74.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio. The denomination and explanation ought to be derived from the more worthy. Wing. Max. 265; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 12.

A l'impossible nul n'est ténu. No one is bound to do what is impossible.

A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessarie negative, licet non affirmative. From impossibility to non-existence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative. Hob. 336.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanent. Those captured by pirates or robbers remain free. Dig. 49. 15. 19. 2; Grot. lib. 3, c. 3, s. 1.

A piratis et latronibus capta dominium non mutant. Things captured by pirates or robbers do not change their ownership. 1 Kent, 108, 184; 2 Woodd. Lect. 258, 259.

A rescriptis valet argumentum. An argument from rescripts (i. e. original writs in the register) is valid. Co. Litt. 11 a.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus neque auxilium. From the highest remedy to an inferior action there is no return or assistance. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Brac. 104 a, 112 b; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 193, 194.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law there should be no departure. Broom, Max. 622; Wing. Max. 25; 5 Co. 119.

Ab abusu ad usum non valet consequentia. A conclusion as to the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid. Broom, Max. xvii.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria. No injury is done by things long acquiesced in. Jenk. Cent. Introd. vi.

Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est, ut concessio non sit inanis. Such number and sense is to be given to abbreviations that the grant may not fail. 9 Co. 48.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loco in quo petitur. We must consider him absent who is not in that place in which he is sought. Dig. 50. 60. 199.

Absentia ejus qui reipublicæ causa abest, neque ei neque aliis damnosa esse debet. The absence of him who is employed in the service of the state, ought not to be prejudicial to him nor to others. Dig. 50. 17. 140.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. A simple proposition needs no expositor. 2 Inst. 533.

Abundans cautela non nocet. Abundant caution does no harm. 11 Co. 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 1.

Accessorium non ducit sed sequitur suum principale. The accessory does not draw, but follows, its principal. Co. Litt. 152 a, 389 a; 5 E. & B. 772; Broom, Max. 491; Lindl. Part. (3d ed.) 1036.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. An accessory follows the nature of his principal. 3 Inst. 139; 4 Bla. Com. 36; Broom, Max. 497.

Accipere quid ut justitiam facias, non est tam accipere quam extorquere. To accept anything as a reward for doing justice, is rather extorting than accepting. Lofft, 72.

Accusare nemo debet se, nisi coram Deo. No one is obliged to accuse himself, unless before God. Hardr. 139.

Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audiendus, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit. An accuser is not to be heard after a reasonable time, unless he excuse himself satisfactorily for the omission. F. Moore, 817.

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta. Outward acts indicate the inward intent. Broom, Max. 301; 8 Co. 146 b.

Acta in uno judicio non probant in aliis nisi inter easdem personas. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it be between the same parties. Trayner, Max. 11.

Actio non datur non damnificato. An action is not given to one who is not injured. Jenk. Cent. 69.

Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea. An action does not make one guilty, unless the intention be bad. Lofft, 37. See Actus non, etc.

Actio personalis moritur cum persona. A personal action dies with the person. Noy, Max. 14; Broom, Max. 904 et seq.; 13 Mass. 455; 1 Pick. 73, 78; 21 Pick. 252. See ACTIO PERSONALIS.

Actio quælibet it sua via. Every action proceeds in its own course. Jenk. Cent. 77.

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved. Lofft, 460.

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit, non est audiendus. A pleader ought not to be heard who advances a proposition contrary to the rules of law.

Actor sequitur forum rei. The plaintiff must follow the forum of the thing in dispute. Home, Law Tr. 232; Story, Confl. L. § 325, k; 2 Kent, 462.

Actore non probante reus absolvitur. If the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant is absolved. Hob. 103.

Actori incumbit probatio. The burden of proof lies on the plaintiff. Hob. 103.

Acts indicate the intention. 8 Co. 146 b; Broom, Max. 301.

Actus curiæ neminem gravabit. An act of the court shall prejudice no man. Jenk. Cent. 118; Broom, Max. 122; 1 Str. 426; 1 Sm. L. C. notes to Cumber vs. Wane; 12 C. B. 415.

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. The act of God does wrong to no one (that is, no one is responsible in damages for inevitable accidents). 2 Bla. Com. 122; Broom, Max. 230; 1 Co. 97 b; 5 id. 87 a; Co. Litt. 206 a; 4 Taunt. 309; 1 Term, 33. See ACT OF GOD.

Actus inceptus cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium, revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiæ personæ, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest. An act already begun, whose completion depends upon the will of the parties, may be recalled; but if it depend on consent of a third person, or on a contingency, it cannot be recalled. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20. See Story, Ag. § 424.

Actus judiciarius coram non judice irritus habetur; de ministeriali autem a quocunque provenit ratum esto. A judicial act before one not a judge is void; as to a ministerial act, from whomsoever it proceeds, let it be valid. Lofft, 458.

Actus legis nemini est damnosus. An act of the law shall prejudice no man. 3d Inst. 287; Broom, Max. 126; 11 Johns. 380; 3 Co. 87 a; Co. Litt. 264 b; 5 Term, 381, 385; 1 Ld. Raym. 515; 2 H. Bla. 324, 334; 5 East, 147; 1 Prest. Abs. of Tit. 346; 6 Bacon, Abr. 559.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. The act of the law does no one wrong. Broom, Max. 127, 409; 2 Bla. Com. 123.

Actus legitimi non recipiunt modum. Acts required by law admit of no qualification. Hob. 153; Branch, Pr.

Actus me invito factus, non est meus actus. An act done by me against my will is not my act. Brac. 101 b.

Actus non reum facit nisi mens rea. An act does not make a person guilty unless his intention be guilty also. (This maxim applies only in criminal cases; in civil matters it is otherwise.) Broom, Max. 306, 367, 807, n.; 7 Term, 514; 3 Bingh. N. C. 34, 468; 5 M. & G. 699; 3 C. B. 229; 5 id. 380; 9 Cl. & F. 531; 4 N. Y. 159, 163, 195; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 2211; L. R. 2 C. C. R. 160 (a very full case).

Actus repugnus non potest in esse produci. A repugnant act cannot be brought into being (i. e. cannot be made effectual). Plowd. 355.

Actus servi in iis quibus opera ejus communiter adhibita est, actus domini habetur. The act of a servant in those things in which he is usually employed, is considered the act of his master. Lofft, 227.

Ad ea quæ frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. The laws are adapted to those cases which occur more frequently. 2 Inst. 137; Wing. Max. 216; Dig. 1. 3. 3; 19 How. Ad officium justiciariorum spectat, unicuique coram eis placitanti justitiam exhibere. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to every one pleading before them. 2 Inst. 451.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio, nisi impediatur sententia. A relative is to be referred to the next antecedent, unless the sense would be thereby impaired. Broom, Max. 680; Noy, Max. 9th ed. 4; 2 Exch. 479; 17 Q. B. 833; 2 H. & N. 625; 3 Bingh. N. C. 217; 13 How. 142.

Ad quæstiones legis judices, et non juratores, respondent. Judges, and not jurors, respond to questions of law. 7 Mass. 279.

Ad questiones facti non respondent judices; ad questiones legis non respondent juratores. The judges do not answer to questions of fact; the jury do not answer to questions of law. Co. Litt. 295; 8 Co. 155 a; Vaugh. 149; 5 Gray, 211, 219, 290; Broom, Max. 102.

Ad recte docendum oportet, primum inquirere nomina, quia rerum cognitio a nominibus rerum dependet. In order rightly to comprehend a thing, inquire first into the names, for a right knowledge of things depends upon their names. Co. Litt. 68.

Ad tristem partem strenua est suspicio. Suspicion rests strongly on the unfortunate side. Taylor, 4.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitos non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit. No one is held to answer for the effects of a superior force, or of accidents, unless his own fault has contributed. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 16.

Additio probat minoritatem. An addition proves inferiority. 4 Inst. 80; Wing. Max. 211, max. 60; Littleton, § 293; Co. Litt. 189 a.

Adjuvari quippe nos, non decipi, beneficio oportet. For we ought to be helped by a benefit, not destroyed by it. Dig. 13. 6, 17. 3; Broom, Max. 392.

Ædificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. It is not lawful to build upon one's own land what may be injurious to another. 3 Inst. 201; Broom, Max. 369.

Ædificatum solo, solo cedit. That which is built upon the land goes with the land. Co. Litt. 4 a; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Dig. 47. 3. 1.

Ædificia solo cedunt. Buildings pass by a grant of the land. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 12.

Æquior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is more impartial than that of man. 8 Co. 152 a.

Æquitas agit in personam. Equity acts upon the person. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3733.

Æquitas est correctio legis generaliter latæ qua parte deficit. Equity is the correction of law, when too general, in the part in which it is defective. Plowd. 375.

Æquitas ignorantiæ opitulatur, oscitantiæ non item. Equity assists ignorance, but not carelessness.

Æquitas non facit jus, sed juri auxiliatur. Equity does not make law, but assists law. Lofft, 379.

Æquitas nunquam contravarit legem. Equity never contradicts the law.

Æquitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64; 3 Woodd. Lect. 479, 482; Branch, Max. 8; 2 Bla. Com. 330; Gilb. 138; 2 Eden, 316; 10 Mod. 3; 15 How. 299; 7 Allen, 503; 5 Barb. 277, 282.

Æquitas supervacua odit. Equity abhors superfluous things. Lofft, 282.

Æquum et bonum, est lex legum. What is just and right is the law of laws. Hob. 224.

Æstimatio præteriti delicti ex postremo facto nonquam crescit. The estimation of a crime committed never increases from a subsequent fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 8; Dig. 50. 17. 139.

Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo. Your motive gives a name to your act. Bract. 2 b, 101 b.

Affectus punitur licet non sequatur effectus. The intention is punished although the consequence do not follow. 9 Co. 57 a.

Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis. A connection (i. e. by marriage) of my connection is not a connection of mine. Shelf. Marr. & D. 174.

Affirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not on him who denies. See Phill. Ev. 493.

Affirmantis est probare. He who affirms must prove. 9 Cush. 535.

Agentes et consentientes, pari pœna plectentur. Acting and consenting parties are liable to the same punishment. 5 Co. 80 a.

Aliena negotia exacto officio geruntur. The business of another is to be conducted with particular attention. Jon. Bailm. 83; 79 Penn. 118.

Alienatio licet prohibeatur, consensu tamen omnium, in quorum favorem prohibita est, potest fieri, et quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. Although alienation be prohibited, yet, by the consent of all in whose favor it is prohibited, it may take place, for it is in the power of any man to renounce a right introduced for his own benefit. Co. Litt. 98; 9 N. Y. 291.

Alienatio rei præfertur juri accrescendi. Alienation is favored by the law rather than accumulation. Co. Litt. 185 a, 381 a, note; Broom, Max. 442, 458; Wright, Tenures, 154 et seq.; 1 Cruise, Dig. 4th ed. 77, 78.

Alienation pending a suit is void. 2 P. Wms. 482; 2 Atk. 174; 3 id. 392; 11 Ves. 194; 1 Johns. Ch. 566, 580. See Lis Pendens.

Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneat impunita, quod alias non concederetur. Something is conceded lest a wrong should remain unpunished which otherwise would not be conceded. Co. Litt. 197.

Aliquis non debet esse judex in propria causa, quia non potest esse judex et pars. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act both as judge and party. Co. Litt. 141 a; Broom, Max. 117; Littleton, § 212; 13 Q. B. 327; 17 id. 1; 15 C. B. 769; 1 C. B. N. S. 329. See Judge.

Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. To conceal is one thing, to be silent another. 3 Burr. 1910. See 2 Wheat. 176; 9 id. 631; 3 Bingh. 77; 4 Taunt. 351; 2 C. & P. 341; 18 Pick. 420, 22 id. 58; 12 Cush. 425; Broom, Max. 782.

Aliud est distinctio, aliud separatio. Distinction is one thing, separation another. Bacon's arg. Case of Postnati of Scotland, Works, iv. 351.

Aliud est possidere, aliud esse in possessione. It is one thing to possess, it is another to be in possession. Hob. 163; Bract. 206.

Aliud est vendere, aliud vendenti consentire. To sell is one thing, to give consent to him who sells another. Dig. 50. 17. 160.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. One making contradictory allegations is not to be heard. Jenk. Cent. 16; Broom, Max. 169, 294; 4 Term, 211; 3 Exch. 446, 527, 678; 4 id. 187; 11 id. 493; 3 E. & B. 363; 5 id. 502; 5 C. B. 195, 886; 10 Mass. 163; 70 Penn. 274; 4 Inst. 279.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione. Blessed is the exposition when the thing is saved from destruction. 4 Co. 26 b.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et quælibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Liberal interpretations are to be made of deeds, so that more may stand than fall; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor. 4 Mass. 134; 1 Sandf. Ch. 258, 268; compare id. 275, 277; 78 Penn. 219.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire. Constructions should be liberal on account of the ignorance of the laity, so that the subject-matter may avail rather than perish; and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words. Co. Litt. 36 a; Broom, Max. 540, 565, 645; 11 Q. B. 852, 856, 868, 870; 4 H. L. Cas. 556; 2 Bla. Com. 379; 1 Bulstr. 175; 1 Whart. 315.

Benignior sententia, in verbis generalibus seu dubiis est preferanda. The more favorable construction is to be placed on general or doubtful expressions. 4 Co. 15; Dig. 50. 17. 192. 1; 2 Kent, 557.

Benignius leges interpretandæ sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur. Laws are to be more favorably interpreted, that their intent may be preserved. Dig. 1. 3. 16.

Bis idem exigi bona fides non patitur, et in satisfactionibus, non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. Good faith does not suffer the same thing to be exacted twice; and in making satisfaction, it is not permitted that more should be done after satisfaction is once made. 9 Co. 53; Dig. 50. 17. 57.

Bona fide possessor facit fructus consumptos suos. By good faith a possessor makes the fruits consumed his own. Trayner, Max. 57.

Bona fides exigit ut quod convenit fiat. Good faith demands that what is agreed upon shall be done. Dig. 19. 20. 21; id. 19. 1. 50; id. 50. 8. 2. 13.

Bona fides non patitur ut bis idem exigatur. Good faith does not allow us to demand twice the payment of the same thing. Dig. 50. 17. 57; Broom, Max. 338 n.; 4 Johns. Ch. 143.

Bonæ fidei possessor in id tantum quod ad se pervenerit tenetur. A bona fide possessor is bound for that only which has come to him. 2 Inst. 285; Gro. de J. B. lib. 2, c. 10, § 3 et seq.

Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem (or justitiam. See 1 Burr. 304). It is the part of a good judge to enlarge his jurisdiction; that is, his remedial authority. Broom, Max. 79, 80, 82; Chanc. Clausula vel dispositio inutilis per præsumptionem remotam vel causam, ex post facto non fulcitur. A useless clause or disposition is not supported by a remote presumption, or by a cause arising afterwards. Bacon, Max. Reg. 21; Broom, Max. 672.

Clausulæ inconsuetæ semper inducunt suspicionem. Unusual clauses always excite suspicion. 3 Co. 81; Broom, Max. 290.

Cogitationis pœnam nemo patitur. No one is punished for his thoughts. Broom, Max. 311.

Cohæredes una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Coheirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right which they possess. Co. Litt. 163.

Commercium jure gentium commune esse debet, et non in monopolium et privatum paucorum quæstum convertendum. Commerce, by the law of nations, ought to be common, and not to be converted into a monopoly and the private gain of a few. 3 Inst. 181, in marg.

Commodum ex injuria sua non habere debet. A man ought not to derive any benefit from his own wrong. Jenk. Cent. 161; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 62.

Common opinion is good authority in law. Co. Litt. 186 a; 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 577.

Communis error facit jus. A common error makes law. (What was at first illegal, being repeated many times, is presumed to have acquired the force of usage; and then it would be wrong to depart from it.) Broom, Max. 139, 140; Hill. R. P. 268; 1 Ld. Raym. 42; 6 Cl. & F. 172; 3 M. & S. 396; 4 N. H. 458; 2 Mass. 357; 1 Dall. 13. The converse of this maxim is communis error non facit jus. A common error does not make law. 4 Inst. 242; 3 Term, 725; 6 id. 564.

Compendia sunt dispendia. Abridgments are hindrances. Co. Litt. 305.

Compromissarii sunt judices. Arbitrators are judges. Jenk. Cent. 128.

Compromissum ad similitudinem judiciorum redigitur. A compromise is brought into affinity with judgments. 9 Cush. 571.

Concessio per regem fieri debet de certitudine. A grant by the king ought to be a grant of a certainty. 9 Coke, 46.

Concessio versus concedentem latam interpretationem habere debet. A grant ought to have a liberal interpretation against the grantor. Jenk. Cent. 279.

Concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To make laws agree with laws is the best mode of interpreting them. Halkers, 70.

Concordia parvæ res crescunt et opulentia lites. Small means increase by concord, and litigations by opulence. 4 Inst. 74.

Conditio beneficialis, quæ statum construit, benigne, secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem, quæ statum destruit, stricte, secundum verborum proprietatem, accipienda. A beneficial condition, which creates an estate, ought to be construed favorably according to the intention of the words; but an odious condition, which destroys an estate, ought to be received strictly, according to the letter of the words. 8 Co. 90; Shep. Touch. 134.

Conditio dicitur, cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse, confertur. It is called a condition when something is given on an uncertain event, which may or may not come into existence. Co. Litt. 201.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjecta. An unlawful condition is deemed as not annexed.

Conditio præcedens adimpleri debet priusquam sequatur effectus. A condition precedent must be fulfilled before the effect can follow. Co. Litt. 201.

Conditiones quælibet odiosæ; maxime autem contra matrimonium et commercium. Any conditions are odious, but especially those against matrimony and commerce. Lofft, 644.

Confessio facta in judicio omni probatione major est. A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof. Jenk. Cent. 102.

Confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur et quodammodo sua sententia damnatur. A person who has confessed in court is deemed as having had judgment passed upon him, and, in a manner, is condemned by his own sentence. 11 Co. 30. See Dig. 42. 2. 1.

Confirmare est id quod prius infirmum fuit simul firmare. To confirm is to make firm what was before infirm. Co. Litt. 295.

Confirmare nemo potest priusquam jus ei acciderit. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him. 10 Co. 48.

Confirmatio est nulla, ubi donum præcedens est invalidum. A confirmation is null where the preceding gift is invalid. Co. Litt. 295; F. Moore, 764.

Confirmatio omnes supplet defectus, licet id quod actum est ab initio non valuit. Confirmation supplies all defects, though that which has been done was not valid at the beginning. Co. Litt. 295 b.

Confirmat unum qui tollit abusum. He confirms a use who removes an abuse. F. Moore, 764.

Conjunctio mariti et feminæ est de jure naturæ. The union of husband and wife is of the law of nature.

Consensus facit legem. Consent makes the law. (A contract is law between the parties agreeing to be bound by it.) Branch, Princ.

Consensus non concubitus facit matrimonium. Consent, not coition, constitutes marriage. Co. Litt. 33 a; Dig. 50. 17. 30. See 10 Cl. & F. 534; 1 Bouv. Inst. 103; Broom, Max. 505–6, 515.

Consensus tollit errorem. Consent removes or obviates a mistake. Co. Litt. 126; 2 Inst. 123; Broom, Max. 135–6, 138; 1 Bingh. N. C. 68; 6 E. & B. 338; 5 Cush. 55; 9 Gray, 386; 11 Allen, 138; 7 Johns. 611; 4 Penn. 335; 65 id. 190.

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject-matter. Dav. 48; Branch, Princ.

Consentientes et agentes pari pœna plectentur. Those consenting and those perpetrating shall receive the same punishment. 5 Co. 80.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra annos nubiles. Persons cannot consent to marriage before marriageable years. 5 Co. 80; 6 id. 22.

Consequentiæ non est consequentia. A consequence ought not to be drawn from another consequence. Bacon, Aph. 16.

Consilia multorum requiruntur in magnis. The advice of many persons is requisite in great affairs. 4 Inst. 1.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas haberet, rerumque rerum constitutionem fecisset. It is settled that that is to be considered the home of each one of us where he may have his habitation and account-books, and where he may have made an establishment of his business. Dig. 50. 16. 203.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam. The construction of law does not work an injury. Co. Litt. 183; Broom, Max. 603.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta, potius usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called an usurpation than a custom. Co. Litt. 113.

Consuetudo debet esse certa. A custom ought to be certain. Dav. 33.

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law. 4 Co. 21.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum. Custom is the best expounder of the law. 2 Inst. 18; Dig. 1. 3. 37; Jenk. Cent. 273.

Consuetudo debet esse certa, nam incerta pro nullis habetur. Custom ought to be fixed, for if variable it is held as of no account. Trayner, Max. 96.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis. Custom and common usage overcome the unwritten law, if it be special; and interpret the written law, if the law be general. Jenk. Cent. 273.

Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem. Custom observed by reason of a certain and reasonable cause supersedes the common laws. Littleton, § 169; Co. Litt. 33 b. See Judgt. 5 Bingh. 293; Broom, Max. 919.

Consuetudo, licet sit magnæ auctoritatis, nunquam tamen præjudicat manifestæ veritati. A custom, though it be of great authority, should never, however, be prejudicial to manifest truth. 4 Co. 18.

Consuetudo loci observanda est. The custom of the place is to be observed. Broom, Max. 918; 4 Co. 28 b; 6 id. 67; 10 id. 139; 4 C. B. 48.

Consuetudo neque injuria oriri, neque tolli potest. A custom can neither arise, nor be abolished, by a wrong. Lofft, 340.

Consuetudo non habitur in consequentiam. Custom is not to be drawn into a precedent. 3 Keble, 499.

Consuetudo præscripta et legitima vincit legem. A prescriptive and legitimate custom overcomes the law. Co. Litt. 113.

Consuetudo regni Angliæ est lex Angliæ. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England. Jenk. Cent. 119.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest amplius induci. Custom once disallowed cannot again be produced. Dav. 33; Grounds & Rud. of Law, 53.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem. Custom overrules common law. 1 Rop. H. & W. 351; Co. Litt. 33 b.

Consuetudo volentes ducit, lex nolentes trahit. Custom leads the willing, law drags the unwilling. Jenk. Cent. 274.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. A contemporaneous exposition is the best and most powerful in the law. 2 Inst. 11; 3 Co. 7; Broom, Max. 682.

Contestatio litis egit terminos contradictarios. An issue requires terms of contradiction (that is, there can be no issue without an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other). Jenk. Cent. 117.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibit; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit. He does contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being inviolate, uses the law contrary to its intention. Dig. 1. 3. 29.

Contra negantem principia non est disputandum. There is no disputing against one who denies principles. Co. Litt. 43; Grounds & Rud. of Law, 57.

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit præscriptio. No prescription runs against a person unable to act. Broom, Max. 908; Evans, Pothier, 451.

Contra veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permittit. The law never suffers any thing contrary to truth. 2 Inst. 252. (But sometimes it allows a conclusive presumption in opposition to truth. See 3 Bouv. Inst. n. 3061.)

Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores nullus est. A contract founded on a base and unlawful consideration, or against good morals, is null. Hob. 167; Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4.

Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt. The agreement of the parties makes the law of the contract. Dig. 16. 3. 1. 6.

Contrariorum contraria est ratio. The reason of contrary things is contrary. Hob. 344.

Contrectatio rei alienæ animo furandi, est furtum. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft. Jenk. Cent. 132.

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare. An agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right. Wing. Max. 201; Co. Litt. 166 a; Dig. 50. 17. 45. 1.

Conventio vincit legem. The agreement of the parties overcomes the law. Story, Ag. § 368; 6 Taunt. 430; 52 Penn. 96; 18 Pick. 19, 273; 8 Cush. 156; 14 Gray, 446. See Dig. 16. 3. 1. 6.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu. Coupling words together shows that they ought to be understood in the same sense. Bacon, Max. Reg. 8; Broom, Max. 588; 8 Allen, 85; 11 id. 470.

Corporalis injuria non recipit æstimationem de futuro. A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from a future course of proceeding. Bacon, Max. Reg. 6; 3 How. St. Tr. 71; Broom, Max. 278.

Corpus humanum non recipit æstimationem. A human body is not susceptible of appraisement. Hob. 59.

Creditorum appellatione non hi tantum accipiuntur qui pecuniam crediderunt, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causa debetur. Under the head of creditors are included not alone those who have lent money, but all to whom from any cause a debt is owing. Dig. 50. 16. 11.

Crescente malitia crescere debet et pœna. Vice increasing, punishment ought also to increase. 2 n. Inst. 479.

Crimen falsi dicitur, cum quis illiciter, cui non fuerit ad hoc data auctoritas, de sigillo regis rapto vel invento brevia, cartasve consignaverit. The crimen falsi is when any one illicitly, to whom power has not been given for such purposes, has signed writs or charters with the king's seal, which he has either stolen or found. Fleta, l. 1. c. 23.

Crimen lasæ majestatis omnia alia crimina excedit quoad pœnam. The crime of treason exceeds all other crimes as far as its punishment is concerned. 3 Inst. 210.

Crimen omnia ex se nata vitiat. Crime vitiates every thing which springs from it. 5 Hill, N.Y. 523, 531.

Crimen trahit personam. The crime carries the person (i. e., the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it is committed jurisdiction over the person of the offender). 3 Denio, 190, 210.

Crimina morte extinguuntur. Crimes are extinguished by death.

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest. To whom jurisdiction is given, to him those things also are held to be granted without which the jurisdiction cannot be exercised. Dig. 2. 1. 2; 1 Woodd. Lect. Introd. lxxi.; 1 Kent, 339.

Cui jus est donandi, eidem et vendendi et concedendi jus est. He who has a right to give has also a right to sell and to grant. Dig. 50. 17. 163.

Cui licet quod majus non debet quod minus est non licere. He who has authority to the more important act shall not be debarred from doing that of less importance. 4 Coke, 23; Co. Litt. 355 b; 2 Inst. 307; Noy, Max. 26; Finch, Law, 22; 3 Mod. 382, 392; Broom, Max. 176; Dig. 50. 70. 21.

Cui pater est populus non habet ille patrem. He to whom the people is father has not a father. Co. Litt. 123.

Cuicunque aliquis quid concedit concedere videtur et id, sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. Whoever grants a thing is supposed also tacitly to grant that without which the grant itself would be of no effect. 11 Coke, 52; Broom, Max. 479, 489; Hob. 234; Vaugh. 109; 11 Exch. 775; Shep. Touch. 89; Co. Litt. 56 a.

Cuicunque aliquid conceditur, conceditur etiam et id sine quo res ipsa non esse potuit. Whenever anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing itself could not exist. 9 Metc. 556.

Cuilibet in arte sua perito est credendum. Credence should be given to one skilled in his peculiar art. Co. Litt. 125; 1 Bla. Com. 75; Phillips, Ev. Cowen & H. notes, pt. 1, p. 759; 1 Hagg. Ecc. 727; 11 Cl. & F. 85; Broom, Max. 932, 934. See EXPERT; OPINION.

Cuique in sua arte credendum est. Every one is to be believed in his own art. 9 Mass. 227.

Cujus est commodum ejus est onus. He who has the benefit has also the burden. 3 Mass. 53.

Cujus est dare ejus est disponere. He who has a right to give has the right to dispose of the gift. Wing. Max. 23; Broom, Max. 459 et seq.; 2 Co. 71; 5 W. & S. 330.

Cujus est divisio alterius est electio. Whichever of two parties has the division, the other has the choice. Co. Litt. 166.

Cujus est dominium ejus est periculum. The risk lies upon the owner of the subject. Trayner, Max. 114.

Cujus est instituere ejus est abrogare. Whose it is to institute, his it is also to abrogate. Sydney, Gov. 15; Broom, Max. 878, n.

Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum. He who owns the soil owns it up to the sky. Broom, Max. 395 et seq.; Shep. Touch. 90; 2 Bouv. Inst. nn. 15, 70; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 18; 9 Co. 54; 4 Campb. 219; 11 Exch. 822; 6 E. & B. 76; 2 Metc. 467; 11 id. 455; 3 Gray, 79; 10 Allen, 109.

Cujus juris (i. e. jurisdictionis) est principale, ejusdem juris erit accessorium. He who has jurisdiction of the principal has also of the accessory. 2 Inst. 493; Bract. 481.

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, ejus consulto dati donatio est. That which, when given through mistake, can be recovered back, when given with knowledge of the facts, is a gift. Dig. 50. 17. 53.

Cujusque rei potissima pars principium est. The principal part of every thing is the beginning. Dig. 1. 2. 1; 10 Co. 49.

Culpa caret, qui scit, sed prohibere non potest. He is clear of blame who knows but cannot prevent. Dig. 50. 17. 50.

Culpa est immiscere se rei ad se non pertinenti. It is a fault to meddle with what does not belong to or does not concern you. Dig. 50. 17. 36; 2 Inst. 208.

Culpa lata dolo æquiparatur. Gross neglect is equivalent to fraud. Dig. 11. 6. 1.

Culpa tenet suos auctores. A fault binds its own authors. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, tit. 1, § 14; 6 Bell, App. Cas. 539.

Culpæ pœna par esto. Let the punishment be proportioned to the crime. Branch, Princ.

Cum actio fuerit mere criminalis, instituí poterit ab initio criminaliter vel civiliter. When an action is merely criminal, it can be instituted from the beginning either criminally or civilly. Bract. 102.

Cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verbis? When the testimony of facts is present, what need is there of words? 2 Bulstr. 53.

Cum aliquis renunciaverit societati, solvitur societas. When any partner renounces the partnership, the partnership is dissolved. Trayner, Max. 118.

Cum confitente sponte mitius est agendum. One making a voluntary confession is to be dealt with more mercifully. 4 Inst. 66; Branch, Princ.

Cum de lucro duorum quæritur melior est causa possidentis. When the question of gain lies between two, the cause of the possessor is the better. Dig. 50. 17. 126.

Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est. When two things repugnant to each other are found in a will, the last is to be confirmed. Co. Litt. 112; Shep. Touch. 451; Broom, Max. 583; 2 Jarm. Wills, 5th Am. ed. 44; 16 Johns. 146; 1 Phill. 536.

Cum in corpore dissentitur, apparet nullam esse acceptionem. When there is a disagreement in the substance, it appears that there is no acceptance. 12 Allen, 44.

Cum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum, est benigne interpretari, et secundum id quod credibile est cogitatum credendum est. When an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occure in a will, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with the testator's probable meaning. Dig. 34. 5. 24; Broom, Max. 568; 3 Pothier, ad Pand. ed. 1819, 46.

Cum legitimæ nuptiæ factæ sunt, patrem liberi sequuntur. Children born under a legitimate marriage follow the condition of the father.

Cum par delictum est duorum, semper oneratur petitor, et melior habetur possessoris causa. Where two parties are equally in fault, the claimant always is at a disadvantage, and the party in possession has the better cause. Dig. 50. 17. 154; Broom, Max. 720.

Curia parliamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit. The court of parliament is governed by its own peculiar laws. 4 Inst. 50; Broom, Max. 85; 12 C. B. 413, 414.

Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur. A curious and captious interpretation in the law is to be reproved. 1 Bulstr. 6.

Currit tempus contra desides et sui juris contemptores. Time runs against the slothful and those who neglect their rights. Bract. 100 b; Fleta, lib. 4 c. 5, § 12.

Curnus curiæ est lex curiæ. The practice of the court is the law of the court. 3 Bulstr. 53; Broom. Max. 133, 135; 12 C. B. 414; 17 Q. B. 86; 8 Exch. 199; 2 M. & S. 25; 15 East, 226; 12 M. & W. 7; 4 My. & C. 635; 3 Scott, N. R. 599.

Custome serra prise stricte. Custom must be taken strictly. Jenk. Cent. 33.

Custos statum hæredis in custodia existentis meliorem non deteriorem facere potest. A guardian can make the estate of an heir living under his guardianship better, not worse. 7 Co. 7.

Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt. Give the things which are yours whilst they are yours; after death then they are not yours. 3 Bulstr. 18.

Dans et retinens, nihil dat. One who gives and yet retains does not give effectually. Trayner, Max. 129.

Datur digniori. It is given to the more worthy. 2 Ventr. 268.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quæstio, sed de scientia sive sit error juris sive facti. The bona fides and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his decision may be impugned for error either of law or of fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 17; 5 Johns. 291; 9 id. 396; 1 N. Y. 45; Broom, Max. 97.

De jure judices, de facto juratores, respondent. The judges answer concerning the law, the jury concerning the facts. See Co. Litt. 295; Broom, Max. 99.

De majori et minori non variant jura. Concerning greater and less laws do not vary. 2 Vern. 552.

De minimis non curat lex. The law does not notice (or care for) trifling matters. Broom, Max. 142 et seq.; 2 Inst. 306; Hob. 88; 12 Pick. 549; 22 id. 298; 97 Mass. 83; 118 id. 175; 5 Hill, N. Y. 170; 6 Penn. 472.

De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. When the death of a human being is concerned, no delay is long. Co. Litt. 134. (When the question is concerning the life or death of a man, no delay is too long to admit of inquiring into facts.)

De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantia non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles. As to the proper name, it is not to be regarded when one errs not in substance; because names are changeable, but things are immutable. 6 Co. 66.

De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est lex. The law is the same respecting things which do not appear and things which do not exist. 6 Ired. 61; 12 How. 253; 5 Co. 6; 6 Bingh. N. C. 453; 7 Cl. & F. 872; 5 C. B. 53; 8 id. 286; 1 Term, 404; 4 Mass. 685; 8 id. 401; Broom, Max. 163, 166.

De nullo, quod est sua natura indivisibile, et divisionem non patitur, nullam partem habebit vidua, sed satisfaciat ei ad valentiam. A widow shall have no part from that which in its own nature is indivisible, and is not susceptible of division; but let [the heir] satisfy her with an equivalent. Co. Litt. 32.

De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii, fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum. In no tenement which is held for a term of years is there an avail of homage; but there is the oath of fealty. Co. Litt. 67 b.

De similibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est. From similars to similars we are to proceed by the same rule. Branch, Princ.

De similibus idem est judicium. Concerning similars the judgment is the same. 7 Co. 18.

Debet esse finis litium. There ought to be an end of lawsuits. Jenk. Cent. 61.

Debet quis juri subjacere ubi delinquit. Every one ought to be subject to the law of the place where he offends. 3 Inst. 34; Finch, Law, 14, 36; Wing. Max. 113, 114; 3 Co. 231; 8 Scott, N. R. 567.

Debet sua cuique domus esse perfugium tutissimum. Every man's house should be a perfectly safe refuge. 12 Johns. 31, 54.

Debile fundamentum, fallit opus. Where there is a weak foundation, the work falls. 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 2068; Broom, Max. 180, 182.

Debita sequuntur personam debitoris. Debts follow the person of the debtor. Story, Confl. Laws, § 362; 2 Kent, 429; Halkers, Max. 13.

Debitor non præsumitur donare. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift. See 1 Kames, Eq. 212; Dig. 50. 16. 108; 1 P. Wms. 239.

Debitorum pactionibus, creditorum petitio nec tolli nec minui potest. The right of creditors to sue cannot be taken away or lessened by the contracts of their debtors. Pothier, Obl. 108; Broom, Max. 697.

Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci. Debt and contract are of no particular place. 7 Co. 61; 7 M. & G. 1019, n.

Deceptis non decipientibus, jura subveniunt. The laws help persons who are deceived, not those deceiving. Trayner, Max. 149.

Decipi quam fallere est tutius. It is safer to be deceived than to deceive. Lofft, 396.

Deficiente uno sanguine non potest esse hæres. One blood being wanted, he cannot be heir. 3 Co. 41; Grounds & Rud. of Law, 77.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. A delegated authority cannot be delegated. Broom, Max. 839; 2 Inst. 597; 5 Bingh. N. C. 310; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1300; Story, Ag. § 13; 11 How. 233; 15 Gray, 403.

Delegatus non potest delegare. A delegate (or deputy) cannot appoint another. 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1936; Story, Ag. § 13; Broom, Max. 840, 842; 9 Co. 77; 2 Scott, N. R. 509; 12 M. & W. 712; 6 Exch. 156; 8 C. B. 627.

Delicatus debitor est odiosus in lege. A delicate debtor is hateful in the law. 2 Bulstr. 148.

Delinquens per iram provocatus puniri debet mitius. A delinquent provoked by anger ought to be punished more mildly. 3 Inst. 55.

Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitiva. The power which is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived. Wing. Max. 36; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, p. 11.

Derogatur legi, cum pars detrahitur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. To derogate from a law is to take away part of it; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely. Dig. 50. 16. 102. See 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 91.

Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum facit cessare tacitum. The appointment or designation of one is the exclusion of another; and that expressed makes that which is implied to cease. Co. Litt. 210.

Deus solus hæredem facere potest, non homo. God alone, and not man, can make an heir. Co. Litt. 7 b; cited 5 B. & C. 440, 454; Broom, Max. 516.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Sunday is not a day in law. Co. Litt. 135 a; 2 Saund. 291; Broom, Max. 21; Finch, Law, 7; Noy, Max. 2; Plowd. 265; 3 D. & L. 328; 13 Mass. 227; 17 Pick. 109. See SUNDAY.

Disparata non debent jungi. Dissimilar things ought not to be joined. Jenk. Cent. 24.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, because it wounds a common right. Dav. 69; Branch, Princ.

Disseisinam satis facit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, licet omnino non expellat. He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less commodious, although he does not expel altogether. Co. Litt. 331; Bract. lib. 4, tr. 2.

Dissimilium dissimilis est ratio. Of dissimilars the rule is dissimilar. Co. Litt. 191 a.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria. Wrong is wiped out by reconciliation. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, tit. 4, § 108.

Distinguenda sunt tempora. The time is to be considered. 1 Co. 16 a; 2 Pick. 327; 14 N. Y. 380, 393.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; aliud est facere, aliud perficere. Times must be distinguished; it is one thing to do a thing, another to complete it. 3 Leon. 243; Branch, Princ.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; distingue tempora, et concordabis leges. Times are to be distinguished; distinguish times, and you will attune laws. 1 Co. 24.

Divinatio non interpretatio est, quæ omnino recedit a litera. It is a guess, not interpretation, which altogether departs from the letter. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, p. 47.

Dolosus versatur in generalibus. A deceiver deals in generals. 2 Co. 34; 2 Bulstr. 226; Lofft, 782; 1 Rolle, 157; Wing. Max. 686; Broom, Max. 289.

Dolum ex indiciis perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear tokens. Code, 2. 21. 6; 1 Story, Contr. § 625.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor does not prejudice the successor.

Dolus circuitu non purgatur. Fraud is not purged by circuity. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Noy, Max. 9, 12; Broom, Max. 228; 6 E. & B. 948.

Dolus et fraus nemini patrocinentur (patrocinari debent). Deceit and fraud shall excuse or benefit no man (they themselves need to be excused). Year B. 14 Hen. VIII. 8; Story, Eq. Jur. § 395; 3 Co. 78; 2 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 2, ch. 6, § 3.

Dolus latet in generalibus. Fraud lurks in generalities. Trayner, Max, 162.

Dolus versatur in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities. Trayner, Max. 162.

Dominium non potest esse in pendenti. The right of property cannot be in abeyance. Halkers, Max. 39.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. Every man's house is his castle. 5 Co. 91, 92; Dig. 2. 14. 18; Broom, Max. 432; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 481; Foster, Hom. 320; 8 Q. B. 757; 16 id. 546, 556; 19 How. St. Tr. 1030. See ARREST.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum. The habitation of each one is an inviolable asylum for him. Dig. 2. 4. 18.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious. 3 Co. 81; Noy, Max. 9th ed. 152; 4 B. & C. 652; 1 M. & S. 253; Broom, Max. 289, 290.

Donari videtur quod nulli jure cogente conceditur. That is considered to be given which is granted when no law compels. Dig. 50. 17. 82.

Donatio non præsumitur. A gift is not presumed. Jenk. Cent. 109.

Donatio perficitur possessione accipientis. A gift is rendered complete by the possession of the receiver. See 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 712; 2 Johns. 53; 2 Leigh, 887; 2 Kent, 438.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta; ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditio nondum fuerit subsecuta. Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect; as if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed. Co. Litt. 56.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere antequam donatarius incipiat possidere. He that gives never ceases to possess until he that receives begins to possess. Dyer, 281; Bract. 41 b.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur. The laws sometimes sleep, but never die. 2 Inst. 161.

Dos de dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be sought from dower. 4 Co. 122; Co. Litt. 31; 4 Dane, Abr. 671; 1 Washb. R. P. 209; 13 Allen, 459.

Dotis lex favet; præmium pudoris est, ideo parcatur. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity, therefore let it be preserved. Co. Litt. 31; Branch, Princ.

Droit ne done pluis que soit demaunde. The law gives no more than is demanded. 2 Inst. 286.

Droit ne poet pas morier. Right cannot die. Jenk. Cent. 100.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non potest. It is not lawful to have two wives at one time. Inst. 1. 10. 6; 1 Bla. Com. 436.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Two cannot possess one thing each in entirety. Co. Litt. 368; 1 Preston, Abstr. 318; 2 id. 86, 326; 2 Dod. 157; 2 Carth. 76; Broom, Max. 465, n.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confirmandas aut impugnandas, ratio et auctoritas. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning every thing, reason and authority. 8 Co. 16.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot be in two persons of the same thing. Dig. 13, 6. 5. 15; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 245, § 236; Brac. 28 b.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur. The law does not allow a duplication of possibility. 1 Rolle, 321.

Ea est accipienda interpretatio, quæ vitio caret. That interpretation is to be received which is free from fault. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, p. 47.

Ea quæ commendandi causa in venditionibus dicuntur, si palam appareant venditorem non obligant. Those things which, by way of commendation, are stated at sales, if they are openly apparent, do not bind the seller. Dig. 18. 43. m; Broom, Max. 783.

Ea quæ dari impossibilia sunt, vel quæ in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur. Those things which cannot be given, or which are not in existence, are held as not expressed. Dig. 50. 17. 135.

Ea quæ raro accidunt, non temere in agendis negotiis computantur. Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient reason. Dig. 50. 17. 64.

Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex. The same reason, the same law. 7 Pick. 493.

Eadem mens præsumitur regis quæ est juris et quæ esse debet, præsertim in dubiis. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters. Hob. 154; Broom, Max. 54.

Ecclesia ecclesiæ decimas solvere non debet. It is not the duty of the church to pay tithes to the church. Cro. Eliz. 479.

Ecclesia non moritur. The church does not die. 2 Inst. 3.

Ecclesia magis favendum est quam personæ. The church is more to be favored than an individual. Godb. 172.

Effectus sequitur causam. The effect follows the cause. Wing. Max. 226.

Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat. The burden of the proof lies upon him who affirms, not him who denies. Dig. 22. 3. 2; Talt. Ev. 1; 1 Phill. Ev. 194; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 3 La. 83; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 408; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 4411.

Ei nihil turpe, cui nihil satis. Nothing is base to whom nothing is sufficient. 4 Inst. 53.

Ejus est interpretari cujus est condere. It belongs to him to interpret who enacts. Trayner, Max. 174.

Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle. He may consent tacitly who may consent expressly. Dig. 50. 17. 3.

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum. He has the risk who has the right of property or advantage.

Ejus nulla culpa est cui parere necesse sit. No guilt attaches to him who is compelled to obey. Dig. 50. 17. 169; Broom, Max. 12 n.

Electa una via, non datur recursus ad alteram. He who has chosen one way cannot have recourse to another. 10 Toull. n. 170.

Electio est intima [interna], libera, et spontanea separatio unius rei ab alia, sine compulsione, consistens in animo et voluntate. Election is an internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. Dyer, 281.

Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum, non patitur regressum. Election once made, and wish indicated, suffers not a recall. Co. Litt. 146.

Electiones fiant rite et libere sine interruptione aliqua. Elections should be made in due form and freely, without any interruption. 2 Inst. 169.

Emptor emit quam minimo potest; venditor vendit quam maximo potest. The buyer buys for as little as possible; the vender sells for as much as possible. 2 Johns. Ch. 256.

En exchange il covient que les estates soient égales. In an exchange it is necessary that the estates be equal. Co. Litt. 50; 2 Hill. R. P. 298.

Enumeratio infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius. Specification of one thing is en exclusion of the rest. 4 Johns. Ch. 106, 113.

Eodem modo quo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur. It is discharged in the same way in which it arises. Bacon, Abr. Release; Cro. Eliz. 697; 2 Wms. Saund. 48, n. 1; 11 Wend. 28, 30; 24 id. 294, 298; 5 Watts, 155.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, eodem modo destruitur. In the same way in which any thing is constituted, in that way is it destroyed. 6 Co. 53.

Equality is equity. Francis, Max., Max. 3; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3725; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64.

Equitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 4; 5 Barb. 277, 282.

Equity delights to do justice, and that not by halves. 5 Barb. 277, 280; Story, Eq. Pl. § 72.

Equity follows the law. Cas. temp. Talb. 52; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64.

Equity looks upon that as done, which ought to be done. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3729; 1 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, ch. 6, s. 9, note; 3 Wheat. 563.

Equity suffers not a right without a remedy. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3726.

Error fucatus nuda veritate in multis est probabilior; et sæpenumero rationibus vincit veritatem error. Error artfully colored is in many things more probable than naked truth; and frequently error conquers truth by argumentation. 2 Co. 73.

Error juris nocet. Error of law is injurious. See 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 139, n.

Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat. Mistake in the name never injures, if there is no doubt as to the identity of the thing. 1 Duer, Ins. 171.

Error qui non resistitur, approbatur. An error not resisted is approved. Doct. & St. c. 70.

Error scribentis nocere non debet. An error made by a clerk ought not to injure. 1 Jenk. Cent. 324.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est refellere. To refer errors to their origin is to refute them. 8 Inst. 15.

Erubescit lex filios castigare parentes. The law blushes when children correct their parents. 8 Co. 116.

Est aliquid quod non oportet, etiam si licet; quicquid vero non licet certe non oportet. There are some things which are not proper though lawful; but certainly those things are not proper which are not lawful. Hob. 159.

Est autem jus publicum et privatum, quod ex naturalibus præceptis aut gentium, aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliæ rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural precepts, on the one hand of nations, on the other of citizens; and that which in the civil law is called jus, that in the law of England is said to be right. Co. Litt. 558.

Est autem vis legem simulans. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Est boni judicis ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the part of a good judge to extend the jurisdiction. Gilb. 14.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox; rebus et non verbis legem imponimus. The utterance of legislators themselves is like the living voice; we impose law upon things, not upon words. 10 Co. 101.

Estoveria sunt ardendi, arandi, construendi, et claudendi. Estovers are for burning, ploughing, building, and inclosing. 13 Co. 68.

Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est æquum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim nocentium nota esse oportet et expedit. It is not just and proper that he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. Dig. 47. 10. 17; 1 Bla. Com. 125.

Eventus varios res nova semper habet. A new matter always produces various events. Co. Litt. 379.

Every man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own voluntary acts. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 18; 9 East, 277; 9 B. & C. 643; 3 Maule & S. 11, 17.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from antecedents and consequents. 2 Pars. Contr. 12, n. (r); Broom, Max. 577; 2d Inst. 317; 2 Bla. Com. 379; 1 Bulstr. 101; 15 East, 541.

Ex diuturnitate temporis, omnia præsumuntur solenniter esse acta. From length of time, all things are presumed to have been done in due form. Co. Litt. 6; Broom, Max. 942; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 20; Best, Ev. § 43.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. A right of action cannot arise out of fraud. Broom, Max. 297, 729 et seq.; Cowp. 343; 2 C. B. 501, 512, 515; 5 Scott, N. R. 558; 10 Mass. 276, 107 id. 440.

Ex facto jus oritur. The law arises out of the fact. 2 Inst. 479; 2 Bla. Com. 329; Broom, Max. 102.

Ex frequenti delicto augetur pœna. Punishment increases with increasing crime. 2 Inst. 479.

Ex malis moribus bonæ leges natæ sunt. Good laws arise from evil manners. 2 Inst. 161.

Ex multitudine signorum, colligitur identitas vera. From the great number of signs true identity is ascertained. Bacon, Max. Reg. 25; Broom, Max. 638.

Ex nihilo nihil fit. From nothing nothing comes. 13 Wend. 178, 221; 18 id. 257, 301.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. No action arises on a contract without a consideration. Noy, Max. 24; Broom, Max. 745; 3 Burr. 1670; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 445; Chitty, Contr. 11th Am. ed. 24; 1 Story, Contr. § 525. See NUDUM PACTUM.

Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. From an illicit contract no action arises. Broom, Max. 742; 7 Cl. & F. 729.

Ex præcedentibus et consequentibus optima fit interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from things proceeding and following (i. e. the context). 1 Rolle, 375.

Ex tota materia emergat resolutio. The construction or explanation should arise out of the whole subject-matter. Wing. Max. 238.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. No action arises out of an immoral consideration. Broom, Max. 730 et seq.; Selw. N. P. 63; 2 Pet. 539; 118 Mass. 209.

Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. No action arises on an immoral contract. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Kent, 466; 1 Story, Contr. § 593; 22 N. Y. 272; 16 Ohio, 129.

Ex uno disces omnes. From one thing you can discern all.

Exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio nulla est. A plea of that matter the solution of which is the object of the action is of no effect. Jenk. Cent. 37.

Exceptio falsi est omnium ultima. The exception of falsehood is last of all. Trayner, Max. 198.

Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis. The exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium. The exception affirms the rule to be the other way. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quæ exceptionem perimit. There can be no plea against an action which entirely destroys the plea. Jenk. Cent. 106.

Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. An exception proves the rule concerning things not excepted. 11 Co. 41; 1 Pick. 371; 22 id. 112.

Exceptio quæ firmat legem exponit legem. An exception which confirms the law, expounds the law. 2 Bulstr. 189.

Exceptio quoque regulam declarat. The exception also declares the rule. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio semper ultima ponenda est. An exception is always to be put last. 9 Co. 53.

Excessus in jure reprobatur. Excessus in re qualibet jure reprobatur communi. Excess in law is reprehended. Excess in any thing is reprehended by common law. 11 Co. 44.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. That excuses or extenuates a wrong in capital causes which does not have effect in civil suits. Bacon, Max. Reg. 7; Broom, Max. 324.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium. An execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment. 3 Inst. 212.

Hora non est multum de substantia negotii, licet in appello de ea aliquando fiat mentio. The hour is not of much consequence as to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned. 1 Bulstr. 82.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; cæteri traditores vel prædones sunt. Enemies are those upon whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates. 7 Co. 24; Dig. 50. 16. 118; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 257.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which may be rendered certain. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 929; 2 Bla. Com. 143; 4 Kent, 462; 24 Pick. 178; 11 Cush. 380; 90 Mass. 548; 99 id. 230; Broom, Max. 624 et seq.

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat. That is perfect which is complete in all its parts. 9 Co. 9.

Id possumus quod de jure possumus. We are able to do that which we can do lawfully. Lane, 116.

Id quod est magis remotum, non trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni casu. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is nearer, but the contrary in every case. Co. Litt. 164.

Id quod nostrum est, sine facto nostro, ad alium transferri non potest. What belongs to us cannot be transferred to another without our consent. Dig. 50. 17. 11.

Id solum nostrum quod debitis deductis nostrum est. That only is ours which remains to us after deduction of debts. Trayner, Max. 227.

Id tantum possumus quod de jure possemus. We can do that only which we can lawfully do. Trayner, Max. 237.

Idem agens et patiens esse non potest. To be at once the person acting and the person acted upon is impossible. Jenk. Cent. 40.

Idem est facere, et nolle prohibere cum possis. It is the same thing to do a thing as not to prohibit it when in your power. 3 Inst. 158.

Idem est nihil dicere et insufficienter dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing and not to say enough. 2 Inst. 178.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus sed probatio. What is not proved and what does not exist, are the same; it is not a defect of the law, but of proof.

Idem est scire aut scire debere aut potuisse. To be bound to know or to be able to know is the same as to know.

Idem non esse et non apparere. It is the same thing not to exist and not to appear. Broom, Max. 165; Jenk. Cent. 207.

Idem semper antecedenti proximo refertur. Idem always relates to the next antecedent. Co. Litt. 385; 7 Johns. Ch. 248.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum. True identity is collected from a number of signs. Bacon, Reg. 29.

Ignorantia eorum quæ quis scire tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things which every one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, P. C. 42. See Tindal, C. J., 10 Cl. & F. 210; Broom, Max. 267; 4 Bla. Com. 27.

Ignorantia excusatur, non juris sed facti. Ignorance of fact may excuse, but not ignorance of law. See IGNORANCE.

In genere quicunque aliquid dicit, sive actor sive reus, necesse est ut probat. In general, whoever alleges anything, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it. Best, Ev. § 253.

In hæredes non solent transire actiones quæ pœnales ex maleficio sunt. Penal actions arising from any thing of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs. 2 Inst. 442.

In his enim quæ sunt favorabilia animæ, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extentio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made. 10 Co. 101.

In his quæ de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriæ vel loci non est allegenda. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be alleged. 11 Co. 85.

In judiciis minori ætati succurritur. In judicial proceedings infancy is favored. Jenk. Cent. 46.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. In law, no one is credited unless he is sworn. Cro. Car. 64.

In jure non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate and not the remote cause is to be looked to. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Broom, Max. 216, 228, 853, n.; 12 Mass. 234; 12 Metc. 387; 14 Allen, 293. See 2 Pars. Con. 455.

In majore summa continetur minor. In the greater sum is contained the less. 5 Co. 115.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur non exitus. In offences, the intention is regarded, not the event. Dig. 48. 8. 14; Bacon, Max. Reg. 7; Broom, Max. 324.

In maleficio ratihabitio mandato comparetur. In a tort, ratification is equivalent to a command. Dig. 50. 17. 152. 2.

In maxima potentia minima licentia. In the greatest power there is the least liberty. Hob. 159.

In meretibus illicitis non sit commercium. There should be no commerce in illicit goods. 3 Kent, 262, n.

In obscura voluntate manumittentis favendum est libertati. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored. Dig. 50. 17. 179.

In obscuris inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. Where there is obscurity, we usually regard what is probable or what is generally done. Dig. 50. 17. 114.

In obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases, we follow that which is least so. Dig. 50. 17. 9.

In odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur. All things are presumed against a wrong-doer. Broom, Max. 939; 1 Vern. 19; 1 P. Wms. 731; 1 Ch. Cas. 292.

In omni actione ubi duæ concurrunt districtiones, videlicet in rem et in personam, illa districtio tenenda est quæ magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses concur, that is in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bract. 372; Fleta, l. 6, c. 14, § 28.

In omni re nascitur res quæ ipsam rem exterminat. In every thing, the thing is born which destroys the thing itself. 2 Inst. 15.

In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In every contract, whether nominate or innominate, there is implied an exchange, i. e. a consideration.

In omnibus obligationibus, in quibus dies non ponitur, præsenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no time is fixed for the payment, the thing is due immediately. Dig. 50. 17. 14.

In omnibus pœnalibus judiciis, et ætati et imprudentiæ succurritur. In all trials for penal offences, allowance is made for youth and lack of discretion. Dig. 50. 17. 108; Broom, Max. 314.

In omnibus quidem maxime tamen in jure æquitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but principally in those which concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded. Dig. 50. 17. 90.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet. When two parties have equal rights, the advantage is always in favor of the possessor. Dig. 50. 17. 128; Broom, Max. 714.

In pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties are equally in the wrong, the condition of the possessor is better. 11 Wheat. 258; 3 Cra. 244; Cowp. 341; Broom, Max. 325; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3724.

In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis (et possidentis). Where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable. L. R. 7 Ch. 473; 11 Mass. 376; 101 Mass. 150, 364; 107 id. 259; Broom, Max. 290, 721 et seq.

In personam actio est, qua cum eo agimus qui obligatus est nobis ad faciendum aliquid vel dandum. The action in personam is that by which we sue him who is under obligation to us to do something or give something. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bract. 101 b.

In pœnalibus causis benignius interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more favorable interpretation is to be made. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 2; Plowd. 86 b; 2 Hale, P. C. 365.

In præparatoriis ad judicium favetur actori. In things preparatory before trial, the plaintiff is favored. 2 Inst. 57.

In præsentia majoris potestatis, minor potestas cessat. In the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases. Jenk. Cent. 214; Hardw. 28; 13 How. 142; 13 Q. B. 740. See Broom, Max. 111, 112.

In pretio emptionis et venditionis naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other. 1 Story, Contr. 606.

In propria causa nemo judex. No one can be judge in his own cause. 12 Co. 13.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus. In whatever thing one offends, in that he is rightfully to be punished. Co. Litt. 233 b.

In re communi neminem dominorum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. Dig. 10. 3. 28.

In re dubia benigniorem interpretationem sequi, non minus justius est, quam tutius. In a doubtful case, to follow the milder interpretation is not less the more just than it is the safer course. Dig. 50. 17. 192. 2; 28. 4. 3.

In re dubia magis inficiatio quam affirmatio intelligenda. In a doubtful matter, the negative is to be understood rather than the affirmative. Godb. 37.

In re lupanari, testes lupanares admittentur. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses. 6 Barb. 320, 324.

In re pari, potiorem causam esse prohibentis constat. Where a thing is owned in common, it is agreed that the cause of him prohibiting (its use) is the stronger. Dig. 10. 3. 28; 3 Kent, 45; Pothier, Traité du Con. de Soc. n. 90; 16 Johns. 438, 491.

In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiæ. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

In rebus manifestis errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. He errs who alleges the authorities of law in things manifest; because obvious truths need not be proved. 5 Co. 67.

In rem actio est per quam rem nostram quæ ab alio possidetur petimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bract. 102.

In republica maxime conservanda sunt jura belli. In the state, the laws of war are to be greatly preserved. 2 Inst. 58; 8 Allen, 484.

In restitutionem, non in pœnam, hæres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty. 2 Inst. 198.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions. Co. Litt. 112.

In satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all. 9 Co. 53.

In stipulationibus cum quæritur quid actum sit, verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. In contracts, when the question is what was agreed upon, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them. Dig. 45. 1. 38. 18. (Chancellor Kent remarks that the true principle appears to be "to give the contract the sense in which the person making the promise believes the other party to have accepted it, if he in fact did so understand and accept it." 2 Kent, 721.) 2 Day, 281; 1 Duer, Ins. 159, 160; Broom, Max. 599.

In stipulationibus id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, reference is had to the time at which they were made. Dig. 50. 17. 144. 1.

In suo quisque negotio hebetior est quam in alieno. Every one is more dull in his own business than in that of another. Co. Litt. 377.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur. In testaments, we should seek diligently the will of the testator. (But, says Doddridge, C. J., "this is to be observed with these two limitations: 1st, his intent ought to be agreeable to the rules of the law; 2d, his intent ought to be collected out of the words of the will." 3 Bulstr. 103.) Broom, Max. 555.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testantium interpretantur. In testaments, the will of the testator should be liberally construed. Dig. 50. 17. 12; Cujac. ad loc. cited 3 Pothier, Pand. 46; Broom, Max. 568.

In toto et pars continetur. A part is included in the whole. Dig. 50. 17. 113.

In traditionibus scriptorum (chartarum) non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum (factum) est, inspicitur. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said but what is done is to be considered. 9 Co. 137; Leake, Contr. 4.

In veram quantitatem fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certa quantitate accesit. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity unless he agree for a certain quantity. 17 Mass. 597.

In verbis non verba sed res et ratio quærenda est. In words, not the words, but the thing and the meaning is to be inquired after. Jenk. Cent. 132.

In vocibus videndum non a quo sed ad quid sumatur. In discourses, it is to be considered not from what, but to what, it is advanced. Ellesmere, Postn. 62.

Incendium æræ alieno non exuit debitorum. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt. Code, 4. 2. 11.

Incerta pro nullis habentur. Things uncertain are held for nothing. Dav. 33.

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act. 1 Rolle, 465.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege prospecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare, vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice upon a view of a single clause of it. Dig. 1. 3. 24. See Hob. 171 a.

Incivile est nisi tota sententia inspecta, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to pass an opinion on any part of a sentence without examining the whole. Hob. 171.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. 11 Co. 58.

Incolas domicilium facit. Residence creates domicil. 1 Johns. Cas. 363, 366. See DOMICIL.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum. An inconvenience does not solve an argument.

Incorporalia bello non adquiruntur. Things incorporeal are not acquired by war. 6 Maule & S. 104.

Inde datæ leges ne fortior omnia posset. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power. Dav. 36.

Indefinitum æquipollet universali. The undefined is equivalent to the whole. 1 Ventr. 368.

Indefinitum supplet locum universalis. The undefined supplies the place of the whole. 4 Co. 77.

Independenter se habet assecuratio a viaggio navis. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship. 3 Kent, 318, n.

Index animi sermo. Speech is the index of the mind. Broom, Max. 622.

Inesse potest donationi, modus, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause: as (ut), introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause. Dyer, 138.

Infans non multum a furioso distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic. Bract. l. 3, c. 2, § 8; Dig. 50. 17. 5. 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 223, 224, 242.

Infinitum in jure reprobatur. That which is infinite or endless is reprehensible in law. 9 Co. 45.

Iniquissima pax est anteponenda justissimo bello. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war. 18 Wend. 257, 305.

Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others. 3 Inst. 181.

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem. It is unjust for any one to be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is against equity for freemen not to have the free disposal of their own property. Co. Litt. 223. See 1 Bouv. Inst. nn. 435, 460.

Injuria fit ei cui convicium dictum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made. 9 Co. 60.

Injuria non excusat injuriam. A wrong does not excuse a wrong. Broom, Max. 270, 387, 395; 11 Exch. 822; 15 Q. B. 276; 6 E. & B. 76; Branch, Princ.

Injuria non præsumitur. A wrong is not presumed. Co. Litt. 232.

Injuria propria non cadet beneficium facientis. No one shall profit by his own wrong.

Injuria servi dominum pertingit. The master is liable for injury done by his servant. Lofft, 229.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspecta, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere. It is unjust to give judgment or advice concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law. 8 Co. 117 b.

Insanus est qui, abjecta ratione, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does every thing with violence and rage. 4 Co. 128.

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another. Co. Litt. 185.

Intentio cæca mala. A hidden intention is bad. 2 Bulstr. 179.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. Intentions ought to be subservient to the laws, not the laws to intentions. Co. Litt. 314.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. My intent gives a name to my act. Hob. 123.

Inter alias causas acquisitiones magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift. Bract. 11.

Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse præjudicium facere sæpe constitutum est. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice. Code, 7. 60. 1. 2.

Interdum evenit ut exceptio quæ prima facie justa videtur, tamen iniqua noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal. Inst. 4. 14; 4. 14. 1. 2.

Interest reipublicæ ne maleficia remaneant impunita. It concerns the commonwealth that crimes do not remain unpunished. Jenk. Cent. 30, 31.

Interest reipublicæ ut carceres sint in tuto. It concerns the commonwealth that prisons be secure. 2 Inst. 587.

Interest reipublicæ ut pax in regno conservetur, et quæcunque paci adversentur provide declinentur. It benefits the state to preserve peace in the kingdom, and prudently to decline whatever is adverse to it. 2 Inst. 158.

Interest reipublicæ ut quilibet re sua bene utatur. It concerns the commonwealth that every one use his property properly. 6 Co. 37.

Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. It concerns the commonwealth that there be a limit to litigation. Broom, Max. 331, 343, 893 n.; Co. Litt. 303; 7 Mass. 432; 16 Gray, 27; 99 Mass. 203; 88 Penn. 506.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To interpret and reconcile laws so that they harmonize is the best mode of construction. 8 Co. 169.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Such a construction is to be made that the subject may have an effect rather than none. Broom, Max. 543; Jenk. Cent. 198; 78 Penn. 219.

Interpretatio talis ambiguis semper fienda est, ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. In ambiguous things, such a construction should be made, that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided. 4 Inst. 328.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit præscriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not defeat a prescription once obtained. 2 Inst. 654.

Intestatus decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit aut non juri fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo hæres extitit. He dies intestate who either has made no will at all or has not made it legally, or whose will which he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or from whom there is no living heir. Inst. 3. 1. pr.; Dig. 38. 16. 1; 50. 16. 64.

Inutilis labor, et sine fructu, non est effectus legis. Useless labor and without fruit is not the effect of law. Co. Litt. 127; Wing. Max. 38.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it, is punished. F. Moore, 813.

Invito beneficium non datur. No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig. 50. 17. 69; Broom, Max. 699 n. (But if he does not dissent, he will be considered as assenting. See ASSENT.)

Ipsæ leges cupiunt ut jure regantur. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right. Co. Litt. 174 b, quoted from Cato; 2 Co. 25 b.

Ira furor brevis est. Anger is a short insanity. 4 Wend. 336, 355.

Ita lex scripta est. The law is so written. 26 Barb. 374, 380; 18 Penn. 306. See 23 Pick. 389.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand. 6 Co. 76.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. A way is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage. Co. Litt. 56 a; Inst. 2. 3. pr.; 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 343, § 314.

Judex æquitatem semper spectare debet. A judge ought always to regard equity. Jenk. Cent. 45.

Judex ante oculos æquitatem semper habere debet. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes. Jenk. Cent. 58.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec propositione domesticæ voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet. A good judge should do nothing from his own arbitrary will, or from the dictates of his private wishes; but he should pronounce according to law and justice. 7 Co. 27 a.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur. The judge is condemned when the guilty are acquitted.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex est lex loquens. The judge is the speaking law. 7 Co. 4 a.

Judex habere debet duos sales, salem sapientiæ, ne sit insipidus, et salem conscientiæ, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts: the salt of wisdom, lest he be foolish; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish. 3 Inst. 147.

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause. 4 Inst. 279.

Judex non potest injuriam sibi datam punire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself. 12 Co. 114.

Judex non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff demands. 2 Inst. 286, case 84.

Judicandum est legibus non exemplis. We are to judge by the laws, not by examples. 4 Co. 33 b; 4 Bla. Com. 405; 19 Johns. 513.

Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiæ suæ. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence. Jenk. Cent. 75.

Judici officium suum excedenti non paretur. To a judge who exceeds his office (or jurisdiction) no obedience is due. Jenk. Cent. 139.

Judici satis pœna est quod Deum habet ultorem. It is punishment enough for a judge that he is responsible to God. 1 Leon. 295.

Judicia in curia regis non adnihilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attinctum adnullentur. Judgments in the king's courts are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attaint. 2 Inst. 539.

Judicia in deliberationibus crebro maturescunt, in accelerato processu nunquam. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberation, never by hurried process. 3 Inst. 210.

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora. The later decisions are stronger in law. 8 Co. 97.

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipiuntur. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta or sayings of the law, and are received as truth. 2 Inst. 537.

Judiciis posterioribus fides est adhibenda. Faith or credit is to be given to the later decisions. 13 Co. 14.

Judicis est in pronuntiando sequi regulam, exceptione non probata. The judge in his decision ought to follow the rule, when the exception is not proved.

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. A judge ought to decide according to the allegations and proofs. Dyer, 12 a; Halkers, Max. 73.

Judicis es jus dicere non dare. It is the duty of a judge to declare the law, not to enact it. Lofft, 42.

Judicis officium est opus diei in die suo perficere. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day. Dyer, 12.

Judicis officium est ut res ita tempora rerum quærere, quæsito tempore tutus eris. It is the duty of a judge to inquire the times of things, as well as into things; by inquiring into the time you will be safe. Co. Litt. 171.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by an improper judge is of no moment. 10 Co. 76 b; 2 Q. B. 1014; 13 id. 143; 14 M. & W. 124; 11 Cl. & F. 610; Broom, Max 93.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. Judgment is as it were a saying of the law. Co. Litt. 168.

Judicium non debet esse illusorium, suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory, it ought to have its proper effect. 2 Inst. 341.

Judicium redditur in invitum, in præsumptione legis. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against inclination. Co. Litt. 248 b, 314 b.

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. A judgment it always taken for truth. 2 Inst. 380; 17 Mass. 237.

Juncta juvant. Things joined have effect. 11 East, 220.

Jura ecclesiastica limitata sunt infra limites separatos. Ecclesiastical laws are limited within separate bounds. 3 Bulstr. 53.

Lawful things are well mixed, unless a form of law oppose. Bacon, Max. Reg. 23. (The law giveth that favour to lawful acts, that although they be executed by several authorities, yet the whole act is good. Id. ibid.)

Le contrat fait la loi. The contract makes the law.

Le ley de Dieu et ley de terre sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land. Kellw. 191.

Le ley est le plus haut inheritance que le roy ad, car par le ley, il mesme et toute ses subjects sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul inheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Le salut du peuple est la suprême loi. The safety of the people is the highest law. Montes. Esp. Lois, 1. xxvii. ch. 23; Broom, Max. 2 n.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors. Branch, Princ.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone. Dyer, 143.

Legatus, regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur, et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills. 12 Co. 17.

Legem enim contractus dat. The contract makes the law. 22 Wend. 215, 233.

Legem terræ amittentes perpetuam infamiæ notam inde merito incurrunt. Those who do not preserve the law of the land, then justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy. 3 Inst. 221.

Leges Angliæ sunt tripartitæ: jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima. The custom of making and unmaking laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Co. pref.

Leges humanæ nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Co. 25; 2 Atk. 674; 11 C. B. 767; 1 Bla. Com. 89.

Leges naturæ perfectissimæ sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. Leges humanæ nascuntur, vivunt, moriuntur. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Co. 25.

Leges non verbis sed rebus sunt impositæ. Laws are imposed on things, not words. 10 Co. 101.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones. Broom, Max. 27, 29; 2 Rolle, 410; 11 Co. 626, 630; 12 Allen, 434.

Leges suum ligent latorem. Laws should bind the proposers of them. Fleta, b. 1, c. 17, § 11.

Leges vigilantibus, non dormientibus subveniunt. The laws aid the vigilant, not the negligent. 5 Johns. Ch. 122, 145; 16 How. Pr. 142, 144.

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege naturæ utendum est. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature. 2 Rolle, 298.

Multa fidem promissa levant. Many promises lessen confidence. 11 Cush. 350.

Multa ignoramus quæ nobis non lateremt si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors were familiar to us. 10 Co. 73.

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi pro communi utilitate introducta sunt. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason. Co. Litt. 70; Broom, Max. 158; 2 Co. 75. See 3 Term, 146; 7 id. 252.

Multa multo exercitatione facilius quam regulis percipies. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules. 4th Inst. 50.

Multa non vetat lex, quæ tamen tacite damnavit. The law fails to forbid many things which yet it has silently condemned.

Multa transeunt cum universitate quæ non per se transeunt. Many things pass as a whole which would not pass separately. Co. Litt. 12 a.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit. Many men know many things, no one knows everything. 4 Inst. 348.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et questiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion: the more simple questions are, the more lucid they are. Hob. 335.

Multiplicata transgressione crescat pœnæ inflictio. The infliction of punishment should be in proportion to the increase of crime. 2 Inst. 479.

Multitudinem decem faciunt. Ten make a multitude. Co. Litt. 247.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium. The multitude of those who err is no protection for error. 11 Co. 75.

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam. A multitude of ignorant practitioners destroys a court. 2 Inst. 219.

Multo utilius est pauca idonea effundere, quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. It is much more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things. 4 Co. 20.

Natura appetit perfectum, ita et lex. Nature aspires to perfection, and so does the law. Hob. 144.

Natura fidei jussionis sit strictissimi juris et non durat vel extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de tempore ad tempus. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and cannot endure nor be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time. Burge, Sur. 40.

Natura non facit saltum, ita nec lex. Nature makes no leap, nor does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supervacuum. Nature makes no vacuum, the law nothing purposeless. Co. Litt. 79.

Naturæ vis maxima; natura bis maxima. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great. 2 Inst. 564.

Naturale est quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound. Jenk. Cent. 66; 4 Denio, 417; Broom, Max. 877.

Nec curia deficeret in justitia exhibenda. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice. 4 Inst. 63.

Nec tempus nec locus occurrit regi. Neither time nor place bars the king. Jenk. Cent. 190.

Nec veniam effuso sanguine canus habet. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable. 3 Inst. 57.

Nec veniam, læso numine, casus habet. Where the Divinity is insulted, the case is unpardonable. Jenk. Cent. 167.

Necessarium est quod non potest aliter se habere. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci. Necessity is the law of a particular time and place. 8 Co. 69; Hale, 54.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Necessity excuses or extenuates delinquency in capital cases, but not in civil. See NECESSITY.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is unlawful. 10 Co. 61.

Non differunt quæ concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things which agree in substance, though not in the same words, do not differ. Jenk. Cent. 70.

Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that although the vendor has not given a special guarantee, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted. Code, 8. 45. 6. But see Doct. & Stud. b. 2, c. 47; Broom, Max. 768.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows. 1 Rolle, 226.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. There is no stronger link among men than an oath. Jenk. Cent. 126.

Non est certandum de regulis juris. There is no disputing about rules of law.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. There is no disputing against a man denying principles. Co. Litt. 343.

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum, qui toto tempore vitæ suæ pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elder-born a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate. 12 Co. 44.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahantur. It is not a new thing that prior statutes shall give place to later ones. Dig. 1. 3. 26; 1. 1. 4; Broom, Max. 28.

Non est recedendum a communi observantia. There should be no departure from a common observance. 2 Co. 74.

Non est regula quin fallat. There is no rule but what may fail. Off. Ex. 212.

Non est singulis concedendum, quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults. Dig. 50. 17. 176.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2.

Non facias malum, ut inde veniat bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it. 11 Co. 74 a.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria, quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19; Broom, Max. 27; 5 Watts, 155.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood. 8 Co. 167.

Non jus ex regula, sed regula ex jure. The law does not arise from the rule (or maxim), but the rule from the law. Trayner, Max. 384.

Non jus, sed seisina facit stipitem. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock from which the inheritance must descend. Fleta, l. 6, cc. 14, 2, § 2; Noy, Max. 9th ed. 72, n. (b); Broom, Max. 525, 527; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 209; 1 Steph. Com. 365, 368, 394; 4 Kent, 388, 389; 4 Scott, N. R. 468.

Non licet quod dispendio licet. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted to be done. Co. Litt. 127.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge. 4 Inst. 279.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est. Every will is consummated by death. 3 Co. 29 b; 4 id. 61 b; 2 Bla. Com. 500; Shep. Touch. 401; Broom, Max. 503.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora habent limitationem. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods. Bract. 52.

Omnes homines aut liberi sunt aut servi. All men are freemen or slaves. Inst. 1. 3. pr.; Fleta, l. 1, c. 1, § 2.

Omnes licentiam habere his quæ pro se indulta sunt, renunciare. All have liberty to renounce those things which have been established in their favor. Code, 2. 3. 29; 1. 3. 51; Broom, Max. 699.

Omnes prudentes illa admittere solent quæ probantur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art. 7 Co. 19.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter. 8 Co. 127.

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. All things are presumed against a wrong-doer. Broom, Max. 938; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 37; 5 Allen, 173.

Omnia præsumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved. Co. Litt. 232; Broom, Max. 948; 59 Penn. 68.

Omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta. All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done. Co. Litt. 232 b; Broom, Max. 165, 942 et seq.; 12 C. B. 788; 3 Exch. 191; 6 id. 716.

Omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regularly and with due formality until the contrary is proved. Broom, Max. 944; 3 Bingh. 381; Campb. 44; 1 C. & M. 461; 17 C. B. 183; 5 B. & Ad. 550; 12 M. & W. 251; 12 Wheat. 69, 70; 6 Binn. 447.

Omnia quæ jure contrahuntur, contrario jure pereunt. Obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary. Dig. 50. 17. 100.

Omnia quæ sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri. All things which are the wife's belong to the husband. Co. Litt. 112; 2 Kent, 130, 143.

Omnia rite esse acta præsumuntur. All things are presumed to be done in due form. Co. Litt. 6; Broom, Max. 944, n.; 11 Cush. 441; 18 Allen, 397; 108 Mass. 425; 2 Ohio St. 246, 247; 4 id. 148; 6 id. 293.

Omnis actio est loquela. Every action is a complaint. Co. Litt. 292.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicii sequitur ex bonis et veris præmissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment arises from good and true premises, and the verdicts of jurors. Co. Litt. 226.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. Every consent removes error. 2 Inst. 123.

Omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown. (There is no rule in the civil law which is not liable to some exception; and the least difference in the facts of the case renders its application useless.) Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Woodd. Lect. 196.

Omnis exceptio est ipsa quoque regula. An exception is in itself also a rule.

Omnis indemnatus pro innocente legibus habetur. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent. Lofft. 121.

Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs more by its novelty than it benefits by its utility. 2 Bulstr. 338; 1 Salk. 20; Broom, Max. 147; 62 Penn. 381.

Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. The interpretation of instruments is to be made, if they will admit of it, so that all contradictions may be removed. Jenk. Cent. 96.

Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restrains.

Omnis nova constitutio futuris temporibus formam imponere debet, non præteritis. Every new statute ought to set its stamp upon the future, not the past. Bract. 228; 2 Inst. 95.

Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim. Every person is a man, but not every man a person. Calvinus, Lex.

Omnis privatio præsupponit habitum. Every privation presupposes former enjoyment. Co. Litt. 339.

Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times. Co. Litt. 114.

Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a prior command. Co. Litt. 207 a; Story, Ag. 4th ed. 102; Broom, Max. 757, 867 et seq.; 2 Bouv. Inst. 25; 4 id. 26; 8 Wheat. 363; 7 Exch. 726; 10 id. 845; 9 C. B. 532, 607; 14 id. 53; 5 Johns. Ch. 256; 57 Penn. 433.

Omnis regula suas patitur exceptiones. Every rule of law is liable to its own exceptions.

Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est. What is given for all shall be compensated for by the contribution of all. 4 Bingh. 121; 2 Marsh. 309.

Omnium rerum quarum usus est, potest esse abusus, virtute solo excepta. There may be an abuse of everything of which there is a use, virtue only excepted. Dav. 79.

Once a fraud, always a fraud. 13 Vin. Abr. 539.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. 1 Hill. R. P. 378; Bisph. Eq. § 153; 7 Watts, 375; 67 Penn. 104.

Once a recompense, always a recompense. 19 Vin. Abr. 277.

Once quit and cleared, ever quit and cleared. Skene de Verb. Sign., iter ad fin.

One may not do an act to himself.

One should be just before he is generous.

Opinio quæ favet testamento est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.

Oportet quod certæ personæ, terræ, et certi status comprehendantur in declaratione usuum. It is necessary that certain persons, lands, and estates be comprehended in a declaration of uses. 9 Co. 9.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be certain or definite. Jenk. Cent. 84; Bract. 15 b.

Oportet quod certa sit res quæ venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be certain or definite. Bract. 61.

Opposita juxta se posita magis elucescunt. Opposites placed next each other appear in a clearer light. 4 Bacon, Works, 256, 258, 353.

Optima enim est legis interpres consuetudo. Usage is the best interpreter of law. 2 Inst. 18; Broom, Max. 931.

Optima est lex, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis, optimus judex qui minimum sibi. That is the best law which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge; he is the best judge who takes least upon himself. Bacon, Aph. 46; Broom, Max. 84.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpretress of a statute is (all the separate parts being considered) the statute itself. 8 Co. 117; Wing. Max. 239, max. 68.

Optimam esse legem, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certitudo ejus præstat. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty. Bacon, Aph. 8.

Optimus interpres rerum usus. Usage is the best interpreter of things. 2 Inst. 282; Broom, Max. 917, 950–1.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic legis interpretare ut leges legibus accordant. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make them accord. 8 Co. 169.

Optimus judex, qui minimum sibi. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion. Bacon, Aph. 46; Broom, Max. 84.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. 4 Inst. 75; 2 Pars. Con. 53; Broom, Max. 685.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. The order of pleading being preserved, the law is preserved. Co. Litt. 303; Broom, Max. 188.

Origine propria neminem posse voluntate sua exiuni manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can renounce his origin (put off or discharge his natural allegiance). Code, 10. 34. 4. See 1 Bla. Com. c. 10; 20 Johns. 313; 3 Pet. 139, 246; Broom, Max. 77.

Origo rei inspici debet. The origin of a thing ought to be inquired into. 1 Co. 99.

Pacti sunt maxime contraria, vis et injuria. Force and wrong are especially contrary to peace. Co. Litt. 161.

Pacta conventa quæ neque contra leges, neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts which are not illegal, and do not originate in fraud, must in all respects be observed. Code, 2. 3. 29; Broom, Max. 698, 732.

Pacta dant legem contractui. Agreements give the law to the contract. Halkers, Max. 118.

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. Private contracts cannot derogate from the public law. 7 Co. 23.

Pacta quæ contra leges constitutionesque vel contra bonos mores fiunt, nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. It is indubitable law that contracts against the laws, or good morals, have no force. Code, 2. 3. 6; Broom, Max. 695.

Pacta quæ turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Contracts founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Pet. 539; Broom, Max. 732.

Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. Private contracts do not derogate from public law. Broom, Max. 695; per Dr. Lushington, Arg. 4 Cl. & F. 241; Arg. 3 id. 621.

Pacto aliquid licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur. By a contract something is permitted, which, without it, could not be admitted. Co. Litt. 166.

Par in parem imperium non habet. An equal has no power over an equal. Jenk. Cent. 174. Example: One of two judges of the same court cannot commit the other for contempt.

Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis. Parent is a general name for every kind of relationship. Co. Litt. 80; Littleton, § 108; Mag. Cart. Joh. c. 50.

Parentum est liberos alere etiam nothos. It is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate. Loft, 222.

Paria copulantur paribus. Similar things unite with similar.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. When opinions are equal, a defendant is acquitted. 4 Inst. 64.

Parole font plea. Words make the plea. 5 Mod. 458; Year B. 19 Hen. VI. 48.

Parte quacunque integrante sublata, tollitur totum. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 8 Co. 41.

Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius novit matrem quam genitorem suam. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father. Fortescue, c. 42.

Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follow the condition of the mother. Inst. 2. 1. 19. (This is the law in the case of slaves and animals; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 167, 502; but with regard to freemen, children follow the condition of the father.) Broom, Max. 516 n.; 13 Mass. 551; 18 Pick. 222.

Parum cavet natura. Nature takes little heed. 2 Johns. Cas. 127, 166.

Parum differunt quæ re concordant. Things differ but little which agree in substance. 2 Bulstr. 86.

Parum est latam esse sententiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that sentence should be given unless it be committed to execution. Co. Litt. 289.

Parum proficit scire quid fieri debet, si non cognoscas quomodo sit faciendum. It avails little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done. 2 Inst. 503.

Pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. The father is he whom the marriage points out. 1 Bla. Com. 446; 7 Mart. N. s. 548, 553; Dig. 2. 4. 5; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 273, 304, 322; Broom, Max. 516.

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. Jenk. Cent. 6.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate consistere. Paternal power should consist in affection, not in atrocity.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima. Offences against nature are the heaviest. 3 Inst. 20.

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpæ quam facit patrocinium defensionis adjungit. He adds one offence to another, who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defence. 5 Co. 49.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur. During a litigation nothing should be changed. Co. Litt. 344. See 20 How. 106; Cross, Lien, 140; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 406; 2 Johns. Ch. 441; 6 Barb. 33.

Per alluvionem id videtur adjici, quod ita paulatim adjicitur, ut intelligere non possumus quantum quoquo momento temporis adjiciatur. That is said to be added by alluvion which is so added little by little that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 1; Hale, de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 4; Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, § 6.

Per rationes perventur ad legitimam rationem. By reasoning we come to legal reason. Littleton, § 386.

Per rerum naturam, factum negantis nulla probatio est. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Per varios actus, legem experientia facit. By various acts experience frames the law. 4 Inst. 50.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suæ perfectionis vel naturæ modum. That is perfect which wants nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature. Hob. 151.

Periculosum est res novas et inusitatas inducere. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things. Co. Litt. 379.

Periculosum existimo quod bonorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo. I think that dangerous which is not warranted by the example of good men. 9 Co. 97.

Periculum rei venditæ, nondum traditæ, est emptoris. The purchaser runs the risk of the loss of a thing sold, though not delivered. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 939; 2 Kent, 498, 499; 4 B. & C. 481, 941.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. They are perjured who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it. 3 Inst. 166.

Perpetua lex est, nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quæ abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19; Broom, Max. 27.

Perpetuities are odious in law and equity.

Persona conjuncta æquiparatur interesse proprio. The interest of a personal connection is sometimes regarded in law as that of the individual himself. Bacon, Max. Reg. 18; Broom, Max. 533, 537.

Persona est homo cum statu quodam consideratus. A person is a man considered with reference to a certain status. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. l. 1, tit. 3, § 75.

Personæ vice fungitur municipium et decuria. Towns and boroughs act as if persons. 23 Wend. 103, 144.

Pirata est hostis humani generis. A pirate is an enemy of the human race. 3 Inst. 113.

Placita negativa duo exitum non faciunt. Two negative pleas do not form an issue. Lofft, 415.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties. 4 Inst. 67.

Pluralis numerus est duobus contentus. The plural number is contained in two. 1 Rolle, 476.

Pluralities are odious in law.

Plures cohæredes sunt quasi unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several co-heirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right which they possess. Co. Litt. 163.

Plures participes sunt quasi unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent. Several part-owners are as one body, by reason of the unity of their rights. Co. Litt. 164.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. Examples hurt more than offences.

Plus peccat auctor quam actor. The instigator of a crime is worse than he who perpetrates it. 5 Co. 99.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis, quam auriti decem. One eye-witness is better than ten ear witnesses. 4 Inst. 279.

Plus vident oculi quam oculus. Several eyes see more than one. 4 Inst. 160.

Pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes. Punishment to few, dread or fear to all.

Pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

Pœna ex delicto defuncti, hæres teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be bound in a penalty inflicted for the crime of the ancestor. 2 Inst. 198.

Pœna non potest, culpa perennis erit. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual. 21 Vin. Abr. 271.

Pœnæ potius molliendæ quam exasperandæ sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated. 3 Inst. 220.

Pœnæ sint restringendæ. Punishments should be restrained. Jenk. Cent. 29.

Pœnæ suos tenere debet actores et non alios. Punishment ought to be inflicted upon the guilty, and not upon others. Bract. 390 b; Fleta, l. 1, c. 38, § 12; l. 4, c. 17, § 17.

Politiæ legibus non leges politiis adaptandæ. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics. Hob. 154.

Ponderantur testes non numerantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted. 1 Stark. Ev. 554; Best, Ev. 426, § 389; 14 Wend. 105, 109.

Positio uno oppositorum negatur alterum. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied. 3 Rolle, 422.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot. 3 Co. 42.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse hæredem. Possession of the brother in fee-simple makes the sister to be heir. 3 Co. 42; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 227; Broom, Max. 532.

Possessio pacifica pour anns 60 facit jus. Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right. Jenk. Cent. 26.

Possession is a good title, where no better title appears. 20 Vin. Abr. 278.

Possession of the termor, possession of the reversioner.

Possessor has right against all men but him who has the very right.

Possibility cannot be on a possibility.

Posteriora derogant prioribus. Posterior things derogate from things prior. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 90.

Posthumus pro nato habetur. A posthumous child is considered as though born (at the parent's death). 15 Pick. 258.

Postliminium fingit eum qui captus est in civitate semper fuisse. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5; Dig. 49. 51.

Potentia debet sequi justitiam, non antecedere. Power ought to follow, not to precede justice. 3 Bulstr. 199.

Potentia inutilis frustra est. Useless power is vain.

Potentia non est nisi ad bonum. Power is not conferred but for the public good.

Potest quis renunciare pro se et suis, jus quod pro se introductum est. A man may relinquish, for himself and those claiming under him, a right which was introduced for his own benefit. See 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 83.

Potestas stricte interpretatur. Power should be strictly interpreted. Jenk. Cent. 17.

Potestas suprema seipsum dissolvere potest, ligare non potest. Supreme power can dissolve, but cannot bind itself. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19.

Potior est conditio defendentis. Better is the condition of the defendant (than that of the plaintiff). Broom, Max. 740; Cowp. 343; 15 Pet. 471; 21 Pick. 289; 22 id. 186, 187; 107 Mass. 440.

condition of the possessor. Broom, Max. 215 n, 719; 6 Mass. 84, 381; 21 Pick. 140.

Prædium servit prædio. Land is under servitude to land. (i. e. Servitudes are not personal rights, but attach to the dominant tenement.) Trayner, Max. 455.

Præpropera consilia raro sunt prospera. Hasty counsels are seldom prosperous. 4 Inst. 57.

Præscriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Prescription is a title by authority of law, deriving its force from use and time. Co. Litt. 113.

Præscriptio et executio non pertinent ad valorem contractus, sed ad tempus et modum actionis instituendæ. Prescription and execution do not affect the validity of the contract, but the time and manner of bringing an action. 3 Mass. 84; 3 Johns. Ch. 190, 219.

Præsentare nihil aliud est quam præsto dare seu offere. To present is no more than to give or offer on the spot. Co. Litt. 120.

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The presence of the body cures the error in the name; the truth of the name cures an error in the description. Bacon, Max. Reg. 25; Broom, Max. 637, 639, 640; 6 Co. 66; 3 B. & Ad. 640; 6 Term, 675; 11 C. B. 996; 1 H. L. C. 792; 3 De G. M. & G. 140.

Præstat cautela quam medela. Prevention is better than cure. Co. Litt. 304.

Quisquis est qui velit jurisconsultus haberi, contendat studium, velit a quocunque doceri. Whoever wishes to be held a jurisconsult, let him continually study, and desire to be taught by every body.

Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur. As a thing is bound, so it is unbound. 2 Rolle, 21.

Quocumque modo velit, quocumque modo possit. In any way he wishes, in any way he can. 14 Johns. 484, 492.

Quod a quoque pœnæ nomine exactum est id eidem restituere nemo cogitur. That which has been exacted as a penalty no one is obliged to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 46.

Quod ab initio non valet, in tractu temporis non convalescet. What is not good in the beginning cannot be rendered good by time. Merlin, Rép. verb. Regle de Droit. (This, though true in general, is not universally so.) 4 Co. 26; Broom, Max. 178; 5 Pick. 27.

Quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines æquales sunt. All men are equal as far as the natural law is concerned. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

Quod ædificatur in area legata cedit legato. Whatever is built upon land given by will passes with the gift of the land. Amos & F. Fixtures, 246; Broom, Max. 424.

Quod alias bonum et justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum efficitur. What is otherwise good and just, if sought by force or fraud, becomes bad and unjust. 3 Co. 78.

Quod alias non fuit licitum necessitas licitum facit. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise were unlawful. Fleta, l. 5, c. 23, § 14.

Quod approbo non reprobo. What I accept I do not reject. Broom, Max. 712.

Quod attinet ad jus civile, servi pro nullis habentur, non tamen et jure naturali, quia, quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines æquali sunt. So far as the civil law is concerned, slaves are not reckoned as persons, but not so by natural law, for so far as regards natural law all men are equal. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

Quod constat clare, non debet verificari. What is clearly apparent need not be proved. 10 Mod. 150

Quod constat curiæ opere testium non indiget. What appears to the court needs not the help of witnesses. 2 Inst. 662.

Quod contra juris rationem receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. What has been admitted against the reason of the law, ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 50. 17. 141; 12 Co. 75.

Quod contra legem fit, pro infecto habetur. What is done contrary to the law, is considered as not done. 4 Co. 31. (No one can derive any advantage from such an act.)

Quod datum est ecclesiæ, datum est Deo. What is given to the church is given to God. 2 Inst. 590.

Quod demonstrandi causa additur rei satis demonstratæ, frustra fit. What is added to a thing sufficiently palpable, for the purpose of demonstration, is vain. 10 Co. 113.

Quod dubitas, ne feceris. When you doubt about a thing, do not do it. 1 Hale, P. C. 310; Broom, Max. 326, n.

Quod enim semel aut bis existit, præterunt legislatores. That which never happens but once or twice, legislators pass by. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

Quod est ex necessitate nunquam introducitur, nisi quando necessarium. What is introduced of necessity, is never introduced except when necessary. 2 Rolle, 512.

Quod est inconveniens, aut contra rationem non permissum est in lege. What is inconvenient or contrary to reason, is not allowed in law. Co. Litt. 178.

Quod est necessarium est licitum. What is necessary is lawful. Jenk. Cent. 76.

Quod factum est, cum in obscuro sit, ex affectione cujusque capit interpretationem. When there is doubt about an act, it receives interpretation from the (known) feelings of the actor. Dig. 50. 17. 68. 1.

Quod fieri debet facile præsumitur. That is easily presumed which ought to be done. Halkers, Max. 153; Broom, Max. 182-3, 297.

Quod fieri non debet, factum valet. What ought not to be done, when done, is valid. 5 Co. 38; 12 Mod. 438; 6 M. & W. 58; 9 id. 636.

Quod in jure scripto "jus" appellatur, id in lege Angliæ "rectum" esse dicitur. What in the civil law is called "jus," in the law of England is said to be "rectum" (right). Co. Litt. 260; Fleta, l. 6, c. 1, § 1.

Quod in minori valet, valebit in majori; et quod in majori non valet, nec valebit in minori. What avails in the less, will avail in the greater; and what will not avail in the greater, will not avail in the less. Co. Litt. 260.

Quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. What avails in one of two similar things, will avail in the other. Co. Litt. 191.

Quod inconsulto fecimus, consultius revocemus. What is done without consideration or reflection, upon better consideration we should revoke or undo. Jenk. Cent. 116.

Quod initio non valet, tractu temporis non valet. A thing void in the beginning does not become valid by lapse of time. 1 S. & R. 58.

Quod initio vitiosum est, non potest tractu temporis convalescere. Time cannot render valid an act void in its origin. Dig. 50. 17. 29; Broom, Max. 178.

Quod ipsis, qui contraxerunt, obstat, et successoribus eorum obstabit. That which bars those who have contracted will bar their successors also. Dig. 50. 17. 103.

Quod jussu alterius solvitur pro eo est quasi ipsi solutum esset. That which is paid by the order of another is, so far as such person is concerned, as if it had been paid to himself. Dig. 50. 17. 180.

Quod meum est, sine facto sive defectu meo amitti seu in alium transferri non potest. That which is mine cannot be lost or transferred to another without mine own act or default. 8 Co. 92; Broom, Max. 465; 1 Prest. Abstr. 147, 318.

Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest. What is mine cannot be taken away without my consent. Jenk. Cent. 251. But see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Quod minus est in obligationem videtur deductum. That which is the less is held to be imported into the contract (e. g. A offers to hire B's house at six hundred dollars, at the same time B offers to let it for five hundred dollars; the contract is for five hundred dollars). 1 Story, Contr. 481.

Quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium. That which natural reason has established among all men, is called the law of nations. Dig. 1. 1. 9; Inst. 1. 2. 1; 1 Bla. Com. 43.

Quod necessario intelligitur id non deest. What is necessarily understood is not wanting. 1 Bulstr. 71.

Quod necessitas cogit, defendit. What necessity forces, it justifies. Hale, P. C. 54.

Quod non apparet non est, et non apparet judicialiter ante judicium. What appears not does not exist, and nothing appears judicially before judgment. 2 Inst. 479; Broom, Max. 164; Jenk. Cent. 207; arg. 55 Penn. 57.

Quod non capit Christus, capit fiscus. What the church does not take, the treasury takes. Year B. 19 Hen. VI. 1.

Quod semel aut bis existit prætercunt legislatores. Legislators pass over what happens (only) once or twice. Dig. 1. 3. 6; Broom, Max. 46.

Quod semel meum est amplius meum esse non potest. What is once mine cannot be mine more completely. Co. Litt. 49 b; Shep. Touch. 212; Broom, Max. 465 n.

Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest. That which in making his election a man has once been pleased to choose, he cannot afterwards quarrel with. Co. Litt. 146; Broom, Max. 295.

Quod solo inædificatur solo cedit. Whatever is built on the soil is an accessory of the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29; 16 Mass. 449; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1571.

Quod sub certa forma concessum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem. That which is granted or reserved under a certain form, is not to be drawn into valuation or compensation. Bacon, Max. Reg. 4; Broom, Max. 464.

Quod subintelligitur non deest. What is understood is not wanting. 2 Ld. Raym. 832.

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. What is tacitly understood does not appear to be wanting. 4 Co. 22.

Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit. The law does not require what is vain and useless. Co. Litt. 319.

Quod vero contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. But that which has been admitted contrary to the reason of the law, ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 1. 3. 14; Broom, Max. 158.

Quodcunque aliquis ob tutelam corporis sui fecerit jure id fecisse videtur. Whatever one does in defence of his person, that he is considered to have done legally. 3 Inst. 590.

Quodque dissolvitur eodem modo quo ligatur. In the same manner that a thing is bound, it is unbound. 5 Rolle, 39; Broom, Max. 881; 2 M. & G. 729.

Quomodo quid constituitur eodem modo dissolvitur. In whatever mode a thing is constituted, in the same manner is it dissolved. Jenk. Cent. 74.

Quorum prætexta, nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat præmissa. "Quorum prætexta" neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms that which went before. Plowd. 52.

Quotiens dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum libertatem respondendum erit. Whenever there is a doubt between liberty and slavery, the decision must be in favor of liberty. Dig. 50. 17. 20.

Quotiens idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum accipiatur, quæ rei gerendæ aptior est. Whenever the same words express two meanings, that is to be taken which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end. Dig. 50. 17. 67.

Quoties in stipulationibus ambigua oratio est, commodissimum est id accipi quo res de quo agitur in tuto sit. Whenever in stipulations the expression is ambiguous, it is most proper to give it that interpretation by which the subject-matter may be in safety. Dig. 41. 1. 80; 50. 16. 219.

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est. When there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made. Co. Litt. 147; Broom, Max. 619; 8 Mass. 201.

Quum de lucro duorum quæratur, melior est conditio possidentis. When the gain of one of two is in question, the condition of the possessor is the better. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

Quum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpretari et secundum id quod credibile et cogitatum, credendum est. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning of the testator. Dig. 34. 5. 24; Broom, Max. 437. See Brisson, Perperam.

Quum principalis causa non consistit ne ea quidem quæ sequuntur locum habent. When the principal cause does not hold its ground, neither do the accessories find place. Dig. 50. 17. 129. 1; Broom, Max. 496; 1 Pothier, Obl. 413.

Ratihabitio mandato æquiparatur. Ratification is equal to a command. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4; Broom, Max. 867; 20 Pick. 95.

Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis. Reason is the source and mould of custom.

Ratio est legis anima, mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; the reason of the law being changed, the law is also changed. 7 Co. 7.

Ratio est radius divini luminis. Reason is a ray of divine light. Co. Litt. 232.

Ratio et auctoritas duo clarissima mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world. 4 Inst. 320.

Ratio in jure æquitas integra. Reason in law is perfect equity.

Ratio legis est anima legis. The reason of the law is the soul of the law. Jenk. Cent. 45.

Ratio non clauditur loco. Reason is not confined to any place.

Ratio potest allegari deficiente lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. Reason may be alleged when the law is defective, but it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent. Co. Litt. 191.

Re, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, junctura vestes sumere pacta solent. Compacts usually take their clothing from the thing itself, from words, from writing, from consent, from delivery. Plowd. 161.

Receditur a placitis juris, potius quam injuriæ et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law will be receded from rather than crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bacon, Max.

Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 10. (This applies only to such maxims as are called placita juris; these will be dispensed with rather than crimes should go unpunished, quia salus populi suprema lex, because the public safety is the supreme law.)

Recorda sunt vestigia vetustatis et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth. 2 Rolle, 296.

Recurrendum est ad extraordinarium quando non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.

Reddenda singula singulis. Let each be put in its proper place. 12 Pick. 291; 18 id. 228.

Regula est, juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. The rule is, that ignorance of the law does not excuse, but that ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct. Dig. 22. 6. 9; Broom, Max. 253. See Irvine, Civ. Law, 74.

Regula pro lege, si deficit lex. In default of the law, the maxim rules.

Rei turpis nullum mandatum est. A mandate of an illegal thing is void. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 3.

Reipublicæ interest voluntates defunctorum effectum sortiri. It concerns the state that the wills of the dead should have their effect.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. 3 Co. 28.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio. Reference should always be had in such a manner that a disposition in a will may avail. 6 Co. 76.

Relation never defeats collateral acts. 18 Vin. Abr. 292.

Relation shall never make good a void grant or devise of the party. 18 Vin. Abr. 202.

Relative words refer to the next antecedent, unless the sense be thereby impaired. Noy, Max. 4; Wing. Max. 19; Broom, Max. 606; Jenk. Cent. 180.

Relativorum cognito uno, cognoscitur et alterum. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is known. Cro. Jac. 539.

Remainder can depend upon no estate but what beginneth at the same time the remainder doth.

Remainder must vest at the same instant that the particular estate determines.

Remainder to a person not of a capacity to take at the time of appointing it, is void. Plowd. 27.

Remedies for rights are ever favorably extended. 18 Vin. Abr. 521.

Remedies ought to be reciprocal.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed. 3 Inst. 233.

Remoto impedimento, emergit actio. The impediment being removed, the action arises. 5 Co. 76; Wing. Max. 20.

Rent must be reserved to him from whom the state of the land moveth. Co. Litt. 143.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is repelled or prevented from taking an oath. Co. Litt. 158; Bract. 185.

Repellitur exceptione cedendarum actionum. He is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned. 1 Johns. Ch. 409, 414.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem. Money refused liberates the debtor. 9 Co. 79. But this must be understood with a qualification. See TENDER.

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge. 4 Co. 107. But see CHARACTER.

Rerum ordo confunditur, si unicuique jurisdictio non servatur. The order of things is confounded if every one preserves not his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. Proem.

Rerum progressu ostendunt multa, quæ in initio præcaveri seu provideri non possunt. In the course of events many mischiefs arise which at the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen. 6 Co. 40.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the manager and disposer of his own matters. Co. Litt. 223.

Res accendent lumina rebus. One thing throws light upon others. 4 Johns. Ch. 149.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory follows its principal. Broom, Max. 491. (For a definition of res accessoria, see Mack. Civ. Law, 155.)

Res denominatur a principaliori parte. A thing is named from its principal part. 5 Co. 47.

Res est miseræ ubi jus est vagum et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain. 2 Salk. 512.

Res generalem habet significationem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis, natura sive speciei, comprehendit. The word things has a general signification, because it comprehends as well corporeal as incorporeal objects, of whatever sort, nature or species. 3 Inst. 482; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 415.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them. Co. Litt. 132; Broom, Max. 954, 967; 3 Curt. C. C. 403; 11 Q. B. 1028; 57 N. H. 369.

Res inter alios judicatæ nullum aliis præjudicium faciunt. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it. Dig. 44. 2. 1.

Res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A thing adjudged makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 840.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A thing adjudged must be taken for truth. Co. Litt. 103; Broom, Max. 328, 333, 945; Dig. 50. 17. 207; 2 Kent, 120; 13 M. & W. 679; 59 Penn. 68. See RES JUDICATA.

Res per pecuniam æstimatur, et non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to the thing. 9 Co. 76; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 922.

Res perit domino suo. The destruction of the thing is the loss of its owner. 2 Bouv. Inst. nn. 1456, 1466; Story, Bailm. 426; 2 Kent, 591; Broom, Max. 238; 12 Allen, 381; 14 id. 269.

Res propria est quæ communis non est. A thing is private which is not common. 8 Paige, 261, 270.

Res quæ intra præsidia perductæ nondum sunt, quamquam ab hostibus occupatæ, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy's lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. l. 3, c. 9, § 16; l. 3, c. 6, § 3.

Res sacra non recipit æstimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. 1. 8. 9. 5.

Res sua nemini servit. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Trayner, Max. 541.

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden. Fleta, l. 3, c. 10, § 3.

Reservatio non debet esse de præficuis ipsis quia ea conceduntur, sed de reddita novo extra proficua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase. Co. Litt. 142.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right. Godb. 284.

Resoluto jure concedentis resolvitur jus concessum. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Mack. Civ. Law, 179; Broom, Max. 467.

Respiciendum est judicanti, nequid aut durius aut remissius construatur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiæ gloria affectanda est. It is a matter of import to one adjudicating that nothing should be either more severely or more leniently construed than the cause itself demands; for the glory neither of severity nor clemency should be affected. 3 Inst. 220.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward. Hob. 99.

Respondeat son soveraigne. His superior or master shall answer. Articuli sup. Chart. c. 18.

Responsio unius non omnino auditur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 260. (This is a maxim of the civil law, where everything must be proved by two witnesses.)

Reus excipiendo fit actor. The defendant by a plea becomes plaintiff. Bannier, Tr. des preuves, §§ 152, 320; Best, Evid. 294, § 252.

Reus læsæ majestatis punitur, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish. 4 Co. 124.

Rex non debet esse sub homine sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law. Broom, Max. 47, 117; Bract. 5.

Rex non potest fallere nec falli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived. Grounds & Rud. of Law, 438.

Rex non potest peccare. The king can do no wrong. 2 Rolle, 304; Jenk. Cent. 9, 308; Broom, Max. 52; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 246.

Rex numquam moritur. The king never dies. Broom, Max. 50; Branch, Max. 5th ed. 197; 1 Bla. Com. 249.

Rights never die.

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of river-banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself. Dig. 1. 8. 5. pr.; Fleta, l. 3, c. 1, § 5; Lowcenius de Jur. Mar. l. 1, c. 6, § 12.

Roy n'est lie per aucun statute, si il ne soit expressement nosmé. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named. Jenk. Cent. 307; Broom, Max. 72.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem, justitiam et judicium: veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et judicium in judice. An oath has in it three component parts—truth, justice, and judgment: truth in the party swearing, justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath. 3 Inst. 160.

Sacramentum si falsum fuerit, licet falsum tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury. 2 Inst. 167.

Sacrilegus omnium prædorum cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers. 4 Co. 106.

Sæpe constitutum est, res inter alios judicatas aliis non præjudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties. Dig. 42. 1. 63.

Sæpe viatorem nova non vetus orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, which deceives the traveller. 4 Inst. 34.

Sæpenumero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently where the propriety of words is attended to, the meaning of truth is lost. 7 Co. 27.

Salus populi est suprema lex. The safety of the people is the supreme law. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 1, 10, 287, n.; 13 Co. 139; 8 Metc. 465; 12 id. 82; 116 Mass. 260.

Salus reipublicæ suprema lex. The safety of the state is the supreme law. 4 Cush. 71; 1 Gray, 386: Broom, Max. 366.

Salus ubi multi consiliarii. In many counsellors there is safety. 4 Inst. 1.

Sanguinis conjunctio benevolentia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes men through benevolence and family affection. 5 Johns. Ch. 1, 13.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins with the last, and what is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Co. 25.

Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio. A wise man does every thing advisedly. 4 Inst. 4.

Sapientia legis nummario pretio non est æstimanda. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money. Jenk. Cent. 168.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the duty of a wise judge to think so much only permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him. 4 Inst. 163.

Satisfaction should be made to that fund which has sustained the loss. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3731.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the fountain than to follow rivulets. 10 Co. 118.

Scientia sciolorum est mixta ignorantia. The knowledge of smatterers is mixed ignorance. 8 Co. 159.

Scientia utrinque par pares contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal. 3 Burr. 1910; L. R. 2 Q. B. 699; Broom, Max. 772, 792, n.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and wills it. Bract. 20.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you deal. 11 M. & W. 405, 632; 13 id. 171.

Scire et scire debere æquiparantur in jure. To know a thing, and to be bound to know it, are regarded in law as equivalent. Trayner, Max. 551.

Scire leges, non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws, is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

Scire propria est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing by its cause and in its reason. Co. Litt. 183.

Scribere est agere. To write is to act. 2 Rolle, 89; 4 Bla. Com. 80; Broom, Max. 312, 967.

Scriptæ obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio, contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are dissolved by writing, and obligations of naked agreement by naked agreement to the contrary.

Secta est pugna civilis, sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle, as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and as it were girt with swords, so on the other hand the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended as it were by helmets. Hob. 20; Bract. 339 b.

Secta quæ scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet. A suit which relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing. Jenk. Cent. 65.

Secundum naturam est, commoda cujusque rei eum sequi, quem sequentur incommoda. It is natural that he who bears the charge of a thing should receive the profits. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business intrusted to several speeds best, and several eyes see more than one. 4 Co. 46.

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bla. Com. 209; Broom, Max. 525, 528; 1 Steph. Com. 367; 4 Kent, 388, 389; 18 Ga. 238.

Semel civis semper civis. Once a citizen always a citizen. Trayner, Max. 555.

Semel malus semper præsumitur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same degree. Cro. Car. 317.

Semper in dubiis benigniora præferunda sunt. In dubious cases the more liberal constructions are always to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56.

Semper in dubiis id agendum est, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quum aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always in doubtful cases that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the greatest safety, except when its provisions are clearly contrary to law. Dig. 34. 5. 21.

Semper in obscuris quod minimum est sequimur (sequere). In obscure cases we always follow that which is least obscure. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Broom, Max. 687, n.; 3 C. B. 962.

Semper in stipulationibus et in cæteris contractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts we always follow that which was agreed. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Semper ita fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail. 6 Co. 76.

Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit. The claimant is always bound to prove (the burden of proof lies on him).

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puerorum, et filiatio non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy, for filiation cannot be proved. Co. Litt. 126. See 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 303; 5 Co. 98 b.

Semper præsumitur pro negante. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies. See 10 Cl. & F. 534; 3 E. & B. 723.

Semper præsumitur pro sententia. Presumption is always in favor of the sentence. 3 Bulstr. 43.

Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire, mandare creditur. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it. 2 Kent, 616; Dig. 14. 6. 16; 43. 3. 12. 4.

Semper sexus masculinus etiam femininum continet. The male sex always includes the female. Dig. 32, 62; 2 Brev. 9.

Semper specialia generalibus insunt. Special clauses are always comprised in general ones. Dig. 50. 17. 147.

Senatores sunt partes corporis regis. Senators are part of the body of the king. Staunf. 72 E; 4 Inst. 58, in marg.

Sensus verborum est anima legis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law. 5 Co. 2.

Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense. 4 Co. 13.

Sensus verborum ex causa dicendi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter. 4 Co. 14.

Sententia a non judice lata nemini debet nocere. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one. Fleta, l. 6, c. 6, § 7.

Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never passes into a judgment (conclusive upon the parties). 7 Co. 43.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The sentence makes the law, and the interpretation has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth. Ellesm. Postn. 55.

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest. An interlocutory sentence or order may be revoked, but not a final. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20.

Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis. Sentence is not given upon a thing which is not clear.

Sequi debet potentia justitiam, non præcedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it. 2 Inst. 454.

Sermo index animi. Speech is an index of the mind. 5 Co. 118.

Sermo relata ad personam, intelligi debet de conditione personæ. A speech relating to the person is to be understood as relating to his condition. 4 Co. 16.

Servanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur. The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed. 3 Johns. Ch. 190, 219.

Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. Personal services follow the person. 2 Inst. 374; Fleta, l. 3, c. 11, § 1.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander without a guide, and every thing will be in a state of uncertainty to every one. Co. Litt. 227.

Si alicujus rei societas sit et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases. 16 Johns. 438, 489.

Si aliquid ex solemnibus deficiat, cum æquitas poscit subveniendum est. If any thing be wanting from required forms, when equity requires it will be aided. 1 Kent, 157.

Si assuetis mederi possis nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Co. 142.

Si duo in testamento pugnantia reperientur, ultimum est ratum. If two conflicting provisions are found in a will, the last is observed. Lofft, 251.

Si judicas, cognosces. If you judge, understand.

Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number corrected by fear. Co. Litt. 392.

Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense. 2 Kent, 555.

Si plures conditiones ascriptæ fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulative requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera, si divisim, cuilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If several conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true. Co. Litt. 225.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 20. 4.

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. If any thing is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Bla. Com. 484.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænomine, agnomine legatarii erraverit; cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, prænomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Max. 645; 2 Domat, b. 2, t. 1, s. 6, §§ 10, 19.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. 89.

Si quis prægnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

Si quis unum percusserit, cum alium percutere vellet, in felonia tenetur. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony. 3 Inst. 51.

Si suggestio non sit vera, litera patentes vacuæ sunt. If the suggestion of a patent is false, the patent itself is void. 10 Co. 113.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor's. 3 Kent, 441.

Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may have an effect. 3 Inst. 80.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. So use your own as not to injure another's property. 1 Bla. Com. 306; Broom, Max. 268, 365 et seq., 862; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 2379; 9 Co. 59; 5 Exch. 797; 12 Q. B. 739; 4 A. & E. 384; El., Bl. & El. 643; 15 Johns. 218; 17 id. 99; 17 Mass. 334; 106 id. 199; 107 id. 576; 12 id. 58; 86 Penn. 401; 88 id. 189; 4 M'Cord, 472.

Sicut natura nil facit per saltum, ita nec lex. As nature does nothing by a bound or leap, so neither does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

Sigillum est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal. 3 Inst. 169. But see SEAL.

Silence shows consent. 6 Barb. 28, 35.

Silent leges inter arma. Laws are silent amidst arms. 4 Inst. 70.

Similitudo legalis est casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Dissimilium, dissimilis est ratio. Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar. Co. Litt. 191.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A simple recommendation does not bind. Dig. 4. 3. 37; 2 Kent, 485; Broom, Max. 781; 4 Taunt. 488; 16 Q. B. 282, 283; Cro. Jac. 4; 2 Allen, 214; 5 Johns. 354; 4 Barb. 95.

Simplex et pura donatio dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed. Bract. 1.

Simplicitas est legibus amica, et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is favorable to the law, and too much subtlety is blameworthy in law. 4 Co. 8.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest. There can be no prescription without possession.

Singuli in solidum tenentur. Each is bound for the whole. 6 Johns. Ch. 242, 252.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum emptor in venditorem. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21. 2. 1; Broom, Max. 768.

Socii mei socius, meus socius non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner. Dig. 50. 17. 47. 1; Lindl. Part. 4th ed. 54; 13 Gray, 472.

Sola ætas per se senectus donationem testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate a will or gift. 5 Johns. Ch. 148, 158.

Solemnitates juris sunt observandæ. The solemnities of law are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. 13.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 32; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1572.

Solo cedit quod solo inædificatur. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29. See 1 Mack. Civ. Law, § 208; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1571.

Solus Deus hæredem facit. God alone makes the heir. Co. Litt. 5.

Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale. Jenk. Cent. 56; 1 Pick. 70.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solidum potest solvere. No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii. A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner. Inst. 3. 26. 5; Dig. 17. 2.

Solvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur. In the same manner that a thing is bound it is unloosed. 4 Johns. Ch. 582.

Spes est vigilantis somnium. Hope is the dream of the vigilant. 4 Inst. 203.

Spes impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime. 3 Inst. 236.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restitui. He who has been despoiled ought to be restored before anything else. 2 Inst. 714; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 353.

Spondet peritiam artis. He promises to use the skill of his art. Pothier, Louage, n. 425; Jones, Bailm. 22, 53, 62, 97, 120; Domat, liv. 1, t. 4, s. 8, n. 1: 1 Story, Bailm. § 431; 1 Bell, Com. 5th ed. 459; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 1004.

Sponte virum fugiens mulier et adulitera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord, and committing adultery, loses her dower, unless her husband takes her back of his own accord. Co. Litt. 37.

Stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. A presumption will stand good until the contrary is proved. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33 n.; Hob. 297; 3 Bla. Com. 371; Broom, Max. 949; 15 Mass. 90; 16 id. 87; 9 S. & R. 384.

Stare decisis, et non quieta movere. To adhere to precedents, and not to unsettle things which are established. 9 Johns. 395, 428; 11 Wend. 504, 507; 23 id. 336, 340; 25 id. 119, 142; 4 Hill, N. Y. 271, 323; 4 id. 592, 595; 23 Barb. 97, 106; 87 Penn. 286.

39 Mo. 521. Where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense and policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation, its use is merely permissive and discretionary; 24 N. Y. 405; 50 Barb. 339; 77 Ill. 271; 27 N. J. L. 407. See 53 Me. 438; 1 Denio, 457; 48 Mo. 167; 125 Mass. 198.

MAYHEM. In Criminal Law. The act of unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or annoy his adversary. 8 C. & P. 167. But one may not innocently maim himself, and where he procures another to maim him, both are guilty; Co. Litt. 127 a; 17 Wend. 351, 352. The cutting or disabling or weakening a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eye or foretooth, or depriving him of those parts the loss of which abates his courage, are held to be mayhems; 7 Humphr. 161. But cutting off the ear or nose, or the like, are not held to be mayhems at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 205. The injury must be permanent; 8 Port. 472; 30 La. An. 11. 1329.

These and other severe personal injuries are punished by the Coventry Act, which has been re-enacted in several of the states; 1 Hawk. P. C. Curw. ed. 107, § 1; Ryan, Med. Jur. 191, Phil. ed. 1832; and by congress. See Act of April 30, 1790, s. 13, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 85; Act of March 3, 1825, s. 22, 3 id. 2006; Rev. Stat. § 1342, art. 58; 10 Ala. See 11 Rich. 165; 2 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 1001–1008, n. 2, p. 566.

MAYHEMAVIT. Maimed. This is a term of art which cannot be supplied in pleading by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc.; 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 548; 7 Mass. 247.

In indictments for mayhem the words feloniously and did maim are requisite; Whart. Cr. Pr. § 260, n.

MAYOR. (Lat. major; Spelman, Gloss. Meyr, miret, maer, one that keeps guard. Cowel; Blount; Webster.) The chief governor or executive magistrate of a city. The old word was portgreve. The word mayor first occurs in 1189, when Rich. I. substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The word is common in Bracton. Brac. 57. In London, York, and Dublin, he is called lord mayor. Wharton, Lex.

It is generally his duty to cause the laws of the city to be enforced, and to superintend inferior officers, such as constables, watchmen, and the like. But the power and authority which mayors possess, being given to them by local regulations, vary in different places.

MAYOR'S COURT. The name of a court usually established in cities, composed of a mayor, recorder, and aldermen, generally having jurisdiction of offences commited within the city, and of other matters specially given them by the statute.

MAOYRAZGO. In Spanish Law. A species of entail known to Spanish law. 1 New Rec. 119.

MEANDER. To wind as a river or stream. Webster.

The winding or bend of a stream.

To survey a stream according to its meanders or windings. 2 Wisc. 317; 7 Wall. 272.

MEASON-DUE. A corruption of Maison de Dieu.

MEASURE. A means or standard for computing amount. A certain quantity of something, taken for a unit, and which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

The constitution of the United States gives power to congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures." Art. 1, s. 8.

The states, it seems, posses the power to legislate on this subject, or, at least, the existing standards at the adoption of the constitution remain in full force; 3 Story, Const. 21; Rawle, Const. 102; but it has been decided that this constitutional power is exclusive in congress when exercised; 7 How. 282; 29 Penn. 27.

By a resolution of congress, of the 14th of June, 1836, the secretary of the treasury is directed to cause a complete set of all weights and measures adopted as standards, and now either made or in the progress of manufacture, for the use of the several custom-houses and for other purposes, to be delivered to the governor of each state in the Union, or to such person as he may appoint, for the use of the states respectively, to the end that a uniform standard of weights and measures may be established throughout the United States. The act of March 3, 1881, requires the same to be furnished to such agricultural colleges in every state as have received grants of land from the United States. The act of July 28, 1866, authorized the use of the French metric system of weights and measures in this country, and provided that no contract or dealing, or pleading in any court, shall be deemed invalid or liable to objection, because the weights or measures expressed or referred to therein are weights or measures of the metric system; Rev. Stat. § 3569. Annexed to § 3570, q. v., is a schedule which shall be recognized in the construction of contracts, and in all legal proceedings, as establishing, in terms of the weights and measures now in use in the United States, the equivalent of the weights and measures expressed therein in terms of the metric system. See MEASURES, FRENCH, infra; WEIGHT.

Measures, French.

The fundamental, invariable, and standard measure, by which all weights and measures are formed, is called the mètre, a word derived from the Greek, which signifies measure. It is a lineal measure, and is equal to 3 feet, 0 inches, 11$\frac{44}{1000}$ lines, Paris measure, or 3 feet, 3 inches, $\frac{370}{1000}$, English. This unit is divided into ten parts; each tenth, into ten hundredths; each hundredth, into ten thousandths, etc. These divisions, as well as those of all other measures, are infinite. As the standard is to be invariable, something has been sought from which to make it, which is not variable or subject to any change. The fundamental base of the mètre is the quarter of the terrestrial meridian, or the distance from the pole to the equator, which has been divided into ten millions of equal parts, one of which is the length of the mètre. All the other measures are formed from the mètre, as follows:—

MEASURE OF CAPACITY.

The litre. This is the cubic decimètre, or the cube of one-tenth part of a mètre. This is divided by tenths, as the mètre. The measures which amount to more than a single litre are counted by tens, hundreds, thousands, etc. of litres.

MEASURES OF WEIGHTS.

The gramme. This is the weight of a cubic centimètre of distilled water at the temperature of 4° above zero Centigrade.

MEASURES OF SURFACES.

The are, used in surveying. This is a square, the sides of which are of the length of ten mètres, or what is equal to one hundred square mètres. Its divisions are the same as in the preceding measures.

MEASURES OF SOLIDITY.

The stère, used in measuring fire-wood. It is a cubic mètre. Its subdivisions are similar to the preceding. For the measure of other things, the term cube mètre, or cubic mètre, is used, or the tenth, hundredth, etc. of such a cube.

MONEY.

The franc. It weighs five grammes. It is made out of nine-tenths of silver, and one-tenth of copper. Its tenth part is called a decime, and its hundredth part a centime.

It has already been stated that the divisions of these measures are all uniform, namely, by tens, or decimal fractions; they may, therefore, be written as such. Instead of writing,

1 mètre and 1-tenth of a mètre, we may write, 1 m. 1.
2 mètres and 8-tenths,—2 m. 8.
10 mètres and 4-hundredths,—10 m. 04.
7 litres, 1-tenth, and 2-hundredths,—7 lit. 12, etc.

Names have been given to each of these divisions of the principal unit; but these names always indicate the value of the fraction and the unit from which it is derived. To the name of the unit have been prefixed the particles deci for tenth, centi, for hundredth, and milli, for thousandth. They are thus expressed: a décimètre, a décilitre, a décigramme, a décistère, a déciare, a centimètre, a centilitre, a centigramme, etc. The facility with which the divisions of the unit are reduced to the same expression is very apparent; this cannot be done with any other kind of measures.

As it may sometimes be necessary to express great quantities of units, collections have been made of them in tens, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, etc., to which names derived from the Greek have been given, namely, deca, for tens; hecto, for hundreds; kilo, for thousands; and myria, for tens of thousands; they are thus expressed: a decamètre, a decalitre, etc.; a hectomètre, a hectogramme, etc.; a kilomètre, a kilogramme, etc.

The following table will facilitate the reduction of these weights and measures into our own:—

The Mètre is 3.28 feet, or 39.371 in.
Are is 1076.441 square feet.
Litre is 61.028 cubic inches.
Stère is 35.317 cubic feet.
Gramme is 15.4441 grains troy, or 5.6481 drams avoirdupois.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. In Practice. A rule or method by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured; Sedgw. Dam. 29.

The defendant is to make compensation for all the natural and proximate consequences of his wrong, but not for secondary or remote consequences. There are cases in which this principle of compensation is departed from: as, where exemplary damages are awarded, or double or treble damages are allowed by statute. But, in general, the law seeks to give compensation. The measure of this compensation has been somewhat definitely fixed, as to many classes of cases, by rules, of which the following are important and well established:—

Bills of Exchange. The rate of damages to be paid to the holder of a bill of exchange which is dishonored has been the subject of distinct statute regulation in nearly all the states of the Union. The following is an abstract of these regulations, and is believed to contain all in force at the present time:—

Alabama. Damages on inland bills of exchange protested for non-payment or non-acceptance are five per cent., and on foreign bills five per cent., on the sum drawn for.

Damages on protest for non-payment are in lieu of all charges except costs of protests incurred previous to and at the time of giving notice of non-payment; but the holder may recover legal interest on the amount of the bill and damages, from the time at which payment was demanded, and costs of protest.

The same charges are allowed on protest for non-acceptance; but interest is recoverable on the amount of the bill only. If the bill be payable in money of the United States, these damages are computed without reference to the rate of exchange between this state and the place on which such bill is drawn. But if payable in foreign money, then the amount of the bill is to be ascertained by said rate of exchange at the time of demand of payment, or notice of non-payment; Code, 1876, §§ 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, and 2110.

Arkansas. It is provided by the Rev. Stat. (1874), § 556 et seq., that every bill of exchange, expressed to be for value received, drawn or negotiated within the state, payable after date, to order or bearer, which shall be duly presented for acceptance or payment, and protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, shall be subject to damages in the following cases. First, if the bill have been drawn on any person at any place within the state, at the rate of two per cent. on the principal sum specified in the bill; second, if the bill shall be drawn on any person, and payable in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, or Missouri, or at any point on the Ohio river, at the rate of four per cent. on the principal sum; third, if the bill shall have been drawn on any person, and payable at any other place within the United States, at the rate of five per cent. on the principal sum; fourth, if the bill shall have been drawn on any person, and payable at any port or place beyond the United States, at the rate of ten per cent. on the sum specified in the bill.

If any bill of exchange, expressed to be for value received, and made payable to order or bearer, shall be drawn on any person at any place within the state, and accepted and protested for non-payment, there shall be allowed and paid to the holder, by the acceptor, damages in the following cases. First, if the bill be drawn by any person at any place within the state, at the rate of two per cent. on the principal sum; second, if the bill be drawn at any place without the state, but within the United States, at the rate of six per cent. on the sum therein specified; third, if the bill be drawn on any person at any place without the United States, at the rate of ten per cent. on the sum therein specified.

In addition to the damages allowed in the two preceding sections to the holder of any bill of exchange protested for non-payment or non-acceptance, he shall be entitled to costs of protest, and interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum on the amount specified in the bill, from the date of the protest until the amount of the bill shall be paid.

California. The damages allowed on protest for non-payment of bills drawn or negotiated within the state are,—if the bill be drawn on any person in the state, two per cent.; if drawn on any person in any of the United States west of the Rocky Mountains, five per cent.; if drawn on any person in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains, ten per cent.; if drawn on a person in any foreign country, fifteen per cent. 1 Civil Code (1874), § 3235.

These damages are in lieu of interest, protest fees, and all other charges, up to the time of notice of non-payment. But the holder is entitled to recover interest on the amount of the principal sum, and the damages from the time at which notice of protest for non-payment was given, and payment of the principal sum demanded. Id. § 3234.

Connecticut. When drawn on another place in the United States, as follows: when drawn upon persons in the city of New York, two per cent. When in other parts of the state of New York, or the New England states (other than this), New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, or the District of Columbia, three per cent. When on persons in North or South Carolina, Georgia, or Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Kentucky, five per cent. On other states, territories, or districts in the United States, eight per cent. on the principal sum in each case, with interest on the amount of such sum, with the damage after notice and demand. Said damages include all interest and expenses up to notice of protest. From that time the holder is entitled to lawful interest on the principal sum. Said sum is to be computed without reference to the rate of exchange existing at time of demand and notice. Gen. Stat. (1875), § 7.

When the bill is drawn on persons out of the United States, twenty per cent. is said to be the amount which ought reasonably to be allowed; Swift, Ex. 336; 2 Root, 405. There is no statutory provision on the subject.

Delaware. The damages on bills drawn on any person beyond seas and returned unpaid with legal protest, are, as to all concerned, twenty per cent. on the contents of the bill. Rev. Code, 1852, as amended, 1874, 356, § 3.

Florida. Damages on foreign protested bills of exchange shall be at the rate of five per cent. Bush, Dig. Laws, 1872, § 99.

Georgia. On bills drawn or negotiated within the state on persons out of the state but within the United States, five per cent. and interest with protest fee is allowed. On bills drawn on a person out of the United States, ten per cent. damages, interest and protest fees. Code, 1873, §§ 2792-2794.

Illinois. On foreign bills protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, legal interest on the bill from the time it ought to have been paid, with ten per cent. damages in addition, and charges of protest. On bills drawn within the United States or their territories, but out of the state, the same rule applies, except that the damages are only five per cent. Rev. Stat. (1880), 726, §§ 1-12.

Indiana. No damages are allowed on a bill drawn within the state on a person within the state. On a bill drawn on a person at any place out of the state but within the United States five per cent. damages are recoverable; and if on a person out of the United States, ten per cent. No interest or charges prior to protest are allowed; but interest from date of protest may be recovered. And no damages are recoverable of drawer or indorser beyond costs of protest, if the principal sum is paid on notice of protest and demand. As to bills payable within the United States the rate of exchange is not to be taken into account. 1 Rev. Stat. (1876) 636, §§ 12, 7, 8, 9, 10.

Iowa. On bills drawn on a person out of the United States, or in California, Oregon, Nevada, or any of the territories, five per cent. damages, with interest from date of protest, are allowed. If drawn on a person at any other place in the United States out of this state, three per cent. with interest. McClain's Ann. Stat. (1880) sect. 2096.

Kansas. On bills drawn on any person outside the state, within or without the jurisdiction of the United States, six per cent. damages and no other protest damages are allowed. The holder may also recover seven per cent. on the amount of the bill until paid. Comp. Laws (1879), 552.

Kentucky. On bills drawn on a person at any place within the United States, no damages are allowed. Bills drawn on a person out of the United States, and protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per year from the date of protest for not longer than eighteen months, unless payment be sooner demanded from the party to be charged. Such interest is then recoverable up to the time of judgment; and the judgment bears legal interest. No other damages are allowed. Gen. Stat. 1873, 250, c. 22, § 10.

Louisiana. On protest for non-acceptance or for non-payment of bills drawn on foreign countries, ten per cent. is allowed; on bills drawn in other states of the United States, five per cent. Rev. Stat. 1876, tit. Bills and Pr. Notes, sect. 320.

These damages are in lieu of interest and all other charges incurred previous to time of giving notice of non-acceptance or non-payment; but the principal and damages bear interest thereafter. Id. § 321.

If the bill is drawn in United States moneys, the damages are to be ascertained without any reference to the rate of exchange existing between the state and the place on which the bill was drawn; id. § 323; if in a foreign currency, then the amount both of principal and damages is to be estimated by the rate of exchange between the place where and the place on which it was drawn existing at time of demand for payment or notice of non-payment or non-acceptance, unless the value of such foreign currency is fixed by law of the United States. Id. § 324.

Maine. Damages are allowed as follows, in addition to interest: On bills for $100 or more, drawn, accepted, or indorsed in the state, at a place seventy-five miles distant from the place where drawn, one per cent.; on bills for any sum drawn, accepted, or indorsed in the state, if payable in New York or in any state north of it, except Maine, three per cent.; if payable in any Atlantic states south of New York and north of Florida, six per cent.; if payable in any other state, nine per cent. Rev. Stat. 1871, 643, § 35.

As to bills drawn payable out of the United States, there is no statutory provision. It is the usage to allow the holder of the bill the money for which it was drawn, reduced to the currency of the state, at par, and also the charges of protest, with American interest, upon those sums from the time when the bill should have been paid; and the further sum of one-tenth of the money for which the bill was drawn, with interest upon it from the time payment of the dishonored bill was demanded of the drawer. But nothing has been allowed for re-exchange, whether it is below or above par. Per Parsons, Ch. J., 6 Mass. 157, 161. See 6 Mass. 162.

Maryland. No damages are allowed when the bill is drawn in the state on another person in Maryland.

When it is drawn on any person in any other of the United States, eight per cent. damages on the amount of the bill are allowed, and an amount to purchase another bill, at the current exchange, and interest, and losses of protest. Rev. Code (1878), art. xxxv., page 296, § 4.

If the bill be drawn on a foreign country, fifteen per cent. damages are allowed, and the expense of purchasing a new bill, as above, besides interest and costs of protest. Id. § 1.

Massachusetts. When a bill drawn or indorsed within the state, and payable without the limits of the United States (excepting places in Africa beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and places in Asia and the islands thereof), is protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, the party liable on such bill shall pay the same at the current rate of exchange at the time of the demand, and five per cent. damages, with interest, from date of protest, in full of all damages, charges, and expenses. Gen. Stat. 1860, 293, § 11.

When the bill is payable at a place in Africa beyond the Cape of Good Hope, or at any place in Asia or the islands thereof, the party liable shall pay the same at the par value, with twenty per cent., in full of all damages, interest, and charges. Id. § 12.

When the bill is drawn payable without the state, but within the United States, damages are as follows: if payable in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, or New York, two per cent.; if in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, or Delaware, three per cent.; if in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, or the District of Columbia, four per cent.; if in any other of the states or territories of the United States, five per cent. Id. § 13.

When the bill is payable within the state, if it is for not less than $100, and is payable at a place not less than seventy-five miles distant from the place where it is drawn or indorsed, two per cent. damages are payable. Id. 14.

Michigan. When a bill is drawn in the state on a person in the state, no damages are allowed.

When drawn or indorsed within the state, and payable out of it, within the United States, if payable within the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Ohio, or New York, three per cent. interest on the contents of the bill, and charges, are allowed; if payable within the states of Missouri, Kentucky, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, or the District of Columbia, five per cent.; if payable elsewhere in the United States, out of Michigan, ten per cent.; if payable out of the United States, the party liable shall pay the same at the current rate of exchange at the time of demand together with four per cent. on the principal and interest thereon from date of protest, said damages to be in full of all damages, charges, and expenses. 1 Comp. Laws, 408, ch. 31, §§ 8, 9.

Minnesota. When a bill payable out of the United States is protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, the party liable shall pay the bill at the current rate of exchange at the time of demand, and ten per cent. damages, with interest from day of protest, in full of all damages, charges, and expenses. Stat. at Large, 1873, 714, § 7.

When the bill is drawn on a person out of Minnesota, but within the United States, the party shall pay the bill, with interest, and five per cent. damages, together with costs and charges of protest. Id. § 8.

Mississippi. Bills drawn on a person out of the state, but within the United States, draw five per cent. damages, and interest on the principal; bills payable out of the United States, ten per cent., besides interest. In all cases the holder is entitled to all costs and charges. No damages allowed on domestic bills. Rev. Code 1871, § 2231.

Missouri. On bills drawn on a person within the state, the damages are four per cent.; when on a person in another state or territory of the United States, ten per cent.; when on a person out of the United States, twenty per cent. But where a bill payable within the state is paid within twenty days of demand or notice of dishonor, no damages are recoverable thereon. Id. § 543.

Damages so awarded are in lieu of all other charges and expenses. Id. § 544. If the bill be drawn payable in a foreign country, the amount thereof and damages are to be estimated by the rate of exchange between the place where one bill is drawn and on which it is drawn at the time of payment, but if payable in money of the United States no such rate is to be taken into account. Id. §§ 545–546. Rev. Stat. 1879, §§ 539–540.

Nebraska. On bills drawn on a person within the United States and without the state, six per cent. On bills drawn on persons without the United States, twelve per cent. Gen. Stat. 1873, c. 32, § 7.

New York. Upon bills drawn or negotiated within the state upon any person at any place within the six states east of New York, or in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, or the District of Columbia, the damages are three per cent. If drawn upon a person at a place within North or South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, or Tennessee, five per cent. If upon any person in any other state or territory of the United States, or at any other place on, or adjacent to, this continent, and north of the equator, or in any British or foreign possessions in the West Indies, or elsewhere in the western Atlantic ocean, or in Europe, ten per cent. These damages are in lieu of interest, charges of protest, and all other charges incurred previous to, and at the time of, giving notice of non-acceptance or non-payment. But the holder is entitled to interest upon the aggregate amount of the principal sum and damages from time of notice of the protest. If the contents of the bill are expressed in the money of the United States, the amount due and the damages for non-payment are to be ascertained and determined without reference to the rate of exchange existing between New York and the place on which the bill is drawn. But if in the currency of any foreign country, then the amount due, exclusive of the damages, is to be ascertained by the rate of exchange, or the value of such foreign currency, at the time of the demand of payment. 2 Rev. Stat. (1875), 1162, §§ 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22.

These damages are only recoverable by a holder who has purchased the bill or some interest therein for a valuable consideration. Id. 71, § 23.

North Carolina. On bills drawn on a person in any other state or territory of the United States, three per cent. damages are allowed; if drawn on any other place in North America, except the northwest coast, or on any of the West India or Bahama Islands, ten per cent.; if on the island of Madeira, the Canary Islands, the Azores, the Cape Verde Islands, or in any other state or place in Europe, or in South America, fifteen per cent.; if on any other part of the world, twenty per cent. In all cases, interest is recoverable from maturity of the bill. Battle's Rev. 1873, 103, § 8.

Ohio. Damages on protested bills of exchange drawn by any person or corporation within the state are not recoverable on any contract entered into after the passage of the act of April 4, 1859. Stat. 1859, 153.

Oregon. On bills drawn payable out of the United States, and protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, the party liable shall pay the same at the current rate of exchange at the time of demand, and damages at the rate of ten per cent. with interest on the contents of the bill from the date of protest; the amount of contents, damages, and interest to be in full of all damages, charges, and expenses. Gen. Laws 1872, 718, § 8.

On bills drawn within the United States but out of Oregon, the drawer or indorser shall pay the bill with legal interest according to its tenor, and five per cent. damages, with costs and charges of protest. Id. § 9.

Pennsylvania. The following damages are allowed on protest of a bill of exchange for non-payment. They are in lieu of interest and all other charges, except charges of protest, to the time when notice of protest is given and demand of payment made, but are in addition to the charges of protest and interest on the amount of principal, damages, and charges from the time of such notice and demand. If the bill is drawn on a person in any place in the United States or the territories, except California (Upper or Lower), New Mexico, and Oregon, five per cent.; if upon Upper and Lower California, New Mexico, or Oregon, ten per cent.; if upon China, India, or other parts of Asia, Africa, or Islands in the Pacific Ocean, 20 per cent.; if upon Mexico, the Spanish Main, West Indies, or other Atlantic islands, east coast of South America, Great Britain, or other places in Europe, ten per cent.; if upon the west coast of South America, 15 per cent.; if upon any other part of the world, ten per cent. Act May 13, 1850, § 6 (P. L. 746), 1 Purd. Dig., tit. Bills of Exch. p. 158, pl. 1.

The amount of the bill and damages are ascertained by the rate of exchange or value of the currency mentioned in the bill at the time of notice of protest and demand of payment. Act March 30, 1821, § 2, 7 Sm. L. 435; Purd. Dig. 159, pl. 2.

Rhode Island. On foreign bills drawn or indorsed within the state and returned from any place without the United States, protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, the damages are ten per cent. and charges of protest, and the bill carries interest at six per cent. from date of protest. The same rule applies to inland bills, except that the damages are five per cent. only. Gen. Stat. 1872, c. 129, sec. 1, 3.

South Carolina. On bills drawn on persons out of the state and resident in the United States, ten per cent. On bills drawn on persons resident elsewhere in North America, or in any of the West India Islands twelve and a half per cent. On all bills drawn on persons in another part of the world, 15 per cent. The holder is also entitled to recover all charges incidental thereto. Rev. Stat. 1873, 321, sect. 19.

Tennessee. On bills payable out of the state and protested for non-payment, damages in addition to interest and charges of protest are recoverable as follows: if the bill was drawn on a person in any of the states (except Tennessee) or territories of the United States, three per cent.; if on any other state or place in North America, bordering upon the Gulf of Mexico, or in any of the West India Islands, fifteen per cent.; if on any other part of the world, twenty per cent. See 3 Sneed, 140; Stat. 1871, § 1963. The damages are in lieu of interest and all other charges except those of protest to the time when notice of protest and demand shall have been given, but interest shall be computed from that time on the principal, together with the damages and charges of protest. Id. § 1964.

Texas. The holder of any protested draft or bill of exchange drawn within the state and payable beyond the limits of it, may recover ten per cent. as damages, with interest and costs of suit. But this provision shall not be construed to embrace drafts drawn by persons other than merchants upon their agents or factors. Laws 1870, p. 151, art. 236, Act of Dec. 24, 1851; 12 Laws, 23.

Virginia. When a bill of exchange drawn or indorsed within this state is protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, there shall be paid by the party liable for the principal of such bill, in addition to what else he is liable for, damages upon the principal at the rate of three per cent. if the bill be payable out of Virginia and within the United States; at the rate of ten per cent. if the bill be payable without the United States. Code 1873, 98, § 9.

Wisconsin. On bills drawn payable without the United States, damages are allowed at the rate of five per cent., with interest on the contents of the bill from the date of protest. These damages and interest are in full of all damages, charges, and expenses. On bills drawn payable out of the state and in any state or territory of the United States, damages at the rate of five per cent. are allowed, with interest on the bill according to its tenor, and costs and charges of protest. Rev. Stat. 1878, §§ 1782, 1683.

Carriers. Upon a total failure to deliver goods, the carrier is liable for the value of the goods at their place of destination, with interest from the time they should have been delivered, deducting the freight; 12 S. & R. 186; 8 Johns. 213; 14 id. 170; 15 id. 24; 14 Ill. 146; 24 N. H. 297; 1 Cal. 108; 10 La. An. 412; 9 Rich. So. C. 465; 17 Mass. 62; 46 N. Y. 462; 74 Ill. 249; 28 Ohio St. 358; 87 Ill. 195; 64 Mo. 47; 27 Wisc. 327; 3 Mo. App. 27; 98 Mass. 550; 41 Miss. 671; 26 Ga. 122; 13 Md. 164. Upon a failure to take the goods at all for transportation, he is liable for the difference between the value at the place of shipment and at the place of destination, less his freight; or, if another conveyance can be found, the difference between the freight agreed on with defendant, and the sum (if greater) which the shipper would be compelled to pay another carrier; 10 Watts, 418; 4 N. Y. 340; 1 Abb. Adm. 119; 58 Barb. 216; 56 Penn. 231; 34 Mich. 439. Upon a delay to deliver the goods, the plaintiff is entitled to an indemnity for his loss incurred by the delay, taking into account any fall in the market occurring between the time when the property should have been delivered by the carrier and the time when it actually was; 12 N. Y. 509; 22 Barb. 278; 35 N. H. 390; 54 Ill. 58; 1 Disney, 23; 64 Ill. 143; 20 Wisc. 594; 106 Mass. 468; 48 N. H. 455; 47 N. Y. 29; 14 Mich. 489; 49 Vt. 255.

Collision. The general principle followed by the courts of admiralty in cases of collision between vessels is that the damages awarded against the offending vessel must be sufficient to restore the other to the condition she was in at the time of the collision, if restoration is practicable. Both damages to vessel and cargo are to be made good. But hypothetical and consequential damages are excluded. The loss of the use of the injured vessel while undergoing repairs is proper to be included. If the injured vessel is a total loss, her market value at the time is the measure of damages. Consult Abbott, Pr. 386; Olc. 188, 246, 388; 444, 505; 13 How. 106; 17 id. 170; 2 Wall. Jr. 52; 6 McLean, 258. If the fault is equal on the part of both vessels, the loss is to be divided between them; 1 Sprague, 128; Abb. Adm. 233; 6 McLean, 221; 14 Wall. 345; 21 Wall. 389.

Contracts for Personalty. The cardinal principles governing all these cases are (1) actual compensation will only be given for actual loss. (2) The contract itself furnishes the measure of damages. The complications of business render it impracticable here to insert even an abstract of the decisions on this very important branch of the law. For full and accurate details, the reader is referred to Sedgw. Dam. 199, etc.

Contracts for Land. Where a vendor of real property fails to convey according to his contract, a distinction is taken, in many of the cases, growing out of the motive of the party in default. If he acted in good faith and supposed he had good title and could convey, the purchaser's damages have been limited to the amount of his advance, if any, interest, and expenses incurred examining the title; 2 W. Blackst. 1078; 10 B. & C. 416; 8 C. B. 133; 2 Wend. 399; 4 Denio, 546; 6 Barb. 646; 2 Bibb, 415; 9 Md. 250; 11 Penn. 127; 69 N. Y. 201; 40 N. Y. 60; 2 Bibb, 415; 72 Penn. 160. But in some courts the rule is the reverse, and the purchaser is held to be entitled to the difference between the amount he has agreed to pay and the price at time of breach; 65 Me. 87; 113 Mass. 538; 37 Iowa, 134; 6 Wheat. 109; 3 Gray, 557; 29 La. An. 286. But in case of a wilful or fraudulent refusal to convey, the purchaser has been held entitled to the value of the land, with interest; 6 B. & C. 31; 1 Exch. 850; 6 Wheat. 109; 2 Bibb, 40, 434; 9 Leigh, 111. See 21 Me. 484; 21 Vt. 77; 1 Iowa, 26; 9 Ala. N. S. 252; 19 id. 184; 1 Gill & J. 440; 11 Ired. 99; 14 B. Monr. 364; 35 Penn. 23; 67 Penn. 126; 2 Wend. 399.

When the purchaser refuses to perform, the measure has been held, in England, to be the difference between the price fixed in the contract and the value of the land at the time fixed for the delivery of the deed; 7 M. & W. 474. But the rule does not appear to be well settled in this country. The English rule has been adopted in New Hampshire, 51 N. H. 107; Massachusetts, 101 Mass. 409; Pennsylvania, 67 Penn. 126; and Ohio, 22 Ohio St. 172; in New York, Maine, Vermont, and other states, the question seems undecided; 5 Cow. 306; 4 Greenl. 258; 21 Wend. 457; 18 Vt. 27.

Eviction. The damages recoverable for an eviction, in an action for breach of covenants of seisin and warranty in a deed, are the consideration-money, interest thereon, and the costs, if any, of defending the eviction, in Arkansas, 1 Ark. 323; Georgia, 17 Ga. 602; 24 Ga. 533; Illinois, 2 Ill. 310; 41 Ill. 413; Indiana, 2 Blackf. 147; 58 Ind. 392; Kentucky, 4 Dana, 253; Mississippi, 31 Miss. 433; Missouri, 1 Mo. 552; 19 id. 435; 23 Mo. 437; North Carolina, 2 Dev. 30; 76 N. C. 35; New Hampshire, 25 N. H. 229; 30 id. 531; New Jersey, 4 Halst. 139; New York, 4 Johns. 1; 13 id. 50; 18 Barb. 267; 69 N. Y. 434; Ohio, 3 Ohio, 211; see 8 id. 49; 10 id. 317; Pennsylvania, 4 Dall. 441; 12 Penn. 372; 27 id. 288; South Carolina, 1 McCord, 585; 2 id. 413; Tennessee, 2 Wheat. 64; 8 Humphr. 647; Virginia, 2 Rand. 132; 2 Leigh, 451; 11 id. 261; Texas, 44 Tex. 400; Iowa, 5 Iowa, 287; 44 Iowa, 249; California, 33 Cal. 299; while in Connecticut, 14 Conn. 245; Louisiana, 13 La. 143; Maine, 12 Me. 1; 66 Me. 557; Massachusetts, 119 Mass. 500; 108 Mass. 270; and Vermont, 12 Vt. 481; 30 Vt. 242, it is the value of the land at the time of eviction, together with the expenses of the suit, etc. See 2 Greenl. Ev. § 264; 4 Kent, 474.

Incumbrances. On a breach of a covenant in a deed against incumbrances, the purchaser is entitled to recover his expenses incurred in extinguishing the incumbrance; 22 Pick. 490; 1 Duer, 331; 7 Johns. 358; 13 id. 105; 16 id. 122; 34 Me. 422; 4 Ind. 130; 109 Mass. 299; 7 R. I. 538; 51 Ill. 373; 47 Mo. 157; 20 N. Y. 191; 41 Iowa, 204; 48 N. Y. 532; 59 Mo. 488.

Patents. When the plaintiff has sought his profit in the form of a royalty paid by licensees, and there are no peculiar circumstances in the case, the amount to be recovered will be regulated by that standard. If that test cannot be applied, he will be entitled to an amount which will compensate him for his injury; 17 Wall. 462. Damages can now be recovered in equity; R. S. § 4921. Even though the infringer, by his improvidence, made no profit; 97 U. S. 348. In an action at law, the court may treble the damages; 93 U. S. 64. See full article in 13 Am. L. Rev. 1.

Sales. Where the seller of chattels fails to perform his agreement, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract-price and the market-value of the article at the time and place fixed for delivery; 5 N. Y. 537; 12 id. 41; 3 Mich. 55; 4 Tex. 289; 12 Ill. 184; 3 Wheat. 200; 44 Me. 255; 6 McLean, 102; 41 Miss. 368; 24 Wend. 322; 3 Col. 373; 48 Penn. 407; 33 Vt. 92; 52 Barb. 427. The same rule applies as to the deficiency where there is a part-delivery only; 16 Q. B. 941; 23 How. 149; 41 N. H. 86; 6 Whart. 299; 51 Penn. 175; 21 Pick. 378; 12 Wis. 276; 5 Hill, 472; 2 Minn. 229. Where, however, the purchaser has paid the price in advance, some of the cases, particularly in England and New York, allow the highest market-price up to the time of the trial; 27 Barb. 424; 26 Penn. 143; 13 Tex. 324. Where the purchaser refuses to take and pay for the goods, the seller may sell them fairly, and charge the buyer with the difference between the contract-price and the best market-price obtainable within a reasonable time after the refusal; 45 Ill. 79; 5 S. & R. 19; 30 N. Y. 549; 3 Metc. (Ky.) 555; 9 B. Mon. 69. Where the goods are delivered and received, but do not correspond in quality with a warranty given, the vendee may recover the difference between the value of the goods delivered and the value they would have had if they had corresponded with the contract; 4 Gray, 457; 5 Harr. 233; 26 Ga. 704; 21 Ill. 180; 29 Md. 142; 39 Me. 287; 14 N. Y. 597; 29 Ala. 558; 20 Ill. 184. The above are merely examples of a most important branch of the law. See generally Sedgwick, Mayne, Damages.

MEDIATE POWERS. Those incident to primary powers, given by a principal to his agent. For example: the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle amounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits: these subordinate powers are sometimes called mediate powers. Story, Ag. § 58. See 1 Campb. 43, note; 4 id. 163; 6 S. & R. 149.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE. Testimony given by physicians or surgeons in their professional capacity as experts, or derived from the statements of writers of medical or surgical works.

This kind of evidence was first recognized by Charles V. of Germany, and incorporated in the "Caroline Code," framed at Ratisbon in 1532, wherein it was ordained that the opinion of medical men—at first surgeons only—should be received in cases of death by violent or unnatural means, when suspicion existed of a criminal agency. The publication of this code encouraged the members of the medical profession to renewed activity, tending greatly to advance their science and the cause of justice generally. Many books soon appeared on the subject of medical jurisprudence, and the importance of medical evidence was more fully understood. Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 285.

The evidence of the medical witness is strictly that of an expert; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 275; 10 How. Pr. 289; 2 Conn. 514; 1 Chandl. Wisc. 178; 2 Ohio, 452; 27 N. H. 157; 17 Wend. 136; 7 Cush. 219; 1 Phill. Ev. 780; 1 Whart. Ev. § 441.

The professional witness should not be permitted to make up an opinion to be given in evidence from what other witnesses say of the facts in the case; because under such circumstances he takes the place of the jury as to the credibility of the witness, and in that case he also determines what part of the testimony of other witnesses properly applies to the case,—a duty that belongs to the court. In the case of Rogers, 7 Metc. 505, C. J. Shaw presiding, the court held that the proper question to be put to the professional witness was: "If the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, whether in his [the witness's] opinion the party was insane, and what the nature and character of that insanity; and what state did they indicate, and what he would expect would be the conduct of such a person in any supposed circumstance." Under this ruling the medical witness passes upon the condition of the person whose condition is at issue. To do it correctly, he must hear all the evidence that the jury hears; he must judge as to the relevance of the evidence of others, and make an application of the facts that legally and properly bear upon the case to it, and reject all others: in short, he is judge and jury in the case. Since the trial of Rogers, a different rule has been adopted by the courts in Massachusetts. In the case of the United States vs. McGlue, reported in 1 Curt., Mr. Justice Curtis instructed the jury that medical experts "were not allowed to give opinions in the case. It is not the province of the expert to draw inferences of fact from the evidence, but simply to disclose his opinion on a known or hypothetical state of facts; and, therefore, the counsel on each side have put to the physicians such states of fact as they deem warranted by the evidence, and have taken their opinions thereon. If you consider any of these states of fact put to the medical witness are proved, then the opinions thereon are admissible to be weighed by you; otherwise their opinions are not applicable to the case." See 127 Mass. 414. In the McNaughten Case, 10 Cl. & F. 210, the twelve judges held in the same way. The attention of the witness being called to a definite state of facts constituting a hypothetical case, his opinion is unembarrassed by any collateral questions or considerations, and the jury, under the instructions of the court, determines how far the facts sustain the hypothetical case, and, consequently, how far the opinion of the witness applies to the case under investigation. See Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 311.

The medical witness is not a privileged witness. A difference of opinion has existed among medico-legal writers, and perhaps still exists. Fonblanque, a distinguished English barrister, holds that when the ends of justice absolutely require the disclosure, a medical witness is not only bound but compellable to give evidence on all matters that will enlighten the case; and in the important case of the Duchess of Kingston, Lord Mansfield said, "In a court of justice medical men are bound to divulge secrets when required to do so. If a medical man was voluntarily to reveal these secrets, to be sure he would be guilty of a breach of honor and of great indiscretion; but to give that information, which, by the law of the land, he is bound to do, will never be imputed to him as any indiscretion whatever." In this case Sir C. Hawkins, who had attended the duchess as medical man, was compelled to disclose what had been committed to him in confidence. While this is the common-law rule, the states of New York, Missouri, Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, and perhaps some others, have enacted statutory provisions relieving the physician from the obligation of the common-law rule to reveal professional secrets. The language used in the statutes generally is, "No person duly authorized to practise physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending a patient in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon." Under this statute, in New York it has been held that when a physician was consulted by the defendant in an action on the case for seduction, as to the means of producing abortion, he cannot claim the protection of the statute, not being privileged; 21 Wend. 79; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 320. The privilege of the statute may be waived by the patient; 14 Wend. 637; but it does not apply to testamentary inquiries; 1 Bradf. Surr. 221; 1 Whart. Ev. § 606. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

Medical books are not received in evidence. They are subject to the same rule that applies to scientific and other professional books. Even the elementary works on law are not admissible in evidence as to what the law is; 5 C. & P. 73; 2 C. & K. 270. An expert may cite authorities as agreeing with him, and may refresh his memory by referring to standard works in his specialty; 40 Ind. 516; but such extracts from books are not primary proof; 117 Mass. 122; and when an expert cites certain works as authority, they may be put in evidence against him; 30 Wis. 614. But books of exact science, if duly sworn to by their authors, or shown to be authoritative by those dealing in business with the particular subject, are the best evidence; 1 Whart. Ev. § 667. See BOOKS OF SCIENCE. In the case of Commonwealth vs. Wilson, 1 Gray, 338, Shaw, C. J., said, "Facts or opinions on the subject of insanity, as on any other subject, cannot be laid before the jury except by the testimony under oath of persons skilled in such matter. Whether stated in the language of the court or of the counsel in a former case, or cited from works of legal or medical writers, they are still statements of facts, and must be proved on oath. The opinion of a lawyer on such a question of fact is entitled to no more weight than that of any other person not an expert. The principles governing the admissibility of such evidence have been fully considered by this court since the trial of Rogers; and the more recent English authorities are against the admission of such evidence." 6 C. & P. 556; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 332; 49 N. H. 120; but in a later case it was held that common observers, having special opportunities for observation, may testify as to their opinions as conclusions of fact, although they are not experts, where the facts are such as men in general are capable of understanding; 117 Mass. 122; and in Pennsylvania, after a non-professional witness has stated the facts upon which his opinion is founded, he is permitted to state his opinion as to the sanity of a testator; 68 Penn. 342.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE. That science which applies the principles and practice of medicine to the elucidation and settlement of doubtful questions which arise in courts of law.

These questions are properly embraced in five different classes:—

The first includes questions arising out of the relations of sex: as, impotence and sterility, hermaphroditism, rape, pregnancy, legitimacy, delivery.

The second, injuries inflicted upon the living organization: as, infanticide, wounds, poisons, persons found dead.

The third, those arising out of disqualifying diseases: as, the different forms of mental alienation.

The fourth, those arising out of deceptive practices: as, feigned diseases.

The fifth is made up of miscellaneous questions: as, age, identity, presumption of seniorship, life assurance, and medical evidence.

The French writers are numerous: Briand, Bleasy, Esquirol, Georget, Falret, Trebuchet, Marc, and others, have written treatises or published papers on this subject; the learned Fodéré published a work entitled "Les Lois eclairées par les Sciences physiques, ou Traité de Médecine légale et d'Hygiène publique;" the "Annale d'Hygiène et de Médecine légale" is one of the most valued works on this subject. Among the Germans may be found Rose's Manual on Medico-Legal Dissection, Metzger's Principles of Legal Medicine, and others. The reader is referred for a list of authors and their works on Medical Jurisprudence to Dupin, Profession d'Avocat, tom. ii. p. 343, art. 1617 to 1636 bis. MEDIATORS OF QUESTIONS. Six persons authorized, under statute in the reign of Edw. III., to certify and settle, before the mayor and officers of the staple, questions arising among merchants, relating to the wool trade. Toml. (STAPLE.)

MEDICINE-CHEST. A box containing an assortment of medicines.

Statutory provisions in the United States require all vessels above a certain size to keep a medicine-chest. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 106; 2 id. 971.

MEDIETAS LINGUÆ (Lat. half-tongue). A term denoting that a jury is to be composed of persons one-half of whom speak the English and one-half a foreign language. See JURY.

MEDITATIO FUGÆ. In Scotch Law. If a creditor apprehends that his debtor is about to fly the country, he may appear before a judge and swear that he believes his debtor to be in meditatione fugæ, when a warrant imprisoning him will be granted, which, however, is taken off on the debtor's finding caution, i. e. surety. Bell, Moz. & W.

MEETINGS. A distinction is made between general stated meetings of a corporation and special meetings. The former occur at stated times usually fixed by the constitution and by-laws; the latter are called for special purposes or business; see 11 Vt. 385. Generally speaking, every member of a corporation has a right to be present at every meeting thereof, and to be notified of the meeting, in some way; 22 N. Y. 128; 2 H. L. C. 789. An omission to give the required notice will generally, though it be accidental, invalidate the proceedings; 7 B. & C. 695. When all who are entitled to be present at a meeting are present, whether notice has been given or not, and no objection is made on account of the want of formalities, there is a waiver of the want of notice; 11 Wend. 604; 7 Ind. 647; but if any one member is absent or refuses to give his consent, the proceedings are invalidated; 14 Gray, 440. Notice should be personal; 7 Conn. 214; in writing, and signed by the proper person; 23 N. J. Eq. 216; should state the time and place of meeting, and, if a special meeting, the business to be transacted; 14 Gray, 440; L. R. 2 Ch. 191. Ordinarily, notice of stated meetings is not required; 22 N. Y. 128.

All proceedings carried on by the members of a corporation, while sitting outside of the state which created it, are void; 45 Ga. 34; 38 Me. 343; but this rule does not apply to the meetings of the directors of a corporation; 27 Ohio St. 343; 63 Barb. 415; and a corporation created by the laws of two states, may hold its meetings and transact its business in either state; 31 Ohio St. 317.

MELANCHOLIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A name given by the ancients to a species of partial intellectual mania, now more generally known by the name of monomania. It bore this name because it was supposed to be always attended by dejection of mind and gloomy ideas. See MANIA.

MELIORATIONS. In Scotch Law. Improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Com. 73.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM VEL INQUIRENDO. In Old English Practice. A writ which in certain cases issued after an imperfect inquisition returned on a capias utlagatum in outlawry. This melius inquirendum commanded the sheriff to summon another inquest in order that the value, etc. of lands, etc. might be better or more correctly ascertained.

MEMBER. A limb of the body useful in self-defence. Membrum est pars corporis habens destinatam operationem in corpore. Co. Litt. 126 a.

An individual who belongs to a firm, partnership, company, or corporation. See CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP.

One who belongs to a legislative body, or other branch of the government; as, a member of the house of representatives; a member of the court.

A child living with the father does not necessarily cease to be a member of his family on reaching his majority; 79 Ill. 584. A statutory provision that all the members of a company shall, in certain cases, be liable, is not confined to such as were members when the debts were contracted; 12 Metc. 3.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. A member of the senate or house of representatives of the United States.

MEMBERS. In English Law. Places where a custom-house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chitty, Com. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA (Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Parchment; a skin of parchment. Vocab. Jur. Utr.; Du Cange. The English rolls were composed of several skins, sometimes as many as forty-seven. Hale, Hist. Comm. Law, 17.

MEMORANDUM (Lat. from memorare, to remember). An informal instrument recording some fact or agreement: so called from its beginning, when it was made in Latin. It is sometimes commenced with this word though written in English: as, "Memorandum, that it is agreed;" or it is headed with the words, Be it remembered that, etc. The term memorandum is also applied to the cause of an instrument.

In English Practice. The commencement of a record in king's bench, now written in English, "Be it remembered," and which gives name to the whole clause.

It is only used in proceedings by bill, and not in proceedings by original, and was introduced to call attention to what was considered the bye-business of the court. 2 Tidd, Pract. 775. Memorandum is applied, also, to other forms and documents in English practice: e. g. memorandum in error, a document alleging error in fact and accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 158. Kerr's Act. Law. Proceedings in error are now abolished in civil cases; Jud. Act, 1875. Also, a memorandum of appearance, etc., in the general sense of an informal instrument, recording some fact or agreement.

A memorandum of association is a document subscribed by seven or more persons for the purpose of forming themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. 3 Steph. Com. 20.

A writing required by the Statute of Frauds. Vide "Note or memorandum."

A memorandum of the terms of an agreement was signed by plaintiff but not by defendant; the latter subsequently wrote to plaintiff referring to "our agreement for the hire of your carriage," and "my monthly payment." There was no other arrangement between the parties, to which these expressions could refer. Held, that, the letter and the document containing the terms of the arrangement, together constituted a note and memorandum signed by defendant, within the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds; 45 L. J. Rep. N. S. 348; S. C. 25 Alb. L. J. 70. See 99 U. S. 100; 32 N. J. Eq. 828; 66 Ind. 474.

In the Law of Evidence. A witness may refresh his memory by referring to a written instrument, memorandum, or entry in a book, and may be compelled to do so, if the writing is in court; 20 Pick. 441; 11 S. C. 195. The writing need not be an original or made by the witness himself, provided, after inspecting it, he can speak from his own recollection, not relying wholly upon the writing; 10 N. H. 544; 14 Cent. L. J. 119; 10 N. C. 167; 39 Mich. 108. And a writing may be referred to by witness, even if inadmissible as evidence itself; 8 East, 273. A witness may refer to a writing which he remembers having seen before, and which he knew at that time to be correct, although he has no recollection of the facts contained therein; so, when he neither recognizes the writing nor remembers anything therein, but yet, knowing it to be genuine, his mind is so convinced, that he is enabled to swear to the fact, as where a banker's clerk is shown a bill of exchange with his own writing upon it; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 436–439. See 1 Houst. Cr. C. 476; 76 N. Y. 604; 18 Hun, 443; 39 Mich. 405; 25 Minn. 160.

In Insurance. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer.

Policies of insurance on risks of transportation by water generally contain exceptions of all liability from loss on certain articles other than total, or for contributions for general average; and for liability for particular average on certain other articles supposed to be perishable or specially liable to damage, under specified rates on each, varying from three per cent. to twenty, and for any loss whatever under three or five per cent. Some seventy or eighty articles are subject to these exceptions of particular average in the divers forms of policy in use in different places; 1 Phill. Ins. § 54, n. These exceptions were formerly introduced under a "memorandum," or "N. B.," and hence have been called "memorandum articles," and the body of exceptions the "memorandum." The list of articles and rates of exceptions vary much in different places, and from time to time at the same place; 19 N. Y. 272.

The construction of these exceptions has been a pregnant subject in jurisprudence. 1 Stark. 436; 3 Campb. 429; 4 Maule & S. 503; 5 id. 47; 1 Ball & B. 358; 3 B. & Ad. 20; 5 id. 225; 4 B. & C. 736; 7 id. 219; 8 Bingh. 458; 16 E. L. & Eq. 461; 1 Bingh. N. C. 526; 2 id. 383; 3 id. 266; 3 Pick. 46; 3 Penn. 1550; 4 Term, 783; 7 id. 210; 5 B. & P. 213; 7 Johns. 385; 2 Johns. Cas. 246; 5 Mart. La. N. S. 289; 2 Sumn. 366; 16 Me. 207; 31 id. 455; 1 Wheat. 219; 6 Mass. 465; 15 East, 559; 9 Gill & J. 337; 7 Cra. 415; 8 id. 84; 1 Stor. 463; Stevens, Av. p. 214; Benecke, Av. by Phill. 402; 3 Conn. 357; 19 N. Y. 272.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. It is not unusual among merchants, when one makes a temporary loan to another, to give the lender a check on a bank, with the express or implied agreement that it shall be redeemed by the maker himself, and that it shall not be presented at the bank for payment: such understanding being denoted by the word memorandum upon it. If passed to a third person, it will be valid in his hands like any other check; 4 Du. N. Y. 122; 11 Paige, Ch. 612; 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 200.

MEMORIAL. A petition or representation made by one or more individuals to a legislative or other body. When such instrument is addressed to a court, it is called a petition.

MEMORIZATION.

In the case of Coleman vs. Wathen, 5 Term, 245, it was held by Buller, J., that no action could lie for pirating a play by means of memorization alone. On the strength of this decision, an injunction was refused to restrain the representation of a play in the unreported case of Wallack vs. Barney Williams, N. Y. Sup. Ct. 1st Dist. S. T. 1867. The reasoning upon which these cases are based is not satisfactory. While the owner of a play has no power to prevent one who listens to its production, from committing it to memory, and repeating it for his own or his friends' amusement, he should certainly be able to restrain its production by another for purposes of profit, whether it be pirated in one way or another. See article in 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 207; 2 Morg. Law of Lit. 330.

MEMORY. Understanding; a capacity to make contracts, a will, or to commit a crime, so far as intention is necessary.

Memory is sometimes employed to express the capacity of the understanding, and sometimes its power; when we speak of a retentive memory, we use it in the former sense; when of a ready memory, in the latter. Shelford, Lun. Intr. 29, 30.

The reputation, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

This memory, when good, is highly prized by the relations of the deceased; and it is therefore libellous to throw a shade over the memory of the dead, when the writing has a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relations of the deceased to avenge the insult offered to the family. 4 Term, 126; 5 Co. 125; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 1.

MEMORY, TIME OF. According to the English common law, which has been altered by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, the time of memory commenced from the reign of Richard the First, A. D. 1189. 2 Bla. Com. 31.

But proof of a regular usage for twenty years, not explained or contradicted, is evidence upon which many public and private rights are held, and sufficient for a jury in finding the existence of an immemorial custom or prescription; 2 Saund. 175 a, d; Peake, Ev. 336; 2 Price, Exch. 450; 4 id. 198.

MENACE. A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another.

When menaces to do an injury to another have been made, the party making them may, in general, be held to bail to keep the peace; and when followed by any inconvenience or loss, the injured party has a civil action against the wrong-doer. Comyns, Dig. Battery (D); Viner, Abr.; Bacon, Abr. Assault; Co. Litt. 161 a, 162 b, 253 b; 2 Lutw. 1428. See THREAT.

MENIAL. This term is applied to servants who live under their master's roof. See stat. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21; 1 Bla. Com. 425.

MENSA (Lat.). An obsolete term, comprehending all goods and necessaries for livelihoods.

MENSA ET THORO. See SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO.

MENSURA DOMINI REGIS. The measure of our lord the king, being the weights and measures established under King Richard I. in his parliament at Westminster, 1197. 1 Bla. Com. 275; Moz. & W.

MENU, LAWS OF. Institutes of Hindu law, dating back probably three thousand years, though the Hindus believe they were promulgated "in the beginning of time, by Menu, son, or grandson, of Brahma, the first of created beings, and not the oldest only, but the holiest of legislators."

"Such rules of the system as relate to man in his social relations will be found singularly wise and just, and not a few of them embodying the substance of important rules, which regulate the complex system of business in our day." Our knowledge of these laws is derived chiefly from the translation of Sir William Jones, in the seventh and eighth volumes of his works, and a translation by A. L. Deslong Champs, 1833. See Maine's Anc. L.; 9 Am. Law Reg. o. s. 717.

MERCANTILE LAW. That branch of law which defines and enforces the rights, duties, and liabilities arising out of mercantile transactions and relations. As to the origin of this branch of law, see LAW MERCHANT; and for its various principles, consult the articles upon the various classes of commercial property, relations, and transactions.

MERCANTILE LAW AMENDMENT ACTS. The statutes 19 & 20 Vict. cc. 60 and 97, passed mainly for the purpose of assimilating the mercantile law of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

MERCATUM (Lat.). A market. Du Cange. A contract of sale. Id. Supplies for an army (commeatus). Id. See Bracton, 56; Fleta, l. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14.

MERCEN-LAGE. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bla. Com. 65.

MERCES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from pensio, it means the rent of farms (prædia rustici). Calvinus Lex.

MERCHANDISE (Lat. merx). A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail: as, dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support, but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. See Pardessus, n. 8; Dig. 13. 3. 1; 19. 4. 1; 50, 16, 66; 8 Pet. 277; 6 Wend. 335.

Mere evidences of value, as bank-bills, are not merchandise. "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise." Story, J., 2 Stor. C. C. 10, 53, 54. See 2 Muss. 467; 20 Pick. 9; 3 Metc. Mass. 367; 2 Parsons, Contr. 331, note w.

"Goods, wares, and merchandise," has been held to embrace animate, as well as inanimate, property, as oxen; 20 Mich. 353; or horses; 22 Vt. 655. "Merchandise" may include a curricle, Anth. N. P. 157; or shares in a joint-stock company; 60 Me. 430; 2 Mo. App. 51.

MERCHANT (Lat. mercator, merx). A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Webster, Dict.; Lex Mercatoria, 28. These are known by the name of shipping-merchants. See Comyns, Dig. Merchant (A); Dy. 279 b; Bacon, Abr. Merchant.

One whose business it it is to buy and sell merchandise: this applies to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise. 1 W. & S. 469; 2 Salk. 445.

Merchants, in the Statute of Limitations, means not merely those trading beyond sea, as formerly held; 1 Chanc. Cas. 152; 1 W.

& S. 469; but whether it includes common retail tradesmen, quære; 1 Mod. 238; 4 Scott, N. R. 819; 2 Parsons, Contr. 369, 370. See, also, 5 Cra. 15; 6 Pet. 151; 12 id. 300; 5 Mas. 505; 2 Duv. 107; 9 Bush, 569.

According to an old authority, there are four species of merchants: namely, merchant adventurers, merchants dormant, merchant travellers, and merchant residents; 2 Brownl. 99. See, generally, 9 Salk. 445; Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; 1 Bla. Com. 75, 260; 1 Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 78; 2 Show. 326; Bracton, 334.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS. Certain English statutes, beginning with the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 131, whereby a general superintendence of merchant shipping is vested in the board of trade. Provisions are made for the registration, etc. of merchant ships, the discipline and protection of seamen, the regulation of pilotage, etc.

MERCHANTABLE. This word in a contract means, generally, vendible in market. Merchandise is vendible because of its fitness to serve its proper purpose; 11 Ct. Cl. 680; 34 Barb. 204, 206.

MERCHANT APPRAISERS. Merchants selected, under the revenue laws, to appraise the value of imports, where the importer is dissatisfied with the official appraisement.

In the larger ports, the board usually consists of a merchant selected by the importer, and a permanent appraiser selected by the collector; 9 Stat. at L. 630; Rev. Stat. §§ 2609, 2946, 2610; 24 How. 508, 521.

MERCHANTMAN. A ship or vessel employed in the merchant-service.

MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS. Accounts between merchant and merchant, which must be current, mutual and unsettled, consisting of debts and credits for merchandise. 6 How. (Miss.) 328; 4 Cra. C. C. 696; 6 Pet. 151.

The statutes of limitation in most of the states contain an exception in favor of such accounts, following the stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 16, § 3, which, however, was repealed in England by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 9, and has not been retained in the latest revised acts of limitation in this country. Whether the exception applied to accounts in which there had been no item for six years, has been the subject of conflicting adjudication, but was settled affirmatively in England, in Robinson v. Alexander, 8 Bligh, N. S. 352. See 8 M. & W. 781; 20 Johns. 576; 7 Cra. 350; 61 Ala. 41; 24 Minn. 17; 30 N. J. Eq. 254; Ang. Lim. ch. XV.

MERCY (Law Fr. merci; Lat. misericordia).

In Practice. The arbitrament of the king or judge in punishing offences not directly censured by law. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2; Jacob, Law Dict. So, to be in mercy, signifies to be liable to punishment at the discretion of the judge.

In Criminal Law. The total or partial remission of a punishment to which a convict is subject. When the whole punishment is remitted, it is called a pardon; when only a part of the punishment is remitted, it is frequently a conditional pardon; or, before sentence, it is called clemency or mercy. See Rutherforth, Inst. 224; 1 Kent, 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

As to the construction of "mercy" in the exception to the Sunday laws in favor of deeds of necessity and mercy, see 2 Pars. Contr. 262, notes.

MERE (Fr.). Mother. This word is frequently used, as, in ventre sa mère, which signifies a child unborn, or in the womb.

MERE MOTION. See EX MERO MOTU.

MERE RIGHT. A right of property without possession. 2 Bla. Com. 197.

MERGER. The absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist but the greater is not increased.

In Estates. When a greater estate and less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the latter. For example, if there be a tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and no longer exists; but they must be to one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right; 2 Bla. Com. 177; Latch, 153; Poph. 166; 6 Madd. 119; 1 Johns. Ch. 417; 3 id. 53; 3 Mass. 172.

The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate; and the greater or only subsisting estate continues, after the merger, precisely of the same quantity and extent of ownership as it was before the accession of the estate which is merged, and the lesser estate is extinguished; Prest. Conv. 7; Wash. R. P. As a general rule, equal estates will not merge in each other.

The merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher degree with an estate of inferior degree or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person; 4 Kent, 98. See Wash. R. P. Index; 3 Prest. Conv.; 15 Viner, Abr. 361; 10 Vt. 293; 8 Watts, 146.

In Criminal Law. When a man commits a great crime which includes a lesser, the latter is merged in the former; 1 East, P. C. 411; 72 N. C. 447; 1 Bish. Cr. L. §§ 786–790, 804–815; 109 Mass. 349.

Murder, when committed by blows, necessarily includes an assault and battery; a battery, an assault; a burglary, when accompanied with a felonious taking of personal property, a larceny: in all these and similar cases, the lesser crime is merged in the greater.

But when one offence is of the same character with the other, there is no merger: as, in the case of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and the subsequent commission of the misdemeanor in pursuance of the conspiracy; the two crimes being of equal degree, there can be no legal merger; 4 Wend. 265.

Of Rights. Rights are said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. This is more properly called a confusion of rights, or extinguishment.

When there is a confusion of rights, and the debtor and creditor become the same person, there can be no right to put in execution; but there is an immediate merger; 2 Ves. 264. Example: a man becomes indebted to a woman in a sum of money, and afterwards marries her; there is immediately a confusion of rights, and the debt is merged or extinguished.

In Torts. Where a person in committing a felony also commits a tort against a private person, in this case the wrong is sunk in the felony, at least until after the felon's conviction.

The old rule, that a trespass is merged in a felony, has sometimes been supposed to mean that there is no redress by civil action for an injury which amounts to a felony. But it is now established that the defendant is liable to the party injured either after his conviction; Latch, 144; Noy, 82; W. Jones, 147; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 546; or acquittal; 12 East, 409; 2 Hayw. 108. If the civil action be commenced before, the plaintiff will be nonsuited; Yelv. 90 a, n. See Ham. N. P. 63; Kel. 48; Cas. temp. Hardw. 350; Lofft, 88; 3 Me. 458. Buller, J., says this doctrine is not extended beyond actions of trespass or tort; 4 Term, 333. See, also, 1 H. Blackst. 583, 588, 594; 15 Mass. 78, 336; 1 Gray, 88, 100.

The Revised Statutes of New York, pt. 3, c. 4, t. 1, s. 2, direct that the right of action of any person injured by any felony shall not, in any case, be merged in such felony, or be in any manner affected thereby. In Kentucky, Pr. Dec. 203; New Hampshire, 6 N. H. 454; and Massachusetts, 1 Gray, 83, 100; the owner of stolen goods may immediately pursue his civil remedy. See, generally, 1 Ala. 8; 2 id. 70; 15 Mass. 336; 1 Gray, 83, 100; 1 Coxe, 115; 4 Ohio, 376; 4 N. H. 239; 1 Miles, 312; 6 Rand. 223; 1 Const. So. C. 231; 2 Root, 90.

MERITS. A word used principally in matters of defence.

A defence upon the merits is one that rests upon the justice of the cause, and not upon technical grounds only: there is, therefore, a difference between a good defence, which may be technical or not, and a defence on the merits; 5 B. & Ald. 703; 1 Ashm. 4; 3 Johns. 245, 449; 5 id. 360, 536; 6 id. 131; 2 Cow. 281; 7 id. 514; 6 Wend. 511.

But as used in the N. Y. Code of Proc. § 349, it has been held to mean "the strict legal rights of the parties as contra-distinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court." 4 How. Pr. 332.

MERTON, STATUTE OF. An ancient English ordinance or statute, 20 Hen. III. (1235), which took its name from the place in the county of Surrey where parliament sat when it was enacted. Its provisions related chiefly to dower, usury, legitimacy of children, the right of freeman to make suit by attorney at the lord's or any county court, the inclosure of common lands, wardships. 2 Inst. 79; Barring. Stat. 41, 46; Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 9, 10, 18.

MESCROYANT. Used in our ancient books. An unbeliever.

MESE. An ancient word used to signify house, probably from the French maison. It is said that by this word the buildings, curtilage, orchards, and gardens will pass. Co. Litt. 56.

MESNALTY, or, MESNALITY. A manor held under a superior lord. The estate of a mesne. T. L.; Whart. Dic.; 4 Phila. 71; 14 East, 234.

MESNE. Intermediate; the middle between two extremes; that part between the commencement and the end, as it relates to time.

Hence the profits which a man receives between disseisin and recovery of lands are called mesne profits. Process which is issued in a suit between the original and final process is called mesne process.

An assignment made between the original grant and a subsequent assignment, is called a mesne assignment.

Mesne incumbrances are intermediate charges, or incumbrances which have attached to property between two given periods; as, between the purchase and the conveyance of land.

In England, the word mesne also applies to a dignity: those persons who hold lordships or manors of some superior who is called lord paramount, and grant the same to inferior persons, are called mesne lords.

MESNE LORD. A middle or intermediate lord. 2 Bla. Com. 59; 1 Steph. Com. 168, 174. See MESNE.

MESNE PROCESS. In Practice. All writs necessary to a suit between its beginning and end, that is, between primary process or summons and final process, or execution, whether for the plaintiff, against the defendant, or for either against any party whose presence is necessary to the suit. For example, the capias or mesne process or ad respondendum is issued after a writ of summons, and before execution. 3 Bla. Com. 279; 3 Steph. Com. 564; 1 Tidd. Pr. 243; Finch, Law, b. 4, c. 43. Proceedings are now usually begun with a capias, so that what was formerly mesne is now primary.

MESNE PROFITS. The value of the premises, recovered in ejectment, during the time that the lessor of the plaintiff has been illegally kept out of the possession of his estate by the defendant: such are properly recovered by an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, after a recovery in ejectment. 11 S. & R. 55; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); 3 Bla. Com. 205.

As a general rule, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for such time as he can prove the defendant to have been in possession, provided he does not go back beyond six years; for in that case the defendant may plead the statute of limitations; 3 Yeates, 13; Bull. Nisi P. 88.

The value of improvements made by the defendant may be set off against a claim for mesne profits; but profits before the demise laid should be first deducted from the value of the improvements; 2 Wash. C. C. 165. See, generally, Wash. R. P.; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); Woodf. Landl. & T. ch. 14, s. 3; Fonbl. Eq. Index; 2 Phill. Ev. 208; Adams, Ej. 13; Dane, Abr. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

MESNE, WRIT OF. The name of an ancient and now obsolete writ, which lies when the lord paramount distrains on the tenant paravail: the latter shall have a writ of mesne against the lord who is mesne. Fitzh. N. B. 316.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish Law. A certificate of admeasurement granted by competent authority at home-port of vessel. Jacobsen, Sea-Laws, 50.

MESSAGE FROM THE CROWN. The method of communicating between the sovereign and the house of parliament. A written message under the royal sign manual, is brought by a member of the house, being a minister of the crown, or one of the royal household. Verbal messages are also sometimes delivered. May, Parl. Pr. ch. 17.

MESSAGE, PRESIDENT'S. The annual communication of the President of the United States to congress, pursuant to art. II. sec. 3, of the constitution. It is usually delivered at the commencement of the session, and embodies the president's views and suggestions concerning the general affairs of the nation. Since Jefferson's time, at least, it has been in writing.

MESSENGER. A person appointed to perform certain duties, generally of a ministerial character, such as carriers of messages employed by a secretary of state, or officers of a court of justice, called in Scotland, messengers at arms. Toml.; Paterson.

The officer who takes possession of an insolvent or bankrupt estate for the judge, commissioner, or other such officer.

The messenger of the English court of chancery has the duty of attending on the great seal, either in person or by deputy, and must be ready to execute all such orders as he shall receive from the lord chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners. Brown.

MESSUAGE. A term used in conveyancing, and nearly synonymous with dwelling-house. A grant of a messuage with the appurtenances will not only pass a house, but all the buildings attached or belonging to it, as also its curtilage, garden, and orchard, together with the close on which the house is built. Co. Litt. 5 b; 2 Saund. 400; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; 2 Term, 502; 4 Blackf. 331. But see the cases cited in 9 B. & C. 681. This term, it is said, includes a church; 11 Co. 26; 2 Esp. 528; 1 Salk. 256; 8 B. & C. 25. And see 3 Wils. 141; 2 W. Blackst. 726; 4 M. & W. 567; 2 Bingh. N. C. 617; 1 Saund. 6; 2 Washb. R. P.

METES AND BOUNDS. The boundary-lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. Courses and distances control, unless there is matter of more certain description, e. g. natural monuments; 42 Me. 209. A joint tenant cannot convey by metes and bounds; 1 Hill. R. P. 582. See BOUNDARY.

METHOD. The mode of operating, or the means of attaining an object.

It has been questioned whether the method of making a thing can be patented. But it has been considered that a method or mode may be the subject of a patent, because when the object of two patents or effects to be produced is essentially the same, they may both be valid, if the modes of attaining the desired effect are essentially different. Dav. Pat. Cas. 290; 2 B. & Ald. 350; 2 H. Blackst. 492; 8 Term, 106; 4 Burr. 2397; Perpigna, Manuel des Inventeurs, etc., c. 1, sect. 5, § 1, p. 22.

METRE (Greek). A measure. See MEASURE.

METUS (Lat.). A reasonable fear of an intolerable evil, as of loss of life or limb, such as may fall upon a brave man (virum constantem). 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 131; Calvinus, Lex. And this kind of fear alone will invalidate a contract as entered into through duress. Calvinus, Lex.

In a more general sense, fear.

MICHALMAS TERM. In English Law. One of the four terms of the courts: it begins on the 2d day of November, and ends on the 25th of November. It was formerly a movable term. Stat. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 70.

MICHEL-GEMOT (spelled, also, micel-gemote. Sax. great meeting or assembly). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 147.

One of the great councils of king and noblemen in Saxon times.

These great councils were severally called wittena-gemotes, afterwards micel synods and micel-gemotes. Cowel, edit. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict. Micel-Gemotes. See MICHEL-SYNOTH.

MICHEL-SYNOTH (Sax. great council). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 147.

The Saxon kings usually called a synod, or mixed council, consisting both of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a year, which was not properly called a parliament till Henry III.'s time. Cowel, ed. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict., Synod, Micel-Gemotes.

MICHIGAN. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

It was admitted into the Union by act of congress of January 26, 1837. 5 Stat. at L. 44. See Act of Congr. June 15, 1836, 5 Stat. at L. 49.

The first constitution of the state was adopted by a convention held at Detroit, in May, 1835. This was superseded by the one at present in force, which was adopted in 1850.

Every person above the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in the state three months, and in the township or ward in which he offers to vote ten days, next preceding election, and who is either a male citizen, or a male inhabitant who resided in the state June 24, 1835, or a male inhabitant who resided in the state January 1, 1850, who had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States pursuant to the laws thereof six months preceding an election, or who has resided in this state two years and six months and declared his intention as aforesaid, or who is a civilized male inhabitant of Indian descent, a native of the United States, and not a member of any tribe, is an elector and entitled to vote.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The Senate consists of thirty-two members, elected by the people in each district for the term of two years. Senators must be citizens of the United States, and qualified voters of the district they represent.

The House of Representatives is to consist of not less than sixty-four nor more than one hundred members, elected in their respective districts for the term of two years. The elections take place on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, in the even years. Each county entitled to more than one representative is to be divided by the supervisors into districts, each of which is to elect one representative. A representative must be a citizen of the United States, and a qualified voter of the county he represents.

The members of both houses are privileged from arrest, except for treason, felony, and breach of the peace, and from any civil process during the session and for fifteen days before and next afterwards. The constitution contains the usual provisions making each house judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of each of its members; providing for organization of the houses and continuance of the session; for regulating the conduct of its members; for keeping and publishing a journal of proceedings; for open sessions.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the people of the state for the term of two years. He must be thirty years old at least; for five years a citizen of the United States, and for two years next preceding the election a citizen of the state; and no member of congress, nor any person holding office under the United States, may be governor. He is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces, and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress insurrections, and to repel invasions; is to transact all necessary business with the officers of government, and may require information in writing, from the officers of the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices; must take care that the laws be faithfully executed; may convene the legislature on extraordinary occasions, and at an unusual place when the seat of government becomes dangerous from disease or a common enemy; may grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after convictions, for all offences except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions and with such restrictions and limitations as he may think proper, subject to regulations provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, he may suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the legislature at its next session, when the legislature shall either pardon or commute the sentence, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. He must communicate to the legislature at each session information of each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, and the reasons therefor.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He is, by virtue of his office, president of the senate.

In case of the impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, inability, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability ceases.

During a vacancy in the office of governor, if the lieutenant-governor die, resign, be impeached, displaced, be incapable of performing the duties of his office, or absent from the state, the president pro tempore of the senate is to act as governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court consists of one chief and three associate justices, chosen by the electors of the state for the term of eight years. One of the judges goes out of office every two years. Four terms are to be held annually, at Lansing, and three of the judges constitute a quorum. It has a general supervisory power over inferior courts, and general appellate jurisdiction of cases brought up by appeal, by certificate of judges of lower courts, or by consent of parties on agreed statements of facts. The statute provides that the supreme court shall by rules of practice simplify the practice of the state. The changes to be secured are specified as the following: to wit, abolition of the distinction between law and equity; of fictions and unnecessary proceedings; shortening and simplification of pleadings; expediting decisions; regulation of decisions; remedying abuses and imperfections of practice; abolition of unnecessary forms and technicalities; non-abatement of suits through misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, so far as justice will allow; providing for omitting parties improperly joined, and joining those improperly omitted. Comp. Laws, 1871, 1502.

Circuit Courts. The state is divided into twenty-four judicial circuits, each presided over by a circuit judge, elected by the votes of his district, and holding office for six years, until his successor is elected. In case of death, resignation, or vacancy, the governor may appoint a circuit judge who shall hold until a successor be elected at a special or next general election. This is the court of general original jurisdiction, having jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal not expressly excepted, and appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals, and a supervisory control of the same. It has also power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and other writs necessary to carry into effect its orders, judgments, and decrees, and give it a general control over inferior courts and tribunals within the respective districts. It sits also as a court of chancery, having powers co-extensive with the powers of the court of chancery in England, with various modifications, however, both constitutional and statutory. Two terms at least are held annually in each county organized for judicial purposes, and four terms in counties containing ten thousand inhabitants. The stated terms are also terms of the court of chancery.

A Probate Court is held in each county by a judge elected by the people of the county for the term of four years and till a successor is chosen. It may take probate of wills, and has cognizance of all matters appertaining to the settlement of the estates of decedents and the care of minors, including the appointment and superintendence of guardians of minors, etc.

Justices of the Peace are elected by the people of each township for four years. Not more than four are to be elected in each township, and they are to be classified. They have exclusive civil jurisdiction in all cases where the amounts involved are less than one hundred dollars, and concurrent jurisdiction over all sums less than three hundred dollars. They have a criminal jurisdiction for offences arising in their respective counties over all cases of larceny not charged as a second offence where the amount taken does not exceed twenty-five dollars; of assault and battery, not committed riotously nor upon a public officer in the discharge of his duty; of killing, maiming, or disfiguring cattle, where the damage done does not exceed twenty-five dollars; and of other minor offences punishable by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding three months.

A Circuit Court Commissioner is elected in each county for two years, who has the judicial power of a judge of the circuit court at chambers. He is to perform the duties of a master in chancery, has power to grant injunctions, etc. He must be an attorney and counsellor-at law.

Municipal Courts exist in the larger cities. They are of two classes, civil and criminal.

The Civil Courts have the same general jurisdiction as the circuit courts as to actions of a transitory nature in which all or some of the parties are residents of the city where the court is situated.

The Criminal Courts have exclusive jurisdiction over offences committed in the cities where they are situated.

Michigan has no code of practice or procedure. The practice is that of the English common law courts largely modified by statute and rules of court, by which special pleading is nearly dispensed with. The last general compilation of the laws of Michigan was in 1871.

MIDDLE THREAD. See AD MEDIUM FILUM.

MIDDLEMAN. One who has been employed as an agent by a principal, and who has employed a sub-agent under him by authority of the principal, either express or implied. He is not, in general, liable for the wrongful acts of the sub-agent, the principal being alone responsible; 3 Campb. 4; 6 Term, 411; 14 East, 605.

A person who is employed both by the seller and purchaser of goods, or by the purchaser alone, to receive them into his possession, for the purpose of doing something in or about them: as, if goods be delivered from a ship by the seller to a wharfinger, to be by him forwarded to the purchaser, who has been appointed by the latter to receive them; or if goods be sent to a packer, for and by orders of the vendee, the packer is to be considered as a middleman.

The goods in both these cases will be considered in transitu, provided the purchaser has not used the wharfinger's or the packer's warehouse as his own, and have an ulterior place of delivery in view; 4 Esp. 82; 2 B. & P. 457; 3 id. 127, 469; 1 Campb. 282; 1 Atk. 245; 1 H. Blackst. 364; 3 East, 93.

MIDWIFE. In Medical Jurisprudence. A woman who practises midwifery; a woman who pursues the business of an accoucheuse.

A midwife is required to perform the business she undertakes with proper skill; and if she be guilty of any mala praxis she is liable to an action or an indictment for the misdemeanor. See Viner, Abr. Physician; Comyns, Dig. Physician; 8 East, 348; 2 Wils. 259; 4 C. & P. 398, 407 a; 2 Russ. Cri. 388.

MIESES. In Spanish Law. Grain crops.

MILE. A length of a thousand paces, or seventeen hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet. It contains eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and each pole sixteen feet six inches. 2 Stark. 89.

MILEAGE. A compensation allowed by law to officers for their trouble and expenses in travelling on public business.

In computing mileage, the distance by the road usually travelled is that which must be allowed, whether in fact the officer travels a more or less distant way to suit his own convenience; 16 Me. 431.

MILES. In Civil Law. A soldier. (Vel a "militia" aut a "multitudine," aut a numero, "mille hominum." L. 1, § 1, D., de testam. milit.) Vocab. Jur. Utr.

In Old English Law. A knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also, a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Bla. Com. 404; Seld. Tit. Hon. 334.

MILITARY LAW. A system of regulations for the government of an army. 1 Kent, 341, n.

That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. De Hart, Courts-Mart. 16.

Military law is to be distinguished from martial law. Martial law extends to all persons; military law to all military persons only, and not to those in a civil capacity. Martial law supersedes and suspends the civil law, but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law. See 2 Kent, 10; 34 Me. 126; MARTIAL LAW; COURT-MARTIAL.

The body of the military law of the United States is contained in the "act establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States," approved April 30, 1806, and various subsequent acts, some of the more important of which are those of May 29, 1830; August 6, 1846; July 29, 1861; August 3, 1861; August 5, 1861; December 24, 1861; February 13, 1862; March 13, 1862; March 13, 1865; Feb. 18, 1875. See, also, Act of February 28, 1795; 5 Wheat. 1; 3 S. & R. 156, 790; the general regulations, and the orders of the president.

The act of 1806 consists of three sections, the first section containing one hundred and one articles, which describe very minutely the various military offences, the punishments which may be inflicted, the manner of summoning and the organization of courts-martial. These articles are called the articles of war. Their provisions extend to the militia mustered into the United States service, and to marines when serving with the army.

The military law of England is contained in the Mutiny Act, which has been passed annually since April 12, 1689, and the additional articles of war made and established by the sovereign. 2 Steph. Com. 589.

In addition, there are in both countries various usages which constitute an unwritten military law, which applies to those cases where there are no express provisions. 12 Wheat. 19; Benèt, Mil. Law, 3.

The sovereign, in England, has authority to ordain, by articles of war, with regard to crimes not specified by military law, every punishment not reaching to death or mutilation; the president of the United States cannot ordain any penalty for any military crime not expressly declared by act of congress.

Consult Benèt, De Hart, Cross, Samuels, Tytler, on Military Law; MILITIA.

MILITIA. The military force of the nation, consisting of citizens called forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.

The constitution of the United States provides on this subject that congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia, according to the discipline prescribed by congress.

In accordance with the provisions of the constitution, congress, in 1792, act of May 8, passed an act relating to the militia, which has remained, with modifications, till the present time. Under these provisions the militia can be used for the suppression of rebellion as well as of insurrection; R. S. § 1642; 7 Wall. 700; 45 Penn. 238. The president of the United States is to judge when the exigency has arisen which requires the militia to be called out; 12 Wheat. 19; 8 Mass. 548. He may make his request directly to the executive of the state, or by an order directed to any subordinate officer of the state militia; 3 S. & R. 169. So provided by R. S. § 1642; and see 12 Wheat. 19; 5 Phila. 269.

When the militia are called into actual service, they are subject to the same rules and articles of war as the regular troops; R. S. § 1644. The president may specify their term of service, not exceeding nine months; R. S. § 1648. When in actual service the militia are entitled to the same pay as the regular troops; R. S. § 1650. The militia, until mustered into the United States service, is considered as a state force; 3 S. & R. 169; 5 Wheat. 1. See 1 Kent, 262; Story, Const. §§ 1194–1210. See MILITARY LAW; MARTIAL LAW.

MILL. A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operations by means of wheels and a circular motion.

The house or building that contains the machinery for grinding, etc. Webster, Dict.

Mills are so very different and various, that it is not easy to give a definition of the term. They are used for the purpose of grinding and pulverizing grain and other matters, to extract the juices of vegetables, to make various articles of manufacture. They take their names from the uses to which they are employed; hence we have paper-mills, fulling-mills, iron-mills, oil-mills, saw-mills, etc. In another respect their kinds are various; they are either fixed to the freehold or not. Those which are a part of the freehold are either water-mills, wind-mills, steam-mills, etc.; those which are not so fixed are hand-mills, and are merely personal property. Those which are fixed, and make a part of the freehold, are buildings with machinery calculated to attain the object proposed in their erection.

It has been held that the grant of a mill and its appurtenances, even without the land, carries the whole right of water enjoyed by the grantor, as necessary to its use, and as a necessary incident; Cro. Jac. 121. And a devise of a mill carries the land used with it, and the right to use the water; 1 S. & R. 169. And see 5 id. 107; 10 id. 63; 2 Caines, Cas. 87; 3 N. H. 190; 7 Mass. 6; 6 Me. 154, 436; 16 id. 281.

The owner of a mill, whose dam and machinery are suited to the size and capacity of the stream, has a right to the reasonable use of the water to propel his machinery; but he must detain no longer than is necessary for its profitable enjoyment, and must return it to its natural channel, before it passes upon the land of the proprietor below; 41 Ga. 162; s. c. 5 Am. Rep. 526. See DAM.

A mill means not merely the building in which the business is carried on, but includes the site, the dam, and other things annexed to the freehold, necessary for its beneficial enjoyment; 3 Mass. 280; see 6 Me. 436; and a water power also when applied to a mill becomes a part of the mill, and is to be included in the valuation; 37 Vt. 622.

Whether manufacturing machinery will pass under the grant of a mill must depend mainly on the circumstances of each case; 1 Brod. & B. 506; Ewell, Fixt. 94. As between mortgagor and mortgagee, a saw-mill and its appointments are prima facie part of the realty, if no intent is shown to change their character; 39 Mich. 777. When an estate for years was by a conveyance to the lessee merged in the fee, it was held that machinery by him firmly annexed to the premises, did not, by operation of law and without intent on his part, become a part of the realty; 76 N. Y. 23.

MILL. The tenth part of a cent in value.

MILLED MONEY. This term means merely coined money; and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges. Running's case, Leach, Cr. Cas. 708.

MIL-REIS. The name of a coin. The mil-reis of Portugal is taken as money of account, at the custom-house, to be of the value of one hundred and twelve cents. The mil-reis of Azores is deemed of the value of eighty-three and one-third cents. The mil-reis of Madeira is deemed of the value of one hundred cents; 5 Stat. at Large, 625.

MIND AND MEMORY. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them." Washington, J., 3 Wash. C. C. 585, 586; 4 id. 262; 1 Green, Ch. 82, 85; 2 id. 563, 604; 26 Wend. 255, 306, 311, 312; 8 Conn. 265; 9 id. 105.

MINE. An excavation in the earth for the purpose of obtaining minerals.

Mines may be either by excavating a portion of the surface, or almost entirely beneath the surface.

Mines of gold and silver belong to the sovereign; 1 Plowd. 310; 3 Kent, 378, n.; and it has been said that though the king grant lands in which mines are, and all mines in them, yet royal mines will not pass by so general a description; Plowd. 336. In New York the state's right as sovereign was asserted at an early day, and reasserted by the legislature as late as 1828; 3 Kent, 378, n. In Pennsylvania the Royal Charter to Penn reserved one-fifth of the precious metals as rent, and the patents granted by Penn usually reserved two-fifths of the gold and silver. An act passed in 1843 declared that all patents granted by the state pass the entire estate of the commonwealth. In California, after much discussion, it seems to be finally settled that minerals belong to the owner of the soil and not to the government as an incident of sovereignty; 17 Cal. 199; 3 Wall. 304; 2 Black, 17. See Mr. Dallas's note to Bainbr. Mines, 39. All mineral lands of the general government, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are free and open to exploration and occupation, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and also to local customs or rules of miners when not in conflict with the laws of the United States. R. S. § 2319. See 94 U. S. 763.

Mines of other minerals belong to the owner of the soil, and pass by a grant thereof, unless separated; 1 N. Y. 564; 19 Pick. 314; but the owner may convey his mines by a separate and distinct grant so as to create one freehold in the soil and another in the mines; 1 Penn. R. 726; 7 Cush. 361; 8 id. 21; 5 M. & W. 50; but in California, a miner will not be enjoined against disturbance of crops, unless the appropriation of the land was anterior to the mining location; 23 Cal. 593.

In case of a separate ownership, the owner of the mine must support the superincumbent soil; 12 Q. B. 739; 5 M. & W. 60; 12 Exch. 259; and ancient buildings or other erections; 2 H. & N. 828.

Opening new mines by a tenant is waste, unless the demise includes them; Co. Litt. 53 b; 2 Bla. Com. 282; 1 Taunt. 410; Hob. 234; but if the mines be already open, it is not waste to work them even to exhaustion; 1 Taunt. 410; 19 Penn. 324; 6 Munf. 134; 1 Rand. 258; 10 Pick. 460; 1 Cow. 460. See Smith, Landl. & T. 192, 193, n. A mortgagee has been allowed for large sums expended in working a mine which he had a right to work; 39 E. L. & Eq. 130; but in another case, expenses incurred in opening a mine were disallowed; 16 Sim. 445.

In California, the occupant of public lands, who holds them for agricultural purposes merely, holds them subject to the right of any person to dig for gold; 5 Cal. 36, 97; but the miner must take them as he finds them, subject to prior rights of the same character; 5 Cal. 140, 308; 6 id. 148; a miner cannot take private lands; 44 Cal. 460.

An injunction lies for interference with mines; 6 Ves. 147.

See Bainbridge, Collier, on Mines; 1 Kent; Washb. R. P.; Washb. Easem.; Tudor, Lead. Cas.

MINERALS (L. Lat. minera, a vein of metal). All fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence any thing may be dug; such as beds of stone which may be quarried; 14 M. & W. 859, in construing 55 Geo. III. c. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. 175*, 176*.

Any natural production, formed by the action of chemical affinities, and organized when becoming solid by the powers of crystallization. Webster, Dict. But see 5 Watts, 34; 1 Crabb, R. P. 95. The term has been held to include coal oil; 41 Penn. 351; 3 Pittsb. 201.

MINISTER. In Governmental Law. An officer who is placed near the sovereign, and is invested with the administration of some one of the principal branches of the government.

Ministers are responsible to the king or other supreme magistrate who has appointed them. 4 Conn. 134.

In Ecclesiastical Law. One ordained by some church to preach the gospel. A person elected by a Methodist Society to be one of their local preachers, and ordained as a deacon of that church, is a minister of the gospel, within a statute exempting ministers from taxation; 1 Me. 102. So is a person ordained as a Congregational minister and installed as such over a town; 2 Pick. 403.

Ministers are authorized in the United States, generally, to solemnize marriages, and are liable to fines and penalties for marrying minors contrary to the local regulations. As to the rights of ministers or parsons, see 3 Am. Jur. 268; Shepp. Touchst. Authon ed. 564; 2 Mass. 500; 10 id. 97; 14 id. 333; 11 Me. 487.

In International Law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation, with the consent of two other nations who have a matter in dispute, with a view by his interference and good office to have such matter settled.

A name given to public functionaries who represent their country with foreign governments, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

A custom of recent origin has introduced a new kind of ministers, without any particular determination of character; these are simply called ministers, to indicate that they are invested with the general character of a sovereign's mandatories, without any particular assignment of rank or character.

The minister represents his government in a vague and indeterminate manner, which cannot be equal to the first degree; and he possesses all the rights essential to a public minister.

There are also ministers plenipotentiary, who, as they possess full powers, are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These, also, are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 5, § 74; 1 Kent, 48; Merlin, Répert.

Formerly no distinction was made in the different classes of public ministers, but the modern usage of Europe introduced some distinctions in this respect, which, on account of a want of precision, had become the source of controversy. To obviate these, the congress of Vienna, and that of Aix-la-Chapelle, put an end to these disputes by classing ministers as follows:—1. Ambassadors, and papal legates or nuncios. 2. Envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns (auprès des souverains). 3. Ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns. 4. Chargés d'affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. Public ministers take rank among themselves, in each class, according to the date of the official notification of the arrival at the court to which they are accredited. Récez du Congrès de Vienne, du 19 Mars, 1815; Protocol du Congrès d'Aix-la-Chapelle, du 21 Novembre, 1818; Wheaton, Int. Law, § 211.

The United States sends no envoys of the rank of ambassadors; it sends ambassadors and envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, and ministers resident.

Consuls and other commercial agents are not, in general, considered as public ministers.

MINISTERIAL. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial: as, the sheriff is a ministerial officer bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

A ministerial act may be defined to be one which a person performs in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment upon the propriety of the acts being done. Acts done out of court in bringing parties into court are, as a general proposition, ministerial acts; 54 Ind. 376. See 18 How. 396; 40 Wisc. 175; 49 Ala. 311.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way; but when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of doing so is left entirely to his judgment. See 10 Me. 377; Bacon. Abr. Justices of the Peace (E); 1 Conn. 295; 3 id. 107; 9 id. 275; 12 id. 464; MANDAMUS.

MINISTERIAL TRUSTS (also called instrumental trusts). Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ: as, to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1896.

MINNESOTA. One of the new states of the United States of America.

It was created a territory by act of congress, March 3, 1849, and admitted into the Union as a state, May 11, 1858, under a constitution framed and adopted by a convention at St. Paul, on the 29th day of August, 1857, pursuant to an act of congress of February 26, 1857, and submitted to and ratified by the people on the 13th of October, 1857.

The Bill of Rights provides that there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than for the punishment of crime; that there shall be no imprisonment for debt; that a reasonable amount of property shall be exempt from execution; that all future leases of agricultural lands for a longer period than twenty-one years, reserving any rent, shall be void; and that no person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness in consequence of his religious opinions.

The Right of Suffrage is vested in all male persons over twenty-one years of age, who have resided in the United States one year, in the state four months, and in the election district ten days, next preceding any election, and who are either citizens of the United States, persons of foreign birth who have declared their intention to become citizens, persons of mixed white and Indian blood who have adopted the customs and habits of civilization, or persons of Indian blood who have adopted the language and habits of civilization and have been pronounced by any district court of the state capable of enjoying the rights of citizenship. But all persons convicted of any felony, not restored to civil rights, and all persons non compos mentis, insane, or under guardianship, are excluded. All elections are by ballot. No arrest by civil process is allowed on any day of election. All legal voters are eligible by the people to any office, except as hereinafter specified. Women of the age of 21 years and upwards may, if the legislature so provide, vote for school officers and upon school matters, and be eligible to any office pertaining solely to the management of schools.

Amendments to the Constitution. A majority of both branches of the legislature may submit amendments to the constitution to the people, which, if ratified by a majority of the voters present and voting, shall be part of the constitution. A convention may also be called for the purpose of amending it.

THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.—The Senate is composed of a number of senators not exceeding one for every five thousand inhabitants, elected for the term of four years by the people. A senator must have resided one year in the state and six months next preceding the election in the district from which he is elected, and must be a qualified elector. One-half the senate is elected every second year, the districts numbered with odd and even numbers electing alternately, excepting that an entire new election shall be had after each new apportionment.

The House of Representatives is composed of a number of representatives not exceeding one for every two thousand inhabitants, elected by the people for the term of two years. The qualifications necessary are the same as those of the senators.

The constitution contains the usual provisions for the organization and continuance of the two houses, regulating the conduct and judging of the qualifications of members, recording and publishing proceedings, securing freedom of debate, exempting members from arrest on civil process, etc. Legislative sessions to be held biennially; session not to exceed sixty days.

All elections by the legislature are to be made viva voce. The legislature cannot authorize a lottery or the sale of lottery-tickets. The legislature is to provide a uniform system of public schools. The proceeds of certain lands are secured as a permanent school fund, the income of which the legislature is to distribute among the townships, in proportion to the number of scholars therein between the ages of 5 and 21 years. The legislature cannot create a corporation by special act for any but municipal purposes. It may pass a general banking law; may not suspend specie payments; must provide that all banks shall hold state or United States stocks as security for their notes. It may, by vote of two-thirds in both houses, contract a debt for extraordinary expenses, not exceeding two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. A tax must be levied each year large enough to pay the expenses of that year and cover the deficiency of the preceding year if any exists. Provision must be made at the time of creating any debt for the payment of interest and its extinction in ten years.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the people for the term of two years. He must have attained the age of twenty-five, be a citizen of the United States, and have resided in the state for one year next preceding his election. He is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces; informs the legislature at each session of the condition of the country; may require the written opinion of the heads of the departments on subjects relating to their respective offices; may grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment; may, with the consent of the senate, appoint a state librarian and notaries public; and may appoint commissioners to take acknowledgments of deeds. He is invested with the veto power, may call extra sessions of the legislature, shall see that the laws are executed, and may fill vacancies that may occur in the office of secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, attorney-general, and other state and district offices hereafter to be created by law, until the next annual election, and order elections to fill vacancies in the legislature.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications as the governor. He presides over the senate, and acts as governor during any vacancy occurring in that office. A president pro tempore of the senate is elected at the close of each session by the senate, who becomes lieutenant-governor in case of vacancy in that office.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—This is vested in a supreme court, district court, courts of probate, and justices of the peace; but the legislature may, by a two-thirds vote, establish other inferior courts, of which the judges must be elected, for a term not longer than seven years, by the electors of the district for which the courts are created.

The Supreme Court consists of one chief and four associate justices, elected by the people of the state at large for the term of seven years. Its original jurisdiction is prescribed by law, and it has appellate jurisdiction in all cases both in law and equity, but holds no jury terms.

The District Court consists of fifteen judges, elected by the voters of their respective districts for a term of seven years. The state is divided into twelve districts, one of which has three judges, another two, and the remainder one judge each. Each judge holds the court in his own district, except where convenience or the public interests require otherwise, when the judges may exchange services. One or more terms of the court are held in each county per annum. It has original jurisdiction in all civil cases where the amount involved exceeds one hundred dollars, the distinction between suits at law and in equity being abolished, and in all criminal cases where the penalty is three months' imprisonment or more, or where a fine of more than one hundred dollars is imposed, and such appellate jurisdiction as may be conferred by law. It has power, also, to change the names of people, towns, or counties.

A Probate Court is held in each organized county in the state, by a judge elected by the people of the county for the term of two years. The judge must be a resident of the county at the time of his election, and continue to be during his term. The court has jurisdiction over the estates of decedents, and over persons under guardianship.

Justices of the Peace are elected, two for each town (subject to variation by law), by the people, for the term of two years. They have jurisdiction in civil cases where the amount involved is one hundred dollars or less, and in criminal cases where the criminal is imprisoned for three months or less, or a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars. They have no jurisdiction in any case involving the title to real estate.

MINOR (Lat. less; younger). A minor; one not a major, i. e. not twenty-one. Co. 2d Inst. 291; Co. Litt. 88, 128, 172 b; 6 Co. 67; 3 Bulstr. 143; Bracton, 340 b; Fleta, l. 2, c. 60, § 26.

Of less consideration; lower. Calvinus, Lex. Major and minor belong rather to civil law. The common-law terms are adult and infant.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; infancy. See FULL AGE.

The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly: opposed to majority, which see.

MINT. The place designated by law where money is coined by authority of the government of the United States.

The mint was established by the act of April 2, 1792, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 227, and located at Philadelphia. There are mints of the United States now (1882) at Philadelphia, San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson, and Denver. R. S. § 3495. See COIN; FOREIGN COIN; MONEY.

MINUTE. Measures. In divisions of the circle or angular measures, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or one-sixtieth part of a degree.

In the computation of time, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of an hour. See MEASURE.

In Practice. A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. From these minutes the record is afterwards made up.

Toullier says they are so called because the writing in which they were originally was small; that the word is derived from the Latin minuta (scriptura), in opposition to copies which were delivered to the parties, and which were always written in a larger hand. 8 Toullier, n. 413.

Minutes are not considered as any part of the record. 1 Ohio, 268. See 23 Pick. 184.

OF CORPORATE MEETINGS. It is usual for boards of directors of corporations to keep a regular record in writing of their proceedings. It has been said that such a record is essential either to the proof or validity of their acts and contracts. Such may be the case if the charter makes the keeping of such a record essential to the validity of corporate acts. But in the absence of a provision directing the keeping of such records, there appears to be no reason for any distinction between recording in writing the acts of a board of agents of a corporation, and of the agents of a natural person. Provisions in charters directing that minutes be kept are merely directory; a failure to keep them does not affect the validity of corporate acts; 12 Wheat. 75; Ang. & A. Corp. 291 a; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 522, n. b. See 96 U. S. 271. When such records are kept, they are the best evidence of the proceedings of a meeting; but if no minutes were kept, or if, in a suit against the corporation, and upon notice, the corporation neglects or refuses to produce its books, other evidence is admissible; 32 Vt. 633; 111 Mass. 315; Ang. & A. Corp. 291 a.

MINUTE-BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court, in which minutes of its proceedings are entered.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar: e. g. eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law, 680; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MIRROR DES JUSTICES. The Mirror of Justices, a treatise written during the reign of Edward II. Andrew Horne is its reputed author. But it has been thought that the germ of it was written before the Conquest and that Horne only made additions to it; Marv. Leg. Bibl. 396. It was first published in 1642, and in 1768 it was translated into English by William Hughes. Some diversity of opinion seems to exist as to its merits. Pref. to 9 & 10 Co. Rep. As to the history of this celebrated book, see St. Armand's Hist. Essays on the Legislative Power of England, 58, 59; 2 Reeve, Hist. 358; 4 id. 116, n.

MISADVENTURE. An accident by which an injury occurs to another.

When applied to homicide, misadventure is the act of a man who, in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately kills another person. The act upon which the death ensues must be neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. The usual examples under this head are: 1, when the death ensues from innocent recreations; 2, from moderate and lawful correction in foro domestico; 3, from acts lawful and indifferent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution. 4 Bla. Com. 182; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 221. See HOMICIDE; MANSLAUGHTER; CORRECTION.

MISBEHAVIOR. Improper or unlawful conduct. See 2 Mart. La. N. S. 683.

A party guilty of misbehavior, as, for example, to threaten to do injury to another, may be bound to his good behavior, and thus restrained.

Verdicts are not unfrequently set aside on the ground of misbehavior of jurors: as, when the jury take out with them papers which were not given in evidence, to the prejudice of one of the parties; Ld. Raym. 148; when they separate before they have agreed upon their verdict; 3 Day, 237, 310; see JURY; NEW TRIAL; when they cast lots for a verdict; 2 Lev. 205; or give their verdict, because they have agreed to give it for the amount ascertained, by each juror putting down a sum, adding the whole together, and then dividing by twelve, the number of jurors, and giving their verdict for the quotient. 15 Johns. 87. See Bacon, Abr. Verdict (H); LOT.

A verdict will be set aside if the successful party has been guilty of any misbehavior towards the jury: as, if he say to a juror, "I hope you will find a verdict for me," or,

"The matter is clearly of my side." 1 Ventr. 125; 2 Rolle, Abr. 716, pl. 17. See Code, 166, 401; Bacon, Abr. Verdict (I).

MISCARRIAGE. In Medical Jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed abortion. When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated premature labor. But the criminal act of destroying the fœtus at any time before birth is termed, in law, procuring miscarriage; Chitty, Med. Jur. 410; 2 Dungl. Hum. Phys. 364. See ABORTION; FŒTUS.

In Practice. A term used in the Statute of Frauds to denote that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the wrongdoer would be responsible at law in a civil action.

By the English Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4, it is enacted that "no action shall be brought to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreement," etc. "shall be in writing," etc.

The wrongful riding the horse of another, without his leave or license, and thereby causing his death, is clearly an act for which the party is responsible in damages, and, therefore, falls within the meaning of the word miscarriage: 2 B. & Ald. 516; Burge, Sur. 21.

MISCASTING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4128.

MISCEGENATION (Lat. miscere, to mix, and genere, to beget). A mixture of races. The intermarriage of persons belonging to the white and black races. In many of the states this is prohibited by statute. The constitutionality of such statutes has been repeatedly affirmed; 3 Tex. Ct. App. 263; s. c. 30 Am. Rep. 131; 30 Gratt. 658; 3 Heisk. 287. It has been further held that a statute denouncing a severer penalty on persons of the two races living together in adultery, than that prescribed for a like offence between persons of the same race, is constitutional; 58 Ala. 190; s. c. 29 Am. Rep. 739; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1754.

MISCOGNIZANT. Ignorant, or not knowing. Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Little used.

MISCONDUCT. Unlawful behavior by a person intrusted in any degree with the administration of justice, by which the rights of the parties and the justice of the case may have been affected.

A verdict will be set aside when any of the jury have been guilty of such misconduct; and a court will set aside an award if it have been obtained by the misconduct of an arbitrator; 2 Atk. 501, 504; 2 Chitt. Bail, 44; 1 Salk. 71; 3 P. Wms. 362; 1 Dick. 66.

MISCONTINUANCE. In Practice. A continuance of a suit by undue process. Its effect is the same as a discontinuance. 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 299; Kitch. 231; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

MISDEMEANOR. In Criminal Law. A term used to express every offence inferior to felony, punishable by indictment, or by particular prescribed proceedings. In its usual acceptation, it is applied to all those crimes and offences for which the law has not provided a particular name.

The word is generally used in contradistinction to felony; misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offences which do not amount to felony, as perjury, battery, libels, conspiracies, and public nuisances, but not including a multitude of offences over which magistrates have an exclusive summary jurisdiction, for a brief designation of which our legal nomenclature is at fault. Misdemeanors have sometimes been called misprisions. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 624.

MISDIRECTION. In Practice. An error made by a judge in charging the jury in a special case.

It is a rule, subject to the qualifications hereafter stated, that when the judge at the trial misdirects the jury on matters of law material to the issue, whatever may be the nature of the case, the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted; 6 Mod. 242; 2 Salk. 649; 2 Wils. 269; 4 Conn. 356; 59 Penn. 371; or, if such misdirection appear in the bill of exceptions, or otherwise upon the record, a judgment founded on a verdict thus obtained will be reversed. And although the charge of the court be not positively erroneous, yet, if it have a tendency to mislead the jury, and it be uncertain whether they would have found as they did if the instructions had been entirely correct, a new trial will be granted; 11 Wend. 83; 6 Cow. 682; 9 Humph. 411; 9 Conn. 107. When the issue consists of a mixed question of law and fact, and there is a conceded state of facts, the rest is a question for the court; 2 Wend. 596; and a misdirection in this respect will avoid the verdict. In England, under the Judicature Act of 1875, a new trial will not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless in the opinion of the court, to which the application is made, some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial of the action; and if it appear that such wrong or miscarriage affects part only of the matter in controversy, the court may give final judgment as to part thereof, and direct a new trial as to the other part only; 1 Sched. Ord. xxxix. v. 3; L. R. 10 Stat. 1875, 817.

Misdirection as to matters of fact will, in some cases, be sufficient to vitiate the proceedings. For example: misapprehension of the judge as to a material circumstance, and a direction to the jury accordingly; 1 Const. So. C. 200; or instructing them upon facts which are purely hypothetical, whereby they are misled; 8 Ga. 114; submitting as a contested point what has been admitted; 9 Conn. 216; giving to the jury a peremptory direction to find in a given way, when there are facts in the case conducing to a different conclusion; 7 J. J. Marsh. 410; 3 Wend. 102; 19 id. 402; 12 Mass. 22; 5 Humphr. 476. There are, however, many cases in which the court may instruct the jury, upon the whole evidence, to find for one or the other party; and when a verdict formed under such instruction is conformable to the law, the evidence, and the justice of the case, it is rarely disturbed; 3 Dana, 566. But to warrant an unqualified direction to the jury in favor of a party, the evidence must either be undisputed or the preponderance so decided that a verdict against it would be set aside; 16 Wend. 663. When the court delivers its opinion to the jury on a matter of fact, it should be as opinion, and not as direction; 12 Johns. 513. But it is, in general, allowed a very liberal discretion in this regard; 1 M'Cl. & Y. 286. Where the question is one of mere fact, no expressions of the judge, however strong or erroneous, will amount to a misdirection, provided the question is fairly presented to the jury and left with them for their decision; 5 Scott. 28; 4 Moore & S. 295; 19 Wend. 186; 10 Pick. 252.

Unless the misdirection be excepted to, the party by his silence will be deemed to have waived it; 10 Mo. 515; 2 Pick. 145. But see 4 Wend. 514; 2 Barb. 420.

As to its effects, the misdirection must be calculated to do injustice; for if it be entirely certain that justice has been done, and that a re-hearing would produce the same result, or if the amount in dispute be very trifling, so that the injury is scarcely appreciable, a new trial will not be granted; 2 Caines, 85; 7 Me. 442; 10 Ga. 429; 3 Grah. & W. New Tr. 705–873; Hill. New Tr. 96; NEW TRIAL; CHARGE.

MISE (Lat. mittere, through the French mettre, to place). In Pleading. The issue in a writ of right. The tenant in a writ of right is said to join the mise on the mere right when he pleads that his title is better than the demandant's; 2 Wms. Saund. 45, h, i. It was equivalent to the general issue; and every thing except collateral warranty might be given in evidence under it by the tenant; Booth, Real Act. 98, 114; 3 Wils. 420; 7 Wheat. 31; 3 Pet. 133; 7 Cow. 52; 10 Gratt. 350. The prayee in aid, on coming into court, joined in the mise together with the tenant; 2 Wms. Saund. 45, d, note. It was more common practice, however, for the demandant to traverse the tenant's plea when the cause could be tried by a common jury instead of the grand assize.

In Practice. Expenses. It is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions: as, when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quod recuperet damna sua (that he recover his damages), and pro misis et custagiis (for costs and charges) so much, etc.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity: as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 5, ch. 1, § 1; La. Code, 2935.

MISERICORDIA (Lat.). An arbitrary or discretionary amercement.

To be in mercy is to be liable to such punishment as the judge may in his discretion inflict. According to Spelman, misericordia is so called because the party is in mercy, and to distinguish this fine from redemptions, or heavy fines. Spelman, Gloss. See Co. Litt. 126 b; Madox, 14.

MISFEASANCE. The performance of an act which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury.

It differs from malfeasance or nonfeasance. See, generally, 2 Viner, Abr. 35; 2 Kent, 443; Doctrina Plac. 62; Story, Bailm. § 9.

It seems to be settled that there is a distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance in the case of mandates. In cases of nonfeasance the mandatory is not generally liable, because, his undertaking being gratuitous, there is no consideration to support it; but in cases of misfeasance the common law gives a remedy for the injury done, and to the extent of that injury; 5 Term, 143; 4 Johns. 81; 2 Johns. Cas. 92; 1 Esp. 74; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; 33 Conn. 109; Story, Bailm. § 165; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

MISJOINDER. In Pleading. The improper union of parties or causes of action in one suit at law or in equity.

Of Actions. The joining several demands which the law does not permit to be joined, to enforce by one proceeding several distinct, substantive rights of recovery. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 98; Archb. Civ. Pl. 61; Dane, Abr.

In equity, it is the joinder of different and distinct claims against one defendant; 1 M. & C. 608; 7 Sim. 241; 3 Barb. Ch. 432; and is distinguished from multifariousness, which may exist only where there are several defendants disconnected with each other; Story, Eq. Pl. § 297, n. The grounds of suit must be wholly distinct, and each ground must be sufficient, as stated, to sustain a bill; 5 Ired. Eq. 313. See 21 Ala. N. S. 252; 9 Ga. 278; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 46; 22 Conn. 171.

It may arise from the joinder of plaintiffs who possess distinct claims; 2 Sim. 331; 6 Madd. 94; 8 Pet. 123; but see 6 Johns. Ch. 150; 8 Paige, Ch. 605; or the joinder of distinct claims of the plaintiff in one bill; 2 S. & S. 79. But it seems that where there is a common liability of the defendants and a common interest in the plaintiffs, different claims may be united in the same suit; 1 M. & C. 623; 3 id. 85; 5 How. 127; 12 Metc.

323. And see 7 Sim. 241; 3 Price, 164; 2 Y. & C. 389; Story, Eq. Pl. § 536, n.; MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

At law, misjoinder vitiates the entire declaration, whether taken advantage of by general demurrer; 1 Maule & S. 355; motion in arrest of judgment, or writ of error; 2 B. & P. 424; 4 Term, 347. It may be aided by verdict in some cases; 2 Lev. 110; 11 Mod. 196; 2 Maule & S. 533; 1 Chitty, Pl. 188.

Of Parties. The joining, as plaintiffs or defendants, parties who have not a joint interest.

In England, under the Judicature Act, 1875, by order xvi. v. 13, no action is to be defeated by the misjoinder of the parties. Different causes of action which cannot be tried together conveniently may be ordered by the court or a judge to be tried separately. Mozl. & W. Dict.

In equity, the joinder of improper plaintiffs is a fatal defect; 2 Sandf. Ch. 186; 3 Edw. Ch. 48; 2 Ala. N. S. 406. But the court may exercise a discretion whether to dismiss the bill; 1 Barb. Ch. 59; 3 Ohio St. 129. See 5 Fla. 110. It may be dismissed wholly, or only as to a portion of the plaintiffs; 18 Ohio, 72. The improper joinder of defendants is no cause of objection by a co-defendant; 2 Barb. Ch. 618; 6 Ired. Eq. 62; 7 Ala. N. S. 362; 12 Ark. 720; 23 Me. 269. See 7 Conn. 387.

The objection must be taken before the hearing; 15 How. 546; 2 Hill, Ch. 566; 4 Paige, Ch. 510; not, however, if it be vital; 30 N. H. 433; by demurrer, if apparent on the face of the bill; 9 Paige, Ch. 410; 7 Ala. N. S. 362; but see 5 Ill. 424; by plea and answer; or otherwise; 13 Pet. 359; 1 T. B. Monr. 105. A defendant who is improperly joined must plead or demur; 1 Mo. 410. At law, see ABATEMENT; PLEADING.

MISKENNING (Fr. mis, wrong, and Sax. cennan, summon). A wrongful citation to appear in court. A variance in a plea. 1 Mon. Angl. 237; Chart. Hen. II.; Jacob, Law Dict.; Du Cange.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name.

In contracts, a mistake in the name will not avoid the contract, in general, if the party can be ascertained; 11 Co. 20; Ld. Raym. 304; Hob. 125. So of contracts of corporations; 2 Beasl. 427. If a deed, note, etc. be made to a corporation under an erroneous name, the proper course is for the corporation to sue in its proper name and allege that the defendant made the deed, etc. to the corporation by the name mentioned in the instrument; 69 Ill. 658.

A misnomer of a legatee will not, in general, avoid a legacy, when the context furnishes the means of correction. See 19 Ves. 381; 1 Rop. Leg. 131; LEGACY. A legacy given to a corporation either by its corporate name, or by description, is good; in the latter case it must be so designated as to be distinguished from every other corporation; 10 N. Y. 84. See 45 Me. 552; 37 Ala. 478.

When a corporation is misnamed in a statute, the statute is not inoperative if there is enough to designate what corporation is meant; 10 Co. 44, 57 b.

Misnomer of one of the parties to a suit must be pleaded in abatement. It has been held that misnomer of one of the partners of a firm in a scire facias sur mortgage is unimportant, if the name of the firm is correct in the mortgage itself; 64 Penn. 63. A slight variation in a corporate name will be disregarded unless the misnomer be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement; 30 Ill. 151; 19 Mich. 196. If a corporation, sued by an erroneous name, appears by that name without objection, the error is cured; Taney, 418. But a writ of mandamus issued against a corporation under an erroneous name is void; 2 Ld. Raym. 1238; and an error in the corporate name in an execution is fatal; 58 Ga. 280. The same is true when there is an error in the corporate name in a judgment; 1 Ld. Raym. 117; but see 11 Mass. 138.

The names of third persons must be correctly laid; for the error will not be helped by pleading the general issue; but, if a sufficient description be given, it has been held, in a civil case, that the misnomer was immaterial. Example: in an action for medicines alleged to have been furnished to defendant's wife, Mary, and his wife was named Elizabeth, the misnomer was held to be immaterial, the word wife being the material word; 2 Marsh. 159. In indictments, the names of third persons must be correctly given; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 78. If a person is well known by the name in the indictment, the indictment is good; 7 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 445; the middle name of a defendant, if stated in an indictment, either in full or by the initial letter, must be correctly stated; 1 Am. L. Reg. 380. Accuracy is especially required in stating the correct name of a corporation in all criminal proceedings in which it may be concerned; 1 Leach, 253; but see 33 Cal. 110. See Archb. Chitty, Pl.; ABATEMENT; CONTRACT; PARTIES; LEGACY; NAME.

MISPLEADING. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting any thing in pleading which is essential to the support or defence of an action, is so called.

Pleading not guilty to an action of debt is an example of the first; setting out a defective title is an example of the second. See 3 Salk. 365.

MISPRISION. In Criminal Law. A term used to signify every considerable misdemeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. Co. 3d Inst. 36.

The concealment of a crime.

Negative misprision consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed.

Misprision of felony is the like concealment of felony, without giving any degree of maintenance to the felon; Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, s. 6, R. S. § 5390; for if any aid be given him, the party becomes an accessory after the fact.

Misprision of treason is the concealment of treason by being merely passive. Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, R. S. § 5333; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 139. If any assistance be given to the traitor, it makes the party a principal, as there are no accessories in treason.

Positive misprision consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Bla. Com. c. 9.

It is the duty of every good citizen, knowing of a treason or felony having been committed, to inform a magistrate. Silently to observe the commission of a felony, without using any endeavors to apprehend the offender, is a misprision. 1 Russ. Cr. 43; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 720; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 59, s. 6; 4 Bla. Com. 119.

Misprisions which are merely positive are denominated contempts or high misdemeanors: as, for example, dissuading a witness from giving evidence. 4 Bla. Com. 126.

MISREADING. When a deed is read falsely to an illiterate or blind man who is a party to it, such false reading amounts to a fraud, because the contract never had the assent of both parties; 5 Co. 19; 6 East, 309; Dane, Abr. c. 86, a. 3, § 7; 2 Johns. 404; 12 id. 469; 3 Cow. 537. See 14 Penn. 496; 82 id. 203.

MISRECITAL. The incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement or a plea: under the latter term is here understood the declaration and all the subsequent pleadings. See RECITAL.

MISREPRESENTATION. The statement made by a party to a contract that a thing relating to it is in fact in a particular way, when he knows it is not so.

The misrepresentation must be both false and fraudulent in order to make the party making it responsible to the other for damages; 3 Conn. 413; 10 Mass. 197; 1 Const. So. C. 328, 475; Metc. Yelv. 21 a, n. 1; Peake, Cas. 115; 3 Campb. 154; Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 10, s. 1. And see 5 Maule & S. 380; 12 East, 638; 3 B. & P. 370. Misrepresentation as to a material part of the consideration will avoid an executory contract; 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 630, 675.

A misrepresentation, to constitute fraud, must be contrary to fact; the party making it must know it to be so; 2 Kent, 471; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 142; 4 Price, 135; 3 Conn. 597; 22 Me. 511; 7 Gratt. 64, 239; 6 Ga. 458; 5 Johns. Ch. 182; 6 Paige, Ch. 197; 1 Stor. 172; 1 W. & M. 342; excluding cases of mere mistake; 5 Q. In the absence of any bad faith, a principal is not affected by a representation made by his agent, which the former knows to be untrue, as he would be by a fraudulent representation made either by himself or his agent; 2 Kent, 621, n.; 1 H. L. C. 615; 2 Macy, 145; 6 M. & W. 358; contra, 21 Vt. 129; 8 id. 98; 3 Q. B. 58. See Benj. Sales, § 445; Broom, Leg. Max. 707. Where a purchaser has been induced to buy through the fraud of an agent, the vendor being innocent, he may rescind the contract or maintain an action of deceit against the agent personally, but against the principal he can maintain no action unless there was a warranty; Benj. Sales, § 467, notes. See 3 Am. L. Rev. 430; Bigel. L. C. Torts, 21; 16 Gray, 436.

MISSING SHIP. A ship which has been at sea and unheard from for so long a time as to give rise to the presumption that she has perished with all on board.

There is no precise time fixed as to when the presumption is to arise; and this must depend upon the circumstances of each case; 2 Stra. 1199; Park. Ins. 63; Marsh. Ins. 488; 2 Johns. 150; 1 Caines, 525; Holt, 242.

MISSISSIPPI. The name of one of the new states of the United States.

The territory of Mississippi, embracing the present states of Alabama and Mississippi, was authorized to be organized by act of congress, of April 9, 1798, and organized on 22d January, 1799. Georgia, from which the territory was formed, ceded it to the United States on April 24, 1802.

The western part of the Mississippi territory was authorized to form a state government to be known as the state of Mississippi, by act of congress passed March 1, 1817, and the state was admitted into the Union December 10, 1817.

The first constitution of the state was adopted at Washington, August 15, 1817.

The second, at Jackson, October 26, 1832. This was amended in August, 1865, so as to strike out the word "white," and to abolish and to eliminate everything connected with the institution of slavery.

The third, at Jackson, on May 15, 1869; ratified by the people on December 1, 1869, and went into operation in 1870, on the readmission of the state into the Union under the Reconstruction Acts of congress.

Suffrage. All male citizens of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who have resided in the state six months, and in the county one month next preceding an election, and who are registered as required by the constitution, are qualified electors. Conviction for bribery, perjury, forgery, or other high crime or misdemeanor, disqualifies an elector. Atheists are disqualified from holding office, and those convicted of having given or offered a bribe to procure an election or appointment. No property qualification for eligibility to office shall ever be required; and no property or educational qualification for an elector.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is vested in the senate and house of representatives. Their action, except in impeachment trials, is subject to executive veto.

The Senate is composed of members elected by the qualified electors of the several districts, for the term of four years, who are apportioned according to the number of qualified electors in the several districts, so as to be not less than one-fourth nor more than one third of the whole number of representatives. One half of the senate is changed every two years. A senator must have attained to the age of twenty-five, must be an inhabitant of the state for one year, and an actual resident of the district from which he is chosen.

The House of Representatives is composed of members elected biennially by the qualified electors of the several counties. The members of the house of representatives must be twenty-one years of age at least, and actual residents of the county from which chosen; and are apportioned among the several counties according to the number of qualified electors, not to be less than one hundred, nor more than one hundred and twenty.

Each house appoints its own officers, and judges of the qualification, return, and election of its members.

The senate is presided over by the lieutenant-governor, who is elected by the people at the same time and for the same term as the governor. It shall choose a president pro tempore, to act in the absence or disability of the lieutenant-governor.

No person liable for public moneys unaccounted for shall be eligible as a member of the legislature, or to any office of profit or trust, until he shall have accounted for, and paid over, all sums for which he may have been liable.

No member of the legislature, during the term for which he was elected, shall be appointed to any office of profit which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which have been increased, during the time such member was in office.

Executive Power.—This is vested in a Governor, who holds his office for four years, and is elected by the qualified electors of the state. He must be at least thirty years of age, twenty years a citizen of the United States, and a resident in the state two years next preceding his election. He may convene the legislature in extra session. In all criminal cases, except impeachment and treason, he may grant reprieves and pardons, and remit fines and forfeitures with the advice and consent of the senate. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of the militia, except when called into the service of the United States. It is his duty to see that the laws are faithfully executed.

When the office of governor becomes vacant by death or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor possesses the powers and discharges the duties of the office, and receives the same compensation as the governor, during the remainder of the term. When the governor is absent from the state, or unable, from protracted illness, to perform the duties of his office, the lieutenant-governor discharges the duties until the governor shall be able to resume his duties; but, if from disability or otherwise, the lieutenant-governor shall be incapable of performing said duties, or if he be absent from the state, the president of the senate, pro tempore, acts in his stead; but if there be no such president, or if he be disqualified by like disability, or be absent from the state, then the speaker of the house of representatives assumes the office of governor, and performs said duties; and, in case of disability of the foregoing officers to discharge the duties of governor, the secretary of state convenes the senate to elect a president pro tempore.

The Judicial Power.—The judges of all the courts, except justices of the peace and boards of supervisors, are appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate.

The Supreme Court consists of three judges, appointed for the term of nine years. The terms are so arranged that one expires every third year. The judges must be at least thirty years of age, and two years citizens of the state. The terms of the court are held at Jackson, the seat of government, twice in each year, to wit: third Monday in October, and first Monday in April. The state is divided into three districts, and the dockets of the different districts are called at different times, which are fixed during the October term by statute, and during the April term by order of the court. The judges are not required to be appointed from the districts, but are taken from the state at large. It has no jurisdiction "but such as properly belongs to a supreme court."

The judges of the supreme court, severally, may grant writs of supersedeas, certiorari, and habeas corpus, take the acknowledgment and proof of all instruments, are conservators of the peace, and may sit as a court of inquiry and administer oaths.

Circuit Court. The state, by the constitution, is required to be divided into convenient judicial districts, and is now divided into twelve districts. The judges are appointed for the term of six years, and are required to be at least twenty-six years of age; and for two years citizens of the state; and are not required to be residents of the districts for which they are appointed. The judges may alternate and make temporary changes of their circuits whenever the public interests require. The judges may, in vacation, issue writs of prohibition, mandamus, certiorari, supersedeas, habeas corpus, injunction, and ne exeat, returnable to any court having jurisdiction. At least two terms of the court shall be held each year in each county.

The court has original jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal; but in civil matters only when the principal amount in controversy exceeds one hundred and fifty dollars. It has appellate jurisdiction in all cases where appeals are granted by law from inferior tribunals. It may alter names, legitimate offspring, and decree adoption of children.

Chancery Courts are established in each county in the state, with full jurisdiction in all matters in equity, and of divorce and alimony; in matters testamentary and of administration; in minors' business, and allotment of dower; and in cases of idiocy, lunacy, and persons non compos mentis. All appeals are prosecuted directly to the supreme court.

The state is divided into convenient chancery districts, now into twelve, and they conform to the circuit court districts. Chancellors are appointed for each district in the same manner as circuit judges, and for the term of four years. The qualifications of the chancellors are regulated by statute, and are the same as those prescribed by the constitution for circuit judges. A court is required to be held in each county at least twice in each year.

The clerk of the chancery court is vested with large powers. At any time he may receive and file bills, petitions, accounts, inventories, and reports, issue process and warrants of appraisement, allow and register claims against estates of decedents, administer in his court, may appoint administrators ad colligendum, may grant letters of administration to husband, or wife, or next of kin. At monthly rules, required to be held on the first Monday of each month, he may take the probate of wills, and grant letters testamentary, grant letters of administration, appoint guardians for minors, lunatics, and idiots, compel the return of inventories, the presentation of annual or final accounts and approve the same; may refer contested claims to auditors, and receive and act on their report; may do all things necessary to the settlement of insolvent estates; may require executors, or administrators, or guardians to give new sureties; may enter decrees nisi, and make all orders of course, orders of revivor, and orders pro confesso. All such orders are not final, but are subject to approval by the court.

The clerks of the circuit and chancery courts are elected by the qualified electors of the county, and for the term of four years. The clerk of the supreme court is appointed by the court for the term of four years.

Justices of the Peace. Each county is divided into justices' districts, and they are the same as those laid off for the election of supervisors, unless otherwise directed by the board of supervisors, or by law. Two justices are elected in each district for the term of two years. The jurisdiction in civil matters is limited to causes in which the principal of the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars; and in criminal matters, concurrent with the circuit court, of all cases of offences where the punishment prescribed does not extend beyond a fine and imprisonment in the county jail. They are conservators of the peace. An appeal may be taken to circuit court in all cases.

Board of Supervisors. Each county is divided into five districts, and from each there is elected a supervisor, who holds his office for two years. The five so elected constitute a board of supervisors for each county, with full jurisdiction over roads, ferries and bridges, and all matters of county finance, assessment of taxes, and county contracts.

MISSOURI. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

It was formed out of part of the territory ceded to the United States by the French Republic by treaty of April 30, 1803.

This state was admitted into the Union by a resolution of congress approved March 2, 1821. Stat. U. S.

To this resolution there was a condition, which, having been performed, the admission of Missouri as a state was completed by the president's proclamation, dated August 10, 1821. 3 Litt. & Brown's edit. Stat. U. S. App. 2.

The convention which formed the constitution of this state met at St. Louis, on Monday, June 12, 1820, and continued by adjournment till July 19, 1820, when the constitution was adopted, establishing "an independent republic, by the name of the 'State of Missouri.'"

Every male citizen of the United States, and every person of foreign birth, who may have declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States according to law, not less than one nor more than five years before offering to vote; who is over the age of twenty-one years, who shall have resided in the state one year, and in the county, city, or town sixty days, next preceding an election, is entitled to vote. But no officer, soldier, or marine, in the regular army or navy of the United States, shall be entitled to vote at any election.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is lodged in a General Assembly, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The Senate consists of thirty-four members, to be chosen by the qualified voters of their respective districts for the term of four years; but one-half of the senators are to be chosen every second year. A senator must be a male citizen of the United States, thirty years old, a qualified voter of the state three years, and an inhabitant of the district which he may be chosen to represent one year, and shall have paid a state and county tax within one year, next before his election.

The House of Representatives consists of members to be chosen every second year by the electors of the several counties, the total number being about one hundred and forty, but varying with the apportionments, which are to be made after each decennial census, and are based on a ratio obtained by dividing the whole number of inhabitants of the state by two hundred. Each county is entitled to one representative, at least, and when counties have certain multiples of said ratio, they are entitled to representation proportionate thereto; such counties being divided into representative districts by the county or circuit court.

A representative must be twenty-four years of age at least, must have been a qualified voter of the state two years, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as a senator.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the people, and holds his office for four years and until a successor is duly elected and qualified, but he is ineligible to re-election as his own successor. He must be at least thirty-five years old, a male, and must have been a citizen of the United States for ten years, and a resident of this state seven years next before his election. He is commander-in-chief of the militia of the state, except when they are called into the service of the United States; is the conservator of the peace; and is to take care that the laws are distributed and faithfully executed. He has power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, except in cases of treason and impeachment; is to communicate information and recommend measures to the general assembly; commission all officers and fill all vacancies, unless otherwise provided by law; and may veto bills, which, however, may be passed over his objections by a two-thirds vote of all the members elect in both houses.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, in the same manner, and for the same term, and is to possess the same qualifications as the governor. He is, by virtue of his office, president of the senate, may debate in committee of the whole, and give the casting vote in the senate, and in joint vote of both houses. In case of death, conviction, or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state, or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall be removed, devolve upon him.

A Secretary of State, State Auditor, State Treasurer, Attorney General, and Superintendent of Public Schools, each of whom must be at least twenty-five years old, a male citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state at least five years next before an election, and who are all elected for four years, complete the executive department.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court consists of five judges, elected by the people for ten years, one judge being elected every two years; but they may be removed from office, for inefficiency on account of continued sickness or infirmity, by the general assembly, two-thirds of the members concurring, with the approval of the governor. This process does not, however, take the place of impeachment. Judges must be citizens of the United States, not less than thirty years old, and citizens of this state for five years next before their election.

Three of the judges constitute a quorum, and the court is required to sit at the seat of government. It has an appellate jurisdiction from inferior courts, coextensive with the state (under limitations provided in the constitution), may issue, hear, and determine writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, and other original remedial writs, and has a general superintending control of inferior courts.

The St. Louis Court of Appeals has appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the city of St. Louis, and the counties of St. Louis, St. Charles, Lincoln, and Warren. It has the same power as the supreme court, within said city and counties, as to superintendence of inferior courts and the issuance and determination of original remedial writs.

The court is held at the city of St. Louis, and consists of three judges, two of whom constitute a quorum, to be elected by the qualified voters of said city and counties for the period of twelve years, one judge being elected every four years. Judges must be residents of the district composed of said city and counties, and must otherwise possess the same qualifications as judges of the supreme court. Appeals to, and writs of error from, the supreme court, lie in cases involving: 1st, a sum exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars; 2d, the construction of state or national constitution; 3d, a treaty, statute, or authority under the United States; 4th, the state revenue laws, or title to state office; 5th, title to real estate; 6th, cases in which a political subdivision, or an officer, of the state is a party; 7th, all cases of felony.

The Circuit Court has jurisdiction over all criminal, and exclusive original jurisdiction over all civil cases, not otherwise provided for by law; concurrent jurisdiction with, and appellate jurisdiction from, inferior tribunals and justices of the peace, as may be required by law. It exercises superintending control over criminal, probate, county, and municipal corporation courts, justices of the peace, and inferior tribunals. It has full original jurisdiction in equity; and no other chancery court exists.

The state is divided into convenient circuits of contiguous counties, in each of which circuits one judge is elected for six years, who must be thirty years old, a citizen of the United States five years, of this state three years, and a resident of the circuit. Any circuit judge may be removed by the general assembly, or may be impeached, in the same manner as supreme judges. In the city of St. Louis (which is a distinct political subdivision of the state) there are five circuit judges, of co-ordinate jurisdiction, who sit separately in special term, for the trial of causes, and together in general term, to make rules of court and transact such other business as may be provided by law, but with no power to review proceedings had in special term.

The Probate Court is a court of record in each county, consisting of one judge, who is elected. It has jurisdiction in probate matters, letters testamentary, and of administration, guardians, curators, and all matters relating to apprentices.

The County Court is a court of record in each county, and has jurisdiction to transact all county business, and such other business as may be prescribed by law. It consists of one or more judges, not exceeding three, of whom the probate judge may be one.

Justices of the Peace are elected by the people, two in each township, for a term of four years. The city of St. Louis is divided into fourteen districts, each of which has one justice of the peace, at least. They have original civil jurisdiction over matters arising from contract, and to recover statutory penalties when the amount involved does not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars (and in cities having over fifty thousand inhabitants, two hundred and fifty dollars); also in actions against railroad companies for injuries to animals in their townships, without regard to value.

They have criminal jurisdiction in breaches of the peace, concurrent original jurisdiction with the circuit court, coextensive with their counties, in misdemeanors, and authority to issue warrants for preliminary hearing, and to take bail, in cases of alleged felony.

In the city of St. Louis there are the Criminal Court, the Court of Criminal Correction, and, as in other cities, Municipal Corporation Courts.

The Criminal Court has the criminal jurisdiction in felony cases of the circuit courts of other counties.

The Court of Criminal Correction has exclusive original jurisdiction of all misdemeanors, committed in the city of St. Louis, under the laws of the state, concurrent with justices of the peace; and power to hear and commit for indictment, with or without bail, all parties charged with felony. It has also an appellate jurisdiction from justices of the peace in criminal cases.

Municipal Corporation Courts exercise functions under the laws and ordinances of the city.

MISTAKE. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Story, Eq. Jur. § 110.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 358.

A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Bishp. Eq. § 185.

As a general rule, both at law and in equity, mistakes of law do not furnish an excuse for wrongful acts or a ground of relief from the consequences of acts done in consequence of such a mistake; 6 Cl. & F. 964–971; 9 M. & W. 54; 5 Hare, 91; 8 Wheat. 214; 1 Pet. 15; 9 How. 55; 7 Paige, Ch. 99*, 137; 2 Johns. Ch. 60; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 125–138. See 2 M'Cord, Ch. 455; 6 H. & J. 500; 25 Vt. 603; De G. M. & G. 76; 21 Ala. N. S. 252; 13 Ark. 129; 6 Ohio, 169; 11 id. 480; 21 Ga. 118; Beasl. Ch. 165; L. R. 14 Eq. 85; 3 Ch. Div. 351. But if a contracting party knows that the other party is proceeding upon a mistake in law, there might arise a consideration of fraud in his taking advantage of the other's mistake; L. R. 14 Eq. 85; 70 Penn. 425; 51 Ala. 154; 23 Ill. 579; when both parties are under a common mistake of law as to the application of their contract, it can be applied only according to their intention and not otherwise; Leake, Contr. 347; 46 L. J. Q. B. 213. And, if parties contract under a common misapprehension as to their relative and respective rights, the contract may be liable to be set aside as inapplicable to the state of rights really existing; L. R. 2 H. L. 170; 6 H. L. 234. In this connection the word jus in the maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat, denotes general law and not private rights; ibid. An agreement made for the purpose of settling rights, with full knowledge of the doubts arising upon them, will be enforced, and parties will not be allowed to state that they were under a misapprehension as to the law; 1 S. & S. 555; 51 Ala. 160; 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 411; 7 W. & S. 253. This is particularly the case in relation to family settlements; 3 Swanst. 462; 64 Penn. 25.

An act done or a contract made under a mutual mistake or ignorance of a material fact is voidable and relievable in equity; Story, Eq. Jur. § 140. The rule applies to cases where there has been a studied suppression of facts by one side, and to cases of mutual ignorance or mistake; 3 Burr. 21; 26 Beav. 454; 12 Sim. 465; 9 Ves. 275; 3 Ch. Cas. 56; 2 Barb. 475; 1 Hill, N. Y. 287; 11 Pet. 71; 8 B. Monr. 580; 4 Mas. 414; 5 R. I. 130. But the fact must be material to the contract, i. e. essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction; 1 Ves. 126, 210; De G. & S. 83; 6 Binn. 102; 11 Grat. 468; 2 Barb. 37; 2 Sandf. Ch. 298; 13 Penn. 371. See 28 N. J. Eq. 306. A mistake will not be relieved against if it was the result of the party's negligence; 5 Oreg. 169; 12 Cl. & F. 248; 1 W. & M. 138; 5 R. I. 130. If the mistake, as to the expression of an agreement, is only on one side, there will be no relief. But if such a mistake on the part of one party be known to the other at the time, the contract can be avoided at common law, if not reduced to writing; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597. In equity, a mistake of one party known to the other may not only preclude the latter from obtaining specific performance, but may also be a ground for setting aside the contract altogether; Leake, Contr. 318; 30 Beav. 445. When a written contract contains a mistake common to both parties in expressing its terms, equity will give relief by restraining proceedings at law, or by rectifying the writing or setting it aside; Leake, Contr. 319.

When a mistake in the expression of a written contract is so obvious, without extrinsic evidence, as to leave no doubt of the intention of the parties, the writing may be so construed as to correct the mistake; 8 B. & C. 568; 5 H. L. C. 40; L. R. 9 Eq. 507.

An award may be set aside for a mistake of law or fact by the arbitrators apparent on the face of the award; 2 B. & P. 371; 1 Dall. 487; 1 Sneed, 321. See 6 Metc. 136; 17 How. 344; 6 Pick. 148; 2 Gall. 61; 4 N. H. 357; 3 Vt. 308; 6 id. 529; 15 Ill. 461; 2 B. & Ald. 691; 3 id. 237; 1 Bingh. 104; 1 D. & R. 366; 1 Taunt. 152; 6 id. 254; 3 C. B. 705; 2 Exch. 344; 3 East, 18.

The word which the parties intended to use in an instrument may be substituted for one which was actually used by a clerical error, in equity; Adams, Eq. 169 et seq.; 13 Gray, 378; 6 Ired. Eq. 462; 17 Ala. N. S. 562.

As to the rule for the correction of mistakes in wills, see Story, Eq. Jur. § 179; 2 Ves. 216; 3 id. 321; 1 Bro. Ch. 85; 3 id. 446; 1 Keen, 692; 2 K. & J. 740; 1 Jones, Eq. 110; 22 Mo. 518; 2 Stockt. Ch. 582.

A mistake sometimes prevents a forfeiture in cases of violation of revenue laws; Paine, 129; Gilp. 235; 4 Call, 158; breach of embargo acts; 3 Day, 296; Paine, 16; 7 Cra. 22; 3 Wheat. 59; 11 How. 47; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 697; 4 Cra. 347; 11 Wheat. 1; 12 id. 1; 1 Mass. 347. See Kerr, Fr. & Mist.; Bispham, Equity; Leake, Contr.; 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 411.

MISTRIAL. A trial which is erroneous on account of some defect in the persons trying, as if the jury come from the wrong county, or because there was no issue formed as if no plea be entered, or some other defect of jurisdiction. 3 Cro. 284; 2 Maule & S. 270.

Consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past; Hob. 5.

It is error to go to trial without a plea or an issue, in the absence of counsel and without his consent, although an affidavit of defence be filed in the case, containing the substance of a plea, and the court has ordered the case on the list for trial; 3 Penn. 501.

On an indictment for perjury, an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and not otherwise qualified, not having, in fact, been summoned, personated his father as a juror. Here was a mistrial, because the verdict in the case was the verdict of but eleven jurors. "To support a judgment," observed Judge Holroyd, "it must be founded on a verdict delivered by twelve competent jurors. This man was incompetent, and therefore there has been a mistrial." 7 D. & R. 684. See 4 B. & Ald. 430; 18 N. Y. 128; NEW TRIAL.

MISUSER. An unlawful use of a right.

In cases of public offices and franchises, a misuser is sufficient to cause the right to be forfeited. 2 Bla. Com. 153; 5 Pick. 163.

MITIGATION. Reduction; diminution; lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment.

Circumstances which do not amount to a justification or excuse of the act committed may yet be properly considered in mitigation of the punishment: as, for example, the fact that one who stole a loaf of bread was starving.

In actions for the recovery of damages, matters may often be given in evidence in mitigation of damages which are no answer to the action itself. See DAMAGES; CHARACTER.

MITIOR SENSUS. See IN MITIORI SENSU.

MITTER (L. Fr.). To put, to send, or to pass: as, mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. 2 Bla. Com. 324; Bacon, Abr. Release (C); Co. Litt. 193, 273 b. Mitter a large, to put or set at large.

MITTIMUS. In Old English Law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine: it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. 1 Mart. La. 278; 2 id. 88.

In Criminal Practice. A precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of the peace, or other competent officer, directed to the jailer or keeper of a prison, commanding him to receive and safely keep a person charged with an offence therein named, until he shall be delivered by due course of law. Co. Litt. 590.

MIXED ACTION. In Practice. An action partaking of the nature both of a real and of a personal action, by which real property is demanded, and also damages for a wrong sustained. An ejectment is of this nature. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3650. See ACTION.

MIXED CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract in which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, and requires of the latter something of less value than what he has given: as, a legacy charged with something of less value than the legacy itself. Pothier, Obl. n. 12.

MIXED GOVERNMENT. A government established with some of the powers of a monarchial, aristocratical, and democratical government. See GOVERNMENT; MONARCHY.

MIXED LARCENY. Compound larceny, which see.

MIXED PROPERTY. That kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heir-looms, tombstones, monuments in a church, and title-deeds to an estate, are of this nature. 2 Bla. Com. 428; 3 B. & Ad. 174; 4 Bingh. 106.

MIXED TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. "Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground:" e. g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law, 380; 2 Bla. Com. 24.

MIXTION. The putting of different goods or chattels together in such a manner that they can no longer be separated: as, putting the wines of two different persons into the same barrel, the grain of several persons into the same bag, and the like.

The intermixture may be occasioned by the wilful act of the party, or owner of one of the articles, by the wilful act of a stranger, by the negligence of the owner or a stranger, or by accident. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MOB (Lat. mobilis, movable). A tumultuous rout or rabble; a crowd excited to some violent or unlawful act. The word in legal use is practically synonymous with riot, but the latter is the more correct term.

At common law a municipal corporation is not liable for damage to property by a mob; 90 Penn. 397; s. c. 35 Am. Rep. 670; 46 Ala. 118; 25 Md. 107; nor for the failure of its officers to repress a mob; 53 Ala. 527; s. c. 25 Am. Rep. 656; 13 Blatch. 289. The legislature may, however, give a right of action against the corporation for damages caused by a mob, and provide the measure of damages; 9 Kan. 350; 24 Hun, 562; 47 Cal. 531; 65 Me. 426. Such a right of action has been provided by statute in Pennsylvania against the county in which the damage was caused.

MOBBING AND RIOTING. In Scotch Law. A general term, including all those convocations of the lieges for violent and unlawful purposes, which are attended with injury to the persons or property of the lieges, or terror and alarm to the neighborhood in which it takes place. The two phrases are usually placed together; but, nevertheless, they have distinct meanings, and are sometimes used separately in legal language,—the word mobbing being peculiarly applicable to the unlawful assemblage and violence of a number of persons, and that of rioting to the outrageous behavior of a single individual. Alison, Cr. Law, c. 23, p. 509.

MOBILIA. See MOVABLES.

MODEL. A machine made on a small scale to show the manner in which it is to be worked or employed.

The act of congress of July 4, 1836, § 6, required an inventor who desired to take out a patent for his invention to furnish a model of his invention, in all cases which admitted of representation by model, of a convenient size to exhibit advantageously its several parts. But now a model need not be furnished unless required by the commissioner; and the commissioner of patents may dispense with models of designs when the design can be sufficiently represented by drawings or photographs; R. S. § 4930. A model must not exceed one foot in any of its dimensions, under the present rules of the patent-office, except where the commissioner may admit working models of complicated machines of larger dimensions.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. In Pleading. The name of a plea in trespass by which the defendant justifies an assault and battery, because he moderately corrected the plaintiff, whom he had a right to correct. 2 Chitty, Pl. 576; 2 B. & P. 224. See CORRECTION; ASSAULT; 15 Mass. 347; 2 Phill. Ev. 147; Bacon, Abr. Assault (C).

This plea ought to disclose, in general terms, the cause which rendered the correction expedient; 3 Salk. 47.

MODERATOR. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting: sometimes he is called a chairman. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

MODIFICATION. A change: as, the modification of a contract. This may take place at the time of making the contract, by a condition which shall have that effect: for example, if I sell you one thousand bushels of corn upon condition that my crop shall produce that much, and it produces only eight hundred bushels, the contract is modified; it is for eight hundred bushels, and no more.

It may be modified, by the consent of both parties, after it has been made. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 733.

MODO ET FORMA (Lat. in manner and form). In Pleading. Technical words used to put in issue such concomitants of the principal matters as time, place, etc., where these circumstances were material. Their use when these circumstances were immaterial was purely formal. The words were translated literally, when pleadings began to be made in English, by "in manner and form." See Lawes, Pl. 120; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 22; Steph. Pl. 213; Dane, Abr. Index; Viner, Abr. Modo et Forma.

MODUS. In Civil Law. Manner; means; way. Ainsworth, Lat. Dict. A rhythmic song. Du Cange.

In Old Conveyancing. Manner: e. g., the manner in which an estate should be held, etc. A qualification, whether in restriction or enlargement of the terms of the instrument; especially with relation to the kind of grant called "donatio,"—the making those quasi heirs who were not in fact heirs according to the ordinary form of such conveyances. And this modus or qualification of the ordinary form became so common as to give rise to the maxim "modus et conventio vincunt legem." Co. Litt. 19 a; Bracton, 17 b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 293. A consideration. Bracton, 17, 18.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom. See MODUS DECIMANDI.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, arising from immemorial usage, and differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

To be a good modus, the custom must be—first, certain and invariable; second, beneficial to the person; third, a custom to pay something different from the thing compounded for; fourth, of the same species; fifth, the thing substituted must be in its nature as durable as the tithes themselves; sixth, it must not be too large: that would be a rank modus. 2 Bla. Com. 30. See 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 100; 13 M. & W. 822.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. In Ecclesiastical Law. A custom or prescription not to pay tithes, which is not good, except in case of abbey-lands. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 31, n.

MOHAMMEDAN LAW. A system of native law prevailing among the Mohammedans in India, and administered there by the British government. See HINDU LAW.

MOHATRA. In French Law. The name of a fraudulent contract made to cover a usurious loan of money.

It takes place when an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, n. 44; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1118.

MOIETY. The half of any thing: as, if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A, and the other to B, each shall take an equal part. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Littleton, 125; 3 C. B. 274, 283.

MOLESTATION. In Scotch Law. The name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonty, or of controverted marches. Erskine, Inst. 4. 1. 48.

MOLITURA. Toll paid for grinding at a mill; multure. Not used.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT (Lat.). He laid his hands on gently.

In Pleading. A plea in justification of a trespass to the person. It is a good plea when supported by the evidence; 12 Viner, Abr. 182; Hamm. N. P. 149; where an amount of violence proportioned to the circumstances; 20 Johns. 427; 4 Denio, 448; 2 Strobh. 232; 17 Ohio, 454; has been done to the person of another in defence of property; 3 Cush. 154; 3 Ohio St. 159; 9 Barb. 652; 23 Penn. 424; see 19 N. H. 562; 25 Ala. N. s. 41; 4 Cush. 597; or the prevention of crime; 2 Chitty, Pl. 574; Bacon, Abr. Assault and Battery (C 8).

MOLMUTIAN LAWS. The laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, sixteenth king of the Britons, who began his reign about 400 B. C. These laws were famous in the land till the conquest; Toml.; Moz. & W.

MONARCHY That government which is ruled, really or theoretically, by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state.

According to the etymology of the word, monarchy is that government in which one person rules supreme—alone. In modern times the terms autocracy, autocrat, have come into use to indicate that monarchy of which the ruler desires to be exclusively considered the source of all power and authority. The Russian emperor styles himself Autocrat of all the Russias. Autocrat is the same with despot; but the latter term has fallen somewhat into disrepute. Monarchy is contradistinguished from republic. Although the etymology of the term monarchy is simple and clear, it is by no means easy to give a definition either of monarchy or of republic. The constitution of the United States guarantees a republican government to every state. What is a republic? In this case the meaning of the term must be gathered from the republics which existed at the time of the formation of our government, and which were habitually called republics. Lieber, in a paper on the question, "Shall Utah be admitted into the Union?" (in Putnam's Magazine,) declared that the Mormons did not form a republic.

The fact that one man stands at the head of a government does not make it a monarchy. We have a president at the head. Nor is it necessary that the one person have an unlimited amount of power, to make a government a monarchy. The power of the king of England is limited by law and theory, and reduced to a small amount in reality: yet England is called a monarchy. Nor does hereditariness furnish us with a distinction. The pope is elected by the cardinals, yet the States of the Church were a monarchy; and the stadtholder of several states of the Netherlands was hereditary, yet the states were republics. We cannot find any better definition of monarchy than this: a monarchy is that government which is ruled (really or theoretically) by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state (called his subjects); while we call republic that government in which not only there exists an organism by which the opinion of the people, or of a portion of the people (as in aristocracies), passes over into public will, that is, law, but in which also the supreme power, or the executive power, returns, either periodically or at stated times (where the chief-magistracy is for life), to the people, or a portion of the people, to be given anew to another person; or else, that government in which the hereditary portion (if there be any) is not the chief and leading portion of the government, as was the case in the Netherlands.

Monarchy is the prevailing type of government. Whether it will remain so with our cis-Caucasian race is a question not to be discussed in a law dictionary. The two types of monarchy as it exists in Europe are the limited or constitutional monarchy, developed in England, and centralized monarchy—to which was added the modern French type, which consisted in the adoption of Rousseau's idea of sovereignty, and applying it to a transfer of all the sovereign power of the people to one Cæsar, who thus became an unqualified and unmitigated autocrat or despot. It was a relapse into coarse absolutism.

Paley has endeavored to point out the advantages and disadvantages of the different classes of government,—not successfully, we think. The great advantages of the monarchial element in a free government are: first, that there remains a stable and firm point in the unavoidable party struggle; and secondly, that, supreme power, and it may be said the whole government, being represented by or symbolized in one living person, authority, respect, and, with regard to public money, even public morality, stand a better chance to be preserved.

The great disadvantages of a monarchy are that the personal interests or inclinations of the monarch or his house (of the dynasty) are substituted for the public interest; that to the chance of birth is left what with rational beings certainly ought to be the result of reason and wisdom; and that loyalty to the ruler comes easily to be substituted for real patriotism, and frequently passes over into undignified and pernicious man-worship. Monarchy is assuredly the best government for many nations at the present period, and the only government under which in this period they can obtain security and liberty: yet, unless we believe in a pre-existing divine right of the monarch, monarchy can never be anything but a substitute—acceptable, wise, even desirable, as the case may be—for something more dignified, which, unfortunately, the passions or derelictions of men prevent. The advantages and disadvantages of republics may be said to be the reverse of what has been stated regarding monarchy. A frequent mistake in modern times is this: that a state simply for the time without a king—a kingless government—is called a republic. But a monarchy does not change into a republic simply by expelling the king or the dynasty; as was seen in France in 1848. Few governments are less acceptable than an elective monarchy; for it has the disadvantages of the monarchy without its advantages, and the disadvantages of a republic without its advantages. See GOVERNMENT; ABSOLUTISM.

MONETAGIUM. An ancient tribute paid by tenants to their lord every third year, in consideration of the lord's not changing the money he had coined.

Mintage, or the right of coining money. Cowel.

MONEY. Gold and silver coins. The common medium of exchange in a civilized nation.

There is some difference of opinion as to the etymology of the word money; and writers do not agree as to its precise meaning. Some writers define it to be the common medium of exchange among civilized nations; but in the United States constitution there is a provision which has been supposed to make it synonymous with coins: "The congress shall have power to coin money." Art. 1, sect. 8. Again: "No state shall coin money, or make any thing but gold and silver a legal tender in payment of debt." Art. 1, sect. 10. Hence the money of the United States consists of gold and silver coins. And so well has the congress of the United States maintained this point, that the copper coins heretofore struck, and the nickel cent of recent issues, although authorized to "pass current," are not money in an exact sense, because they are not made a legal tender in the payment of debts. The question has been made whether a paper currency can be constitutionally authorized by congress and constituted a legal tender in the payment of private debts. Such a power has been exercised and adjudged valid by the highest tribunal of several of the states, as well as by congress in the legal-tender acts of 1862 and 1863. See LEGAL-TENDER; 1 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 553; 11 id. 618; 12 id. 601; 47 Wisc. 551.

For many purposes, bank-notes; 1 Y. & J. 380; 3 Mass. 405; 17 id. 560; 4 Pick. 74; 2 N. H. 333; 20 Wisc. 217; 7 Cow. 662; Bnyt. 24; a check; 4 Bingh. 179; and negotiable notes; 3 Mass. 405; will be considered as money. But a charge that the defendant set up and kept a faro bank, at which money was bet, etc., is not sustained by proof that bank-notes were bet, etc.; 2 Dana, 298; see 2 H. & G. 407; 3 Rogers' Rec. 3. To support a count for money had and received, the receipt by the defendant of bank-notes, promissory notes; 3 Mass. 405; 9 Pick. 93; 14 Me. 285; 7 Johns. 132; credit in account in the books of a third person; 3 Campb. 199; or any chattel, is sufficient; 4 Pick. 71; 17 Mass. 560; and will be treated as money. See 7 Wend. 311; 8 id. 641; 7 S. & R. 246; 8 Term, 687; 3 B. & P. 559; 1 Y. & J. 380.

MONEY OF ADIEU. In French Law. Earnest-money: so called because given at parting in completion of the bargain. Poth. Sale, 507. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest-money; money of adieu is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans.

MONEY BILLS. Bills or projects of laws providing for raising revenue, and for making grants or appropriations of the public treasure.

A bill for granting supplies to the crown. Such bills commence in the House of Commons and are rarely attempted to be materially altered in the Lords; May, Parl. L. ch. 22.

The first clause of the seventh section of the constitution of the United States declares, "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." See Story, Const. §§ 871–877; 58 Ala. 546.

What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue," in the sense of the constitution, has been matter of some discussion. Tucker, Bla. Com. App. 261, and note; Story, Const. § 877. In practice, the power has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words; and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. Story, id.; 2 Elliott, Deb. 283, 284.

MONEY CLAIMS. In English Practice. Under the Judicature Act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" hitherto in use. Moz. & W. 410.

And a privilege conferred by a state constitution, to originate "money-bills," has been held limited to such as transfer money from the people to the state, and not inclusive of such as appropriate money from the state treasury; 126 Mass. 557.

MONEY COUNTS. In Pleading. The common counts in an action of assumpsit.

They are so called because they are founded on express or implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt. They are of four descriptions; the indebitatus assumpsit; the quantum meruit; the quantum valebant; and the account stated. See these titles.

Although the plaintiff cannot resort to an implied promise when there is a general contract, yet he may, in many cases, recover on the common counts notwithstanding there was a special agreement, provided it has been executed; 1 Campb. 471; 12 East, 1; 7 Cra. 299; 5 Mass. 391; 10 id. 287; 7 Johns. 132; 10 id. 136. It is, therefore, advisable to insert the money counts in an action of assumpsit, when suing on a special contract; 1 Chitty, Pl. 333, 334.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. In Pleading. The technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

An action of assumpsit will lie to recover money to which the plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity, when no rule of policy or strict law prevents it, the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which he cannot with a good conscience retain, on a count for money had and received; 6 S. & R. 369; 10 id. 219; 1 Dall. 148; 2 id. 154; 3 J. J. Marsh. 175, 1 Harr. N. J. 447; 1 Harr. & G. 258; 7 Mass. 288; 6 Wend. 290; 13 id. 488; Add. Contr. 230.

When the money has been received by the defendant in consequence of some tortious act to the plaintiff's property, as when he cut down the plaintiff's timber and sold it, the plaintiff may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for money had and received; 1 Dall. 122; 1 Blackf. 181; 4 Pick. 452; 5 id. 285; 12 id. 120; 1 J. J. Marsh. 543; 4 Binn. 374; 3 Watts, 277; 4 Call, 451.

In general, the action for money had and received lies only where money has been received by the defendant; 14 S. & R. 179; 1 Pick. 204; 1 J. J. Marsh. 544; 3 id. 6; 7 id. 100; 11 Johns. 464; 77 N. Y. 400. But bank-notes or any other property received as money will be considered for this purpose as money; 3 Mass. 405; 17 id. 560; Bayt. 24; 7 Cow. 622; 4 Pick. 74. See 9 S. & R. 11.

No privity of contract between the parties is required in order to support this action, except that which results from the fact of one man's having the money of another which he cannot conscientiously retain; 17 Mass. 563, 579. See 2 Dall. 54; 5 Conn. 71; 127 Mass. 22.

MONEY LAND. A phrase sometimes applied to money held upon trust to be laid out in the purchase of land. See CONVERSION.

MONEY LENT. In Pleading. The technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

To recover, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant received his money, but it is not indispensable that it should be originally lent. If, for example, money has been advanced upon a special contract, which has been abandoned and rescinded, and which cannot be enforced, the law raises an implied promise from the person who holds the money to pay it back as money lent. 7 Bingh. 266;

3 M. & W. 434; 9 id. 729. See 1 N. Chipm. 214; 3 J. J. Marsh. 37.

MONEY-ORDER. The act of 8 June 1872, c. 335, provided for the establishment of a uniform money-order system, at all suitable post-offices, which shall be called "money-order" offices. The applicant, upon depositing a sum, which must not be over fifty dollars, at one post-office, receives a certificate or order for that amount, which he mails to the payee, who can then obtain the money at the office designated in the order, upon presenting the latter and mentioning the name of his correspondent. The system is now established with several foreign countries, as well as at home, and is found very convenient for the transmission of small sums; R. S. §§ 4027–4048. Suppl. to R. S. p. 155. For the English system, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 88.

MONEY PAID. In Pleading. The technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

When one advances money for the benefit of another with his consent, or at his express request, although he be not benefited by the transaction, the creditor may recover the money in an action of assumpsit declaring for money paid for the defendant; 5 S. & R. 9. But one cannot by a voluntary payment of another's debt make himself creditor of that other; 1 Const. So. C. 472; 1 Gill & J. 497; 5 Cow. 603: 3 Johns. 434; 10 id. 361; 14 id. 87; 2 Root, 84; 2 Stew. Ala. 500; 4 N. H. 138; 1 South. 150.

Assumpsit for money paid will not lie where property, not money, has been paid or received; 7 S. & R. 246; 10 id. 75; 14 id. 179; 7 J. J. Marsh. 18. But see 7 Cow. 662.

But where money has been paid to the defendant either for a just, legal, or equitable claim, although it could not have been enforced at law, it cannot be recovered as money paid. See MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

The form of declaring is for "money paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant and at his request." 1 M. & W. 511.

MONEYED CORPORATION. A corporation having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurance. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 7th ed. 1371; 3 N. Y. 479; 48 Barb. 464; 6 Paige, 497.

MONITION. In Practice. A process in the nature of a summons, which is used in the civil law, and in those courts which derive their practice from the civil law. In the English ecclesiastical courts it is used as a warning to a defendant not to repeat an offence of which he had been convicted. See Benedict, Adm.

A general monition is a citation or summons to all persons interested, or, as is commonly said, to the whole world, to appear and show cause why the libel filed in the case should not be sustained, and the prayer of relief granted. This is adopted in prize cases, admiralty suits for forfeitures, and other suits in rem, when no particular individuals are summoned to answer. In such cases the taking possession of the property libelled, and this general citation or monition served according to law, are considered constructive notice to the world of the pendency of the suit; and the judgment rendered thereupon is conclusive upon the title of the property which may be affected. In form, the monition is substantially a warrant of the court, in an admiralty cause, directed to the marshal or his deputy, commanding him, in the name of the president of the United States, to give public notice, by advertisements in such newspapers as the court may select, and by notifications to be posted in public places, that a libel has been filed in a certain admiralty cause pending, and of the time and place appointed for the trial. A brief statement of the allegations in the libel is usually contained in the monition. The monition is served in the manner directed in the warrant.

A mixed monition is one which contains directions for a general monition to all persons interested, and a special summons to particular persons named in the warrant. This is served by newspaper advertisements, by notifications posted in public places, and by delivery of a copy attested by the officer to each person specially named, or by leaving it at his usual place of residence.

A special monition is a similar warrant, directed to the marshal or his deputy, requiring him to give special notice to certain persons, named in the warrant, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. It is served by delivery of a copy of the warrant, attested by the officer, to each one of the adverse parties, or by leaving the same at his usual place of residence; but the service should be personal, if possible. Clerke, Prax. tit. 21; Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 135. See Conkl. Adm.; Pars. Marit. Law.

MONITORY LETTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. The process of an official, a bishop, or other prelate having jurisdiction, issued to compel, by ecclesiastical censures, those who know of a crime, or other matter which requires to be explained, to come and reveal it. Merlin, Répert.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person only.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The state of having only one husband or one wife at a time.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to bigamy and polygamy. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 857.

MONOGRAM. A character or cipher composed of one or more letters interwoven, being an abbreviation of a name.

A signature made by a monogram would perhaps be binding provided it could be proved to have been made and intended as a signature; 1Denio, 471.

There seems to be no reason why such a signature should not be as binding as one which is altogether illegible.

MONOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Insanity only upon a particular subject, and with a single delusion of the mind.

The most simple form of this disorder is that in which the patient has imbibed some single notion, contrary to common sense and to his own experience, and which seems, and no doubt really is, dependent on errors of sensation. It is supposed the mind in other respects retains its intellectual powers. In order to avoid any civil act done or criminal responsibility incurred, it must manifestly appear that the act in question was the effect of monomania. Cyclop. Pract. Med. Soundness and Unsoundness of Mind; Ray, Ins. § 203; 13 Ves. Ch. 89; 3 Bro. Ch. 444; 1 Add. Eccl. 283; Hagg. 18; 2 Add. 79, 94, 209; 5 C. & P. 168; L. R. 1 P. & D. 398; Burrows, Ins. 484, 485. See DELUSION; MANIA; Trebuchet, Jur. de la Méd. 55–58; 1 Whart. & St. Med. Jur. §§ 3, 34.

MONOPOLY. In Commercial Law. The abuse of free commerce by which one or more individuals have procured the advantage of selling alone all of a particular kind of merchandise, to the detriment of the public.

Any combination among merchants to raise the price of merchandise to the injury of the public.

An institution or allowance by a grant from the sovereign power of a state, by commission, letters-patent, or otherwise, to any person or corporation, by which the exclusive right of buying, selling, making, working, or using any thing is given. Bacon, Abr.; Co. 3d Inst. 181. Monopolies were, by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 3, declared illegal and void, subject to certain specified exceptions, such as patents in favor of the authors of new inventions; 4 Bla. Com. 159; 2 Steph. Com. 25. See passim For. Cas. and Op. 421; Curtis, Patents.

A patent for a useful invention, under the United States laws, is not, in the old sense of the common law, a monopoly; 9 Off. Gaz. Pat. Off. 1062.

The constitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and Tennessee declare that "monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and ought not to be allowed." See COPYRIGHT; PATENT.

MONSTER. An animal which has a conformation contrary to the order of nature. 2 Dungl. Hum. Phys. 422.

A monster, although born of a woman in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting, if otherwise qualified; 2 Bla. Com. 246; 1 Beck, M. Jur. 366; Co. Litt. 7, 8; Dig. 1. 5. 14; 1 Swift, Syst. 331; Fred. Code, pt. 1, b. 1, t. 4, § 4.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed. Traill, Med. Jur. 47. See Briand, Méd. Lég. pt. 1, c. 6, art. 2, § 3; 1 Foderé, Méd. Lég. §§ 402–405.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT (Fr. showing of right). A common-law process by which restitution of personal or real property is obtained from the crown by a subject. Chitty, Prerog. of Cr. 345; 3 Bla. Com. 256. By this process, when the facts of the title of the crown are already on record, the facts on which the plaintiff relies, not inconsistent with such record, are shown, and judgment of the court prayed thereon. The judgment, if against the crown, is that of ouster le main, which vests possession in the subject without execution. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (E); 1 And. 181; 5 Leigh, 512; 12 Gratt. 564.

Monstrans de droit was preferred either on the common law side of the court of chancery, or in the exchequer, and will not come before the corresponding divisions in the high court of justice. (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34.)

MONSTRANS DE FAIT (Fr. showing of a deed). A profert. Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I. 12, n. 1).

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English Law. A writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court-roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh. N. B. 31.

MONTANA. One of the territories of the United States.

Congress, by an act approved May 26, 1864 (R. S. § 1903), created the territory and defined its boundaries as follows: All that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, to wit: commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the twenty-seventh degree of longitude west from Washington, with the forty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence due west in the forty-fifth degree of latitude to a point formed by its intersection with the thirty-fourth degree of longitude west from Washington, thence due south, along the thirty-fourth degree of longitude, to a point formed by its intersection with the crest of the Rocky Mountains; thence following the crest of the Rocky Mountains northward till its intersection with the Bitter Root Mountains; thence northward along the crest of the Bitter Root Mountains, to its intersection with the thirty-ninth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence along the thirty-ninth degree of longitude northward to the boundary line of the British possessions; thence eastward along that boundary line to the twenty-seventh degree of longitude west from Washington; thence southward along the twenty-seventh degree of longitude to the place of beginning. By the same act it is provided that the United States may divide the territory or change its boundaries in such manner as may be deemed expedient; and further, that the rights of person and property pertaining to the Indians in the territory shall not without their consent be included within the territorial limits of jurisdiction.

The provisions of the organic act do not vary materially from those of the acts creating the territory of New Mexico. See NEW MEXICO. See for provisions affecting all the territories, R. S. §§ 1839–1895.

By act of congress approved March 1, 1872, a tract of land in the territories of Montana and Wyoming, lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River, is reserved and withdrawn from settlement under the laws of the United States and dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people; R. S. § 2474; and by act of April 15, 1874, a tract of land at the northern boundary is set apart as a reservation for the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfoot, River Crow, and such other Indians as the President may from time to time see fit to locate therein. 18 Stat. at L. 28.

MONTES PIETATIS, MONTS DE PIETE. Institutions established by public authority for lending money upon pledge of goods.

In these establishments a fund is provided, with suitable warehouses and all necessary accommodations. They are managed by directors. When the money for which the goods pledged is not returned in proper time, the goods are sold to reimburse the institutions. They are found principally on the continent of Europe. With us, private persons, called pawnbrokers, perform this office. See Bell, Inst. 5. 2. 2.

MONTH. A space of time variously computed, as the term is applied to astronomical, civil or solar, or lunar months.

The astronomical month contains one-twelfth part of the time employed by the sun in going through the zodiac. In law, when a month simply is mentioned, it is never understood to mean an astronomical month.

The civil or solar month is that which agrees with the Gregorian calendar; and these months are known by the names of January, February, March, etc. They are composed of unequal portions of time. There are seven of thirty-one days each, four of thirty, and one which is sometimes composed of twenty-eight days, and in leap-years of twenty-nine.

The lunar month consists of twenty-eight days.

The Roman names of the months, as settled by Augustus, have been used in all Christian countries except Holland, where a set of characteristic names prevail, the remains of the ancient Gaulish title, which were also used by our Anglo Saxon ancestors. The French Convention, in October, 1793, adopted a set of names similar to that of Holland.

By the law of England, a month means ordinarily, in common contracts, as in leases, a lunar month. A contract, therefore, made for a lease of land for twelve months would mean a lease for forty-eight weeks only; 2 Bla. Com. 141; 6 Co. 62; 1 Maule & S. 111. A distinction has been made between "twelve months" and "a twelve-month:" the latter has been held to mean a year; 6 Co. 61. In a contract for the hire of furniture at a weekly rental for so many months, "months" was held to mean lunar month; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 343; S. C. 25 Alb. L. J. 33.

But in mercantile contracts a month simply signifies a calendar month: a promissory note to pay money in twelve months would, therefore, mean a promise to pay in one year, or twelve calendar months; 3 B. & B. 187; 1 Maule & S. 111; 2 C. & K. 9; Story, Bills, §§ 143, 330; 2 Mass. 170; 19 Pick. 332; 6 W. & S. 179; 1 Johns. Cas. 99; Benj. Sales, § 684.

In general, when a statute speaks of a month, without adding "calendar," or other words showing a clear intention, it shall be intended a lunar month; Comyns, Dig. Anno (B); 15 Johns. 358. Dud. Ga. 107. See 2 Cow. 518, 605. But it is now otherwise in England by 13 Viet. c. 21, § 4. And by the Judicature Act of 1875, Ord. lvii. r. 1, it is provided that month shall mean calendar month when not otherwise expressed. In all legal proceedings, as in commitments, pleadings, etc., a month means four weeks; 3 Burr. 1455; 1 W. Blackst. 540; Dougl. 446, 463.

In Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, and perhaps some other states; 1 Hill, Abr. 118, n.; a month mentioned generally in a statute has been construed to mean a calendar month; 2 Dall. 302; 4 id. 143; 4 Mass. 461; 4 Bibb, 105. In England, in the ecclesiastical law, months are computed by the calendar; 3 Burr. 1455; 1 Maule & S. 111.

In New York, it is enacted that whenever the term "month" or "months" is or shall be used in any statute, act, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, it shall be construed to mean a calendar, and not a lunar, month, unless otherwise expressed. Rev. Stat. pt. 2, c. 19, tit. 1, § 4; 28 N. Y. 444. But this has been modified as to computation of interest, so that a month shall be considered the twelfth part of a year, and as consisting of thirty days, and interest for any number of days less than a month shall be estimated by the proportion which such number of days bears to thirty; R. S. pt. 3, p. 2254, § 9.

MONUMENT. A thing intended to transmit to posterity the memory of some one. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In this sense it differs from a cenotaph, which is an empty tomb. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 6; 11. 7. 2. 42.

Coke says that the erecting of monuments in church, chancel, common chapel, or churchyard in convenient manner is lawful; for it is the last work of charity that can be done for the deceased, who whilst he lived was a lively temple of the Holy Ghost, with a reverend regard and Christian hope of a joyful resurrection.

The defacing of monuments is punishable by the common law; Year B. 9 Edw. IV. c. 14; and trespass may be maintained; 10 F. Moore, 494; 1 Cons. So. C. 172. An heir may bring an action against one that injures the monument of his ancestor; Co. 3d Inst. 202; Gibs. 453. Although the fee of church or churchyard be in another, yet he cannot deface monuments; Co.

3d Inst. 202. The fabric of a church is not to be injured or deformed by the caprice of individuals; 1 Cons. So. C. 145; and a monument may be taken down if placed inconveniently; 1 Lee, Eccl. 640. A monument containing an improper inscription can be removed; 1 Curt. Eccl. 880.

Inscriptions on funeral monuments, especially in questions of pedigree, are admissible as original evidence. Those which are proved to have been made by or under the direction of a deceased relative are admitted as his declarations. But if they have been publicly exhibited, and are well known to the family, the publicity of them supplies the defect of proof in not showing that they were declarations of deceased members of the family; and they are admitted on the ground of tacit and common consent. It is presumed the relatives of the family would not permit an inscription without foundation to remain. Mural and other funereal inscriptions are, from necessity, provable by copies. Their value as evidence depends much on the authority under which they were set up, and the distance of time between their erection and the events they commemorate. See some remarkable mistakes of fact in such inscriptions mentioned in 1 Phill. Ev. 234, and note 4. See DECLARATIONS; HEARSAY.

MONUMENTS. Permanent landmarks established for the purpose of indicating boundaries.

Monuments may be either natural or artificial objects: as, rivers, known streams, springs, or marked trees; 6 Wheat. 582; 7 id. 10; 9 Cra. 173; 6 Pet. 498; 1 Pet. C. C. 64; 3 Ohio, 284; 5 id. 534; 5 N. H. 524; 3 Dev. 75. Even posts set up at the corners; 5 Ohio, 534; and a clearing; 7 Cow. 723; are considered as monuments. But see 3 Dev. 75.

When monuments are established, they must govern, although neither courses nor distances nor computed contents correspond; 1 Cow. 605; 7 id. 723; 2 Mass. 380; 6 id. 131; 3 Pick. 401; 5 id. 135; 3 Gill & J. 142; 2 Harr. & J. 260; 5 id. 168, 255; 1 Harr. & M'H. 355; 2 id. 416; Wright, Ohio, 176; 5 Ohio, 534; Cooke, 146; 4 Hen. & M. 125; 1 Call, 429; 11 Me. 325; 1 Hayw. 22; 3 Murph. 88; 4 T. B. Monr. 32; 5 id. 175; 5 J. J. Marsh. 578; 6 Wheat. 582; 4 Wash. C. C. 15; 72 Me. 90. See 3 Washb. R. P. 406, 407, 409; BOUNDARY.

MOORING. In Maritime Law. The securing of a vessel by a hawser or chain, or otherwise, to the shore, or to the bottom by a cable and anchor. The being "moored in safety," under a policy of insurance, is being moored in port, or at the usual place for landing and taking in cargo free from any immediate impending peril insured against; 1 Phill. Ins. 968; 3 Johns. 88; 11 id. 358; 2 Stra. 1243; 5 Mart. La. 637; 6 Mass. 313; Code de Comm. 152.

MOOT (from Sax. gemot, meeting together. Anc. Laws and Inst. of England).

In English Law. A term used in the inns of court, signifying the exercise of arguing imaginary cases, which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to be enabled by this practice to defend their clients' cases. Orig. Jur. 212. Mooting was formerly the chief exercise of the students in the inns of court.

To plead a mock cause. (Also spelled meet, from Sax. motain, to meet; the sense of debate being from meeting, encountering. Webster, Dict.) A moot question is one which has not been decided.

MOOT COURT. A court where moot questions are argued. Webster, Dict.

In law schools this is one of the methods of instruction; an undecided point of law is argued by students appointed as counsel on either side of the cause, one or more of the professors sitting as judge in presence of the school. The argument is conducted as in cases reserved for hearing before the full bench.

MOOT HILL. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence, the parties, etc. on an elevated platform below. Encyc. Lond.

MORA. A moor, barren or unprofitable ground; marsh; a heath; a watery bog or moor. Co. Litt. 5; Fleta, l. 2, c. 71. See IN MORA.

MORAL CERTAINTY. That degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding on it their verdict. It is only probability; but it is called certainty, because every sane man assents to it necessarily from a habit produced by the necessity of acting. Beccaria on Crimes and Punishments, c. 14. Nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us. Puffendorff, Law of Nature, b. 1, c. 2, § 11. A reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt. Shaw, C. J., Commonwealth vs. Webster. Bemis' rep. of the trial, 469, 470; 118 Mass. 1. Such a certainty "as convinces beyond all reasonable doubt. Parke, B., Best, Presumpt. 257, note; 6 Rich. Eq. 217.

MORAL INSANITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A morbid perversion of the moral feelings, affections, inclinations, temper, habits, and moral dispositions, without any notable lesion of the intellect or knowing and reasoning faculties, and particularly without any maniacal hallucination. Prichard, art. Insanity, in Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine.

It is contended that some human beings exist who, in consequence of a deficiency in the moral organs, are as blind to the dictates of justice as others are deaf to melody. Combe, Moral Philosophy, Lect. 12.

In some, this species of malady is said to display itself in an irresistible propensity to commit murder; in others, to commit theft, or arson. Though most persons afflicted with this malady commit such crimes, there are others whose disease is manifest in nothing but irascibility. Annals de Hygiène, tom. i. p. 284. Many are subjected to melancholy and dejection, without any delusion or illusion. This, perhaps without full consideration, has been judicially declared to be a "groundless theory." The courts, and law-writers, have not given it their full assent; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 352; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 553; Ray, Med. Jur. Prel. Views, § 23, p. 49; 1 Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 163 et seq. (where the doctrine is entirely repudiated on both legal and psychological grounds); 3 F. & F. 839; 9 C. & P. 525; 4 Cox, C. C. 149; 11 Gray, 303; 2 Ohio St. 54; 6 McLean, 120; 57 Me. 574; 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 57; 52 N. Y. 467; 47 Cal. 134; 10 Fed. Rep. 161. But the defence of moral insanity seems to have been upheld in Kentucky; 1 Duv. 224; and see 4 Penn. 264, per Gibson, J. C.

MORAL OBLIGATION. A duty which one owes, and which he ought to perform, but which he is not legally bound to fulfil.

These obligations are of two kinds: 1st, those founded on a natural right: as, the obligation to be charitable, which can never be enforced by law. 2d, those which are supported by a good or valuable antecedent consideration: as, where a man owes a debt barred by the act of limitations, or contracted during infancy; this cannot be recovered by law, though it subsists in morality and conscience. A doctrine prevailed for some time in the courts of England and this country that an express promise made in discharge of an antecedent moral obligation created a valid contract, and the contract was then said to be supported by the previous moral obligation; Cowp. 290; 5 Taunt. 36 (1813); 4 Wash. C. C. 148; 12 S. & R. 177. This opinion appears to have been entertained by Lord Mansfield. In a note to Wennall vs. Adney, 3 B. & P. 249, this idea was controverted, and in Eastwood vs. Kenyon, 11 Ad. & E. 438, the notion of the validity of a moral consideration was finally overruled.

Promises by an infant, after coming of age, to pay a debt incurred during infancy, of a bankrupt to pay a debt discharged in bankruptcy, and of a debtor to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, are sometimes considered as instances of contracts supported by moral considerations. But the promise of the infant is rather a ratification of a contract which was voidable, but not void. The promise of the bankrupt operates as a waiver of the defence given to the bankrupt by statute, the certificate of discharge not having extinguished the debt, but merely having protected the defendant from an action on it, by means of the statutory bar. In both of these cases the action is founded upon the original debt. The case of a promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations is said to stand upon anomalous grounds. The true explanation of the doctrine seems to be that it was an ingenious device for evading the statute adopted at a time when the courts regarded it with much disfavor. Here too the action is upon the old debt, and not upon the new promise; 3 Metc. Mass. 439. The subject is learnedly treated by Mr. Langdell (Contr. § 71 et seq.). Some cases have held a feme bound by a promise after coverture to pay a debt contracted during coverture; 24 Penn. 371; see Ewell, L. C. Cov. 332.

Under the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, debts discharged cannot be revived by a promise made after adjudication; and under the Infants' Relief Act of 1874, any promise made after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy is void.

The discharge of a merely moral obligation of another will not create a debt, unless made in pursuance of an express request or actual agreement to that effect; Leake, Contr. 86.

MORATUR OR DEMORATUR IN LEGE. He demurs in law. He rests on the pleadings of the case, and abides the judgment of the court.

MORE OR LESS. Words, in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity. 17 Ves. 394; Powell, Pow. 397. So in contracts of sale generally. 2 B. & Ad. 106.

In case of an executory contract, equity will enforce specific performance without changing the price, if the excess or deficiency is very small; 17 Ves. 394; Powell, Pow. 397; 24 Miss. 597; 13 Tex. 223; but not if the excess or deficiency is great, even though the price reserved be per acre. In 2 B. & Ad. 106, it was held that an excess of fifty quarters over three hundred quarters of grain was not covered by the words "three hundred more or less," if it was not shown that so large an excess was in contemplation; 1 Esp. 229. But a deed adding words more or less to description of the property is not a sufficient fulfilment of a contract to convey the described property, when more or less was not in such original contract, if there is an actual deficiency. But after such a conveyance is made and a note given for the purchase-money, the note cannot be defended against on ground of deficiency; 2 Penn. 533; 9 S. & R. 80; 13 id. 143; 10 Johns. 297; 4 Mass. 414.

In case of an executed contract, equity will not disturb it, unless there be a great deficiency; 2 Russ. 570; 1 Pet. C. C. 49; or excess; 8 Paige, Ch. 312; 2 Johns. 37; Ow. 133; 1 V. & B. 375; or actual misrepresentation without fraud, and there be a material excess or deficiency; 14 N. Y. 143.

Eighty-five feet, more or less, means eighty-five feet, unless the deed or situation of the land in some way controls it; 20 Pick. 62.

The words more or less will not cover a distinct lot; 24 Mo. 574. See CONSTRUCTION.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGE. A lawful and inseparable conjunction of a single man of noble and illustrious birth with a single woman of an inferior or plebeian station, upon this condition, that neither the wife nor children should partake of the title, arms, or dignity of the husband, nor succeed to his inheritance, but should have a certain allowance assigned to them by the morganatic contract.

This relation was frequently contracted during the middle ages; the marriage ceremony was regularly performed, the union was for life and indissoluble, and the children were considered legitimate, though they could not inherit. Fred. Code, b. 2, art. 3; Poth. Du Mar. 1, c. 2, § 2; Shelf. Marr. & D. 10; Pruss. Code, art. 835.

MORT D'ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which was sued out where, after the decease of a man's ancestor, a stranger abated, and entered into the estate. Co. Litt. 159. The remedy in such case is now to bring ejectment.

MORTGAGE. The conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent, 136.

An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 1 Washb. R. P. c. 16, § 19. A conditional conveyance of land, designed as a security for the payment of money, the fulfilment of some contract, or the performance of some act, and to be void upon such payment, fulfilment, or performance. 44 Me. 299.

Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the laws respecting the necessity of possession of personal property and the nature of instruments of transfer being different, require the transfer to be made differently in the two cases.

The nature of the estate is indicated by the etymology of its name, mort-gage,—the French translation of the vadium mortuum, that is, dormant or dead pledge, in contrast with vadium vivum, an active or living one. They were both, ordinarily, securities for the payment of money. In the one, there was no life or active effect in the way of creating the means of its redemption by producing rents, because, ordinarily, the mortgagor continued to hold possession and receive these. In the other, the mortgagee took possession and received the rents towards his debt, whereby the estate worked out as it were its own redemption. Besides, in the one case, if the pledge is not redeemed, it is lost or dead as to the mortgagor; whereas in the other the pledge always survives to the mortgagor when it shall have accomplished its purposes; Coote, Mortg. 4; Co. Litt. 205. In the case of Welsh mortgages, however, which are now disused, the mortgagee entered, taking the rents and profits by way of interest on the debt, and held the estate till the mortgagor paid the principal.

Mortgages are to be distinguished from sales with a contract for re-purchase. The distinction is important; 2 Call, 428; 7 Watts, 401; but turns rather upon the evidence in each case than upon any general rule of distinction; 6 Blackf. 113; 15 Johns. 205: 4 Pick. 349; 7 Cra. 218; 13 How. 139; 8 Paige, Ch. 243; 4 Denio, 493; 27 Mo. 113; 5 Ala. N. s. 698; 28 id. 226; 3 Tex. 119; 2 J. J. Marsh. 113; 3 id. 353; 2 Yerg. 6; 4 Ind. 101; 3 Tex. 119; 37 Me. 543; 7 Ired. Eq. 13, 167; 2 Sch. & L. 393; 30 Md. 495; 33 Cal. 326; 19 Iowa, 335; 80 Ill. 188; 41 Cal. 22; 35 Vt. 125; 70 Penn. 434; 21 Minn. 449; 8 Nev. 147; 49 Ga. 133; 62 Mo. 202; 73 Ill. 156; 50 N. Y. 441; 71 Penn. 264; 109 Mass. 130; 51 Miss. 329.

A mortgage differs from a pledge: the general property passes by a mortgage, whilst by a pledge only the possession or, at most, a special property passes. Possession is inseparable from the nature of a pledge, but is not necessary to a mortgage; 3 Mo. 516; 5 Johns. 258; 10 id. 741; 12 id. 146; 2 Pick. 610; 2 N. H. 13; 5 Vt. 532; 26 Me. 499.

Mortgages were at common law held conveyances upon condition, and unless the condition was performed at the appointed time the estate became absolute; in equity, however, the debt was considered as the principal matter, and the failure to perform at the appointed time a matter merely requiring compensation by interest in the way of damages for the delay. This right to redeem became known as the equity of redemption, and has been limited by statute, a common period being three years. Courts of law have now adopted the doctrines of equity with respect to redemption, and in other respects to a considerable extent. See 1 Washb. R. P. 477.

An equitable mortgage is one in which the mortgagor does not actually convey the property, but does some act by which he manifests his determination to bind the same as a security. See EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

A legal mortgage is a conveyance of property intended by the parties at the time of making it to be a security for the performance of some prescribed act.

All kinds of property, real or personal, which are capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage: rights in remainder and reversion, franchises, and choses in action, may, therefore, be mortgaged. But a mere possibility or expectancy, as that of an heir, cannot; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1012; 4 Kent, 144; 1 Pow. Mortg. 17, 23; 3 Mer. 667; 32 Barb. 328; 13 Cal. 536; 45 Ill. 264; 12 N. J. Eq. 174; 108 Mass. 347; 68 Ill. 98; and where real estate is mortgaged all accessions thereto, subsequent to the mortgage, will be bound by it; 32 N. H. 484; 51 Cal. 620; 52 Ala. 123; 19 Wall. 544; 24 Mich. 416; 64 Penn. 366; and if specifically stated to bind after-acquired property will have that effect; 51 Barb. 45; 56 Me. 458; 14 Gray, 566; 11 Wall. 481; 19 Md. 472; 29 Conn. 282.

As to the form, such a mortgage must be in writing, when it is intended to convey the legal title; 1 Penn. 240. It is either in one single deed which contains the whole contract, —and which is the usual form,—or it is two separate instruments, the one containing an absolute conveyance and the other a defeasance; 2 Johns. Ch. 189; 15 Johns. 555; 3 Wend. 208; 7 id. 248; 2 Me. 152; 11 id. 346; 12 Mass. 456; 7 Pick. Mass. 157; 3 Watts, 188; 6 id. 405; 1 N. H. 39; 12 Me. 340; 5 McL. 281; 55 Penn. 311; 21 Minn. 520; 53 Me. 463; 13 Wisc. 264; 38 Mo. 349; 65 N. C. 520; 18 Iowa, 376; 17 Ohio, 356; and generally, whenever it is proved that a conveyance was made for purposes of security, equity regards and treats it as a mortgage, and attaches thereto its incidents; 9 Wheat. 489; 1 How. 118; 12 id. 139; 2 Des. Eq. 564; 1 Hard. 6; 38 N. H. 22; 2 Cow. 246; 9 N. Y. 416; 25 Vt. 273; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 536; 3 id. 508; 1 Murph. 116; 10 Yerg. 376; 3 J. J. Marsh. 353; 5 Ill. 156; 4 Ind. 101; 2 Pick. 211; 20 Ohio, 464; 36 Me. 115; 1 Cal. 203; 1 Wisc. 527; 9 S. & R. 434. In law, the defeasance must be of as high a nature as the conveyance to be defeated; 1 N. H. 39; 13 Pick. 411; 22 id. 526; 43 Me. 206; 2 Johns. Ch. 191; 7 Watts, 361; 1 Allen, 107; 13 Mass. 433; 53 Me. 963; 14 Pick. 467; 14 Pet. 201. The rule as to the admission of parol evidence to establish the character of a conveyance as a mortgage varies in the different states. It is admissible in Alabama, 38 Ala. 125; Arkansas, 18 Ark. 34; California, 24 Cal. 390; Connecticut, 30 Conn. 27; Florida, 10 Fla. 133; Illinois, 59 Ill. 276; Indiana, 22 Ind. 59; Iowa, 25 Iowa, 191; Kansas, 8 Kans. 381; Kentucky, 9 Dana, 109; Maryland, 21 Md. 474; Massachusetts, 111 Mass. 219; Michigan, Harr. Ch. 113; Minnesota, 15 Minn. 69; Mississippi, 40 Miss. 469; Missouri, 27 Mo. 116; New York, 52 N. Y. 258; New Jersey, 13 N. J. Eq. 358; North Carolina, 4 Dev. 50; Ohio, Wright, 252; Pennsylvania, 69 Penn. 337; Rhode Island, 1 R. I. 30; South Carolina, 3 Rich. Eq. 153; Tennessee, 10 Yerg. 373; Texas, 14 Tex. 142; Vermont, 42 Vt. 562; Virginia, 2 Munf. 40; Wisconsin, 9 Wisc. 379; Nebraska, 1 Neb. 242; Nevada, 7 Nev. 200; West Virginia, 4 W. Va. 4. In the courts of the United States; 12 How. 139; 14 Pet. 201; and in England, Coote, Mort. 24; in Georgia, 7 Cobb. Dig. 1851, 274; and in New Hampshire, 45 N. H. 321, it is forbidden by statute; in Maine, 36 Me. 562; 43 Me. 206; in Michigan, 27 Mich. 231; in North Carolina, Ired. 343, the question is in doubt, and in Delaware has not been passed upon.

The mortgagor has, technically speaking, in law a mere tenancy, subject to the right of the mortgagee to enter immediately unless restrained by his agreement to the contrary; see 34 Me. 187; 9 S. & R. 302; 1 Pick. 87; 19 Johns. 325; 2 Conn. 1; 4 Ired. 122; 5 Bing. 421. In equity, however, the mortgage is held a mere security for the debt, and only a chattel interest; and until a decree of foreclosure the mortgagor is regarded as the real owner; 2 J. & W. 190; 4 Johns. 41; 11 id. 534; 4 Conn. 235; 9 S. & R. 302; 5 Harr. & J. 312; 3 Pick. 484; 7 Johns. 273.

The mortgagee, at law, is the owner of the land, subject, however, to a defeat of title by performance of the condition, with a right to enter at any time. See 21 N. H. 460; 9 Conn. 216; 19 Me. 53; 2 Denio, 170. He is, however, accountable for the profits before foreclosure, if in possession; 31 Me. 104; 32 id. 97; 5 Paige, Ch. 1; 11 id. 436; 24 Conn. 1; 1 Halst. Ch. 346; 2 id. 548; 2 Cal. 387; 6 Fla. 1; 1 Washb. R. P. 577. The different states fluctuate somewhat between the rules of equity and those of law, or, rather, have engrafted the equitable rules upon the legal to an unequal extent; 31 Penn. 295; 10 Ga. 63; 27 Barb. 503; 3 Mich. 581; 3 Greene, Iowa, 87; 4 Iowa, 571; 4 M'Cord, 336; 9 Cal. 123, 365; 1 Washb. R. P. 517 et seq.; Jones, Mort. § 664 et seq.

Assignment of mortgages must be made in accordance with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds; 15 Mass. 233; 6 Gray, 152; 32 Me. 197; 33 id. 196; 18 Penn. 394; 7 Blackf. 210; 5 Denio, 187; 3 Ohio St. 471; 27 N. H. 300; 5 Halst. Ch. 156; 21 Ala. N. S. 497; 51 Me. 121; 22 Tex. 464; 31 Penn. 142; 21 Wisc. 476; 71 N. C. 492; 56 N. H. 105.

Assumption of mortgage by grantee. The question whether the acceptance by a grantee of a deed subject to a specified mortgage as part of the consideration, in the absence of an express promise to pay it, implies such a promise on his part, has been the subject of conflicting decisions. But the more generally accepted view is, that the clause "under and subject," in a deed of conveyance, is a covenant of indemnity only as between grantor and grantee for the protection of the former; 88 Penn. 450; 4 W. N. Cas. (Pa.) 497; 79 Penn. 439; 48 N. Y. 556; 4 N. J. Eq. 454; 124 Mass. 254. A different view has been held in New York, based in the later cases on the doctrine that when one makes a promise for the benefit of a third person, the latter may maintain an action upon it; 24 N. Y. 178; 20 id. 268; 48 id. 253; 71 id. 26. But this doctrine is for the most part confined to New York; see 26 Am. Rep. 660 n.; 1 Jones, Mort. §§ 758–763.

The remedies upon a mortgage by the mortgagee in default of payment, are various. In cases of real estate he may (1) bring ejectment on his legal title; (2) file a bill and obtain a decree of foreclosure, or a sale of the property mortgaged; (3) exercise a power of sale in default of payment, if such power be inserted in the instrument of mortgage; (4) take possession of the land, if he can do so peaceably, his title becoming sure, and the equity of redemption being barred after the lapse of twenty years or a period equal to the lapse of time necessary to bar a writ of entry, or in some states for a less period provided by law; (5) by proceeding in accordance with statutory enactments which vary in the different states.

In cases of chattel mortgages, the mortgagee's remedy is either (1) to bring a bill in equity, obtain a decree of foreclosure, and a sale; (2) if he have the thing mortgaged in his possession, to sell it after giving to the mortgagor notice of such sale, and also of the amount of the debt due.

MORTGAGEE. He to whom a mortgage is made. See MORTGAGE.

MORTGAGOR. He who makes a mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

MORTIFICATION. In Scotch Law. A term nearly synonymous with mortmain.

MORTMAIN. A term applied to denote the possession of lands or tenements by any corporation sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of mortmain to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bla. Com. 268; Co. Litt. 2 b; Erskine, Inst. 2. 4. 10; Barrington, Stat. 27, 97. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 1137; Shelf. Mortm. In England the common law right of every corporation to take and hold lands and tenements has been restrained by the statutes of mortmain, which subject the power to acquire lands to the discretion of the crown or parliament as to the grant of a license: 8 H. L. C. 712; 15 How. 367, 404. These statutes have not been reenacted in this country except in Pennsylvania, where they extend only to prohibiting the dedication of property to superstitious uses, and grants to a corporation without a statutory license; 7 S. & R. 313; 7 Penn. 283; Boone, Corp. § 40; see 101 U. S. 352.

The principal act on the subject now in operation in England is that of 9 Geo. II. c. 36, and requires that no lands or money shall be in any way given for any charitable use, unless by deed executed in the presence of two witnesses, twelve months before the donor's death, and enrolled in chancery within six calendar months of its execution, and unless such gift be made to take effect immediately, and be without power of revocation. There are various exceptions to the act, such as gifts to certain universities and colleges; Moz. & W.

MORTUARY. In Ecclesiastical Law. A burial-place. A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church-yard or not. These mortuaries, like lay heriots, were originally voluntary bequests to the church in lieu of tithes or ecclesiastical dues neglected in lifetime. See SOULSCOT. They were reduced to a certain amount by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6. They were sometimes payable to the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 470. The mortuary seems to have been carried to church with the corpse, and was therefore sometimes called corpse-present. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 563. Anciently, a parishioner could not make a valid will without an assignment of a sufficient mortuary or gift to the church. 2 Bla. Com. 427.

MORTUUM VADIUM. A mortgage.

MORTUUS (Lat.). Dead. Ainsworth, Lex. So in sheriff's return mortuus est, he is dead. O. Bridgm. 469; Brooke, Abr. Retorne de Briefe, pl. 125; 19 Viner, Abr. Return, lib. 2, pl. 12.

MOTHER. A woman who has borne a child.

It is generally the duty of a mother to support her child, when she is left a widow, until he becomes of age or is able to maintain himself; 8 Watts, 366; 16 Mass. 135; 3 N. H. 29; 4 id. 95; and even after he becomes of age, if he be chargeable to the public, she may, perhaps in all the states, be compelled, when she has sufficient means, to support him. But when the child has property sufficient for his support, she is not, even during his minority, obliged to maintain him; 1 Bro. Ch. 387; 2 Mass. 415; 4 id. 97; but will be entitled to an allowance out of the income of his estate, and, if need be, out of the principal, for his maintenance; 2 Fla. 36; 2 Atk. 447; 5 Ves. 194; 7 id. 403; 3 Dutch. 388. During the life of the father she is not bound to support her child, though she have property settled to her separate use and the father be destitute; 4 Cl. & F. 323; 11 Bligh, N. S. 62.

When the father dies without leaving a testamentary guardian at common law, the mother is entitled to be the guardian of the person and estate of the infant until he arrives at fourteen years, when he is able to choose a guardian; Littleton, § 123; 3 Co. 38; Co. Litt. 84 b; 2 Atk. 14; Comyns, Dig. Feme (B, D, E); 7 Ves. 348. See 10 Mass. 135, 140; 2 id. 415; Harp. 9; 1 Root, 487; 22 Barb. 178; 2 Dutch. 388; 2 Green, Ch. 221; 3 Dev. & B. 325; 9 Ala. 197. The right of the widowed mother to the earnings and services of her minor child does not appear to have been precisely determined; but it is by no means so absolute as that of the father; 31 Me. 240; 15 N. H. 486; 4 Binn. 487; 3 Hill, N. Y. 400; 14 Ala. 123; 15 Mass. 272; 16 id. 28; Harp. 9.

In Pennsylvania, when the father dies without leaving a testamentary guardian, the orphans' court will appoint a guardian until the infant shall attain his fourteenth year. During the joint lives of the parents, the father has the only control and custody of the children, except when in special cases, as when they are of tender years, or when the habits of the father render him an unsuitable guardian, the mother is allowed to have possession of them; 6 Rich. Eq. 344; 1 P. A. Browne, 143; 3 Binn. 320; 2 S. & R. 174; 13 Johns. 418; 2 Phill. 786; 2 Coll. 661.

The mother of a bastard child, as natural guardian, has a right to the custody and control of such child, even as against the putative father, and is bound to maintain it; 2 Mass. 109; 12 id. 387, 433; 2 Johns. 375; 15 id. 208; 6 S. & R. 255; but after her death the court will, in its discretion, deliver such child to the father in opposition to the claims of the maternal grandfather; 1 Ashm. 55; Stra. 1162. See BASTARD.

MOTHER-IN-LAW. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

MOTION. In Practice. An application to a court by one of the parties in a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he thinks becomes necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice.

Where the object of the motion may be granted merely on request, without a hearing, it is a motion of course; those requiring a hearing are special; such as may be heard on the application of one party alone, ex parte; those requiring notice to the other party, on notice.

When the motion is made on some matter of fact, it must be supported by an affidavit that such facts are true; and for this purpose the party's affidavit will be received, though it cannot be read on the hearing; 1 Binn. 145; 2 Yeates, 546. See 3 Bla. Com. 305; 2 Sell. Pr. 356; 15 Viner, Abr. 495; Graham, Pr. 542; Smith, Ch. Pr. Index; Mitchell, Motions and Rules.

Under the English Bankruptcy Rules of 1870, all applications to a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, in the exercise of its primary jurisdiction, must in general be made by motion. Any application made to a divisional court of the high court of justice, or to a judge in an action, under the rules appended to the Judicature Act, 1875, must be made by motion. Moz. & W.

MOTION FOR DECREE. This has hitherto been (since its introduction by stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86) for the plaintiff in an English chancery suit to obtain the decree to which he claims to be entitled. It must be distinguished from interlocutory motions. See Hunt, Eq. Pl. i. ch. 4; Moz. & W.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT. In English Practice. A proceeding whereby a party to an action moves for the judgment of the court in his favor, which he may adopt under various circumstances enumerated under the Judicature Act, 1875.

MOTIVE. The inducement, cause, or reason why a thing is done. An act legal in itself, and which violates no right, is not actionable on account of the motive which actuated it; 5 Am. L. Reg. 528.

See CAUSE; CONSIDERATION; MISTAKE; WITNESS

MOURNING. The apparel worn at funerals, and for a time afterwards, in order to manifest grief for the death of some one, and to honor his memory.

The expenses paid for such apparel.

It has been held, in England, that a demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of the testator is not a funeral expense; 2 C. & P. 207. See 14 Ves. 346; 1 V. & B. 364. See 2 Bell, Com. 156.

MOVABLES. Such subjects of property as attend a man's person wherever he goes, in contradistinction to things immovable.

Things movable by their nature are such as may be carried from one place to another, whether they move themselves, as cattle, or cannot be removed without an extraneous power, as inanimate things. So in the civil law mobilia; but this term did not properly include living movables, which were termed moventia. Calvinus, Lex. But these words, mobilia and moventia, are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Ibid. Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house; and such as are in the possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt. But it has been held that movable property, in a legacy, strictly includes only such as is corporeal and tangible; not, therefore, rights in action, as judgment or bond debts; 19 Conn. 238, 245; 2 Dall. 142; 1 Wm. Jones, 225. But see 17 Pick. 404. See PERSONAL PROPERTY; Fonbl. Eq. Index; Pow. Mortg. Index; 2 Bla. Com. 384; La. Civ. Code, art. 464-472; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 462; 2 Steph. Com. 67; Shepp. Touchst. 447; 1 P. Wms. 267.

In a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crop, nor building materials on ground; nor, as stated above, rights in action; 2 Wms. Exec. 1014; 3 A. K. Marsh. 123; 1 Yeates, 101; 2 Dall. 142.

In Scotch Law. Every right which a man can hold which is not heritable; opposed to heritage. Bell, Dict.

MOVE. To apply to the court to take action in any matter. See MOTION. To propose a resolution, or recommend action in a deliberative body.

MULATTO. A person born of one white and one black parent. 7 Mass. 88; 1 Bailey, 270; 2 id. 558; 18 Ala. 276.

Properly a mulatto is a person one of whose parents is wholly black and the other wholly white; but the word does not always, though perhaps it does generally, require so exactly even a mixture of blood, nor is its signification alike in all the states. 1 Bish. Mar. & D § 308.

MULCT. A fine imposed on the conviction of an offence.

An imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like. It is obsolete in the latter sense, and but seldom used in the former.

MULIER. Of ancient time, mulier was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held that a virgin is included under the name mulier. Co. Litt. 170, 253; 2 Bla. Com. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate, Co. Litt. 243, and seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the French meilleur, signifying lawful issue born in wedlock. But by Glanville, lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten e muliere, and not ex concubinâ, for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanville, lib. 7, c. 1. If the said lands "should, according to the queen's lawes, descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierlis borne, and the other not so borne." Holinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1558.

MULIER PUISNE. See BASTARD EIGNE; EIGNE.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS. In Equity Pleading. The demand in one bill of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 182; 18 Ves. 80; 2 Mas. 201; 4 Cow. 682; 2 Gray, 467.

The uniting in one bill against a single defendant several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected. This latter is more properly called misjoinder, which title see.

The subject admits of no general rules, but the courts seem to consider the circumstances of each case with reference to avoiding on one hand a multiplicity of suits, and on the other inconvenience and hardship to the defendants from being obliged to answer matters with which they have, in great part, no connection, and the complication and confusion of evidence; 1 My. & C. 618; 5 Sim. 288; 3 Stor. 25; 2 Gray, 471; 3 McLean, 415; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 274, 530. It is to be taken advantage of by demurrer; 2 Anstr. 469; or by plea and answer previous to a hearing; Story, Eq. Pl. 530, n.; or by the court of its own accord at any time; 1 My. & K. 546; 3 How. 412; 5 id. 127. See, generally, Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 274–290, 530–540; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4243; Dan. Ch. Pr.

MULTIPLE POINDING. In Scotch Law. Double distress; a name given to an action, corresponding to proceedings by way of interpleader, which may be brought by a person in possession of goods claimed by different persons pretending a right thereto, calling the claimants and all others to settle their claims, so that the party who sues may be liable only "in once and single payment." Bell, Dict.; 2 Bell, Com. 299; Stair, Inst. 3. 1. 39.

MULTIPLICITY OF ACTIONS, OR SUITS. Where repeated attempts are made to litigate the same right. For such cases equity provides a proceeding called a Bill of Peace, q. v., and a court of common law may grant a rule for the consolidation of different actions; Lush, Pr. 964; L. R. 2 Ch. 8; Jud. Act, 1873, p. 24, 89–91; Story, Eq. Pl. 234; Bish. Eq. 415.

MULTITUDE. The meaning of this word is not very certain. By some it is said that to make a multitude there must be ten persons at least, while others contend that the law has not fixed any number. Co. Litt. 257. That two cannot constitute a multitude, see 104 Mass. 595.

MULTURE. In Scotch Law. The quantity of grain or meal payable to the proprietor of a mill, or to the multurer, his tacksman, for manufacturing the corns. Erskine, Inst. 2. 9. 19.

MUNERA. The name given to grants made in the early feudal ages, which were merely tenancies at will or during the pleasure of the grantor. Dalrymple, Feud. 198, 199; Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS (Lat. from munus, office, and capere, to take). In Roman Law. Eligible to office.

A freeman born in a municipality or town other than Rome, who had come to Rome, and though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices (dignitates).

The inhabitants of a municipality entitled to hold municipal offices. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Calvinus, Lex.

MUNICIPAL. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city. It is used in this sense in the terms municipal court, municipal ordinance, municipal officer.

Among the Romans, cities were called municipia: these cities voluntarily joined the Roman republic in relation to their sovereignty only, retaining their laws, their liberties, and their magistrates, who were thence called municipal magistrates. With us this word has a more extensive meaning: for example, we call municipal law not the law of a city only, but the law of the state. 1 Bla. Com. Municipal is used in contradistinction to international: thus, we say, an offence against the law of nations is an international offence, but one committed against a particular state or separate community is a municipal offence.

MUNICIPAL BONDS. This class of securities is issued for sale in the market, with the object of raising money, under the express authority of the legislature. Notwithstanding they are under seal, they are clothed with all the attributes of negotiable or commercial paper, pass by delivery or indorsement, and are not subject to prior equities (where the power to issue them exists) in the hands of holders for value, who took before maturity and without notice. The coupons usually attached to such bonds, are likewise negotiable, and may be detached and held separately from the bond, and may be sued on by the holder in his own name without his being the owner of the bonds to which they were originally attached; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 486; 3 Wall. 327; 1 Dill. 338.

Coupons when severed from the bonds cease to be incidents of the bonds, and become independent claims, and do not lose their validity, if for any cause the bonds are cancelled or paid before maturity; 20 Wall. 583. See BONDS; COUPONS.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corporation, created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation: e. g. a county, town, city, etc. 2 Kent, 275; Ang. & A. Corp. 9, 29; Baldw. 222. An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Glover, Mun. Corp. 1. In the United States, until recently, municipal corporations have been created singly, each with its special or separate charter passed by the legislature of the state. These charters define the territorial boundaries; provide for a governing body, usually styled the town or city council, with representatives to be chosen from different wards of the city or town; fix the qualifications of voters; specify the mode of holding elections; provide for the election of a mayor, and contain a minute and detailed enumeration of the powers of the city council; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 39.

In England, the municipal corporation acts, 5 & 6 Will. IV. ch. 76, abolish all special charters, with enumerated exceptions, and enact general provisions for the incorporation, regulation, and government of municipal corporations. These acts have been followed in many of the United States. The usual scheme is to grade corporations into classes, according to their size, as into cities of the first class, second class, etc., and towns or villages, and to bestow on each class such powers as the legislature deems expedient; but the powers and mode of organization of corporations of each class are uniform; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 41, n.

The scope of legislative authority over municipal corporations is limited only by the terms of the state and federal constitutions, and the necessary implications derived therefrom; 24 Mich. 44; s. c. 9 Am. Rep. 108. Those matters which are of concern to the state at large, although exercised within defined limits, such as the administration of justice, the preservation of the public peace, and the like, are held to be under legislative control; while the enforcement of municipal by-laws proper, the establishment of gas works, of water works, the construction of sewers, and the like, are matters which pertain to the municipality as distinguished from the state at large; 69 Ill. 326; 62 Mo. 370; 51 Cal. 15; 28 Mich. 228; s. c. 15 Am. Rep. 202; 97 U. S. 284.

As ordinarily constituted, municipal corporations have a dual character, the one governmental, legislative, or public; the other, proprietary or private. In their public capacity a responsibility exists in the performance of acts for the public benefit, and in this respect they are merely a part of the machinery of government of the sovereignty creating them, and the authority of the state is supreme. But in their proprietary or private character their powers are supposed to be conferred not from considerations of state, but for the private advantage of the particular coporation as a distinct legal personality. As to such powers, and to property acquired thereunder, and contracts made with reference thereto, they are to be considered as quoad hoc private corporations; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 56, and cases cited in note; 102 Mass. 489; 122 Mass. 359; s. c. 23 Am. Rep. 332. If a municipal corporation becomes indebted, the rights of creditors cannot be impaired by any subsequent legislative enactment; 4 Wall. 535; 19 Wisc. 468; 100 U. S. 374; but authority to a city to borrow money, and to tax all the property therein to pay the debt thus incurred, does not necessarily deprive the state of the power to modify taxation, if the rights of creditors be not thereby impaired; 27 Ohio St. 426; s. c. 22 Am. Rep. 321. So, also, as trustee for the general public, the legislature has control over the public property and the subordinate rights of municipal corporations. It can authorize a railroad company to occupy the streets of a city without its consent and without payment; 31 N. Y. 164; 13 La. An. 326. It can direct a municipal corporation to build a bridge over a navigable watercourse within its limits, or appoint agents of its own to build it, and empower them to create a loan for the purpose, payable by the corporation; 58 Penn. 320; 17 Wall. 322; 104 Mass. 236; 47 Md. 145. The legislature may compel a city to pay its bonds, by taxation, but not to pay an obligation for which no consideration had been received; 95 U. S. 644. And in general the legislature may, by subsequent legislation, validate acts of a municipal corporation otherwise invalid; 97 U. S. 687; Cooley, Const. Lim. 371; 101 U. S. 196. The legislature may also interfere with the administration of public charitable trusts by municipal corporations; 64 Penn. 169; but not with those of a private character where a contract has been constituted; 11 Me. 118; Dartmouth Coll. Cas., 4 Wheat. 518; 53 N. H. 575.

"A municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: first, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient but indispensable;" 70 N. C. 14; s. c. 16 Am. Rep. 766; 93 Ill. 236; 3 Wall. 320; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 89; 22 Am. Rep. 261.

A strict rather than a liberal construction of the powers of a municipal corporation is adopted; 43 Iowa, 524; s. c. 22 Am. Rep. 261; 23 How. 435.

The power to borrow money and issue bonds therefor, cannot be included among the implied powers of a municipal corporation, but when a debt has been lawfully incurred, it is not prohibited from issuing bonds for its payment; 84 Penn. 487; but see 19 Wall. 468; 5 Dill. 165. A municipal corporation has power to offer a reward for the detection of criminals; 7 Gray, 374; 92 U. S. 73; contra, 57 Me. 174; 48 Iowa, 472; to erect public buildings; 8 Allen, 9; to make police regulations; 61 Ga. 572; see POLICE POWERS; to give aid to railroad corporations by issuing bonds. See BONDS.

Municipal corporations may be dissolved in England: 1, by act of parliament; Co. Litt. 176, n.; 2, by the loss of an integral part; 9 Gill & J. 365; 3, by a surrender of its franchise; 6 Term, 277; 4, by forfeiture of its charter; 6 Beav. 220; 76 Ill. 419.

In the United States these modes of dissolution are not applicable, excepting the first; there can be no dissolution except by an act of the legislature which created the corporation.

The change of name does not dissolve a corporation; 7 Wall. 1; 93 U. S. 266; but the power of so changing exists only in the legislature.

Upon the division of a municipal corporation into two separate towns, each is entitled to hold in severalty the public property within its limits; 2 Wend. 159. In actions generally, the original minutes or records of a corporation are competent evidence of its acts and proceedings; 6 Wend. 651. It is competent for the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations the power to make by-laws and ordinances which have, when authorized, the force, in favor of the municipality and against the persons bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature of the state; 44 Iowa, 508; s. c. 24 Am. Rep. 756; but ordinances cannot enlarge or change the charter by enlarging, diminishing, or varying its powers; 22 How. 422; 12 Wall. 349.

Contracts may be entered into by the officers of a corporation, binding upon it, without the use of the corporate seal; 12 Mich. 138. Without express legislative authority a municipality cannot act as surety or guarantee; 19 Iowa, 199.

MUNICIPAL LAW. In contradistinction to international law, is the system of law proper to any single nation or state. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Bla. Com. 44.

Municipal law contrasts with international law, in that it is a system of law proper to a single nation, state, or community. See MUNICIPAL LAW. In any one state the municipal law of another state is foreign law. See FOREIGN LAW. A conflict of laws arises where a case arising in one state involves foreign persons or interests, and the foreign and the domestic laws do not agree as to the proper rule to be applied. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The various provinces of municipal law are characterized according to the subjects with which they respectively treat: as, criminal or penal law, civil law, military law, and the like. Constitutional law, commercial law, parliamentary law, and the like, are departments of the general provinces of civil law, as distinguished from criminal and military law.

MUNICIPALITY. The body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

MUNIMENTS. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Termes de la Ley; Co. 3d Inst. 170. Cathedrals, collegiate churches, etc., sometimes have a muniment house, where the seal, evidences, charter, etc., of such cathedral are kept. Cowel.

MUNUS. A gift; an office; a benefice, or feud. A gladiatorial show or spectacle. Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange.

MURAGE. A toll formerly levied in England for repairing or building public walls.

MURAL MONUMENTS. Monuments made in walls.

Owing to the difficulty or impossibility of removing them, secondary evidence may be given of inscriptions on walls, fixed tables, gravestones, and the like. 2 Stark. 274.

MURDER. In Criminal Law. The wilful killing of any subject whatever, with malice aforethought, whether the person slain shall be an Englishman or a foreigner. Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 13, s. 3. Russell says, the killing of any person under the king's peace, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express, or implied by law. 1 Russ. Cr. 421; 5 Cush. 304. When a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Co. 3d Inst. 47.

The latter definition, which has been adopted by Blackstone, 4 Com. 195; Chitty, 2 Cr. Law, 794, and others, has been severely criticized. What, it has been asked, are sound mind and discretion? What has soundness of memory to do with the act? be it ever so imperfect, how does it affect the guilt? If discretion is necessary, can the crime ever be committed? for is it not the highest indiscretion in a man to take the life of another, and thereby expose his own? If the person killed be an idiot or a new-born infant, is he a reasonable creature? Who is in the king's peace? What is malice aforethought? Can there be malice aforethought? Livingston, Pen. Law, 186. It is, however, apparent that some of the criticisms are merely verbal, and others are answered by the construction given in the various cases to the requirements of the definition. See, especially, 5 Cush. 304.

According to Coke's definition, there must be, first, sound mind and memory in the agent. By this is understood there must be a will and legal discretion. Second, an actual killing; but it is not necessary that it should be caused by direct violence: it is sufficient if the acts done apparently endanger life, and eventually prove fatal; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 31, s. 4; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 431; 1 Ashm.

289; 9 C. & P. 356; 2 Palm. 545. Third, the party killed must have been a reasonable being, alive and in the king's peace. To constitute a birth, so as to make the killing of a child murder, the whole body must be detached from that of the mother; but if it has come wholly forth, but is still connected by the umbilical cord, such killing will be murder; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1722, note. Fœticide would not be such a killing; he must have been in rerum natura. Fourth, malice, either express or implied. It is this circumstance which distinguishes murder from every description of homicide. See MALICE.

In some of the states, by legislative enactments, murder has been divided into degrees. In Pennsylvania, the act of April 22, 1794, 3 Smith, Laws, 186, makes "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, shall be deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder of the second degree; and the jury before whom any person indicted for murder shall be tried shall, if they find the person guilty thereof, ascertain in their verdict whether it be murder of the first or second degree; but if such person shall be convicted by confession, the court shall proceed, by examination of witnesses, to determine the degree of the crime, and give sentence accordingly." Many decisions have been made under this act, to which the reader is referred. See Wharton, Cr. Law.

Similar enactments have been made in Massachusetts, Tennessee, Virginia, Indiana, New Hampshire, Ohio, and many other states; 3 Yerg. 283; 5 id. 340; 6 Rand. 721; 23 Ind. 231; 49 N. H. 399; Wright, 20. See, generally, Bishop, Gabbett, Russell, Wharton, Crim. Law; Roscoe, Crim. Ev.; Archbold, Crim. Pract.; Hawkins, Hale, Pleas of the Crown.

In Pleading. In an indictment for murder, it must be charged that the prisoner "did kill and murder" the deceased; and unless the word murder be introduced into the charge, the indictment will be taken to charge manslaughter only; Fost. Crim. Law, 424; Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, *243, and the authorities and cases there cited.

MURDRUM. In Old English Law. During the times of the Danes, and afterwards till the reign of Edward III., murdrum was the killing of a man in a secret manner; and in that it differed from simple homicide.

When a man was thus killed, and he was unknown, by the laws of Canute he was presumed to be a Dane, and the vill was compelled to pay forty marks for his death. After the conquest, a similar law was made in favor of Frenchmen, which was abolished by 3 Edw. III.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo. Prin. Pen. Law, 219, note r.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION. The acts of congress of February 3, 1831, and July 8, 1870, authorize the granting of a copyright for a musical composition. A question was formerly agitated whether a composition published on a single sheet of paper was to be considered a book; and it was decided in the affirmative; 2 Campb. 28, n.; 11 East, 244. Not only an original composition, but any substantially new arrangement or adaptation of an old piece of music, is a proper subject of copyright; Taney, Dec. 72; L. R. 2 C. P. 340, s. c. 3 id. 223; 2 Blatchf. 39; 7 C. B. 4; Drone, Copyright, 175. See COPYRIGHT.

TO MUSTER. To collect together and exhibit soldiers and their arms. To employ recruits, and put their names down in a book to enroll them. In the latter sense the term implies that the persons mustered are not already in the service; 8 Allen, 480. The same term is applied to a list of soldiers in the service of a government. Articles of War, R. S. § 1342.

MUSTER-ROLL. A written document containing the names, ages, quality, place of residence, and, above all, place of birth, of every person of the ship's company. It is of great use in ascertaining the ship's neutrality. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 6, p. 407; Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 161; 2 Wash. C. C. 201.

MUSTIZO. A name given to the issue of an Indian and a negro. Dudl. S. C. 174.

MUTATION. In French Law. This term is synonymous with change, and is particularly applied to designate the change which takes place in the property of a thing in its transmission from one person to another. Permutation therefore happens when the owner of the thing sells, exchanges, or gives it. It is nearly synonymous with transfer. Merlin, Répert.

MUTATION OF LIBEL. In Practice. An amendment allowed to a libel, by which there is an alteration of the substance of the libel, as by propounding a new cause of action, or asking one thing instead of another. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 213; Law, Eccl. Law, 165–167; 1 Paine, 435; 1 Gall. 123; 1 Wheat. 261.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS (Lat.). The necessary changes. This is a phrase of frequent practical occurrence, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like.

MUTE (mutus). When a prisoner upon his arraignment totally refuses to answer, insists upon mere frivolous pretences, or refuses to put himself upon the country, after pleading not guilty, he is said to stand mute.

In the case of the United States vs. Hare et al., Circuit Court, Maryland Dist., May sess. 1818, the prisoner standing mute was considered as if he had pleaded not guilty. The act of congress of March 3, 1825, 3 Story, Laws, 2002, has since provided as follows: That if any person, upon his or her arraignment upon any indictment before any court of the United States for any offence not capital, shall stand mute, or will not answer or plead to such indictment, the court shall, notwithstanding, proceed to the trial of the person so standing mute, or refusing to answer or plead, as if he or she had pleaded not guilty, and, upon a verdict being returned by the jury, may proceed to render judgment accordingly. A similar provision is to be found in the laws of Pennsylvania and New York, and, in England, the court now enters a plea of not guilty for a prisoner refusing to plead, and the trial proceeds as in other cases.

In former times, in England, the terrible punishment or sentence of penance or peine (probably a corrupted abbreviation of prisone) fort et dure was inflicted where a prisoner would not plead, and stood obstinately mute. This judgment of penance for standing mute was as follows: that the prisoner be remanded to the prison from whence he came, and put into a low, dark chamber, and there be laid on his back, on the bare floor, naked, unless where decency forbids; that there be placed upon his body as great a weight of iron as he could bear; and, more, that he have no sustenance, save only on the first day three morsels of the worst bread, and on the second day three draughts of standing water that should be nearest to the prison-door; and in this situation this should be alternately his daily diet till he died or (as anciently the judgment ran) till he answered. Britton, c. 4, 22; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 34, § 33. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE. Prisoners sometimes suffered death in this way to save their property from forfeiture. In treason, petit felony, and misdemeanors, however, wilfully standing mute was equivalent to a conviction, and the same punishment might be imposed. Giles Corey, accused of witchcraft, was perhaps the only person pressed to death in America for refusing to plead. See 3 Bancroft's Hist. U. S. 93.

MUTILATION. In Criminal Law. The depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. 1 Bla. Com. 130.

MUTINY. In Criminal Law. The unlawful resistance of a superior officer, or the raising of commotions and disturbances on board of a ship against the authority of its commander, or in the army in opposition to the authority of the officers; a sedition; a revolt.

By the act for establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, it is enacted as follows: Article 22. Any officer or soldier, who begins, excites, or causes, or joins in, any mutiny or sedition in any troop or company in the service of the United States, or in any party, post, detachment, or guard, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial shall direct. Article 23. Any officer or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavors to suppress the same, or, having knowledge of any intended mutiny, does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer, shall be punished by death, or suffer such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

And by the act for the better government of the navy of the United States, it is enacted as follows: Article 4. Any person in the naval service who makes, or attempts to make, any mutinous assembly, or, being witness to or present at any mutiny, does not do his utmost to suppress it, or knowing of any mutinous assembly, or of any intended mutiny, does not immediately communicate his knowledge to his superior or commanding officer, shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge. And any person as aforesaid who utters any seditious or mutinous words, or joins in or abets any combination to weaken the lawful authority of, or lessen the respect due to, his commanding officer, or treats his superior officer with contempt, or is disrespectful to him, while in the execution of his office, may be punished by such punishment as a court-martial may adjudge. R. S. § 1624.

Mutiny, revolt, and the endeavor to make a revolt or mutiny, on board merchant-vessels, are made criminal, and the punishment provided for them; R. S. § 4596; 2 Curt. C. C. 225; 1 Woodb. & M. 306; 2 Sumn. C. C. 582.

MUTINY ACT. In English Law. A statute, annually passed, to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed 12th of April, 1689. See 22 Vict. cc. 4, 5. The passage of this bill is the only provision for the payment of the army, and, like our appropriation bills, it must be passed or the wheels of government will be stopped. There is a similar act with regard to the navy. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 416, 417, n.

MUTUAL ACCOUNTS. Such as contain mutual credits between the parties; or an existing credit on one side which constitutes a ground for credit on the other, or where there is an understanding that mutual debts shall be a set-off pro tanto, between the parties. 27 Ark. 348. Such accounts, of however long standing, are not barred by the statute of limitations, if there be any items within the prescribed limit; 6 Term, 189; Ang. Lim. 138, ch. xiv. See MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS.

MUTUAL CONSENT. Mutual consent is of the essence of every contract, and therefore it must always exist, in legal contemplation, at the moment when the contract is made. It never, however, is the subject of direct allegation or proof, partly because it is generally incapable of direct proof, and partly because every contract is made by acts performed. Proof of the necessary acts carries with it presumptive proof of mutual consent. Thus, if two separate agreements be drawn up, signed and sealed, each of them purporting to be a contract between A and B, and the parties, intending to deliver one of the instruments, deliver the other by mistake, there is no contract made; Langd. Contr. 193. Where the plaintiff's acceptance of the defendant's offer inadvertently made a slight change in a date, there was held to be no contract, because there had not been mutual consent; 4 Bing. 653. Mutual consent must extend to the consideration as well as to the promise; Langd. Contr. 82.

MUTUAL CREDITS. Credits given by two persons mutually, i. e. each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than mutual debts. Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once, that by the other payable in futuro: yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of mutual debts; 1 Atk. 230; 7 Term, 378. And it is not necessary that there should be intent to trust each other: thus, where an acceptance of A came into the hands of B, who bought goods of A, not knowing the acceptance to be in B's hands, it was held a mutual credit; 3 Term, 507, n.; 4 id. 211; 3 Ves. 65; 8 Taunt. 156, 499; 1 Holt, 408; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 179; 26 Barb. 310; 4 Gray, 284; 9 N. J. Eq. 44; 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 348; 7 D. & E. 378.

MUTUAL PROMISES. Promises simultaneously made by two parties to each other, each promise being the consideration of the other. Hob. 88; 14 M. & W. 855; Add. Contr. 22. If one of the promises be voidable, it will yet be good consideration, but not if void; Story, Contr. § 81; 2 Steph. Com. 114.

MUTUALITY. Reciprocity; an acting in return. Webster, Dict.; Add. Contr. 622; 26 Md. 37.

MUTUARY. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him and returned to the lender in kind; the person who receives the benefit arising from the contract of mutuum. Story, Bailm. § 47.

MUTUUM. A loan of personal chattels to be consumed by the borrower and to be returned to the lender in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which are to be used or consumed, and are to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. Story, Bailm. § 228. See LOAN FOR USE.

MYSTERY (said to be derived from the French mestier, now written métier, a trade). A trade, art, or occupation. Co. 2d Inst. 668.

Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. See Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 23, s. 11.

MYSTIC TESTAMENT. A will under seal. La. Civ. Code, art. 1567; 5 Mart. La. 182; 5 La. 396; 10 id. 328; 15 id. 88.

N.

NAAM. See NAMIUM.

NAIL. A measure of length, equal to two inches and a quarter. See MEASURE.

NAKED. This word is used in a metaphorical sense to denote that a thing is not complete, and for want of some quality it is either without power or it possesses a limited power. A naked contract is one made without consideration, and for that reason it is void; a naked authority is one given without any right in the agent, and wholly for the benefit of the principal. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1302. See NUDUM PACTUM.

NAME. One or more words used to distinguish a particular individual: as, Socrates, Benjamin Franklin.

Names are Christian, as Benjamin, or surnames, as Franklin. One Christian name only is recognized in law; 1 Ld. Raym. 562; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer (A); 7 Cold. 69; 5 Johns. 84; though two or more names usually kept separate, as John and Peter, may undoubtedly be compounded, so as to form in contemplation of law but one; 5 Term, 195. A letter put between the Christian and surname as an abbreviation of a part of the Christian name, as John B. Peterson, is no part of either; 4 Watts, 329; 5 Johns. 84; 14 Pet. 322; 3 id. 7; 2 Cow. 463; 17 Ala. N. s. 179; 10 Miss. 391; Co. Litt. 3 a; 1 Ld. Raym. 562; Viner, Abr. Misnomer (C 6, pl. 5, 6); Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G 1, note u); Willes, 654; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer and Addition; 3 Chitty, Pr. 164, 173; 52 Ind. 347; s. c. 21 Am. Rep. 179 n. But see 7 W. & S. 406; 19 Ohio, 423; 1 Swan, 162; 20 Iowa, 98; 28 Tex. 772; 39 Ill.

457; 25 Alb. L. J. 322, 323. The words junior and senior are no part of a name; see 1 Pick. 388; 2 Caines, 165; 9 N. H. 519; 22 Me. 171; 8 Conn. 280. The title Mrs. is not a legal name; 13 Vroom, 69.

In general, a corporation must contract and sue, and be sued, by its corporate name; 8 Johns. 295; 14 id. 238; 19 id. 300; 4 Rand. 359. Yet a slight alteration in stating the name is unimportant if there be no possibility of mistaking the identity of the corporation suing; 12 La. 444. See 20 Me. 41; 2 Va. Cas. 362; 16 Mass. 141; 12 S. & R. 389. See MISNOMER.

The real name of a party to be arrested must be inserted in the warrant, if known; 8 East, 828; 6 Cow. 456; 9 Wend. 320; if unknown, some description must be given; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 39, 40; with the reason for the omission; 1 Mood. & M. 281.

As to mistakes in devises, see LEGACY. As to the use of names having the same sound, see IDEM SONANS; 1 Over. 434. As to the effect of using a name having the same derivation, see 2 Rolle, Abr. 135; 1 Wash. C. C. 285. At common law, one could change his name; 10 Fed. Rep. 894; 123 Mass. 415; 3 B. & Ald. 544.

When a person uses a name in making a contract under seal, he will not be permitted to say that it is not his name: as, if he sign and seal a bond "A and B" (being his own and his partner's name), and he had no authority from his partner to make such a deed, he cannot deny that his name is A and B; 1 T. Raym. 2; 1 Salk. 214. And if a man describes himself in the body of a deed by the name of James, and signs it John, he cannot, on being sued by the latter name, plead that his name is James; 3 Taunt. 505; Cro. Eliz. 897, n. a. See 3 P. & D. 271; 11 Ad. & E. 594.

The right to the exclusive use of a name in connection with a trade or business is familiar to the law; and any person using that name, after a relative right of this description has been acquired by another, is considered guilty of a fraud or at least an invasion of another's rights, and renders himself liable to an action, or he may be restrained from the use of the name by injunction. But the mere assumption of a name which is the patronymic of a family by a stranger who has never been called by that name is a grievance to the family for which the law affords no redress; per Lord Chelmsford, L. R. 2 P. C. 441. See 11 Beav. 112; L. R. 2 Ch. 307. A name may be a trade-mark; L. R. 10 Ch. D. 436; 1 Eq. 518; 13 Beav. 209; 18 Am. Rep. 111. A person cannot, however, have an exclusive right of trade-mark in a name as against all others bearing the same name, unless the defendant uses the same brand or stamp in connection with the name; 122 Mass.; 96 U. S. 245; 50 Barb. 236. See 11 Cent. L. J. 3; ELECTION; TRADE-MARK.

NAMIUM. An old word which signifies the taking or distraining another person's movable goods. 2 Inst. 140; 3 Bla. Com. 149. A distress. Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 113.

NANTISSEMENT. In French Law. The contract of pledge; if of a movable, it is called gage, and if of an immovable, antichrèse; Brown, Dict.

NARR (an abbreviation of the word narratio). A declaration in a cause.

NARRATOR. A pleader who draws narrs. Serviens narrator, a serjeant-at-law. Fleta, l. 2, c. 37. Obsolete.

NARROW SEAS. In English Law. Those seas which adjoin the coast of England. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (B 3).

NASCITURUS. Not yet born. This term is applied in marriage settlements to the unborn children of a particular marriage, natus (born) being used to designate those already born.

NATALE. The state or condition of a man acquired by birth.

NATION. An independent body politic. A society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength.

But every combination of men who govern themselves independently of all others will not be considered a nation; a body of pirates, for example, who govern themselves, are not a nation. To constitute a nation, another ingredient is required. The body thus formed must respect other nations in general, and each of their members in particular. Such a society has her affairs and her interests; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common,—thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, Prelim. §§ 1, 2; 5 Pet. 52.

It belongs to the government to declare whether they will consider a colony which has thrown off the yoke of the mother-country as an independent state; and until the government have decided on the question, courts of justice are bound to consider the ancient state of things as remaining unchanged; 1 Johns. Ch. 548; 13 Johns. 141, 561. See 5 Pet. 1; 1 Kent, 21.

In American constitutional law the word state is applied to the several members of the American Union, while the word nation is applied to the whole body of the people embraced within the jurisdiction of the federal government; Cooley, Const. Lim. 1. See 7 Wall. 720.

NATIONAL BANKS. Banks created and governed under the provisions of "The National Bank Act." See Rev. Stat. § 5133 et seq.; title 62.

Congress, in the exercise of an undisputed constitutional power to provide a currency for the whole country, may constitutionally secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation, and to that end may restrain the circulation of any notes not issued under its authority; 8 Wall. 548; this power, long dormant, has been exercised by the National Bank Act.

Any number of persons, not less than five, may organize a national bank. They must sign, acknowledge before a court of record or notary public, and transmit to the comptroller of the currency, an organization certificate, containing the name of the bank, its place of business, the amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which it is to be divided, the names and residences of the shareholders, and the number of shares held by them, and that the applicants desire to avail themselves of the act of congress. The comptroller decides whether the bank is lawfully entitled to begin business; see 19 Mich. 196; if he so finds, his certificate of this fact must be published in a newspaper of the place where the bank is to do business for sixty days.

One hundred thousand dollars is the minimum capital allowed, except in places not exceeding 6000 inhabitants, when, by consent of the comptroller, the capital may be $50,000; where the population exceeds 50,000 the capital must be at least $200,000. The term capital does not refer to borrowed money, but to the property or moneys of the bank permanently invested in its business; 7 Chi. L. News, 339. The capital stock is divided into shares of $100 each, which are personal property. At least fifty per cent. thereof must be paid in before organization, and the rest in monthly instalments of ten per cent. each. The stock of stockholders not paying these instalments may be sold, on notice; stockholders are individually responsible, in addition to what they have invested in their shares, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank, to the extent of their stock at its par value. This liability is several and not joint; 8 Wall. 505.

Upon its organization a national bank has the usual corporate powers, also the right of succession for twenty years, and the power to exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, etc.; by receiving deposits, by buying and selling exchange, coin and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of "title 62 of the Revised Statutes."

The powers of national banks are to be measured by the act creating them; 18 Wall. 589; 72 Penn. 456; 62 Mo. 329; the words of the act above quoted, "by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, etc.," are not to be read as limiting the mode of exercising the "incidental powers" necessary to carry on the business of banking, but as descriptive of the kind of business which is authorized; 22 Ohio St. 516. National banks are designed to aid the government in the administration of an important branch of the public service. The states cannot exercise any control over them, except so far as congress may permit; 91 U. S. 29; see 40 Md. 269.

National banks may purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others: 1. Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business. 2. Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security, for debts previously contracted. 3. Such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings. 4. Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the association, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it; title in the latter case to be held for no longer than five years.

It has been decided by the supreme court of the United States that real estate security on a contemporaneous loan of money by a national bank is valid between the parties; 98 U. S. 621. See contra, 62 Mo. 329; 72 Penn. 456; 87 Ill. 151. A national bank may take a purchase money mortgage on real estate sold by it; 29 La. An. 355.

The circuit courts of the United States have jurisdiction of all suits by or against national banks established in the district for which the court is held; R. S. § 629; see 3 Dill. 298; irrespective of the amount in controversy or the citizenship of the parties; 19 Alb. L. J. 182. A national bank may bring suit in the circuit court out of its district, against a citizen of the district where the court sits; 8 Blatch. 137; 9 Nev. 134. A national bank may waive its right to be sued in its own district; 2 Conn. 298; and state courts have jurisdiction of suits brought by national banks; 49 Vt. 1; 93 U. S. 130: but this must be a state court of its locality; 14 Wall. 383; 101 Mass. 240.

National banks may go into liquidation and be closed by a vote of the shareholders of two thirds of its stock; R. S. § 5220. In case of a failure to pay its circulating notes, the comptroller may appoint a receiver to wind up national banks; R. S. § 5234.

State banks may be changed into national banks; the change when made is a transit, and not a creation. See 40 Mo. 140. See DEPOSIT; INTEREST; PROXY; RESERVE.

NATIONAL DOMAIN. See PUBLIC DOMAIN.

NATIONALITY. Character, status, or condition with reference to the rights and duties of a person as a member of some one state or nation rather than another.

The term is in frequent use with regard to ships. Nationality determined by one's birthplace or parentage is called nationality of origin; that which results from naturalization is by acquisition. A woman upon marriage acquires the nationality of her husband; Morse on Citizenship, 142. In feudal times nationality was determined exclusively by the place of birth, jure solis; but under the laws of Athens and Rome the child followed that of the parents, jure sanguinis. "Of these two tests, the place of birth and the nationality of the father, neither is at present adopted without qualification by British, French, or American law. The laws of these countries exhibit, in fact, different combinations of the two, Great Britain and the United States laying chief stress on the place of birth, while in France the father's nationality determines, though not absolutely and in all cases, that of the child; and this latter theory has found acceptance among other European nations," as Belgium, Bavaria, Prussia, and Spain. Morse on Citizenship, 10.

Perhaps no more correct general rule can be found than that recommended by Westlake. "Legitimate children, wherever born, are regularly members of the state of which their parents form part the moment of their birth; but they may choose the nationality of the place of their birth." See 2 Kent, 49, n. 1; Cock. Nat.; Whart. Confl. Laws; Westlake, Priv. Int. Law. See, generally, ALLEGIANCE; CITIZEN; DENIZEN; DOMICIL; NATURALIZATION.

NATIVE, NATIVE CITIZEN. A natural-born subject. 1 Bla. Com. 366. Those born in a country, of parents who are citizens. Morse, Citizenship, 12. A person born within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether after declaration of independence or before, if he did not withdraw before the adoption of the constitution; or the child of a citizen born abroad, if his parents have ever resided here; or the child of an alien born abroad, if he be in the country at the time his father is naturalized. 8 Paige, Ch. 433; 21 Am. L. Reg. 77; 2 Kent, 39. See CITIZEN.

NATURAL AFFECTION. The affection which a husband, a father, a brother, or other near relative naturally feels towards those who are so nearly allied to him, sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts; and natural affection is a good consideration in a deed. 2 Steph. Com. 61. See BARGAIN AND SALE; COVENANT TO STAND SEIZED.

NATURAL CHILDREN. Bastards; children born out of lawful wedlock. But in a statute declaring that adopted shall have all the rights of "natural" children, the word "natural" was used in the sense of legitimate; 9 Am. L. Reg. 747.

In Civil Law. Children by procreation, as distinguished from children by adoption.

In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been adopted by the father. La. Civ. Code, art. 220.

NATURAL DAY. That space of time included between the rising and the setting of the sun. See DAY.

NATURAL EQUITY. That which is founded in natural justice, in honesty and right, and which arises ex æquo et bono.

It corresponds precisely with the definition of justice or natural law, which is a constant and perpetual will to give to every man what is his. This kind of equity embraces so wide a range that human tribunals have never attempted to enforce it. Every code of laws has left many matters of natural justice or equity wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing general rules to meet them, from the almost impossibility of enforcing them, and from the doubtful nature of the policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude, or kindness. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3720.

NATURAL FOOL. An idiot; one born without the reasoning powers or a capacity to acquire them.

NATURAL FRUITS. The natural production of trees, bushes, and other plants, for the use of men and animals, and for the reproduction of such trees, bushes, or plants.

This expression is used in contradistinction to artificial or figurative fruits: for example, apples, peaches, and pears, are natural fruits; interest is the fruit of money, and this is artificial.

NATURAL INFANCY. A period of non-responsible life, which ends with the seventh year; Whart. Dict.

NATURAL LAW. The law of nature. The divine will, or the dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitableness or unsuitableness to a reasonable nature. Sometimes used of the law of human reason, in contradistinction to the revealed law, and sometimes of both, in contradistinction to positive law.

They are independent of any artificial connections, and differ from mere presumptions of law in this essential respect, that the latter depend on and are a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong; but mere natural presumptions are derived wholly by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any particular rule of law, but simply from the course of nature and the habits of society. These presumptions fall within the exclusive province of the jury, who are to pass upon the facts. 3 Bouv. Inst. n. 3064; Greenl. Ev. § 44.

NATURAL OBLIGATION. One which in honor and conscience binds the person who has contracted it, but which cannot be enforced in a court of justice. Pothier, np. 173, 191. See OBLIGATION.

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. In Evidence. Presumptions of fact; those which depend upon their own form and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind, as derived from those connections which are pointed out by experience.

NATURALIZATION. The act by which an alien is made a citizen of the United States of America.

The act of adopting a foreigner and clothing him with all the privileges of a native-born citizen. 9 Wheat. 827; 9 Op. Att. Gen. 359.

A nation, or the sovereign who represents it, may grant to a stranger the quality of a citizen, by admitting him into the body of the political society. This is called naturalization.

Vattel, Laws of Nat., bk. 1, ch. xix. §§ 212–214.

It is believed that every state in Christendom accords to foreigners, with more or less restrictions, the right of naturalization, and that each has some positive law or mode of its own for naturalizing the native-born subjects of other states, without reference to the consent of the latter for the release or the transfer of the allegiance of such subjects; Hall, Int. Law, 693; see Morse, Citizenship, 66.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 8, vests in congress the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and various laws have been passed in pursuance of this authority. See Rev. Stat. of U. S.

The power to regulate naturalization is exclusive in the federal government; 7 How. 556; 5 Cal. 300; 19 How. 393. Before the adoption of the constitution, each state exercised the right to naturalize citizens. A state cannot make a citizen of the United States; 4 Dill. 425. A state may confer the right of citizenship on any one it thinks proper, but only so far as the state itself is concerned; 19 How. 393. By naturalization, a foreigner becomes, to all intents and purposes, a citizen of the United States, with no disability except that he cannot become president or vice-president. The provision of the constitution applies to persons of foreign birth only; 19 How. 419; and not to a freeman of color, born in the United States; 26 Ind. 299. Indians may be naturalized by act of congress; 19 How. 393; but the naturalization acts do not apply to Indians; 7 Op. Att. Gen. 746. Entire communities have been naturalized by a single act of national sovereignty; 36 Cal. 658.

Congress may invest the state courts with jurisdiction to naturalize foreigners; 33 N. H. 89; and no state can confer jurisdiction on any court which does not come within the terms of the act of congress; 50 N. H. 245.

An applicant for naturalization must have been a resident of the United States for five years next preceding his admission to citizenship, but uninterrupted habitation is not required.

Courts of record, in naturalizing foreigners, act judicially, ascertaining the facts and applying the law to them; 4 Pet. 407; the certificate of naturalization is the usual proof of citizenship, though not the only proof. The judgment of the court, like every judgment, has been decided to be complete evidence of its own validity; id. The subject is fully discussed in Morse, Citizenship.

Naturalization, of itself, confers no right of suffrage; Pars. Rights of an Amer. Citizen, 190.

The 14th amendment to the constitution provides that all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside.

A married woman may be naturalized; 1 Cra. C. C. 372; even without the concurrence of her husband; 16 Wend. 617. See CITIZEN; ALLEGIANCE.

NATURALIZED CITIZEN. One who, being born an alien, has lawfully become a citizen of the United States under the constitution and laws.

In foreign countries he has a right to be treated as such, and will be so considered, even in the country of his birth, at least for most purposes; 1 B. & P. 430. See CITIZEN; DOMICIL; INHABITANT; NATURALIZATION.

NAUCLERUS (Lat.). Master or owner of a vessel. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

NAUFRAGE. In French Maritime Law. When, by the violent agitation of the waves, the impetuosity of the winds, the storm, or the lightning, a vessel is swallowed up, or so shattered that there remain only the pieces, the accident is called naufrage.

It differs from échouement, which is when the vessel remains whole, but is grounded; or from bris, which is when it strikes against a rock or a coast; or from sombrer, which is the sinking of the vessel in the sea when it is swallowed up, and which may be caused by any accident whatever. Pardessus, n. 643. See WRECK.

NAULUM (Lat.). Freight or passage money. 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 124, n.; Dig. 1. 6, § 1, qui potiores in pignore.

NAUTA (Lat.). One who charters (exercet) a ship. L. 1, § 1, ff. nautæ, caupo; Calvinus, Lex. Any one who is on board a vessel for the purpose of navigating her. 3 Sumn. 213; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 2 Emerigon, 448; Pothier, Pand. lib. 4, tit. 9, n. 2; lib. 47, tit. 5, nn. 1, 2, 3, 8, 10. A carrier by water. 2 Ld. Raym. 917.

NAVAL LAW. A system of regulations for the government of the navy. 1 Kent, 377, n. Consult act of April 3, 1800; act of December 21, 1861; act of July 17, 1862; Homans, Nav. Laws; De Hart, Courts-Martial.

NAVAL OFFICER. An officer of the customs of the United States.

His office relates to the estimating duties, countersigning permits, clearances, etc., certifying the collectors' returns, and similar duties.

NAVARCHUS, NAVICULARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The master of an armed ship. Navicularius also denotes the master of a ship (patronus) generally; Cic. Ver. 4, 55; also, a carrier by water (exercitor navis). Calvinus, Lex.

NAVIGABLE WATERS. Those waters which afford a channel for useful commerce. 20 Wall. 430.

In its technical sense, the term navigable, at common law, is only applied to the sea, to arms of the sea, and to rivers which flow and reflow with the tide,—in other words, to tide-waters, the bed or soil of which is the property of the crown. All other waters are, in this sense of the word, unnavigable, and are primâ facie, strictly private property; but in England even such waters, if navigable in the popular sense of the term, are, either of common right or by dedication, subject to the use of the public as navigable highways, the fee or soil remaining in the riparian proprietors; Davies, 149; 5 Taunt. 705; 20 C. B. N. S. 1; 1 Pick. 180; 5 id. 199; Ang. Tide Wat. 75–79.

In the United States, this technical use of the term has been adopted in many of the states, in so far as it is employed to designate and define the waters the bed or soil of which belongs to the state; 4 N. Y. 472; 26 Wend. 404; 4 Pick. Mass. 268; 2 Conn. 481; 3 Me. 269; 31 id. 9; 16 Ohio, 540; 1 Halst. 31; 4 Wisc. 486; 2 Swan, 9. But in Pennsylvania; 2 Binn. 475; 14 S. & R. 71; in North Carolina; 3 Ired. 277; 2 Dev. 30; in Iowa; 3 Iowa, 1; 4 id. 199; and in Alabama; 11 Ala. 436; the technical use of the term has been entirely discarded, and the large fresh-water rivers of those states have been decided to be navigable, not only as being subject to public use as navigable highways, but also as having their bed or soil in the state.

The rule of the common law, by which the ebb and flow of the tide has been made the criterion of navigability, has never been adopted in any of the United States, or, if adopted, it has been in a form modified and improved to fit the condition of the country and the wants of its inhabitants. According to the rule administered in the courts of this country, all rivers which are found "of sufficient capacity to float the products of the mines, the forests, or the tillage of the country through which they flow, to market;" 8 Barb. 239; or which are capable of use "for the floating of vessels, boats, rafts, or logs;" 31 Me. 9 (but see 6 Cal. 443); are subject to the free and unobstructed navigation of the public, independent of usage or of legislation; 20 Johns. 90; 5 Wend. 358; 42 Me. 552; 18 Barb. 277; 5 Ind. 8; 2 Swan, 9; 29 Miss. 21; 6 Cal. 180; 2 Stockt. 211. See 51 Me. 256; 3 Oreg. 445; S. C. 8 Am. Rep. 621; 42 Wisc. 202. It is not necessary that the stream should be navigable all the year round; 31 Mich. 336.

In 108 Mass. 447, Gray, J., says: "The term 'navigable waters' as commonly used in the law, has three distinct meanings; first, as synonymous with 'tide waters,' being waters whether fresh or salt wherever the ebb and flow of the sea is felt; or second, as limited to tide-waters which are capable of being navigated for some useful purpose; or third, as including all waters, whether within or beyond the ebb and flow of the tide which can be used for navigation." See 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 147; Ang. Waterc. § 542.

In New York, it seems that courts are bound to take judicial notice of what streams are, and what are not, highways, at common law; 8 Barb. 239; but it has been held that what is a navigable stream is a mixed question of law and fact; if a stream is not navigable the legislature cannot declare it to be so, because the legislature cannot appropriate it to public use without provision for compensation; 35 N. Y. 454.

A grant by a government to a private individual, of land upon a navigable river, is limited to the shore, while such a grant to a political community extends to the middle of the stream; 4 Iowa, 199; 94 U. S. 324; 11 Fed. Rep. 394.

All navigable waters are for the use of all citizens; 1 Pick. 180; 27 Tex. 68. The general right to regulate the public use of navigable waters is in the state, subject to the power of congress when the water is a highway of commerce with foreign nations or between states. The fact that it is so does not exclude state regulations if congress has not exercised its power; 2 Pet. 2115; or if the state regulations do not conflict with congressional regulations; Cooley, Const. Lim. 73–9.

In the case of navigable waters used as a highway of commerce between the states or with foreign nations, no state can grant a monopoly for the navigation of any portion of such waters; 9 Wheat. 1. A state has the same power to improve such waters as it has in the case of any highway; Cooley, Const. Lim. 738; and, having expended money for such improvement, it may impose tolls upon the commerce which has the benefit of the improvement; 3 McLean, 226; 8 Bush, 447. The states may authorize the construction of bridges over such waters, for railroads and other species of highways, notwithstanding they may to some extent interfere with navigation. See 4 Pick. 460; 38 Ill. 467; BRIDGE. A state may establish ferries over such waters; 1 Black, 603; 41 Miss. 27; and authorize the construction of dams; Cooley, Const. Lim. 740. A state may also regulate the speed and general conduct of ships and other vessels navigating its water highways, provided its regulations do not conflict with any regulations made by congress; 1 Hill, N. Y. 469, 470. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 737–741. See ARM OF THE SEA; RELICTION; RIVER; TIDE-WATER.

NAVIGATION ACT. The stat. 12 Car. II. c. 78. It was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. cc. 109, 110, 114. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107; 17 & 18 Vict. cc. 5 and 120; 3 Steph. Com. 145.

NAVIGATION, RULES OF. Rules and regulations which govern the motions of ships or vessels when approaching each other under such circumstances that a collision may possibly ensue.

These rules are firmly maintained in the United States courts.

The rules of navigation which prevailed under the general maritime law, in the absence of statutory enactments, will first be considered, although, as hereinafter stated, they have lately been superseded by express enactment in most of the commercial countries of the world.

These rules were derived mainly from the decisions of the high court of admiralty in England, and of the superior courts of the United States, and they are based upon the rules promulgated by the corporation of the Trinity House on the 30th of October, 1840, and which may be found in full in 1 W. Rob. 488. These rules are substantially as follows:

For Sailing-Vessels about to meet.

First, those having the wind fair shall give way to those on a wind [or close-hauled].

Second, when both are going by the wind, the vessel on the starboard tack shall keep her wind, and the one on the larboard tack bear up, thereby passing each other on the larboard hand.

Third, when both vessels have the wind large or abeam, and meet, they shall pass each other in the same way, on the larboard hand; to effect which two last-mentioned objects the helm must be put to port.

For a Sailing and a Steam Vessel about to meet.

First, steam-vessels are to be considered in the light of vessels navigating with a fair wind, and should give way to sailing-vessels on a wind on either tack.

Second, a steam-vessel and a sailing-vessel going large, when about to meet, should each port her helm and pass on the larboard side of the other; 1 W. Rob. 478; 2 id. 515; 4 Thornt. 40.

But in the United States courts it has been almost uniformly held, and the rule is now firmly established, that when a sailing-vessel and a steamer are about to meet, the sailing-vessel must, under ordinary circumstances, and whether going large, or before the wind, or close-hauled by the wind, keep her course, and the steamer must take all the measures necessary to avoid a collision; 17 Bost. L. Rep. 384; 18 id. 181; 10 How. 557; 17 id. 152, 178; 18 id. 581; 2 West. Law Month. 425; 3 Blatch. 92; Desty, Adm. § 357.

For Steam-Vessels about to meet.

First, when steam-vessels on different courses are about to meet under such circumstances as to involve the risk of collision, each vessel must put her helm to port, so as always to pass on the larboard side of the other.

Second, a steam-vessel passing another in a narrow channel must always leave the vessel she is passing on the larboard hand.

The following abstract of authorities may also be referred to as furnishing rules of decision (in addition to the general rules of navigation) in the particular cases alluded to; and they will generally be found applicable in cases of collision arising under the new regulations, as well as in cases arising under the general maritime law.

When a steamer or other vessel is about to pass another vessel proceeding in the same general direction, she must allow the foremost boat to keep her way and course, and must take the necessary measures to avoid a collision; 23 How. 448; Abb. Adm. Pr. 108, 110; Olc. 505; 1 Blatch. 363.

A vessel under sail or steam is bound to keep clear of a vessel stationary or at anchor, provided the latter is in a proper place, and exhibits a proper light,—the presumption in such cases being that the vessel in motion is at fault; 1 How. 89; 19 id. 103; 3 Kent, 231; Conkl. Adm. 394, 395; Daveis, 359; 1 Am. L. J. 387; 1 Swab. 88; 3 W. Rob. 49.

A vessel entering a harbor is bound to keep the most vigilant watch to avoid a collision; 18 How. 584; Daveis, 359; and in the night-time she ought generally to have her whole crew on deck; id. And see 3 Kent, 231; 1 Dods. 467.

By the general maritime law, vessels upon the high seas are not ordinarily required constantly to exhibit a light; 2 W. Rob. 4; 3 id. 49; 2 Wall. Jr. 268; but by statute law in England, the United States, Canada, and most of the continental maritime states, steam and sailing vessels were heretofore required in the night-time, and under the circumstances and in the situation pointed out, to carry lights. See 5 Stat. at L. 306, § 10; 9 id. 382, § 4; 10 id. 72, § 29; and the regulations of the supervising inspectors under the latter act; the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1854; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, § 295; and the regulations made under the same, which will be found in Pratt on Sea Lights, and Appendix; the statutes of Canada, and also the ordinances or regulations of France, Russia, Prussia, Holland, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in regard to lights and the rules of navigation, given in the Appendix to Pratt on Sea Lights.

The general rules above given may be, and have been, abrogated by regulations made by various governments, and which are binding upon all vessels within the jurisdiction of that government; The Aurora, before V. C. Adm. Judge Black, at Quebec, Oct. 1860; Story, Confl. Laws, ch. 14; 1 Swab. 38, 63, 96; 1 How. 28; 19 Bost. L. Rep. 220; 14 Pet. 99; but it is beyond the power of the legislature to make rules applicable to foreign vessels when beyond their jurisdiction; that is, more than a marine league from their shores; 1 Swab. 96. And see 18 How. 223; 21 id. 184. It has, accordingly, been held that the new English rule is not applicable in a case of collision on the high seas between a British and a foreign vessel, and that the latter could not set up in its defence a violation of the English statute by the British vessel; 1 Swab. 63, 96; and it was declared that in such a case the general maritime law must be the rule of the court. See 92 U. S. 31.

The rules of navigation under the general maritime law, particular statutes, and also the rules of the maritime law, and of prior enactments, in regard to vessels carrying lights, have, in most commercial countries, been entirely superseded by general rules of navigation, and general regulations in respect to vessels' lights, which were agreed upon by the governments of Great Britain and France in 1863 (1 Lush. App. lxxii.), and which have since been adopted by most of the commercial countries of Europe, and by Brazil and most of the South American republics, as well as by the United States and Canada. Id. lxxvii. and lxxviii.; 13 Stat. at L. 58; Acts of Canadian Parl. 1864; 14 Wall. 171. These rules and regulations will be found in the act of congress above referred to, and which took effect Sept. 1, 1864.

This act is in the following words;

Be it enacted, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That from and after September one, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, the following rules and regulations for preventing collisions on the water be adopted in the navy and the mercantile marine of the United States: Provided, That the exhibition of any light on board of a vessel of war of the United States may be suspended whenever, in the opinion of the secretary of the navy, the commander-in-chief of a squadron, or the commander of a vessel acting singly, the special character of the service may require it.

Rule 1. In the following rules, every steam-vessel which is under sail and not under steam is to be considered a sailing-vessel; and every steam-vessel which is under steam, whether under sail or not, is to be considered a steam-vessel.

Rule 2. The lights mentioned in the following rules, and no others, shall be carried in all weathers between sunset and sunrise.

Rule 3. All steam-vessels, when under way, shall carry,—

(a.) At the foremast head a bright white light, of such a character as to be visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere, at a distance of at least five miles, so constructed as to show a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of twenty points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light ten points on each side of the vessel, viz., from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side.

(b.) On the starboard side a green light, of such a character as to be visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere, at a distance of at least two miles, and so constructed as to show a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of ten points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the starboard side.

(c.) On the port side a red light, of such a character as to be visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere, at a distance of at least two miles, and so constructed as to show a uniform unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of ten points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the port side.

(d.) The green and red lights shall be fitted with inboard screens, projecting at least three feet forward from the lights, so as to prevent these lights from being seen across the bow.

Rule 4. Steam-vessels, when towing other vessels, shall carry two bright white masthead lights, vertically, in addition to their side-lights, so as to distinguish them from other steam-vessels. Each of these masthead lights shall be of the same construction and character as the masthead lights prescribed by rule three.

Rule 5. All steam-vessels, other than ocean-going steamers and steamers carrying sail, shall, when under way, carry on the starboard and port sides lights of the same character and construction, and in the same position as are prescribed for side lights by rule three, except in the case provided in rule six.

Rule 6. River-steamers navigating waters flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, and their tributaries, shall carry the following lights, viz.: one red-light on the out-board side of the port smoke-pipe, and one green light on the out-board side of the starboard smoke-pipe. Such lights shall show both forward and abeam on their respective sides.

Rule 7. All coasting steam-vessels, and steam-vessels other than ferry-boats and vessels otherwise expressly provided for, navigating the bays, lakes, rivers, or other inland waters of the United States, except those mentioned in rule six, shall carry red and green lights, as prescribed for ocean-going steamers; and, in addition thereto, a central range of two white lights; the after-light being carried at an elevation of at least fifteen feet above the light at the head of the vessel. The head-light shall be so constructed as to show a good light through twenty points of the compass, viz: from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side of the vessel; and the after-light so as to show all around the horizon. The lights for ferry-boats shall be regulated by such rules as the board of supervising inspectors of steam-vessels shall prescribe.

Rule 8. Sail-vessels under way or being towed shall carry the same lights as steam-vessels under way, with the exception of the white masthead lights, which they shall never carry.

Rule 9. Whenever, as in the case of small vessels during bad weather, the green and red lights cannot be fixed, these lights shall be kept on deck, on their respective sides of the vessel, ready for instant exhibition, and shall, on the approach of or to other vessels, be exhibited on their respective sides in sufficient time to prevent collision, in such manner as to make them most visible, and so that the green light shall not be seen on the port side, nor the red light on the starboard side.

To make the use of these portable lights more certain and easy, they shall each be painted outside with the color of the light they respectively contain, and be provided with suitable screens.

Rule 10. All vessels, whether steam or sail vessels, when at anchor in roadsteads or fairways, shall, between sunset and sunrise, exhibit where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding twenty feet above the hull, a white light in a globular lantern of eight inches in diameter, and so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all around the horizon, at a distance of at least one mile.

Rule 11. Sailing pilot-vessels shall not carry the lights required for other sailing-vessels, but shall carry a white light at the masthead, visible all around the horizon, and shall also exhibit a flare-up light every fifteen minutes.

Rule 12. Coal-boats, trading-boats, produce-boats, canal-boats, oyster-boats, fishing-boats, rafts, or other water craft, navigating any bay, harbor, or river, by hand-power, horse-power, sail, or by the current of the river, or which shall be anchored or moored in or near the channel or fairway of any bay, harbor, or river, shall carry one or more good white lights, which shall be placed in such manner as shall be prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors of steam-vessels.

Rule 13. Open boats shall not be required to carry the side-lights required for other vessels, but shall, if they do not carry such lights, carry a lantern having a green slide on one side and a red slide on the other side, and, on the approach of or to other vessels, such lantern shall be exhibited in sufficient time to prevent collision, and in such a manner that the green light shall not be seen on the port side, nor the red light on the starboard side. Open boats, when at anchor or stationary, shall exhibit a bright white light. They shall not, however, be prevented from using a flare-up, in addition, if considered expedient.

Rule 14. The exhibition of any light on board of a vessel of war of the United States may be suspended whenever, in the opinion of the secretary of the navy, the commander-in-chief of a squadron, or the commander of a vessel acting singly, the special character of the service may require it.

Rule 15. Whenever there is a fog or thick weather, whether by day or night, the fog-signals shall be used as follows:—

(a.) Steam-vessels under way shall sound a steam whistle placed before the funnel, not less than eight feet from the deck, at intervals of not more than one minute.

(b.) Sailing-vessels under way shall use a fog-horn at intervals of not more than five minutes.

(c.) Steam-vessels and sailing-vessels when not under way shall sound a bell at intervals of not more than five minutes.

(d.) Coal-boats, trading-boats, produce-boats, canal-boats, oyster-boats, fishing-boats, rafts, or other water-craft, navigating any bay, harbor, or river, by hand-power, horse-power, sail, or by the current of the river, or anchored or moored in or near the channel or fairway of any bay, harbor, or river, and not in any port, shall sound a fog-horn, or equivalent signal, which shall make a sound equal to a steam whistle, at intervals of not more than two minutes.

Rule 16. If two sailing-vessels are meeting end on, or nearly end on, so as to involve risk of collision, the helms of both shall be put to port, so that each may pass on the port side of the other.

Rule 17. When two sailing-vessels are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, then, if they have the wind on different sides, the vessel with the wind on the port side shall keep out of the way of the vessel with the wind on the starboard side, except in the case in which the vessel with the wind on the port side is close-hauled and the other vessel free, in which case the latter vessel shall keep out of the way. But if they have the wind on the same side, or if one of them has the wind aft, the vessel which is to windward shall keep out of the way of the vessel which is to leeward.

Rule 18. If two vessels under steam are meeting end on, or nearly end on, so as to involve risk of collision, the helms of both shall be put to port, so that each may pass on the port side of the other.

Rule 19. If two vessels under steam are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other on her own starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other.

Rule 20. If two vessels, one of which is a sail-vessel and the other a steam-vessel, are proceeding in such direction as to involve risk of collision, the steam-vessel shall keep out of the way of the sail-vessel.

Rule 21. Every steam-vessel, when approaching another vessel so as to involve risk of collision, shall slacken her speed, or, if necessary, stop and reverse; and every steam-vessel shall, when in a fog, go at a moderate speed.

Rule 22. Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel.

Rule 23. Where, by rules 17, 19, 20, and 22, one of two vessels is to keep out of the way, the other shall keep her course, subject to the qualifications contained in the following rule.

Rule 24. In obeying and construing these rules, due regard must be had to all dangers of navigation; and to any special circumstances which may exist in any particular case, rendering a departure from them necessary in order to avoid immediate danger.

It is evident that these rules and regulations were intended to supersede all other rules of navigation, and every other system of vessels' lights, wherever they may be adopted. They establish a well-devised and complete system of vessels' lights, and furnish plain and simple rules of navigation applicable to all the ordinary cases of vessels approaching each other under such circumstances as to involve the risk of collision,—leaving extraordinary cases, such as the meeting of vessels in extremely narrow or other very difficult channels (in respect to which no safe general rule can be devised), to the practical good sense and professional skill of those in charge of such vessels. To such cases, and to cases in which one vessel has been suddenly and unexpectedly brought into circumstances of immediate danger entirely through the fault or mismanagement of another, or by inevitable accident, the exceptions contained in rule 24 will apply. But a departure from these rules, to be justifiable even in such cases, must be necessary in order to avoid immediate danger. But that necessity must not have been caused by the negligence or fault of the party disobeying the rule; and courts of admiralty lean against the exceptions; 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 353, 355; 18 How. 581, 583; 1 W. Rob. 157, 478. And see 2 Curt. C. C. 141, 363; 18 How. 581.

The maritime law, however, requires that in collision cases every violation of a rule of navigation, and every other act or omission alleged to be a fault, shall be considered in connection with all the attending circumstances; and when by inevitable accident, or the fault of one of two colliding vessels, a vessel free from fault is suddenly brought into such circumstances of imminent danger as probably to render the deliberate or proper exercise of the judgment and skill of an experienced seaman impossible, an error of judgment, or other mistake, is not regarded as a legal fault; 3 Blatch. 92; 12 How. 461; 14 Wall. 199; 19 id. 54.

The proper and continual exhibition of the bright and colored lights which these rules and regulations prescribe, and their careful observance by the officer of the deck and the lookout of every vessel, constitute the very foundation of the system of navigation established by such rules and regulations. The exhibition of such lights, and the strict compliance with the rules in respect to stationing and keeping a competent and careful person in the proper place and exclusively devoted to the discharge of the duties of a lookout, are of the utmost importance.

The stringent requirements of our maritime courts in respect to lookouts may be learned by consulting the following authorities: 10 How. 585; 12 id. 443; 18 id. 108, 223; 21 id. 548, 570; 23 id. 448, 3 Blatch. 92; Desty, Adm. § 367.

The neglect to carry or display the lights prescribed by these rules and regulations will always be held, primâ facie, a fault, in a collison case; 5 How. 441, 465; 21 id. 548, 556; 3 W. Rob. 191; Swab. 120, 245, 253, 519; 1 Lush. 382; 2 Wall. 538. And, upon the same principles, the neglect, in a fog, to use the prescribed fog-signals will also be considered, primâ facie, a fault; Desty, Adm. § 360

It will be observed that the duty of slackening speed, in all cases when risk of collision is involved, is absolutely and imperatively imposed upon every steam-vessel, by these regulations, and that they require that every steam-vessel shall stop and reverse her engine when necessary to avoid a collision.

The duty of slackening speed in order to avoid a collision had been frequently declared by the maritime courts before the adoption of these regulations; 3 Hagg. Adm. 414; 3 Blatch. 92; Swab. 138; 2 W. Rob. 1; 3 id. 95, 270, 377; 10 How. 557; 12 id. 443; 18 id. 108; but there was no inflexible rule requiring a steamer to slacken speed in all cases when there was risk of collision; and the neglect to do it was held to be a fault only in those cases where its necessity was shown by the proofs. This left the question open to be determined by the courts in each particular case, and perhaps upon vague and unreliable estimates of time and distance and bearings, or upon conflicting and unsatisfactory testimony; but the legislature, in view of the great power and speed of the steamers now in general use, and the very disastrous consequences of a collision of such vessels when running at their ordinary speed, has wisely made the duty imperative; 5 Blatch. 256; 10 How. 586; 91 U. S. 200.

Some of the rules of navigation which these rules and regulations prescribe are quite different from those applied to similar cases by the general maritime law. They will be most apparent upon an examination of the new rules for the crossing of two steam-vessels, or of two sailing-vessels, in connection with the rules formerly applied to similar cases. And until the construction of the new rules has been settled by judicial decisions, it is quite likely that the changes they have introduced will increase, rather than diminish the number of collisions. But the construction of these rules will soon be determined; and, as they are now applicable to the vessels of most commercial countries, the new system is likely, ere long, to become nearly universal; and for that reason, if for no other, its adoption will doubtless reduce the number of collisions.

NAVY. The whole shipping, taken collectively, belonging to the government of an independent nation, and appropriated for the purposes of naval warfare. It does not include ships belonging to private individuals nor (in the United States, at least) revenue vessels or transports in the service of the war department.

Under the constitution, congress has power to provide and maintain a navy. This power authorizes the government to buy and build vessels of war, to establish a naval academy, and to provide for the punishment of desertion and other crimes, and to make all needful rules for the government of the navy. See 3 Wheat. 337; 20 How. 65; 3 Wheat. 370.

NE ADMITTAS (Lat.). The name of a writ now practically obsolete, so called from the first words of the Latin form, by which the bishop is forbidden to admit to a benefice the other party's clerk during the pendency of a quare impedit. Fitzh. N. B. 37; Reg. Orig. 31; 3 Bla. Com. 248; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 31.

NE BAILA PAS (he did not deliver). In Pleading. A plea in detinue, by which the defendant denies the delivery to him of the thing sued for.

NE DISTURBA PAS. In Pleading. The general issue in quare impedit. Hob. 162. See Rast. Entr. 517; Winch, Entr. 703.

NE DONA PAS, NON DEDIT. In Pleading. The general issue in formedon. It is in the following formula: "And the said C D, by J K, his attorney, comes and defends the right, when, etc., and says that the said E F did not give the said manor, with the appurtenances, or any part thereof, to the said G B, and the heirs of his body issuing, in manner and form as the said A B hath in his count above alleged. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." 10 Wentw. Pl. 182.

NE EXEAT REPUBLICA, NE EXEAT REGNO (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a writ originally employed in England as a high prerogative process, for political purposes; 50 N. H. 353; but now applied in civil matters only, issued by a court of chancery, directed to the sheriff, reciting that the defendant in the case is indebted to the complainant, and that he designs going quickly into parts without the state, to the damage of the complainant, and then commanding him to cause the defendnat to give bail in a certain sum that he will not leave the state without leave of the court, and for want of such bail that he, the sheriff, do commit the defendant to prison.

This writ is issued to prevent debtors from escaping from their creditors. It amounts, in ordinary civil cases, to nothing more than process to hold to bail, or to compel a party to give security to abide the decree to be made in his case; 2 Kent, 32; 1 Clark, 551; Beames, Ne Exeat; 13 Viner, Abr. 537; 1 Suppl. to Ves. Jr. 33, 352, 467; 4 Ves Ch. 577; 5 id. 91; Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (C); 8 Comyns, Dig. 232; 1 Bla. Com. 138; Blake, Ch. Pr. Index; Madd. Ch. Pr. Index; 1 Smith, Ch. Pr. 576; 19 V. & B. 312; 6 Johns. Ch. 138; 27 Ohio, 666; 46 Vt. 708.

The writ may be issued against foreigners subject to the jurisdiction of the court, citizens of the same state, or of another state, when it appears by a positive affidavit that the defendant is about to leave the state, or has threatened to do so, and that the debt would be lost or endangered by his departure; 3 Johns. Ch. 75, 412; 7 id. 192; 1 Hopk. Ch. 499. On the same principle which has been adopted in the courts of law that a defendant could not be held to bail twice for the same cause of action, it has been decided that a writ of ne exeat was not properly issued against a defendant who had been held to bail in an action at law; 8 Ves. 594.

This writ can be issued only for equitable demands; 4 Des. Eq. 108; 1 Johns. Ch. 2; 6 id. 138; 1 Hopk. Ch. 499; and not where the plaintiff by process of law may hold the defendant to bail; 3 Bro. C. C. 218; 8 Ves. Jr. 593; 36 Ga. 573; 18 N. J. Eq. 249; 28 Wisc. 245; and where there is an adequate remedy at law, the writ will be dissolved; 30 Ga. 965. It may be allowed in a case to prevent the failure of justice; 2 Johns. Ch. 191. When the demand is strictly legal, it cannot be issued, because the court has no jurisdiction. When the court has concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common law, the writ may, in such case, issue, unless the party has been already arrested at law; 2 Johns. Ch. 170. In all cases when a writ of ne exeat is claimed, the plaintiff's equity must appear on the face of the bill; 3 Johns. Ch. 414.

The amount of bail is assessed by the court itself; and a sum is usually directed sufficient to cover the existing debt, and a reasonable amount of future interest, having regard to the probable duration of the suit; 1 Hopk. Ch. 501.

This writ has been expressly abolished in very many of the states. Yet its place has been filled by other methods of procedure, similar in effect. The constitutions of Vermont, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Mississippi, and Louisiana prohibit any restraint upon emigration. In Arkansas the writ is abolished, and in the new code of New York a system of arrest and bail is substituted. In Ohio and California it is abolished; 27 Ohio, 654; 49 Cal. 465. In those jurisdictions where ne exeat is still recognized, the circumstances under which the writ will be granted and the requisites to its issuance, are largely regulated by statute; but certain general principles govern in nearly every case. These will be found set forth in Rhodes vs. Cousins, 6 Rand. 191. See 14 Amer. Dec. 560, n.

NE INJUSTE VEXES (Lat.). In Old English Law. The name of a writ which issued to relieve a tenant upon whom his lord had distrained for more services than he was bound to perform.

It was a prohibition to the lord, not unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant. Fitzh. N. B. Having been long obsolete, it was abolished in 1833.

NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house. Dig. 8. 4. 15. 17; SERVITUDE.

NE RECIPIATUR (Lat.). That it be not received. A caveat or words of caution given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent. 1 Sell. Pr. 8.

NE RELESSA PAS (Law Fr.). The name of a replication to a plea of release, by which the plaintiff insists he did not release. 2 Bulstr. 55.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE (Law Fr.). In Pleading. A plea by which the party denies that he ever was lawfully married to the person to whom it refers. See the form, 2 Wils. 118; 10 Wentw. Pl. 158; 2 H. Blackst. 145; 3 Chitty, Pl. 599.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR. In Pleading. A plea by which the party who uses it denies that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be; or that the defendant is executor, as the plaintiff in his declaration charges him to be. 1 Chitty, Pl. 484; 1 Saund. 274, n. 3; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 D 2); 2 Chitty, Pl. 498

NE UNQUES SEISIE QUE DOWER. In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant denies the right of a widow who sues for and demands her dower in lands, etc., late of her husband, because the husband was not on the day of her marriage with him, or at any time afterwards, seised of such estate, so that she could be endowed of the same. See 2 Saund. 329; 10 Wentw. Pl. 159; 3 Chitty, Pl. 598, and the authorities there cited.

NE UNQUES SON RECEIVER. In Pleading. The name of a plea in an action of account-render, by which the defendant affirms that he never was receiver of the plaintiff. 12 Viner, Abr. 183.

NE VARIETUR (Lat. that it be not changed). A form sometimes written by notaries public upon bills or notes, for the purpose of identifying them. This does not destroy their negotiability. 8 Wheat. 338.

NEAR. Near is a relative term, and its precise meaning depends upon circumstances; 44 Mo. 197; 5 Allen, 221.

NEAT CATTLE. Oxen or heifers. Whart. Dict. "Beeves" may include neat stock, but all neat stock are not beeves; 36 Tex. 324; 32 id. 479.

NEAT, NET. The exact weight of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

NEATNESS. In Pleading. The statement in apt and appropriate words of all the necessary facts, and no more. Lawes, Plead. 62.

NEBRASKA. One of the states of the American Union.

This state lies between latitude 40° and 43° north, and longitude 95° 25′ and 104° west from Greenwich—near the centre of the Continent. It contains 76,000 square miles; and its population in 1880 was 450,000, having increased about 330,000 in the last ten years. Its territory forms a part of the province of Louisiana as ceded by France, and was afterwards included in the district and the territory of Louisiana as organized in 1804 and 1805, respectively, and in the territory of Missouri, to which the name of the last named territory was changed in 1812. The territory of Nebraska, extending beyond the limits of the present state westward to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and northward to the British possessions, was organized by the act of May 30, 1854. An enabling act for the formation of a state government was passed April 19, 1864; a state constitution was adopted June 21, 1866; on the 9th of February, 1867, an act was passed for the admission of the state into the Union, on condition that civil rights and the elective franchise should be secured to all races, excepting Indians not taxed; and on the first of March, 1867, a proclamation by the president announced the acceptance of this condition, whereupon by the terms of the act the admission of the state became complete.

Constitution.—The present constitution was adopted October 12, 1875. The Bill of Rights prohibits slavery; secures life, liberty, and property, except against due process of law; declares religious freedom in the manner of worshipping Almighty God; prohibits religious tests as qualification for office; protects all denominations in the enjoyment of their mode of worship; makes the truth combined with justifiable motives, a defence in libel cases, civil or criminal; preserves trial by jury; forbids general warrants; provides that the habeas corpus shall only be suspended in rebellion or invasion, and then according to law; makes all offences bailable except treason and murder; requires indictment by the grand jury in all cases of felony, but provides that the legislature may change or abolish the grand jury system; forbids imprisonment for debt except in case of fraud; makes the writ of error a writ of right in felony, and a supersedeas in capital cases, and prohibits distinction between citizens and aliens in respect to property rights.

Every male person of lawful age, who is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become a citizen thirty days prior to an election, and who has resided in the state six months, is an elector, unless non compos mentis, a soldier in the regular army, or under conviction of treason or felony. A constitutional amendment conferring the elective franchise on women was submitted to the people by the legislature of 1881.

Amendments to the constitution may be made by the concurrence of three-fifths of the members chosen to each house of the legislature with a majority of the voters at a general election.

The Legislature.—The legislative power is vested in a senate and a house of representatives. The senate consists of thirty-three members, and the house of one hundred, apportioned according to population every five years. The regular sessions are biennial, and begin on the first Tuesday in January. The pay of members is limited to a session of forty days. A majority of the members elected to each house is necessary for the passage of a bill. Money bills originate in the house of representatives. No bill can contain more than one subject, which must be expressed in its title. Amendments to laws must be express. The power of impeachment rests in the two houses, in joint convention. A majority of the elected members is requisite. Impeachments are tried by the supreme court, sitting for that purpose, except when a judge of that court is impeached, in which case the court of impeachment is composed of all the district judges, sitting together. The concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the court is necessary to conviction. Judgment extends only to removal from office and disqualification; and the trial is no bar to a prosecution. Acts of the legislature take effect three months after the end of the session at which passed, unless in case of an emergency declared by the vote of two-thirds of the elected members of each house.

The Executive.—The supreme executive power is vested in a Governor, who, with the Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor of Public Accounts, Treasurer, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Attorney General, and Commissioner of Public Lands and Buildings, is elected biennially. The governor must be thirty years of age, and must have been for two years a citizen of the United States and of the state. His salary is $2500 a year. The governor has the pardoning power, except in treason, when it rests with the legislature, and in cases of impeachment; and has a qualified veto, which may be applied to single items of appropriation. The treasurer is ineligible to the same office for two years after two consecutive terms. The secretary of state is the keeper of the seal.

The Judiciary.—The courts of record are the Supreme Court, District Courts, and County Courts. Judges are elected. The Supreme Court is composed of three judges, elected, alternately, for six years, the senior judge presiding. The supreme court has original jurisdiction in civil cases in which the state is a party, in revenue cases, and in matters of mandamus, quo warranto, and habeas corpus. Terms are held twice a year at the capital. The state is divided into six judicial districts, in each of which a judge is elected for four years, who holds the district court in the several counties in his district successively. This is a court of first resort in civil cases involving over $100; and is the criminal trial court in all but petty cases. Inferior to the district courts are the county courts, with jurisdiction of probate business, and of minor civil and criminal matters; and police courts, and courts of justices of the peace, with the ordinary functions of such tribunals. Appeals lie in all cases from these lower courts to the district courts.

Jurisprudence.—The common law of England is the basis of the law of this state. The statutes are contained in the general statutes, one volume, being the acts in force September 1, 1873, and in biennial volumes of session laws, beginning with 1875. Practice is under a code of procedure, based on that of Ohio. The distinction between legal and equitable proceedings is abolished. There is one form of civil action. The pleadings are the petition, the answer, and the reply. There is a very liberal rule as to amendments. Actions are in the name of "the real party in interest." Companies and firms sue in the partnership name. Married women have full civil and property rights. Exemptions are broad; and there is a liberal stay law. Prosecutions are instituted, and process runs, in the name of the state of Nebraska.

NECESSARIES. Such things as are proper and necessary for the sustenance of man.

The term necessaries is not confined merely to what is requisite barely to support life, but includes many of the conveniences of refined society. It is a relative term, which must be applied to the circumstances and conditions of the parties; 7 S. & R. 247. Ornaments and superfluities of dress, such as are usually worn by the party's rank and situation in life; 1 Campb. 120; 3 id. 326; 7 C. & P. 52; 1 Hodg. 31; 8 Term, 578; 1 Leigh, N. P. 135; some degree of education; 4 M. & W. 727; 6 id. 48; 16 Vt. 683; lodging and houserent; 2 Bulstr. 69; 1 B. & P. 340; see 12 Metc. 559; 13 id. 306; 1 M. & W. 67; 5 Q. B. 606; horses, saddles, bridles, liquors, pistols, powder, whips, and fiddles, have been held not to be necessaries; 1 Bibb, 519; 1 M'Cord, 572; 2 N. & M'C. 524; 2 Humphr. 27; 2 Strn. 1101; 1 M. & G. 550. And see 7 C. & P. 52; 4 id. 104; Holt, 77; 11 N. H. 51; 8 Exch. 680.

The rule for determining what are necessaries is that whether articles of a certain kind or certain subjects of expenditure are or are not such necessaries as an infant may contract for, is a matter of law, and for instruction by the court; but the question whether any particular things come under these classes, and the question, also, as to quantity, are generally matters for the jury to determine; 1 Pars. Contr. 241; 10 Vt. 225; 12 Metc. 559; 11 N. H. 51; 1 Bibb, 519; 2 Humphr. 27; 3 Day, 37; 1 M. & G. 550; 6 M. & W. 42; 6 C. & P. 690.

Infants, when not maintained by parent or guardian, may contract for necessaries; 4 M. & W. 727; 16 Mass. 28; 10 Mo. 451; 9 Johns. 141. But when living with and supported by their parents they are not liable for necessaries; 4 Wend. 403; 61 Ill. 177; Ewell, Lead. Cas. 55. Nor can an infant pledge his father's credit, as a wife can her husband's, for abandonment of duty; 17 Vt. 348; 6 M. & W. 482; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 328. Infants are not liable at law for borrowed money, though expended for necessaries; 10 Mod. 67; 1 Bibb, 519; 7 W. & S. 83, 88; 10 Vt. 225. See 1 P. Wms. 558; 7 N. H. 368; 2 Hill, So. C. 400; 32 N. H. 345. Otherwise in equity; 1 P. Wms. 558; 2 Duvall, 149; 7 W. & S. 88. But they are liable for money advanced at their request to a third party to pay for necessaries; 1 Denio, 460; 10 Cush. 436; 7 N. H. 368; 2 Sandf. 306; 2 Hill, S. C. 400. Necessaries for the infant's wife and children are necessaries for himself; Strn. 168; Comyns, Dig. Enfant (B 5); 2 Stark. Ev. 725; 3 Day, 37; 1 Bibb, 519; 2 N. & M'C. 523; 9 Johns. 144; 16 Mass. 31; 14 B. Monr. 232; Bacon, Abr. Infancy (I). See 13 M. & W. 252; 5 Harr. Del. 428; 4 Vt. 152.

When a wife is living with her husband, it is presumed that she has his assent to pledge his credit for necessaries. But this presumption may be rebutted by showing a prohibition on his part or that he has already supplied her with necessaries. The fact of cohabitation is not conclusive of the husband's assent; 2 Ld. Raym. 1006; 34 N. H. 420; 39 N. Y. 351; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 80; 29 Am. L. Reg. 324. But if the husband altogether neglects to supply the wife, she may pledge his credit notwithstanding he has forbidden tradesmen to trust her; the law here raising a presumption of agency to enforce the marital obligation and protect the wife; 40 Barb. 390; 41 Barb. 558; 15 Conn. 535; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 77. The husband is also liable when away from his wife without her fault or by his own misconduct; 24 Ala. 337; 8 Iowa, 51; 8 Gray, 172; 2 Kent, 146. But otherwise where it is the wife's fault; 10 Ill. 569; 29 N. H. 63; 40 Vt. 68; 19 Wisc. 268. But if the wife elopes, though it be not with an adulterer, he is not chargeable even for necessaries; the very fact of the elopement and separation is sufficient to put persons on inquiry, and whoever gives credit to the wife afterwards gives it at his peril; 1 Strn. 647; 11 Johns. 281; 12 id. 293; 3 Pick. 289; 2 Hulst. 146; 2 Kent, 123; 2 Stark. Ev. 696; Bacon, Abr. Baron and Feme (H); 1 Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 104, 106; 6 C. B. N. S. 519; 19 Wisc. 268. Insane persons are liable for necessaries; 5 B. & C. 170; 10 Allen, 59; 56 Me. 308. See generally Schouler, Dom. Rel.; Ewell, Lead. Cas. on Coverture, etc.; 29 Am. L. Reg. 324; 32 Mich. 204.

NECESSITY. That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible.

Necessity is of three sorts: of conservation of life; see DURESS; of obedience, as the obligation of civil subjection, and, in some cases, the coercion of a wife by her husband; and necessity of the act of God, or of a stranger; Jacob; Mor. & W.

Whatever is done through necessity is done without any intention; and as the act is done without will (q. v.) and is compulsory, the agent is not legally responsible; Bacon, Max. Reg. 5. Hence the maxim, Necessity has no law; indeed, necessity is itself a law which cannot be avoided nor infringed. Clef des Lois Rom.; Dig. 10. 3. 10. 1; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (3 M 20, 3 M 30). As to the circumstances which constitute necessity, see 1 Russ. Cr. 16, 20; 2 Stark. Ev. 713; 31 Ind. 189; 4 Cush. 243; 55 Ga. 126.

NECK-VERSE. The Latin sentence Miserere mei, Deus, Ps. li. 1, because the reading of it was made a test for those who claimed benefit of clergy.

If a monk had been taken
For stealing of bacon,
For burglary, murder, or rape;
If he could but rehearse
(Well prompt) his neck-verse,
He never could fail to escape.
Brit. Apollo, 1710; Whart. Dict.

NEGATIVE. Negative propositions are usually much more difficult of proof than affirmative, and in cases where they are involved, it is often a nice question upon which side lies the burden of proof. The general rule has been thus stated: Whoever asserts a right dependent for its existence upon a negative, must establish the truth of the negative, except where the matter is peculiarly within the knowledge of the adverse party. Otherwise rights of which a negative forms an essential element may be enforced without proof; 72 Ind. 113; s. c. 37 Am. Rep. 141. Thus in actions for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove that there was no probable cause; 67 Ind. 375; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 454. The rule applies whenever the claim is founded in a breach of duty in not repairing highways, and in cases of mutual negligence; 78 N. Y. 480; Shearm. & Red. Neg. 312. So one must prove the allegation that a negotiable promissory note was not taken in payment of a debt; 68 Ind. 254. So the onus is on a plaintiff who assigns as a breach by tenant that he did not repair; 9 C. & P. 734; 6 H. L. C. 672; 12 Mod. 526. In all actions for breach of warranty of the soundness of a personal chattel, the plaintiff must prove the negative. "It may be stated as a test admitting of universal application, that whether the proposition be affirmative or negative, the party against whom judgment would be given, as to a particular issue, supposing no proof to be offered on either side, has on him, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, the burden of proof which he must satisfactorily sustain;" 1 Whart. Ev. § 357; see 14 M. & W. 95; 5 Cra. C. C. 298; 119 Mass. 469; 47 Penn. 476; 62 N. Y. 448; 33 Miss. 292; 97 Mass. 97; 107 id. 334; 39 Wisc. 520; 69 Ill. 423; 52 Mo. 390; article in 25 Alb. L. Jour. 124; BURDEN OF PROOF.

NEGATIVE AVERMENT. In Pleading. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted.

NEGATIVE CONDITION. One where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 751. See POSITIVE CONDITION.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In Pleading. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative.

Thus, where a defendant pleaded a license from the plaintiff's daughter, and the plaintiff rejoined that he did not enter by her license, the rejoinder was objected to successfully as a negative pregnant; Cro. Jac. 87. The fault here lies in the ambiguity of the rejoinder, since it does not appear whether the plaintiff denies that the license was given or that the defendant entered by the license. Steph. Pl. 381.

This ambiguity constitutes the fault; Hob. 295; which, however, does not appear to be of much account in modern pleading; 1 Lev. 88; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (R 6); Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 36.

NEGATIVE STATUTE. One which is enacted in negative terms, and which so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bacon, Abr. Statutes (G); Brook, Abr. Parliament, pl. 72.

NEGLIGENCE. The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. Per Alderson, B., in Blyth vs. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Ex. 784.

The failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Cooley, Torts, 630.

The absence of care according to circumstances. See 78 Penn. 219; 46 Tex. 356; 9 W. Va. 252.

The failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or the doing what such a person under the existing circumstances would not have done. 95 U. S. 441, per Swayne, J.

Dr. Wharton (Negligence, § 3) defines the term as follows: "Negligence, in its civil relation, is such an inadvertent imperfection, by a responsible human agent, in the discharge of a legal duty, as immediately produces, in an ordinary and natural sequence, a damage to another." It is conceded by all the authorities that the standard by which to determine whether a person has been guilty of negligence is the conduct of the prudent or careful or diligent man. Bigel. Torts, 261.

The opposite of care and prudence, the omission to use the means reasonably necessary to avoid injury to others. 39 Ill. 353.

When a contract creates a duty, the neglect to perform that duty, as well as the negligent performance of it, is a ground of action for tort. Hence it is at the election of the party injured to sue either on the contract or on the tort; Whart. Negl. § 435; 4 Gray, 485; 24 Conn. 392. Some cases have gone to the extent of maintaining an action in tort even where no attempt has been made to perform the contract; 13 Ired. 89; 11 Cl. & F. 1.

It is said not to be essential to constitute negligence that the damage caused might reasonably have been expected from the negligent act; Whart. Negl. § 16. Thus Gray, C. J., says in 107 Mass. 494, "A man who negligently sets fire on his own land and keeps it negligently, is liable to an action at common law for any injury done by the spreading or communication of the fire directly from his own land to the property of another, whether through the air or along the ground, and whether he might or not have reasonably anticipated the particular manner in which it was communicated." And in L. R. 6 C. P. 14, where the defendants, a railway company, left a pile of rubbish in hot weather by the side of their track, and the pile was ignited by sparks from the defendants' engine, and the fire crossed the hedge and field and burned the plaintiff's cottage, two hundred yards away, Channell, B., said: When there is no direct evidence of negligence, the question what a reasonable man might foresee is of importance in considering the question whether there is evidence for the jury of negligence or not, . . . but when it has been once determined that there has been evidence of negligence, the person guilty of it is equally liable for its consequences, whether he could have foreseen them or not.

Where a person unlawfully injures another, he is liable in damages, without regard to the intention with which the act was done; 32 N. J. 554; 44 N. H. 211; and good faith does not excuse negligence; 32 Vt. 652; 3 Sneed, 677.

The damage caused must arise from inadvertence. If it be intentional, a suit for negligence will not lie; the remedy is in trespass and not case.

Proof of negligence. The first requisite for the plaintiff is to show the existence of the duty which he alleges has not been performed, and having shown this he must show a failure to observe this duty; that is, he must establish negligence on the defendant's part. This is an affirmative fact, the presumption always being, until the contrary appears, that every man will perform his duty; Cooley, Torts, 659, 661. In many cases evidence of the injury done makes out a prima facie case of negligence on the defendant's part; for instance, when a bailee returns in an injured condition an article loaned to him, or when a passenger on a railway train is injured without fault on his part.

Law or fact. It is generally said that the question of negligence is a mixed question of law and fact, to be decided by the court when the facts are undisputed or conclusively proved, but not to be withdrawn from the jury when the facts are disputed, and the evidence is conflicting; Whart. Negl. § 420. In the great majority of cases litigated, the question is left to the jury to determine whether the defendant's conduct was reasonable under the circumstances. When a well-recognized legal duty rested upon the plaintiff, it is usual for the court to define this duty to the jury, and leave to it the question as to whether the plaintiff fulfilled this duty. More recently the courts have drawn a distinction between what is evidence of negligence for the jury, and what is negligence per se, and therefore a question of law for the court, and the tendency has perhaps been rather to increase the number of cases in which the question of negligence is passed upon by the court. In Pennsylvania, when the standard of duty is defined by law, and is the same under all circumstances, and when there has been such an obvious disregard of duty and safety as amounts to misconduct, the courts have withdrawn the case from the consideration of the jury. It is said to be clear, by most of the authorities, that when the facts are found, and it is perfectly manifest that a prudent man would or would not do as the defendant has done, the court may rule accordingly, or rather, may direct the jury to find accordingly. The same is also true when the law has prescribed the nature of the duty, and also when there exists a well-known practice in the community, of a proper character. In other cases, the inference concerning negligence is left to the jury; Bigel. Torts, 263. See Bigel. L. C. Torts, 589–596.

"When the circumstances of a case are such that the standard of duty is fixed, when the measure of duty is defined by law and is the same under all circumstances, its omission is negligence and may be so declared by the court. But it is said that when the negligence is clearly defined and palpable, such that no verdict of a jury could make it otherwise, or when there is no controversy as to the facts, and from these it clearly appears what course a person of ordinary prudence would pursue under the circumstances, the question of negligence is purely one of law." 2 Thomp. Negl. 1236.

"As a general rule, a question whether a party has been guilty of negligence or not, is one of fact, not of law. Where, however, the plaintiff brings action for a negligent injury, and the action of the two parties must have concurred to produce it, it devolves upon him to show that he was not himself guilty of negligence; and if he gives no evidence to establish that fact, the court may properly instruct the jury that they should return a verdict for defendant. Where, however, the question of negligence depends upon a disputed state of facts, or when the facts, though not disputed, are such that different minds might honestly draw different conclusions from them, the court cannot give such positive instructions, but must leave the jury to draw their own conclusions upon the facts, and upon the question of negligence depending upon them. To warrant the court in any case in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, the case must be a very clear one against him, and which would warrant no other inference." Per Cooley, C. J., in 17 Mich. 99.

It is true, in many cases, that when the facts are undisputed, the effect of them is for the judgment of the court. That is true in that class of cases when the existence of such facts come in question, rather than when deductions or inferences are to be made from the facts (and see 25 Kan. 391). In some cases, too, the necessary inference from the proof is so certain that it may be ruled as a question of law. Certain facts we may suppose to be clearly established from which one sensible, impartial man would infer that proper care had not been used; another man, equally sensible, equally impartial, would infer that proper care had been used. It is this class of cases and those akin to it that the law commits to the decision of a jury. Twelve men of the average of the community, comprising men of education and of little education, men of learning and men whose learning consists in what they have themselves seen and heard, the merchant, the mechanic, the farmer, the laborer; these sit together, consult, apply their separate experiences of the affairs of life to the facts proven, and draw a unanimous conclusion. This average judgment thus given, it is the final effort of the law to obtain. Per Hunt, J., in 17 Wall. 663. Although the facts are undisputed, it is for the jury and not for the judge to determine whether proper care was given or whether they established negligence; 73 Ind. 261. The subject is fully treated in a note by the present writer in 13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 284.

Contributory negligence. If the evidence shows that the plaintiff himself was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, there can be no recovery. The distinction, however, must be drawn between conditions and causes, between causa causans and causa sine qua non. The question must always be considered whether the act of the plaintiff had a natural tendency to expose him directly to the danger which resulted in the injury complained of. If it had not, the plaintiff's negligence is not considered in law as contributing to the injury. Thus, when the defendant was driving carelessly along the highway, and ran into and injured the plaintiff's donkey which was straying improperly on the highway with his fore feet fettered, it was held that the plaintiff's negligence had not contributed to the accident; 10 M. & W. 546. It has also been held that if the plaintiff could by the exercise of reasonable care, at or just before the happening of the injury to him, have avoided the same, he cannot recover; 5 C. B. N. S. 573. And when it appears that the plaintiff, by the defendant's misconduct became frightened, and in endeavoring to escape the consequence of the defendant's misconduct, rushed into danger and was injured, the plaintiff's conduct does not contribute to the injury; 56 N. Y. 585. So, when the defendant might, by proper care, have avoided the consequences of the plaintiff's negligence, the plaintiff may still recover; 85 N. C. 512.

In some cases it has been held that the plaintiff must show affirmatively that he was in the exercise of due care, when the injury happened; 83 Ill. 354; 5 Bradw. 242; 19 Conn. 566; 78 N. Y. 480; 101 Mass. 455. Probably the proof need not be direct, but may be inferred from the circumstances of the case; 104 Mass. 137; 2 Thomp. Negl. 1178, n. In other states, contributory negligence is a matter of defence, the burden of proving which is on the defendant; 66 Penn. 30; 85 Penn. 275; 22 Minn. 152; 65 Mo. 34; 35 Ohio St. 627; 3 Mo. App. 565; 50 Cal. 70; 11 W. Va. 14; 43 Wisc. 513; S. C. 28 Am. Rep. 558, where the cases are discussed. But even in these courts, if the plaintiff's own showing disclose contributory negligence, he cannot recover. See, further, 15 Wall. 401; 41 Wisc. 105; 44 N. Y. 465; 28 Am. Rep. 563, n.; 20 Alb. L. J. 304, 359. See an article in 15 West. Jur. 529.

Comparative negligence. In Illinois a rule of comparative negligence has been laid down. It has been expressed thus: If, on comparing the negligence of the plaintiff with that of the defendant, or the negligence of the person injured with that of the person inflicting the injury, the former is found to have been slight and the latter gross, the plaintiff may recover. See 20 Ill. 478 (where the rule was first announced by Breese, J.); 83 id. 405; 95 Ill. 25. In 36 Ill. 409, it was said, "The rule of this court is that negligence is relative, and that the plaintiff, although guilty of negligence which may have contributed to the injury, may hold the defendant liable if he has been guilty of a higher degree of negligence, amounting to wilful injury. The fact that the plaintiff is guilty of slight negligence does not absolve the defendant from the use of care and the use of reasonable efforts to avoid the injury." In a late case it was held that the negligence of the plaintiff must be but slight, and that of the defendant gross in comparison; and both of these terms, "gross" and "slight," or their equivalents, should be used in every instruction to a jury on the subject. "Want of ordinary care is not equivalent to gross negligence;" 8 Bradw. 133; a mere preponderance of negligence against the defendant will not make him liable; 96 Ill. 42.

This doctrine has been adopted to a certain extent in Kansas; 14 Kan. 37; and perhaps in Georgia.

Imputed negligence. In cases of actions brought by infants of tender years for damages caused by the defendant's negligence, it has sometimes been held that the negligence of the parent or guardian of the infant in permitting it to become exposed to danger, is to be imputed to the infant so as to bar its right of action. This rule was first laid down in Hartfield vs. Roper, 21 Wend. 615. The doctrine has been much discussed, and this case has been followed, sometimes with modification. See 104 Mass. 53; 88 Ill. 441; 28 Ind. 287; 2 Neb. 319; 50 Cal. 602; but in other states, especially Pennsylvania (57 Penn. 187; 81 id. 19), its doctrine has been denied; 22 Vt. 213; 30 Ohio St. 451; 53 Ala. 70. But see L. R. 1 Ex. 239. See, as to injuries to infants, 31 Am. Rep. 206; 14 Cent. L. J. 282.

In England where a passenger has been injured by concurrent negligence of his own carrier and a third party, the carrier's negligence is imputed to the passenger, and bars his recovery against a third party; 8 C. B. 115 (but this case has been criticized in Lush. 388; 1 Sm. L. C. 481); see L. R. 9 Ex. 176. The contrary rule has been adopted in this country; 19 N. Y. 341; 38 N. Y. 260; 7 Vroom, 225; s. c. 13 Am. Rep. 435; 46 Penn. 151. When the plaintiff is riding in a private vehicle, the driver's negligence is not imputable to him; 66 N. Y. 11; s. c. 23 Am. Rep. 1; contra, 43 Wisc. 513; s. c. 28 Am. Rep. 558. See notes to the 23 & 28 Am. Rep. just cited.

See Moak's Underhill, Torts; Shearm. & R. Negligence; Bigel. L. C. Torts; as to degrees of negligence, BAILEE; 8 Am. L. Rev. 653.

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. The omission on the part of a gaoler to take such care of a prisoner as he is bound to take, when in consequence thereof the prisoner departs from his confinement without the knowledge or consent of the gaoler, and eludes pursuit.

For a negligent escape, the sheriff or keeper of the prison is liable to punishment, in a criminal case; and in a civil case he is liable to an action for damages at the suit of the plaintiff. In both cases the prisoner may be retaken; 3 Bla. Com. 415. See ESCAPE.

NEGOTIABLE. In Mercantile Law. A term applied to a contract the right of action on which is capable of being transferred by indorsement (of which delivery is an essential part), in case the undertaking is to A or his order, A or his agent, and the like, or by delivery alone, in case the undertaking is to A or bearer,—the assignee in either case having a right to sue in his own name.

At common law, choses in action were not assignable; but exceptions to this rule have grown up by mercantile usage as to some classes of simple contracts, and others have been introduced by legislative acts, so that now bills of exchange, promissory notes, and bank-notes, to order or bearer, are universally negotiable; and notes not to order or bearer, have become quasi negotiable; that is, an indorsement will give a right of action in the name of the assignor; and in some states, by statute, bonds and other specialties are assignable by indorsement.

And, in general, any chose in action can be assigned so that the assignee can bring action in name of assignor, and with same rights. See Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 158–194; 1 Pars. Contr. 202; Daniel, Negot. Instr.; Benj. Chalm. Digest, Bills, etc.; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. The weight of authority is in favor of the negotiability of instruments payable to bearer; 14 Conn. 362. Besides notes, bills, and checks, the following have been held to be negotiable instruments: exchequer bills; 4 B. & Ald. 1; 12 Cl. & F. 787, 805; state and municipal bonds; 3 B. & C. 45; 96 U. S. 51; 8 Wall. 327; corporate bonds; L. R. 3 Ch. App. 758; id. 154; L. R. 11 Eq. 478; 21 How. 575; coupon bonds of an individual; 6 Ben. 175; coupon bonds of a corporation; 9 Wall. 477; 14 id. 282; 20 id. 583; 66 N. In some of the states of the United States, statutes have been enacted in regard to the nature and operation of bills of lading and warehouse receipts, but the statutes and interpretations of them lack uniformity. See Dos Passos, Stock Brokers.

An instrument in the form of a promissory note drawn by a corporation, and bearing its seal, is not a promissory note negotiable by the law merchant; per Blatchford, C. J., in 8 Fed. Rep. 534.

NEGOTIATE. The power to negotiate a bill or note is the power to indorse and deliver it to another, so that the right of action therein shall pass to the indorser or holder; 42 Md. 581.

NEGOTIATION. The deliberation which takes place between the parties touching a proposed agreement.

That which transpires in the negotiation makes no part of the agreement, unless introduced into it. It is a general rule that no evidence can be given to add, diminish, contradict, or alter a written instrument; Leake, Contr. 26; 1 Dall. 426; 4 id. 340; 3 S. & R. 609.

But this rule has been much modified, and parol evidence is now held admissible to contradict, vary, or even avoid a written instrument where it would not have been executed but for the oral stipulation, except in the case of negotiable paper; 90 Penn. 82.

In Mercantile Law. The act by which a bill of exchange or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person.

The transfer of a bill in the form and manner prescribed by the law merchant with the incidents and privileges annexed thereby, i. e.:—

The transferee can sue all parties to the instrument in his own name;

The consideration for the transfer is prima facie presumed;

The transferor can under certain conditions give a good title, although he has none himself;

The transferee can further negotiate the bill with the like privileges and incidents.

There are two modes of negotiation, viz.: by delivery and by indorsement. The former applies to bills, etc., payable to bearer; the latter to those payable to order. See Chalm. Dig. of Bills, etc., Benj. ed. § 106 et seq.

Until an accommodation bill or note has been negotiated, there is no contract which can be enforced on the note: the contract, either express or implied, that the party accommodated will indemnify the other, is, till then, conditional; 2 M. & G. 911.

NEGOTIORUM GESTOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who spontaneously, and without authority, undertakes to act for another, during his absence, in his affairs.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract; but the civil law raises a quasi mandate by implication for the benefit of the owner, in many such cases; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 460; 2 Kent, 616, n.; Story, Bailm. §§ 82, 189.

NEIF. In Old English Law. A woman who was born a villein, or a bond-woman.

NEMINE CONTRADICENTE (usually abbreviated nem. con.). Words used to signify the unanimous consent of the house to which they are applied. In England, they are used in the house of commons; in the house of lords, the words used to convey the same idea are nemine dissentiente.

NEPHEW. The son of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207.

The Latin nepos, from which nephew is derived, was used in the civil law for nephew, but more properly for grandson; and we accordingly find neven, the original form of nephew, in the sense of grandson. Britton, c. 119.

According to the civil law, a nephew is in the third degree of consanguinity; according to the common law, in the second: the latter is the rule of common law; 2 Bla. Com. 206. But in this country the rule of the civil law is adopted; 2 Hill. R. P. 194. In the United States generally, there is no distinction between whole and half blood; 1 Dev. 106; 2 Yerg. 115; 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 202; 1 M'Cord, 456.

Nephews and nieces may be shown by circumstances to include grand-nephews and grand-nieces, and even a great-grand-niece; 3 Barb. Ch. 466; 1 Abb. App. Dec. 314; but in a bequest, would not include, without special mention, nephews and nieces by marriage; 42 Penn. 25.

NEPOS (Lat.). A grandson. See NEPHEW.

NEPTIS (Lat.). Granddaughter; sometimes great-granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Code, 33.

NEUTRAL PROPERTY. Property which belongs to neutral owners, and is used, treated, and accompanied by proper insignia as such.

Where the insured party has property and commercial establishments and depositories in different countries, if the property and concern of any one are in, or belong to, a belligerent country, they will have the national character of such country though the national character of the owner may be that of a neutral; 1 Phill. Ins. § 164; 5 W. Rob. 302; 1 Wheat. 159; 16 Johns. 128. The declaration of war by a nation subsequently to the time in reference to which the policy takes effect will, however, only affect ownership thereafter acquired or acts thereafter done; 1 Wash. C. C. 219; 6 Cra. 274; 7 id. 506; 4 Mas. 256; 1 Johns. 192; 9 id. 388; 14 id. 308; 1 C. Rob. 107, 336; 5 id. 2; 6 id. 364; 1 Binn. 203, 393; 5 id. 464; 3 Wheat. 245; 3 Gall. 274; 12 Mass. 246; 8 Term, 230; 1 Johns. Ch. 363; 2 id. 191.

The description of the subject in the policy of insurance, as neutral or belonging to neutrals, is, as in other cases, a warranty that the property is what it is described to be, and must, accordingly, in order to comply with the warranty, not only belong to neutral owners at the time of making the insurance, but must continue to be owned during the period for which it is insured, and must, so far as it depends upon the assured, be accompanied by the usual insignia, as such, and in all respects represented, managed, and used as such; Dougl. 732; 3 Term, 477; 1 Johns. 192; 2 id. 168; 1 Wash. C. C. 219; 2 Caines, 73; 6 Cra. 274; 4 Mas. 256; 1 C. Rob. 26, 336; 2 id. 133, 218; 1 Edw. Adm. 340.

NEUTRALITY. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war with each other.

Neutrality consists in the observance of a strict and honest impartiality, so as not to afford advantage in the war to either party, and particularly in so far restraining its trade to the accustomed course which is held in time of peace as not to render assistance to one of the belligerents in escaping the effects of the other's hostilities. Even a loan of money to one of the belligerent parties is considered a violation of neutrality; 9 J. B. Moore, 586. A fraudulent neutrality is considered as no neutrality. But the exportation of contraband, if confined to subjects, is not a breach of neutrality, though otherwise held by some writers. The United States have always maintained the right of exporting arms to belligerents in the way of trade, and during the civil war the Federal Government purchased warlike stores from England to the value of over £2,000,000.

Wheat. Int. L. Eng. ed. 1878, § 501 e. See the same work, pp. 511-527, for a discussion of the leading English and American cases, including those growing out of the American civil war.

The violation of neutrality by citizens of the United States, contrary to the provisions of the act of congress of April 20, 1818, renders the individual liable to an indictment. One fitting out and arming a vessel in the United States to commit hostilities against a foreign power at peace with them is, therefore, indictable. And by the 8th section of the act, the president, or such other person as he shall have empowered for that purpose, may employ the land and naval forces and the militia of the United States for the purpose of taking possession of and detaining any ship or vessel, with her prize or prizes, etc., and for the purpose of preventing the carrying on of any expedition or enterprise contrary to the provisions of that act; Whart. Cr. Law, §§ 2778–2807, and cases there cited; Brightly, Dig. U. S. Law, 688–690, giving act of 1820, at length there cited; acts of 22 June, 1860, R. S. § 4090; 18 Feb. 1875, R. S. § 5287; 6 Pet. 445; 1 Pet. C. C. 487. See Wheaton, Law of Nat.; Phill. Int. NEVADA. One of the states of the United States of America.

It was admitted into the Union Oct. 31, 1864. By the enabling act, approved March 21, 1864, as amended by the act of May 5, 1866, its boundaries are defined as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington, with the thirty-seventh degree o north latitude; thence due west, along said thirty-seventh degree of north latitude, to the eastern boundary line of the state of California; thence in a northwesterly direction, along the said eastern boundary line of the state of California, to the forty-third degree of longitude west from Washington; thence north, along said forty-third degree of west longitude, and said eastern boundary line of the state of California, to the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence due east, along the said forty-second degree of north latitude, to a point formed by its intersection with the aforesaid thirty-eighth degree of longitude west from Washington; thence due south, along said thirty-eighth degree of west longitude, to the place of beginning.

The constitution provides that every male citizen of the age of twenty-one years and upwards who shall have actually and not constructively resided in the state six months, and in the district or county thirty days, next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote for all officers that now are, or hereafter may be, elected by the people, and upon all questions submitted to the electors on such elections, excepting that idiots and insane persons, and those who have been convicted of treason or felony in any state or territory of the United States, unless restored to civil rights, and those persons who, after arriving at the age of eighteen, have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or held civil or military office under the so-called Confederate States, or either of them, unless an amnesty be granted them by the Federal Government, are debarred from the electoral privilege. During the day on which any general election shall be held in this state, no qualified elector shall be arrested by virtue of any civil process. Art. II.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The legislative authority is vested in a senate and assembly, designated "the legislature of the state of Nevada."

The sessions are biennial, commencing on the first Monday of January.

Senators and members of the assembly must be duly qualified electors of the respective districts and counties which they represent, and the number of members of the senate must not be less than one-third, nor more than one-half of that of members of the assembly.

The members of the assembly are chosen biennially by the qualified electors of their respective districts, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, and their terms of office are two years from the day next after the election.

Senators are chosen at the same time and place as members of the assembly, and their term of office is four years from the day next after their election.

Each house judges of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members, chooses its own officers (except the president of the senate), determines the rules of its proceedings, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members elected, may expel a member.

Members of the legislature are privileged from arrest on civil process during the session of the legislature, and for fifteen days next before the commencement of each session.

Any bill may originate in either house of the legislature, and all bills passed by one may be amended in the other.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The governor is elected at the time and place of voting for members of the legislature, and holds his office for four years from the time of his installation, and until his successor is qualified.

No person is eligible to the office of governor who is not a qualified elector, and who, at the time of such election, has not attained the age of twenty-five years and been a citizen of the state for two years next preceding the election.

The governor is commander-in-chief of the military forces of the state, except when they are called into the service of the United States.

He transacts all executive business with the officers of the government, civil and military, and may require information in writing from the officers of the executive department upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices. He may fill vacancies in offices where no mode is provided by the constitution and laws for filling such vacancy; the commissions of such appointees to expire at the next election and qualification of the person elected to such office. He may on extraordinary occasions convene the legislature in special session. In case of a disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn the legislature, provided it be not beyond the time fixed for the next meeting thereof.

The governor, justices of the supreme court, and attorney general, or a major part of them, of whom the governor shall be one, may remit fines and forfeitures, commute punishments and grant pardons after conviction in all cases, except treason and impeachment, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons.

A lieutenant-governor shall be elected at the same time and places and in the same manner as the governor, and his term of office, and his eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be president of the senate, and in case of the death, removal, inability, or absence of the governor, the duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the remainder of his term, or until the disability shall cease. A secretary of state, a treasurer, a controller, a surveyor general, and an attorney general shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner as the governor. The term of office is the same as that of the governor. Any elector is eligible to those offices.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The judicial power is vested in a supreme court, district courts, and in justices of the peace. The legislature may also establish courts for municipal purposes only, in incorporated towns and cities.

The supreme court consists of a chief justice and two associate justices, a majority of whom constitute a quorum. Provided, that the legislature may provide for the election of two additional associate justices, and if so increased, three shall constitute a quorum.

The justices of the supreme court are elected at the general election and hold office for the term of six years, the senior justice in commission being chief justice, and, in case of the commissions of two or more justices bearing the same date, the chief justice is determined by the drawing of lots between them. The jurisdiction of this court is appellate in all cases in equity; and also in law in which is involved the title of right of possession to, or the possession of real estate in mining claims, or the legality of any tax, imposts, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand (exclusive of interest) or the value of the property in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars; also in all other civil cases not included in the general subdivisions of law and equity, and also in questions of law alone in all criminal cases in which the offence charged amounts to felony. This court also has power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, and all writs necessary or proper for the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

Each of the justices has power to issue writs of habeas corpus to all parts of the state, returnable before himself, or the supreme court, or any district court in the state or judge thereof.

The state is divided into nine judicial districts, the judges of which are elected by the electors and hold office for four years, the first judicial district having three judges of concurrent jurisdiction.

The district courts have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity; and also all cases in law, involving the title to or possession of real property or mining claims, or the legality of any tax, impost, etc. in which the demand or value exceeds three hundred dollars, exclusive of interest; also in all cases relating to the estates of deceased persons, the persons and estates of minors and insane persons, and of the action of forcible entry and detainer, and all criminal cases not otherwise provided for by law. They have final appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in justices' courts and such other inferior tribunals as may be established by law. They have also the power to issue writs of mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, etc.

The terms of the supreme court are held at the seat of government, and those of the district courts at the county seats of their respective counties, or at such place as the legislature may determine when more than one county is included in a district.

The Justices of the Peace have jurisdiction in such cases as the legislature may determine; provided, that the amount of the demand or value of the property does not exceed three hundred dollars, and that they shall not have jurisdiction in cases wherein the title to real estate or mining claims or questions of boundaries to land are involved, or of cases that conflict in any manner with the jurisdiction of the state courts of record.

The legislature may fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of any municipal court that may be created. Art iv.

NEVER INDEBTED. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 C. & P. 545; 1 M. & W. 542; 1 Q. B. 77. The plea of never indebted has, in England, been substituted for nil debet, in certain actions specified in schedule B (36) of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852; and the effect of the plea never indebted is to deny those facts from which the liability of the defendant arises. In actions on negotiable bills or notes, never indebted is inadmissible; Reg. Gen. Hil. T. 1833, §§ 6, 7; 3 Chitty, Stat. 560. By the judicature act, 1875, Ord. xix. r. 20, a defendant is no longer allowed to deny generally the facts alleged by the plaintiff; Whart. Lex. A defendant cannot, under the plea of "never indebted," contend that, though a contract was made in fact, it was void in point of law, for the facts from which its invalidity is inferred must form the subject of a special plea; Moz. & W.

NEW AND USEFUL INVENTION. A phrase used in the act of congress relating to granting patents for inventions.

The invention to be patented must not only be new, but useful,—that is, useful in contradistinction to frivolous or mischievous inventions. It is not meant that the invention should in all cases be superior to the modes now in use for the same purposes; 1 Mas. 182, 302; 4 Wash. C. C. 9; 1 Pet. C. C. 480, 481; 1 Paine, 203; 3 C. B. 425. See PATENT.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. A re-statement of the cause of action by the plaintiff, with more particularity and certainty, but consistently with the general statement in the declaration. Steph. Pl. 241; 20 Johns. 43.

Its purpose is to avoid the effect of an evasive plea which apparently answers the declaration, though it does not really apply to the matter which the plaintiff had in view; 1 Wms. Saund. 299 b, note 6. Thus, if a defendant has committed two assaults on the plaintiff, one of which is justifiable and the other not, as the declaration may not distinguish one from the other, the defendant may justify, and the plaintiff, not being able either to traverse, demur, or confess and avoid, must make a new assignment.

There may be several new assignments in the course of the same action; 1 Chitty, Pl. 614. A plaintiff may reply to a part of the plea and also make a new assignment. A new assignment is said to be in the nature of a new declaration; Bacon, Abr. Trespass (I 4, 2); 1 Saund. 299 c; but is more properly considered as a repetition of the declaration; 1 Chitty, Pl. 602; differing only in this, that it distinguishes the true ground of complaint, as being different from that which is covered by the plea. Being in the nature of a new or repeated declaration, it is, consequently, to be framed with as much certainty or specification of circumstances as the declaration itself. In some cases, indeed, it should be even more particular; Bacon, Abr. Trespass (I 4, 2); 1 Chitty, Pl. 610; Steph. Pl. 245. See 3 Bla. Com. 311; Archb. Civ. Pl. 286; Doctrina Plac. 318; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 163. In England, under the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. xix. r. 14, no new assignment is necessary or is to be used; but everything which has heretofore been alleged by way of new assignment is to be introduced by way of amendment of the statement of claim; Whart. Dict. 6th ed.

NEW BRUNSWICK. A province of the Dominion of Canada.

It is bounded north by the river Restigouche and the bay of Chaleur, east by the gulf of St. Lawrence, south by Nova Scotia and the Bay of Fundy, and west by the state of Maine. Its length from north to south is one hundred and eighty miles, breadth one hundred and fifty miles, giving an area of twenty-five thousand square miles.

New Brunswick was originally part of the French province of Acadie (see NOVA SCOTIA), but was made a distinct province in 1784, having been first settled by the French A. D. 1639, ceded to the English in 1713 by the treaty of Utrecht, and settled by the British government in 1764. By the Imperial Act, known as the British North American Act, which went into operation July 1, 1867, New Brunswick became a province of the Dominion of Canada. See CANADA.

NEW FOR OLD. A term used in marine insurance in cases of adjustment of a loss when it has been but partial. In making such adjustment, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. See 1 Cow. 265; 4 id. 245; 4 Ohio, 284; 7 Pick. 259; 14 id. 141. The deduction, in the United States, is usually one-third, and is made from the cost of labor and material, and in practice also from the incidental expenses of repairs, as towage, etc.; but see, as to this last, 3 Sumn. 45; 9 Wall. 203. The deduction is without regard to the age of the vessel; 11 Johns. 315. A late writer criticizes the rule of thirds, and suggests that the increase of iron hulls will change the rule of law; Gourlie, Gen. Av. In Liverpool, no deduction is made on iron vessels for the first eighteen months.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. The name of one of the original thirteen United States of America.

It was subject to Massachusetts from 1641 to 1680. Many of its institutions and laws are to be traced to that connection. It was governed as a province, under royal commissions, by a governor and council appointed by the king, and a house of assembly elected by the people, until the revolution.

In January, 1776, a temporary constitution was adopted, which continued till 1784. The constitution adopted in 1784 was amended by a convention of delegates held at Concord, approved by the people in their town-meetings, and established by the convention in February, 1792. This constitution was amended in 1850, by abolishing the property qualifications for certain offices, and amended again in 1877, changing it in eleven particulars, the principal of which were the abolition of the religious test, and adoption of biennial elections, increasing number of senators, and changing election from March to November.

Every male inhabitant of every town and place, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, except paupers and persons excused from paying taxes at their own request, is entitled to vote in the town-meetings for the officers elected by the people. By statute, the names of all voters are required to be placed by the supervisors of the check-list on a check-list; and no vote will be received unless the name of the voter is so registered. Six months' residence in the town is required to entitle a party to be registered on the check-list.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is lodged in the senate and house of representatives, each of which has a negative upon the other, and which together are styled the General Court of New Hampshire.

The Senate is composed of twenty-four members, elected for the term of two years, one from each district, by the people of the district. If no person is elected by the people for any district, or if a vacancy occur, one is elected, by joint ballot of the two houses, from the two persons having the highest number of votes. A senator must be thirty years old, an inhabitant of the district, and, for seven years next before his election, of the state.

Representatives are elected biennially, for the term of two years, by the voters of the several towns and districts. Each town having six hundred inhabitants by the last general census of the state taken by authority of the United States or of this state, may elect one representative; if eighteen hundred such inhabitants, may elect two representatives; and so proceeding in that proportion, making twelve hundred such inhabitants the mean increasing number for any additional representative. Towns and places having less than six hundred inhabitants may be classed by law for the chance of a representative; and towns which cannot be classed without great inconvenience may be authorized by law to elect. A representative must be an inhabitant of the town for which he is elected, and, for two years next preceding his election, of the state. The constitution contains the usual provisions for securing the organization of each house, giving control of the conduct of members, providing for keeping and publishing a record of proceedings, for open sessions, limiting the power of adjournment of houses separately, securing members from arrest on civil process while going to, remaining at, and returning from the session, and for securing freedom of debate. The general assembly has full legislative powers, may constitute courts, regulate taxes, secure equal representation, etc., under restrictions similar to those contained in the constitutions of the other states.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—This is lodged in a governor and council.

The Governor is elected biennially, and holds his office for two years from the first Wednesday in June. If no person has a majority of votes, the senate and house of representatives, by joint ballot, elect one of the two persons having the highest number of votes. In case of a vacancy, the president of the senate exercises the powers of the office, but cannot then act as senator. The governor must be of the age of thirty years, and an inhabitant of the state for seven years next preceding his election.

The governor is commander-in-chief of all the military forces of the state. He has a limited veto upon the acts and resolves of the general court, which are invalid unless they are approved and signed by him; but if he does not return any bill to the house in which it originated, with his objections, within five days after it is presented to him, provided the general court continue in session, or if the two houses, after considering his objections, shall again pass the same by a vote of two thirds of each house, the bill will become a law as if he had signed it. In case any cause of danger to the health of the members exists at their place of meeting, he may direct the session to be held at another place.

Councillors are elected biennially, must have the qualifications of senators, and hold office for the same term as the governor. The state is divided by law into five districts, in each of which a councillor is elected, and vacancies are filled by a like election. If no person has a majority of votes, the two houses, by joint ballot, elect a councillor from the two persons having the highest number of votes.

The governor and council may adjourn or prorogue the general court, in case of disagreement of the two houses, for any period not exceeding ninety days. They nominate and appoint all judicial officers, the attorney-general and coroners, and all general and field officers of the militia,—each having a negative upon the other. Nominations must be made three days before an appointment can be made, unless a majority of the council assent. All commissions must be in the name and under the seal of the state, signed by the governor and attested by the secretary, and the tenure of the office stated therein.

The power of pardoning offences—after conviction only, however—is vested in the governor and council, except in cases of impeachment. No money can be drawn from the treasury of the state but by warrant of the governor, with the advice and consent of the council.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court consists of a chief justice and six assistant justices, appointed by the governor and council, to hold during good behavior, until seventy years of age. It has original jurisdiction of all cases and proceedings at common law, civil and criminal, except those in which justices of the peace have jurisdiction; of all cases in equity; in all cases of divorce and alimony; and appellate jurisdiction in all appeals from courts of probate, and in all appeals from police courts and from justices of the peace.

Trial terms of the supreme court are held by a single judge in every county twice, and in the larger counties three times a year; but two judges must attend in any capital trial. At these terms are entered and tried most cases at common law and appeals from police courts and justices of the peace; and all trials by jury are had there; but cases may be tried without a jury, by consent of parties. The court has power to appoint a referee where the amount in dispute does not exceed a hundred dollars, and the title to real estate is not involved. Any question of law arising at these terms may be transferred to the law terms for decision by the whole court.

Two law terms are held annually at Concord. At these terms are entered and heard appeals from courts of probate, writs of error and certiorari, cases of mandamus, quo warranto, and the like, and all questions of law transferred from the trial terms. No trials by jury are held at law terms; but issues of fact are transferred to the trial terms. Four justices are a quorum at the law terms, and the concurrence of four is necessary to a decision of any law question.

Judges of Probate are appointed by the governor and council in each county, who hold their office during good behavior, unless sooner removed by address of both houses or by impeachment. They have jurisdiction of all matters relating to the estates of persons deceased and the guardianship of minors, insane persons, and spendthrifts, subject to appeal to the supreme court.

Justices of the Peace are appointed in sufficient number by the governor and council, who hold their office during the term of five years, unless sooner removed by address of both houses of the legislature. They have jurisdiction of all civil causes at common law in which the damages demanded do not exceed thirteen dollars and thirty-three cents, and where the title to real estate is not involved, and in many minor criminal cases, subject to appeal to the supreme court. They have authority to arrest, examine, and bind over for trial at the supreme court persons charged with higher offences.

Police Courts have exclusive jurisdiction, in the cities and places where they are established, in all cases where justices of the peace have jurisdiction elsewhere.

No judge, clerk, or register of any court, or justice of the peace, can act as attorney, be of counsel, or receive fees as advocate or counsel, in any case which may come before the court of which he is an officer.

County Commissioners are elected, three in each county, by the voters of the county, for the term of two years. They have general control and management of the financial affairs of the county, of the public buildings, of the roads, of paupers, and of levying the county tax.

NEW JERSEY. The name of one of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

The territory of which the state is composed was included within the patent granted by Charles II. to his brother James, duke of York, bearing date on the 12th of March, 1663-4. This grant comprised all the lands lying between the western side of Connecticut river and the east side of Delaware bay, and conferred powers of government over the granted territory. At this time the province was in the possession and under the government of Holland. Before the close of the year the inhabitants of the province submitted to the government of England, on the 23d and 24th of June, 1664. The duke of York, by deeds of lease and release, conveyed to John Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret, their heirs and assigns forever, "all that tract of land adjacent to New England and lying and being to the westward of Long Island and Manhitas Island, and bounded on the east part by the main sea, and part by Hudson river, and hath upon the west Delaware bay or river, and extendeth southward to the main ocean as far as Cape May at the mouth of Delaware bay, and to the northward as far as the northernmost branch of the said bay or river of Delaware, which is in 41 degrees and 40 minutes of latitude, and crosseth over thence in a straight line to Hudson's river in forty-one degrees of latitude; which said tract of land is hereafter to be called Nova Cæsaria, or New Jersey.

This grant first defined the boundaries and gave the name of the province. It conferred upon the grantees, with the territory, powers of government in as full and ample manner as they were conferred by the crown upon the duke of York. Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret, being by virtue of this conveyance the sole proprietors of New Jersey, on the 10th of February, 1664-5, signed a constitution which they published under the title of "The concessions and agreement of the lords proprietors of the province of Nova Cæsaria, or New Jersey, to and with all and every of the adventurers, and all such as shall settle or plant there." This document, under the title of "The Concessions," was regarded as the first constitution of New Jersey, and continued in force until the division of the province in 1676. The instrument was considered as irrevocable, and therefore of higher authority than the acts of assembly, which were subject to alteration and repeal. War having been declared by England against Holland in 1673, the Dutch were again in possession of the country, and the inhabitants submitted to their authority.

By the treaty of peace between England and Holland on the 9th of February, 1674, the country was restored to the possession of the English. On the conclusion of peace, in order to remove all grounds of objection to his title on account of the recapture of the country by the Dutch, the duke of York obtained from the crown a new patent, similar to the first, and dated on the 29th of June, 1674. On the 20th of July in the same year, the duke of York made a second grant of a portion of the province to Sir George Carteret individually. The partition which this patent was intended to secure, in addition to the confirmation of Carteret's grant, was accomplished by deeds of partition executed July 1, 1676, between Carteret and the trustees of Byllinge. In 1702, the proprietors of the two provinces, called respectively East New Jersey and West New Jersey, surrendered their powers of government to Queen Anne, still retaining their title to the land. The two divisions constituted thenceforth but one colony. The colony was governed by a governor and council appointed by the crown, and an assembly of the representatives of the people chosen by the freeholders. This form of government continued till the American revolution.

The first constitution of the state of New Jersey was adopted by the provisional congress on the second day of July, 1776. This body was composed of representatives from all the counties of the state, who were elected on the fourth Monday of May, and convened at Burlington on the tenth day of June, 1776. It was finally adopted on the second day of July, but was never submitted to a popular vote. This constitution continued in force until the first day of September, 1844, when it was superseded by the existing constitution. The new constitution was adopted May 14, 1844, by a convention composed of delegates elected by the people in pursuance of an act passed by the legislature. The constitution thus framed, having been submitted to and adopted by the people at an election held on the thirteenth day of August, took effect and went into operation, pursuant to one of its provisions, on the twenty-second of September, 1844. This constitution was amended at a special election held September 7, 1875.

The right of suffrage is by the constitution vested in every [male] citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who has been a resident of the state one year, and of the county in which he claims his vote five months, next before the election: provided that no person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be considered a resident of the state by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, or military or naval place or station within the state; and no pauper, idiot, insane person, or person convicted of a crime which now excludes him from being a witness, unless pardoned or restored by law to the right of suffrage, shall enjoy the right of an elector; and provided further, that in time of war no elector in the actual military or naval service of the state or of the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from such election district.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is lodged in a senate and general assembly, which meet separately the second Tuesday in January each year.

The Senate is composed of one senator from each county, elected by the people for three years. They are divided into classes, so that one-third of the senate is changed each year. A senator must be entitled to vote, at least thirty years old, have been a citizen and inhabitant of the state for four years, and of the county for which he is chosen one year, next before election.

The General Assembly is composed of members elected annually by the voters of the several counties. They are apportioned on the basis of population; and each county is to have one member at least, and the whole number is not to exceed sixty. Each member must be entitled to vote, at least twenty-one years old, must have been a citizen and inhabitant of the state for two years, and of the county for which he is chosen one year, next before his election.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the legal voters of the state for the term of three years, commencing on the third Tuesday of January next ensuing his election. He is incapable of holding the office for three years next after his term of service. He must be not less then thirty years of age, and have been for twenty years at least a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state seven years next before his election, unless he has been absent during that time on the public business of the United States or of this state.

He is the commander-in-chief of all the military and naval forces of the state; has power, except in cases of impeachment, to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves, to extend until the expiration of a time not exceeding ninety days after conviction; in connection with the chancellor and the six judges of the court of errors and appeals, or the major part of them, can remit fines and forfeitures, and grant pardons in all cases after conviction, except impeachment; and is liable to impeachment for misdemeanor in office during his continuance in office and for two years thereafter. In case of the death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolve upon the president of the senate; and in case of his death, resignation, or removal, then upon the speaker of the house of assembly, until another governor shall be elected and qualified; but in such case another governor shall be chosen at the next election for members of the legislature, unless such vacancy occur within thirty days preceding such election, in which case a governor shall be chosen at the next succeeding election for members of the legislature.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Court of Errors and Appeals consists of a chancellor, the justices of the supreme court, and six judges, or a major part of them. These six judges are appointed for six years by the governor, with the consent of the senate.

The seat of one of the judges is vacated each year: so that one judge is annually appointed. No member of the court who has given a judicial opinion in the cause in favor of or against any error complained of, may sit as a member or have a voice on the hearing; but the reasons for such opinion shall be assigned to the court in writing. Three sessions are held annually, at Trenton. It is the highest court of appeals from decisions of the supreme court, court of chancery, and circuit court. After decision pronounced, the cause is remitted to the inferior courts for judgment and execution according to the decision.

The Court of Chancery consists of a chancellor, appointed by the governor for a term of seven years, who is also the ordinary or surrogate general and judge of the prerogative court. Appeals lie from the order or decree of the orphans' court to the prerogative court. The chancellor is assisted by a vice-chancellor, who is appointed by the chancellor for five years.

The Supreme Court consists of one chief and four assistant judges, appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of seven years. This number may be increased or decreased by law, but may never be less than two. The judges are ex officio justices of the inferior court of common pleas, orphans' court, and court of general quarter sessions. At least three stated terms are to be held annually, at Trenton, at such times as the court may appoint. This is the court of general inquiry, common-law jurisdiction. When issues of fact arise, they are sent to the circuit to be found by a jury and single judge.

Circuit Courts are held in every county in the state, by one or more justices of the supreme court, or a judge appointed for the purpose. For this purpose the state is divided into nine districts, and one judge assigned to each district. In all cases within the county, except in those of a criminal nature, these courts have common-law jurisdiction concurrent with the supreme courts; and any final judgment of a circuit court may be docketed in the supreme court, and operates as a judgment obtained in the supreme court from the time of such docketing. Final judgments in any circuit court may be removed by writ of error into the supreme court, or directly into the court of errors and appeals; and questions of law which arise are to be certified by the presiding judge to the supreme court for decision.

Common Pleas Court. This in some counties is composed of three judges, and, in certain counties, of four judges, one of whom must be a counsellor at law, and is the president judge. The judges are appointed for five years by senate and general assembly by joint ballot. No more than one judge may be appointed in each year.

Oyer and Terminer and General Jail Delivery. This court is held by one or more justices of the supreme court, and one or more of the court of common pleas, in each county, at the times of holding the circuit court, and such other times as the judge of the supreme court may appoint. It has cognizance of all crimes whatever of an indictable or presentable nature committed in the county where the court is held.

Court of Quarter Sessions. This court is composed of two or more justices of the court of common pleas in each county. It has cognizance of all crimes for purposes of indictment; but all capital crimes and those of the graver character must be tried by the court of oyer and terminer or supreme court.

The Orphans' Court is held in each county, by two or more judges of the common pleas court. It has the original jurisdiction of the probate of wills, settlement of the estates of decedents, appointment and control of administrators and executors, and the care of minors, including the appointment and control of guardians. Three terms of this court are held annually. An appeal lies to the prerogative court held by the chancellor. The duties of clerk or register of this court are discharged by a surrogate, elected by the people of the county for five years.

Justices of the Peace are elected by the people of each township, or ward of city, not less than two nor more than five for each such division, for five years. They have cognizance within their counties of civil matters to an amount not exceeding two hundred dollars, except those cases involving land titles, and actions of replevin, slander, or trespass for assault and battery or imprisonment. A jury of six must be impanelled on demand of either party. In cities containing twenty thousand inhabitants there are district courts which have the civil jurisdiction of justices of the peace.

NEW MATTER. In Pleading. Matter not previously alleged. Statements of fact not previously alleged by either party to the pleadings. Where special pleading prevails, such matter must be pleaded in avoidance, and it must, in general, be followed by a verification; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 195; 1 Chitty, Pl. 538; Steph. Pl. 251; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (E 32); 1 Wms. Saund. 103, n. 1; 2 Lev. 5; Ventr. 121; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2983. See PLEA.

In equity, new matter, discovered by either plaintiff or defendant, may be introduced by cross or supplemental bill before a decree has been pronounced, but not by amendment after an answer has been filed; 1 Paige, Ch. 200; Harr. Ch. 438; 4 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 4385–4387.

NEW MEXICO. One of the territories of the United States.

By act of congress, approved September 9, 1850, the territory of New Mexico was constituted and described as "all that portion of the territory of the United States bounded as follows: Beginning at a point in the Colorado river where the boundary line with the republic of Mexico crosses the same; thence eastwardly with that boundary line to the Rio Grande; thence, following the main channel of the Rio Grande, to the parallel of the 32° of north latitude; thence east with that degree to its intersection with the 103° of longitude W. of Greenwich; thence north with that degree of longitude to the parallel of 38° of north latitude; thence west with that parallel to the summit of Sierra Madre; thence south with the crest of those mountains to the 37th parallel of north latitude; thence west with that parallel to its intersection with the boundary-line of the state of California; thence with such boundary-line to the place of beginning." A proviso was annexed that the United States might divide the territory into two or more, and that when admitted as a state the said territory, or any portion of the same, should be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution might prescribe at the time of admission. 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, 446.

Colorado was partly formed from New Mexico in 1861, and in 1863 the entire territory of Arizona, which reduced New Mexico to its present boundaries. By the organic act, the powers of the territory are lodged in three branches,—the legislative, executive, and judicial. The operation of this act was suspended until the Texan boundary was agreed upon, when it went into force by proclamation of the president, December 13, 1850. 9 Stat. at L. App.

The regulations as to the qualifications of voters, subject to change by the territorial legislature, are that all male inhabitants who have lived three months in the territory and are citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become such, and fifteen days next before election in the county in which they offer to vote, are qualified. In addition to these classes, also, all persons who are recognized as citizens under the treaties with Mexico are so entitled. But no person under guardianship, non compos mentis, or convicted of treason, felony, or bribery, may vote, unless restored to civil rights.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The Council is composed of thirteen members, elected by the people of the districts into which the territory is divided, for the term of two years.

The House of Representatives consists of twenty-six members, elected by the people of the districts into which the territory is divided, for the term of one year. The two houses have power to legislate on all subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the laws and constitution of the United States. No laws may interfere with the primitive disposition of the soil. No tax may be levied of United States property. Property of non-residents may not be taxed higher than that of residents. No bank may be incorporated and no debt incurred by the territory.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is appointed by the president of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, for four years, but he may be sooner removed. He must reside in the territory. He is commander-in-chief of the military of the territory; is superintendent of Indian affairs, is to approve all acts passed by the legislature before they can become laws; may grant pardons and remit fines for offences against the laws of the territory, and reprieves for offences against the laws of the United States till the will of the president can be known; must take care that the laws be executed.

A Secretary of the Territory is also appointed in the same manner and for the same time. He is to record and preserve laws passed by the legislature, and acts done by the governor, in his executive capacity, and to transmit copies, etc.

The JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court consists of a chief and two assistant justices, appointed by the president of the United States, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of four years. Two of the three judges constitute a quorum. The jurisdiction is appellate solely, and extends to all matters of appeal and writs of error that may be taken from the judgments or decrees of the district courts, in cases of errors apparent on the face of the record.

Special terms may be called by the chief justice for the hearing of causes in both civil and criminal matters, when the parties or the accused, and the district attorney, agree. No jury trials are held by this court. An appeal lies to the supreme court of the United States as from a decision of the United States circuit court, where the amount involved exceeds the sum of one thousand dollars.

The District Court is held in each of the three districts into which the territory is divided for the purpose, by one of the judges of the supreme court.

It has exclusive original jurisdiction of all matters at law or in equity, except those of which justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction, and of all crimes and misdemeanors, except those of which justices of the peace have exclusive cognizance.

Probate Courts are also to be provided for by law. They have, in general, the control of the settlement of the estates of decedents, and the appointment and control of guardians.

Justices of the Peace have a jurisdiction coextensive with the county of all civil cases where the amount involved does not exceed one hundred dollars, except in actions for slander, libel, and false imprisonment, or where the title or boundary of lands shall come in question. Act. 1876, ch. 27.

An Attorney and a Marshal are also appointed, for four years, by the president and senate, and are subject to removal by them.

NEW PROMISE. A contract made after the original promise has, for some cause, been rendered invalid, by which the promisor agrees to fulfil such original promise.

NEW TRIAL. In Practice. A re-examination of an issue in fact, before a court and a jury, which has been tried at least once before the same court; Hilliard, N. Tr. § 1. A re-hearing of the legal rights of the parties, upon disputed facts, before another jury, granted by the court on motion of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose; 4 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 30; 2 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 32. It is either upon the same, or different, or additional evidence, before a new jury, and probably, but not necessarily, before a different judge.

The origin of the practice of granting new trials is of extremely ancient date, and, consequently, involved in some obscurity. Blackstone gives the most connected and satisfactory account of it of any writer; 3 Bla. Com. 387, 388.

Courts have, in general, a discretionary power to grant or refuse new trials, according to the exigency of each particular case, upon principles of substantial justice and equity; 1 Burr. 390. This discretion is generally not reviewable on error; 10 Vt. 520; 14 N. H. 441; 20 Pick. 285; 10 Ga. 93. But see 4 Mo. 86; 160 Mo. St. 328.

The usual grounds for a new trial may be enumerated as follows:—

The not giving the defendant sufficient notice of the time and place of trial, unless waived by an appearance and making defence, will be a ground for setting aside the verdict; 3 Price, 72; 1 Wend. 22. But to have this effect the defendant's ignorance of the trial must not have been owing to his own negligence, and the insufficiency of the notice must have been reasonably calculated to mislead him; 7 Term, 59; 2 Bibb, 177; 3 B. & P. 1; 3 Price, 72; 13 Tex. 516; 32 Conn. 402; 36 N. H. 74.

Mistakes or omissions of officers in summoning and drawing jurors, when the irregularity deprives the party complaining of a substantial right, will entitle him to a new trial; 2 Halst. 244; 16 Ark. 37; 12 Pick. 496. Likewise, where the officer summoning the jury is nearly related to one of the parties; 10 S. & R. 334; 1 South. 364; 20 Tex. 234; 1 Dev. & B. 196; or is interested in the event; 5 Johns. 133; unless the objection to the officer was waived by the party; 3 Me. 215; 21 Pick. 457; or the authority of the officer be so circumscribed as to put it out of his power to select an improper jury; 7 Ala. 253; 7 Cow. 720. And the verdict will be set aside for the following causes: the unauthorized interference of a party, or his attorney, or the court, in selecting or returning jurors,—unless the interference can be satisfactorily explained; 8 Humphr. 412; that a juror not regularly summoned and returned personated another; Barnes, 455; 7 Dowl. & R. 684; but not if the juror personated another through mistake, was qualified in other respects, and no injustice has been done; 12 East, 229. See MISTRIAL. That a juror sat on the trial after being challenged and set aside,—unless the party complaining knew of it, and did not object; 3 Yeates, 318; that a juror was discharged without any sufficient reason, after being sworn; 1 Ohio St. 66; but not if the juror was discharged by mistake and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the party; 9 Metc. Mass. 572; 5 Ired. 58; that the jury were not sworn, or that the oath was not administered in the form prescribed by law; 1 How. 497; 2 Me. 270.

The disqualification of jurors, if it has not been waived, will be ground for a new trial; as, the want of a property qualification, 4 Term, 473; 15 Vt. 61; relationship to one of the parties; 32 Me. 310; unless the relationship be so remote as to render it highly improbable that it could have had any influence; 12 Vt. 661; interest in the event; 2 Johns. 194; 21 N. H. 438; conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty; 13 N. H. 536; 16 Ohio, 364; 13 Wend. 351; mental or bodily disease unfitting jurors for the intelligent performance of their duties; 8 Humphr. 59; 8 Ill. 368; alienage; 6 Johns. 332; 2 Ill. 476. But see 8 Ill. 202; 4 Dall. 353.

When indirect measures have been resorted to to prejudice the jury, or tricks practised or disingenuous attempts made to suppress or stifle evidence or thwart the proceedings, or to obtain an unconscionable advantage, they will be defeated by granting a new trial. For example: where papers material on the point in issue, not previously submitted, are surreptitiously handed to the jury; Cas. temp. Hardw. 116; 2 Yeates, 273; or where the party, or some one in his behalf, directly approaches the jury on the subject of the trial; 7 S. & R. 458; 13 Mass. 218. But if the other party is aware of such attempts, and neglects to correct them when in his power, he will be deemed to have waived all objection; 11 Mod. 118. If the interference with the jury comes from a stranger, be without fault in the jury, and without the knowledge of the parties, and no injury has thereby ensued, the verdict will not be disturbed; 5 Mo. 525; 3 Bibb, 8; 11 Humphr. 169, 491. But see 9 Miss. 187; 16 id. 465; 20 id. 398. Where the jury, after retiring to deliberate, examine witnesses in the case, a new trial will be granted; Cro. Eliz. 189; 2 Bay, 94; 1 Brev. 16; so, also, when one of their number communicates to his fellows private information possessed by him, which influences the finding; 1 Sid. 235; 1 Swan, 61; 2 Yeates, 166; 4 Yerg. 111; or the judge addresses a note to them, or privately visits them, after they have retired to deliberate; 1 Pick. 337; 10 Johns. 238; 13 id. 487.

Misconduct of the jury will sometimes avoid the verdict; as, for example, jurors betting as to the result; 4 Yerg. 111; sleeping during the trial; 8 Ill. 368; unauthorized separation; 1 Va. Cas. 271; 11 Humphr. 502; 3 Harr. N. J. 468; taking refreshment at the charge of the prevailing party; 1 Ventr. 124; 4 Wash. C. C. 32; drinking spirituous liquor; 4 Cow. 17, 26; 7 id. 562; 4 Harr. 367; 1 Hill, 207; talking to strangers on the subject of the trial; 3 Day, 223; 9 Humphr. 646; determining the verdict by a resort to chance; 15 Johns. 87; 8 Blackf. 32; see LOT. But every irregularity which would subject jurors to censure will not overturn the verdict, unless there be some reason to suspect that it may have had an influence on the final result. In general, if it does not appear that the misconduct was occasioned by the prevailing party or any one in his behalf, does not indicate any improper bias, and the court cannot see that it either had or might have had an effect unfavorable to the party moving for a new trial, the verdict will not be disturbed. Where, however, the misconduct of the jury amounts to a gross deviation from duty, decency, and order, a new trial will sometimes be granted, on grounds of public policy, without inquiring whether or not any injury has been sustained in that particular case; Hilliard, New T. 198.

Error of the judge will be ground for a new trial; such as, admitting illegal evidence which has been objected to,—unless the illegal evidence was wholly immaterial, or it is certain that no injustice has been done; and where the illegal testimony was admitted in gross violation of the well-settled principles which govern proof, it has been deemed per se ground for a new trial, not withstanding the jury were directed to disregard it; 13 Johns. 350; 15 id. 239; but see 6 N. H. 333; improperly rejecting evidence tending in any degree to aid the jury in determining a material fact; 3 J. J. Marsh. 229; withdrawing testimony once legally before the jury,—unless the excluded testimony could not be used on a second trial; 4 Humphr. 22; denying to a party the right to be heard through counsel; 2 Bibb, 76; 3 A. K. Marsh. 465; erroneously refusing to grant a nonsuit; 19 Johns. 154; improperly restricting the examination or cross-examination of witnesses, or allowing too great latitude in that respect, under circumstances which constitute a clear case of abuse; 6 Barb. 383; 4 Edw. Ch. 621; refusing to permit a witness to refer to documents to refresh his memory, where by the denial, the complaining party has sustained injury; 3 Litt. 338; improperly refusing an adjournment, whereby injustice has been done; 2 South. 518; 9 Ga. 121; refusing to give such instructions to the jury as properly arise in the case, where it is manifest that the jury erred through want of instruction; 4 Ohio, 389; 1 Mo. 68; 9 id. 305; giving to the jury binding instructions, when there are circumstances in the case which ought to have been submitted to them,—unless the verdict is in strict accordance with the weight of evidence; 19 Wend. 402; 5 Humphr. 476; giving an erroneous exposition of the law on a point material to the issue,—unless it is certain that no injustice has been done, or the amount in dispute is very trifling, so that the injury is scarcely appreciable; 4 Conn. 356; 5 Sandf. 180; 3 Johns. 239; misleading the jury by a charge which is not explicit, or which is absurd and impossible, or contradictory, or argumentative and evasive; 9 Humphr. Tenn. 411; 11 Wend. 83; 6 Cow. 682; erroneous instruction as to the proof that is requisite; 3 Bibb, 481; 21 Me. 20; misapprehension of the judge as to a material fact, and a direction to the jury accordingly, whereby they are misled; 1 Mills, 200; instructing the jury as to the law upon facts which are purely hypothetical,—but not if the charge was correct in point of law, and the result does not show that the jury were misled by the generality of the charge; 8 Ga. 114; 2 Ala. N. S. 694; submitting as a contested point what has been admitted; 9 Conn. 216; erroneously leaving to the jury the determination of a question that should have been decided by the court, whereby they have mistaken the law; charging as to the consequences of the verdict; 1 Pick. 106; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 595–703; 3 id. 705–873.

Surprise, as a ground for setting aside the verdict, is, cautiously allowed. When it is occasioned by the act of the adverse party, or by circumstances out of the knowledge and beyond the control of the party injured by it, this has sometimes been held to constitute grounds for relief; but not when he might have been fully informed by the exercise of ordinary diligence; 6 Halst. 242; although, even when the complainant is not entirely free from fault, the court, in cases where great wrong would otherwise be done, will, for the sake of promoting justice, grant a new trial. Among the cases of surprise which will justify the interposition of the court may be enumerated the following: the unexpectedly being summoned and detained as a witness or juror in another court, or sudden and serious illness, which prevents the party from attending at the trial; 3 T. B. Monr. 113; 7 id. 59; 4 Litt. 1; 1 Halst. 344; that the cause was brought on prematurely, in the absence of the party; 6 Dana, 89; erroneous ruling of the court as to the right to begin, which has worked manifest injustice; 4 Pick. 156; but see 8 Conn. 254, 296; perturbation of counsel, arising from sudden and dangerous sickness occurring in his family and coming to his knowledge during the trial; 14 Pick. 494; where some unforeseen accident has prevented the attendance of a material witness; 6 Mod. 22; 11 id. 1; 2 Salk. 645; 1 Harp. 267; that testimony beyond the reach of the party injured, and completely under the control of the opposite party, was not produced at the trial; 7 Yerg. 502; 7 Wend. 62; that competent testimony was unexpectedly ruled out on the trial; 9 Dana, 26; 2 Vt. 573; 2 J. J. Marsh. 515; where a party's own witnesses, through forgetfulness, mistake, contumacy, or perjury, testify differently than anticipated, or where evidence is unexpectedly sprung upon a party by his opponent; 8 Ga. 136; 18 Miss. 326; the withdrawal of a material witness before testifying, attended with suspicions of collusion; 25 Wend. 663; that a material witness was suddenly deprived of the power of testifying by a paralytic stroke, or other affection, or that the testimony of the witness was incoherent on account of his being disconcerted at the trial; 1 Root, 175; where it is discovered after the trial that a material witness who testified is interested in the event, or where it is probable that the verdict was obtained by false testimony, which the party injured could not until after the trial contradict or expose; 2 C. B. 342; 3 Burr. 1771; 1 Bingh. 339; 1 Me. 322.

New trials on account of after-discovered testimony are granted but rarely, and with great caution. The court, in order to set aside the verdict on this ground, must be satisfied that the evidence has come to the applicant's knowledge since the trial; 3 Stor. C. C. 1; 21 N. H. 166; that it is not owing to the want of diligence that it did not come sooner; 6 Johns. Ch. 479; 1 Blackf. 367; that it is so material that it will probably produce a different result; 1 Dudl 85; and that it is not cumulative; 3 Woodb. & M. C. C. 348. Nor must the sole object of the newly discovered evidence be to impeach witnesses examined on the former trial; 7 Barb. 271; 11 id. 216; 8 Gratt. 637. The moving party must state what the evidence is, and what diligence he has used in the preparation of his case; and his application must be accompanied by the affidavits of the newly-discovered witness, unless some cause be shown why they cannot be produced; 5 Halst. 250; 1 Tyl. Vt. 441; 22 Me. 246.

Excessive damages may be good cause for granting a new trial; first, where the measure of damages is governed by fixed rules and principles, as in actions on contracts, or for torts to property the value of which may be ascertained by evidence; second, in suits for personal injuries where, although there is no fixed criterion for assessing the damages, yet it is clear that the jury acted from passion, partiality, or corruption; 10 Ga. 37. In actions for personal torts, a new trial will not, in general, be granted on account of the smallness of the damages, unless the verdict is the result of contrivance by the defendant, or surprise on the plaintiff, or of partiality or misconduct of the jury, or unless the finding is entirely disproportioned to the injury. Where the verdict is for an amount exceeding the damages laid in the writ, it will be set aside unless the plaintiff will release the excess; 7 Wend. 330.

When the verdict is clearly against law, it will be set aside notwithstanding the jury had power to decide both the law and the fact, or the issue was one exclusively of fact and there have been concurrent verdicts by two successive juries; Dudl. 213; 4 Ga. 193. If, however, substantial justice has been done, a new trial will not be granted though the law arising on the evidence would have justified a different result; 1 Burr. 54; 4 Term, 468.

Courts are at all times reluctant to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against evidence; and where the jury have passed upon a mere question of fact, they will only do so when the verdict is palpably against the evidence: injustice must have been done by the verdict, and there must be a probability that justice will be done on retrial; 21 Conn. 245; 5 Ohio, 509; 3 Strobh. 358. Where the verdict is founded on circumstantial evidence, the court will rarely, if ever, interfere with it; 16 Mass. 345; 11 Ill. 86. On the other hand, when the issue approximates to a purely legal question, courts are somewhat more liberal in granting new trials; 2 M'Mull. 44. The verdict will be set aside where the witnesses upon whose testimony it was obtained have since the trial been convicted of perjury; 3 Dougl. 24; so where the testimony on which the verdict is founded derives its credit from circumstances, and those circumstances are afterwards clearly falsified by affidavit; 1 B. & P. 427; 3 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 1203–1374.

The verdict may be void for obscurity or uncertainty; 1 S. & R. 367. It will be set aside where it is not responsive to the issue, or does not comprehend all of the issues unless the finding of one or more of the issues will be decisive of the cause; 2 Ala. N. S. 359; 11 Pick. 45. That it was not recorded in open court, or was received in the absence of the plaintiff, or was altered after it was recorded and the jury dismissed, will be ground for a new trial; 1 Ill. 109; 1 Wend. 36; 16 S. & R. 414. If rendered on Sunday, it will, in general, be void; but there are many instances in which verdicts have been sustained though rendered on that day; 1 South. 156; 15 Johns. 119; 3 Watts, 56; 13 Ohio, 490.

Courts of equity have always proceeded with great caution in awarding new trials at law. At the present day they are but seldom applied to for this purpose, as courts of law are liberal in exercising the same jurisdiction, and it has been held to be unconscionable and vexatious to bring into courts of equity a discussion which might have been had at law; 1 Sch. & L. 201. But, in general, when it would have been proper for a court of law to have granted a new trial if the application had been made while that court had the power, it is equally proper for a court of equity to do so if the application be made on grounds arising after the court of law can no longer act; 1 A. K. Marsh. 237. A court of equity will not grant a new trial at law to enable a party to impeach a witness, or because the verdict is against evidence; 1 Johns. Ch. 432. It will only interpose in cases of newly-discovered evidence, surprise, fraud, or the like, where the party is deprived of the means of defence by circumstances beyond his control; 1 Litt. 140; 2 Bibb, 241; 2 Hawks, 605; Willard, Eq. Jur. 357; 3 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 1455–1580.

A court of equity will often grant a second, and sometimes a third, fourth, and even fifth trial of a feigned issue, in cases where a court of law would not disturb a first verdict; 1 Edw. Ch. 96. This arises from the consideration that the responsibility of the decision rests upon the judge in equity; 3 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 1570, 1571.

New trials may be granted in criminal as well as in civil cases, at the solicitation of the defendant, when he is convicted even of the highest offences. But a person once lawfully convicted on a sufficient indictment can never after, against his consent, be a second time put in peril for the same offence, unless the former conviction was instituted by the fraudulent procurement of the defendant with a view to shield himself from adequate punishment; 2 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 61–84. Where the accused has been acquitted, and his acquittal has not been procured by his own fraud or evil practice, the law, mingling justice with mercy in favorem vitæ et libertatis, does not permit a new trial; 16 Conn. 54. In civil actions for the recovery of penalties, and in some cases where the form of proceeding is criminal, if the object be only to establish a civil right, as in cases of quo warranto and the like, new trials may be granted even after acquittal. But, in such cases, when the verdict is for the defendant it will not, in general, be disturbed unless some rule of law be violated in the admission or rejection of evidence or in the charge of the court to the jury; 4 Term, 753; 2 Cow. 811; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 61. See Graham & Waterman, and Hilliard on New Trials.

NEW YORK. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

In its colonial condition this state was governed from the period of the revolution of 1688 by governors appointed by the crown, assisted by a council, which received its appointments also from the parental government, and by the representatives of the people. 1 Story, Const. b. 1, ch. 10.

There have been three constitutions adopted by the state since its colonial period: one in 1777, which remained in force until January 1, 1823, when the second went into operation. This second constitution remained until January 1, 1847, when the present constitution, which was adopted by a convention of the people at Albany, went into force. This last constitution has since been amended in certain particulars. See 1 Rev. St. of N. Y. 82.

The qualifications of the electors are thus described, namely: "Every male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a citizen for ten days and an inhabitant of this state one year next preceding any election, and for the last four months a resident of the county, and for the last thirty days a resident of the election district in which he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election in the election district of which he shall at the time be a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people, and upon all questions which may be submitted to the vote of the people.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is lodged in a senate and assembly.

The Senate consists of thirty-two members, chosen, one for each senatorial district, for the term of two years, by the electors of the district.

The Assembly consists of one hundred and twenty-eight members, elected, one from each of the assembly districts, for the term of one year, by the people. A certain number of members is elected from each county, according to an apportionment by the legislature, and each county, except Hamilton, is to be always entitled to one member. The counties entitled to more than one member are divided into districts, each of which elects one member of the assembly. The allotment and division are to be revised after each census. No town is to be divided in forming assembly districts. The districts must contain, as nearly as possible, an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens. No member of the legislature can receive any civil appointment within the state, or to the senate of the United States, from the governor, or the governor and senate, or governor and legislature, during the term for which he was elected, or from any city goverment.

The constitution contains the usual provisions for organization of the legislature; making each house judge of the qualifications of members; giving it power to regulate their conduct; to choose its own officers; for the keeping and publication of a record of proceedings; for open sessions; freedom of debate; preventing one house from adjourning without the consent of the other. Local bills are not to be passed in certain cases. Art. iii. § 18. Corporations may be formed by the legislature, but only under general laws, except in cases wherein, in the judgment of the legislature, the objects of the corporation cannot be attained under general laws. Special charters may not be granted to banks, but they may be formed under general laws.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected biennially, for the term of three years, by the people, or by the legislature in consequence of a failure to elect by the people. The governor must be a citizen of the United States, thirty years old at least, and have been for five years next preceding his election a resident within the state. He is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state; has power to convene the legislature (or the senate only) on extraordinary occasions, during which sessions no subjects may be acted upon except those recommended by the governor for consideration, communicates by message to the legislature, at every session, the condition of the state, and recommends such matters to them as he judges expedient; transacts all necessary business with the officers of the government, civil and military; is to take care that the laws are faithfully executed; has the power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction, for all offences except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions and with such restrictions and limitations as he may think proper, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, he has power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case is reported to the legislature at its next meeting, when the legislature either pardons or commutes the sentence, directs the execution of the sentence, or grants a further reprieve. He must annually communicate to the legislature each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence and its date, and the date of the commutation, pardon, or reprieve. He has the veto power, but a bill may be passed over his veto by a vote of two-thirds of both houses.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He is president of the senate,—with only a casting vote therein. In case of the impeachment of the governor, of his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term or until the disability ceases. But when the governor, with the consent of the legislature, is out of the state in time of war, at the head of a military force thereof, he continues commander-in-chief of all the military force of the state. If during the vacancy of the office of governor the lieutenant-governor is impeached, displaced, resigns, dies, or becomes incapable of performing the duties of his office, or is absent from the state, the president of the senate acts as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability ceases.

A Secretary of State, a Comptroller, a Treasurer, an Attorney-General, and a State Engineer and Surveyor are elected by the people biennially, for the term of two years each.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Court of Appeals consists of seven judges, the chief judge and six associate judges, who are chosen by the electors of the state for the term of fourteen years, from and including the first day of January next after their election. Five members of the court form a quorum, and the concurrence of four is necessary to a decision. It exercises an appellate jurisdiction for the correction of errors at law and in equity. It has exclusive jurisdiction to review upon appeal every act or determination (7 Barb. N. Y. 581; 1 N. Y. 428) made at a general term by the supreme court, or by the supreme court of the city of New York, or by the court of common pleas of the city and county of New York, in a judgment in an action of contract tried therein or brought there from another court, and, upon the appeal from such judgment, to review any intermediate order involving the merits and necessarily affecting the judgment; (2 N. Y. 416-566) in an order affecting a substantial right made in such action, when such order in effect determines the action and prevents a judgment from which an appeal might be taken; 1 N. Y. 188, 228, 423, 534; in a final order affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding or upon a summary application in an action after judgment. But such appeal is not allowed in an action originally commenced in a court of a justice of the peace, or in the marine court of the city of New York, or in a justice's court in the state; Code of Proc. tit. ii.

The Supreme Court is composed of thirty-four judges; five of the judges reside in New York, five in the second judicial district, and four in each of the other districts into which the state is divided. The legislature may alter the districts without increasing their numbers, once after every enumeration of the inhabitants of the state. It has general jurisdiction in law and equity subject to such appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeals as is now or may be prescribed by law.

The Court of Oyer and Terminer is composed in each county of a justice of the supreme court, the county judge, and two justices of the peace, elected for the purpose for the term of two years by the people of the county. The supreme judge and any two of the others constitute a quorum. In the city and county of New York the court is composed of a judge of the superior court and any two of the following: the judges of the court of common pleas, the mayor, recorder, or aldermen. It is to inquire into all crimes and misdemeanors committed or triable in the county, to hear and determine all such, and to deliver the jails of all prisoners according to law.

A Court of Sessions, more fully described as the court of general sessions of the peace, is held in each county by the county judge and two justices of the peace; the former must designate the terms at which a jury is to be drawn. This court is to inquire into all the crimes and misdemeanors committed or triable in the county, and to hear, determine, and punish according to law all crimes and misdemeanors not punishable with death or imprisonment in state prison for life.

County Courts are held in each county, by a single judge, elected by the people for the term of six years. They have original civil jurisdiction only in cases where the defendants reside in the county, in which cases money or personal property not exceeding one thousand dollars in amount is demanded, for the foreclosure of mortgages on real estate, and the collection of the balance due after sale of the property, partition of real estate in the county, admeasurement of dower, management of the property of infants, mortgage and sale of the property of religious corporations, and such other original jurisdiction as the legislature may confer upon them. They have also supervision of, and an appellate jurisdiction from, the decisions of justices of the peace. The county judge acts also as surrogate in counties which have a population of less than forty thousand.

Mayors' Courts are held in the various cities, with a civil and criminal jurisdiction varying somewhat in the different cities.

Recorders' Courts are held in Utica and Oswego.

Justices of the Peace are elected in each town and certain cities and villages of New York, for the term of four years, in number and classes as directed by law.

The Justices' Courts of the various cities have jurisdiction in cases under the charters and by-laws where the penalty does not exceed one hundred dollars. It also extends to one hundred dollars, and, on confession of judgment, to two hundred and fifty dollars, with the exception of certain actions where the people are concerned, and where the title to land comes in question, and actions for an assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious prosecution, criminal conversation, and seduction, and matters of account where the sum total of the accounts exceeds four hundred dollars, and actions against an executor or administrator. There are also justices' courts of Albany and Troy, and district courts of New York city, and the municipal court of the city of Rochester.

A Surrogate, whose term of office is the same as that of the county judge, is elected in each county having a population of more than forty thousand inhabitants: having less than that population, the county judge discharges the duties of the surrogate. The Code of Procedure does not apply to matters testamentary and of intestacy; and hence the rules of evidence and practice in the surrogates' courts are the same as formerly; Will. Executors, 174 et seq.; 26 Barb. 316. The appeal from the decision of the surrogate is to the supreme court, and from that court to the court of appeals. The former jurisdiction of the court of probate is vested in the surrogates, subject to appeal as aforesaid.

The Superior Court of New York City is composed of six judges, elected by the people, of whom one is selected by his associates as chief justice. It has jurisdiction of actions for the recovery of real property or an interest or estate therein; for the foreclosure of personal-property mortgages; for recovery of personal property distrained; for recovery of forfeitures imposed by statute; against an officer or person appointed by him for acts done in virtue of said office or appointment, where the cause has arisen or the property is situated in said city; and of all other actions where all the defendants reside or are personally served with summons within the city, and of actions against corporations having their place of business in the city; such further criminal and civil jurisdiction as may be conferred by law. There are also, the court of common pleas of the city and county of New York, the city court of Brooklyn, the superior court of Buffalo, and the city court of Yonkers.

The Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York is composed of three judges, elected by the people. It has the same jurisdiction as the superior court within its limits, and, in addition, has power to review the judgments of the marine court of New York city, and of justices in that city.

The Marine Court of the City of New York has the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, and also of actions arising under the charter or by-laws of New York city where the penalty is more than twenty-five and less than one hundred dollars; actions of contract for services rendered on board a vessel on the high seas, where the state courts have jurisdiction, though the damage exceeds one hundred dollars. But no admiralty powers are given.

All the changes produced by the Code of Procedure cannot be noticed in so brief an article. The prominent ones are: 1. The abolition of the distinction between law and equity, according to the constitution, and the adoption of a new system of pleading applicable to all remedies. Code, § 140. 2. The abolition of the rule with respect to interest as a ground of exclusion of witnesses. Code, § 398. 3. The abolition of all bills of discovery, and allowing parties to the action to be examined as witnesses for and against each other. Code, § 389, as amended in 1859, stat. of 1859, p. 970. 4. Requiring the real parties in interest to be the parties to the action. Code, § 111. 5. Preventing an action from abating by the death, marriage, or other disability of a party, or by any transfer of interest if the cause of action survive, and allowing the action to be continued in the name of the party in interest. Code, 121. 6. Providing as a substitute for voluntary and compulsory references either of all or any of the issues of law or fact, or both, to one, or not exceeding three, referees. Code, 270–273.

The constitution provides for tribunals of conciliation. A court of arbitration is established by two acts, in which power is given to the chamber of commerce, of the city of New York, upon voluntary submission by the parties, either in writing or otherwise, to settle controversies and differences upon any mercantile or commercial subject. Ch. 278, Laws of 1874; and ch. 495, Laws of 1875.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. In Practice. Proof of some new and material fact in the case, which has been ascertained since the verdict.

The discovery of such evidence will afford a ground for a new trial: but courts only interfere with verdicts for this cause under very special circumstances.

To entitle the party to relief, certain well-defined conditions are indispensable. It is a rule subject to rare exceptions, and applied perhaps with more stringency in criminal than in civil cases, that the sole object of the new evidence must not be to impeach or contradict witnesses sworn on the former trial; 7 Barb. 271; 8 Gratt. 637; it must not merely multiply testimony to any one or more of the facts already investigated, but must bring to light some new and independent truth of a different character; 3 W. & M. 348; 1 Sumn. 441; 6 Pick. 114; 10 id. 16; 2 Caines, 129; 8 Johns. 84; 15 id. 210; 4 Wend. 579; 7 W. & S. 415; 5 Ohio, 375; 11 id. 147; 4 Halst. 228; 1 Green, 177; 3 Vt. 72; 1 A. K. Marsh. 151; 3 id. 104; it must be to a point before in issue, and be so material as to impress the court with the belief that if a new trial were granted the result would probably be different; Dudl. 85; 3 Humphr. 222; it must not have been known to the party until after the trial; 3 Stor. 1; 2 Sumn. 19; 2 N. H. 166; and the least fault in not procuring and using it at the trial must not be imputable to him; 6 Johns. Ch. 482; 1 Blackf. 367; 5 Halst. 250; 7 id. 225; 1 Mo. 49; 11 Conn. 15; 10 Me. 218; 20 id. 246; 14 Vt. 415; 7 Metc. 748; 3 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 1015–1112. See NEW TRIAL.

NEWSPAPERS. Papers for conveying news, printed and distributed periodically.

NEXI. In Roman Law. Persons bound (nexi); that is, insolvents, who might be held in bondage by their creditors until their debts were discharged. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Heineccius, Antiq. Rom. ad Inst. lib. 3, tit. 330; Calvinus, Lex.; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 486 a.

NEXT FRIEND. One who, without being regularly appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of an infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris. See PROCHEIN AMI.

NEXT OF KIN. This term is used to signify the relations of a party who has died intestate.

In general, no one comes within this term who is not included in the provisions of the statutes of distribution; 3 Atk. 422, 761; 1 Ves. Sen. 84; 28 How. Pr. 417. The phrase means relation by blood; 72 N. Y. 312. It has been held, on the other hand, that next of kin in a will means "nearest of kin;" 10 Cl. & F. 215; 63 N. C. 242. A wife cannot, in general, claim as next of kin of her husband, nor a husband as next of kin of his wife; 113 Mass. 430; 4 Ired. Eq. 56. But see 34 Barb. 410; 28 Ohio, 192. But when there are circumstances in a will which induce a belief of an intention to include them under this term, they will be so considered, though in the ordinary sense of the word they are not; Hovenden, Fr. 288, 289; 1 My. & K. 82; the same rule holds as to the interpretation of statutes; 25 Alb. L. J. 496. See LEGACY; DISTRIBUTION; DESCENT.

NEXUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The transfer of the ownership of a thing, or the transfer of a thing to a creditor as a security.

In one sense nexum includes mancipium; in another sense, mancipium and nexum are opposed, in the same way as sale and mortgage or pledge are opposed. The formal part of both transactions consisted in a transfer per æs et libram. The person who became nexus by the effect of a nexum placed himself in a servile condition, not becoming a slave, his ingenuitas being only in suspense, and was said nexum inire. The phrases nexi datio, nexi liberatio, respectively express the contracting and the release from the obligation.

The Roman law as to the payment of borrowed money was very strict. A curious passage of Gellius (xx. 1) gives us the ancient mode of legal procedure in the case of debt, as fixed by the Twelve Tables. If the debtor admitted the debt, or had been condemned in the amount of the debt by a judex, he had thirty days allowed him for payment. At the expiration of this time he was liable to the manus injectio, and ultimately to be assigned over to the creditor (addictus) by the sentence of the prætor. The creditor was required to keep him for sixty days in chains, during which time he publicly exposed the debtor, on three nundinæ, and proclaimed the amount of his debt. If no person released the prisoner by paying the debt, the creditor might sell him as a slave or put him to death. If there were several creditors, the letter of the law allowed them to cut the debtor in pieces and take their share of his body in proportion to their debt. Gellius says that there was no instance of a creditor ever having adopted this extreme mode of satisfying his debt. But the creditor might treat the debtor, who was addictus, as a slave, and compel him to work out his debt; and the treatment was often very severe. In this passage Gellius does not speak of nexi, but only of addicti, which is sometimes alleged as evidence of the identity of nexus and addictus, but it proves no such identity. If a nexus is what he is here supposed to be, the laws of the Twelve Tables could not apply; for when a man became nexus with respect to one creditor, he could not become nexus to another; and if he became nexus to several at once, in this case the creditors must abide by their contract in taking a joint security. This law of the Twelve Tables only applied to the case of a debtor being assigned over by a judicial sentence to several creditors, and it provided for a settlement of their conflicting claims. The precise condition of a nexus has, however, been a subject of much discussion among scholars. Smith, Dict. Rom. & Gr. Antiq.; MANCIPIUM.

NICHILLS. In English Practice. Debts due to the exchequer which the sheriff could not levy, and as to which he returned nil. These sums were transcribed once a year by the clerk of the nichills, and sent to the treasurer's remembrancer's office, whence process was issued to recover the "nichill" debts. Both of these offices were abolished in 1833; Manning's Exch. Pr. 321; Moz. & W.

NIECE. The daughter of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207. See NEPHEW.

NIEFE. In Old English Law. A woman born in vassalage.

NIENT COMPRISE (Law Fr. not included). An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded. Tomlyn, Law Dict.

NIENT CULPABLE (Law Fr. not guilty). The name of a plea used to deny any charge of a criminal nature, or of a tort.

NIENT DEDIRE (Law Fr. to say nothing).

Words used to signify that judgment be rendered against a party because he does not deny the cause of action: i. e. by default.

When a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the venue is laid, the practice in the English courts is, on an affidavit of the circumstances, to change it, in transitory actions; or, in local actions, they will give leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, with a nient dedire, in order to have the trial in another county. 1 Tidd, Pr. 8th ed. 655.

NIENT LE FAIT (Law Fr.). In Pleading. The same as non est factum, a plea by which the defendant asserts that the deed declared upon is not his deed.

NIGHT. That space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which by its light the countenance of a man may be discerned. It is night when there is daylight, crepusculum or diluculum, enough left or begun to discern a man's face withal. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 550; 4 Bla. Com. 224; Bacon, Abr. Burglary (D); 2 Russ. Cr. 32; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 278.

The common law rule has been modified by statute in some of the states, and by the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 69, the night, for purposes of poaching, was held to begin one hour after sunset, and end one hour before sunrise. By the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, the night, during which a burglary may be committed, is deemed to commence at 9 P. M., and end at 6 A. M.; 4 Steph. Com. 105.

NIGHT WALKERS. Persons who sleep by day and walk by night, 5 Edw. III. c. 14; that is, persons of suspicious appearance and demeanor, who walk by night. In many of the states there are statutes against it; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 501, n.

Watchmen may undoubtedly arrest them; and it is said that private persons may also do so; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 120. But see 3 Taunt. 14; Hamm. N. P. 135. See 15 Viner, Abr. 555; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE (Lat. that he take nothing by his writ). In Practice. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Co. Litt. 363.

NIHIL DICIT (Lat. he says nothing). The name of the judgment rendered against a defendant who fails to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned. In such a case, judgment is given against the defendant of course, as he says nothing why it should not. See 15 Viner, Abr. 556; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL HABET (Lat. he has nothing). The name of a return made by a sheriff, marshal, or other proper officer, to a scire facias or other writ, when he has not been able to serve it on the defendant. 5 Whart. 367.

Two returns of nihil in proceedings in rem are, in general, equivalent to a service, Yelv. 112; 1 Cow. 70; 1 Law Rep. No. C. 491; 4 Blackf. 188; 5 S. & R. 211; 24 Penn. 491; 71 Penn. 81.

NIL DEBET (Lat. he owes nothing). In Pleading. The general issue in debt on simple contract. It is in the following form: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not owe the said sum of money above demanded, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." When, in debt on specialty, the deed is the only inducement to the action, the general issue is nil debet. Steph. Pl. 174, n.; 8 Johns. 83; Dane, Abr. Index. In English practice, by rule 11, Trinity Term, 1853, the plea of nil debet was abolished; 2 Chitty, Pl. 275.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS (Lat.). In Pleading. A plea by which the defendant, who is sued by his landlord in debt for rent upon a lease, but by deed indented, denies his landlord's title to the premises, alleging that he has no interest in the tenements. 2 Lilly, Abr. 214; 12 Viner, Abr. 184; 15 id. 556.

NISI PRIUS (Lat. unless before). In Practice. For the purpose of holding trials by jury. Important words in the writ (venire) directing the sheriff to summon jurors for the trial of causes depending in the superior courts of law in England, which have come to be adopted, both in England and the United States, to denote those courts or terms of court held for the trial of civil causes with the presence and aid of a jury.

The origin of the use of the term is to be traced to a period anterior to the institution of the commission of nisi prius in its more modern form. By Magna Charta it was provided that the common pleas should be held in one place, and should not follow the person of the king; and by another clause, that assizes of novel disseisin and of mort d'ancestor, which were the two commonest forms of actions to recover land, should be held in the various counties before the justices in eyre. A practice obtained very early, therefore, in the trial of trifling causes, to continue the cause in the superior court from term to term, provided the justices in eyre did not sooner (nisi justiciarii dis) come into the county where the cause of action arose, in which case they had jurisdiction when they so came. Bracton, l. 3, c. 1, § 11. By the statute of nisi prius, 13 Edw. I. c. 30, enforced by 14 Edw. III. c. 16, justices of assize were empowered to try common issues in trespass and other suits, and return them, when tried, to the superior court, where judgment was given. The clause was then left out of the continuance and inserted in the venire, thus: "Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. in Octavis Sti Michaelis, nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint, duodecim," etc. (we command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of Saint Michael, unless such and such a one, on such a day and place shall come to those parts, twelve, etc.). Under the provisions of 42 Edw. III. c. 11, the clause is omitted from the venire, and the jury is respited in the court above, while the sheriff summons them to appear before the justices, upon a habeas corpora juratorum, or, in the king's bench, a distringas. See Sell. Pr. Introd. lxv.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 116; 3 Shars. Bla. Com. 352–354; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 245, 382.

See, also, ASSIZE; COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS; JURY.

NISI PRIUS ROLL. In Practice. The transcript of a case made from the record of the superior court in which the action is commenced, for use in the nisi prius court.

It includes a history of all the proceedings in the case, including the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, issue, etc. It must be presented in proper manner to the nisi prius court. When a verdict has been obtained and entered on this record, it becomes the postea, and is returned to the superior court.

Under the Judicature Act of 1875, 1st Sched. Ord. xxxvi. r. 17, the party entering the action for trial is to deliver to the officer a copy of the pleadings for the use of the judge. Moz. & W.

NO AWARD. The name of a plea in an action or award. 2 Ala. 520; 1 N. Chipm. 131; 3 Johns. 367.

NO BILL. Words frequently indorsed on a bill of indictment by the grand jury when they have not sufficient cause for finding a true bill. They are equivalent to Not found, or Ignoramus. 2 N. & M'C. 558.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. In Scotch Law. An equitable power of the court of sessions, by which it is able, to a certain extent, to give relief when none is possible at law. Stair, Inst. b. iv. tit. 3, § 1; Erskine, Inst. 1. 3. 22; Bell, Dict.

NOBILITY. An order of men, in several countries, to whom special privileges are granted. The constitution of the United States provides, Art. I. § 10, that "no state shall grant any title of nobility," and § 9, that "no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of congress, accept of any title of any kind, whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state." It is singular that there should not have been a general prohibition against any citizen whatever, whether in private or public life, accepting any foreign title of nobility. An amendment for this purpose has been recommended by congress; but it has not been ratified by a sufficient number of states to make it a part of the constitution, probably from a growing sense that it is unnecessary; Rawle, Const. 120; Story, Const. §§ 1350–52; Fed. No. 84. A marshal of the United States cannot at the same time hold the office of commercial agent of a foreign nation; 8 Opin. of Att. Gen. 409.

NOCUMENTUM (Lat. harm, nuisance). In Old English Law. A thing done whereby another man is annoyed in his free lands or tenements. Also, the assize or writ lying for the same. Fitzh. N. B. 183; Old N. B. 108, 109. Manw. For. Laws, c. 17, divides nocumentum into generale, commune, speciale. Reg. Orig. 197, 199; Coke, Will Case. Nocumentum was also divided into damnosum, for which no action lay, it being done by an irresponsible agent, and injuriosum et damnosum, for which there were several remedies. Bracton, 221; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 2.

NOLLE PROSEQUI. In Practice. An entry made on the record, by which the prosecutor or plaintiff declares that he will proceed no further.

A nolle prosequi may be entered either in a criminal or a civil case. In criminal cases, before a jury is impanelled to try an indictment, and also after conviction, the attorney-general has power to enter a nolle prosequi without the consent of the defendant; but after a jury is impanelled a nolle prosequi cannot be entered without the consent of the defendant; 17 Pick. 395; 20 id. 356; 1 Gray, 490; 7 id. 328; 12 Vt. 93; 3 Hawks, 613; 7 Humphr. 152; 1 Bail. 151; 9 Ga. 306. It is for the prosecuting officer to enter a nol. pros. in his discretion; 3 Hawks, 613; but in some states leave must be obtained of the court; 1 Hill, N. Y. 377; 1 Va. Cas. 139; 12 Vt. 93; 7 Smith, Penn. Laws, 227.

It may be entered as to one of several defendants; 11 East, 307.

The effect of a nolle prosequi, when obtained, is to put the defendant without day; but it does not operate as an acquittal; for he may be afterwards reindicted, and, it is said, even upon the same indictment fresh process may be awarded; 6 Mod. 261; 1 Salk. 59; Comyns, Dig. Indictment (K); 2 Mass. 172; 4 Cush. 235; 13 Ired. 256. See 3 Cox, C. C. 93; 7 Humphr. 159.

In civil cases, a nolle prosequi is considered not to be of the nature of a retraxit or release, as was formerly supposed, but an agreement only not to proceed either against some of the defendants, or as to part of the suit. See 1 Wms. Saund. 207, note 2, and the authorities there cited; 1 Chitty, Pl. 546. A nolle prosequi is now held to be no bar to a future action for the same cause, except in those cases where, from the nature of the action, judgment and execution against one is a satisfaction of all the damages sustained by the plaintiff; 3 Term, 511; 1 Wils. 98.

In civil cases, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to one of several counts; 7 Wend. 301; or to one of several defendants; 1 Pet. 80; as in the case of a joint contract, where one of two defendants pleads infancy, the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to him and proceed against the other; 1 Pick. 500. See, generally, 1 Pet. 74; 2 Rawle, 334; 1 Bibb, 337; 4 id. 387, 454; 3 Cow. 335, 374; 5 Gill & J. 489; 5 Wend. 224; 12 id. 110; 20 Johns. 126; 3 Watts, 460.

NOMEN (Lat.). In Civil Law. A name of a person or thing. In a stricter sense, the name which declared the gens or family: as, Porcius, Cornelius; the cognomen being the name which marked the individual: as Cato, Marcus; agnomen, a name added to the cognomen for the purpose of description. The name of the person himself: e. g. nomen curiis addere. The name denoting the condition of a person or class: e. g. nomen liberorum, condition of children. Cause or reason (pro causa aut ratione): e. g. nomine culpæ, by reason of fault. A mark or sign of any thing, corporeal or incorporeal. Nomen supremum, i. e. God. Debt, or obligation of debt. A debtor. See Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A name. The Christian name, e. g. John, as distinguished from the family name: it is also called prænomen. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 7, 9; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

In Scotch Law. Nomen debiti. Right to payment of a debt.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM (Lat.). A word in the singular number which is to be understood in the plural in certain cases.

Misdemeanor, for example, is a word of this kind, and when in the singular may be taken as nomen collectivum and including several offences. 2 B. & Ad. 75. Heir, in the singular, sometimes includes all the heirs. Felony is not such a term.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM (Lat.). A most universal or comprehensive term: e.g. land. 2 Bla. Com. 19; 3 id. 172; Tayl. Law Gloss. So goods. 2 Will. Ex. 1014.

NOMINAL DAMAGES. In Practice. A trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained.

Wherever any act injures another's right, and would be evidence in future in favor of a wrong-doer, an action may be obtained for an invasion of the right without proof of any specific injury; 1 Wms. Saund. 346 a; 28 N. H. 438; 13 Conn. 269; and wherever the breach of an agreement or the invasion of a right is established, the law infers some damage, and if none is shown will award a trifling sum: as, a penny, one cent, six and a quarter cents, etc.; 14 Ill. 301; 4 Denio, 554; Sedgw. Dam. 47; Mayne, Dam. 5.

Thus, such damages may be awarded in actions for flowing lands; 2 Stor. 661; 1 Rawle, 27; 12 Me. 183; 28 N. H. 438; injuries to commons; 2 East, 154; violation of trademarks; 4 B. & Ad. 410; and see 7 Cush. 322; 2 R. I. 566; infringement of patents; 1 Gall. 429, 483; diversion of water-courses; 5 B. & Ad. 1; 1 Bingh. N. C. 549; 17 Conn. 288; 2 Ill. 544; 6 Ind. 39; 32 N. H. 90; but see 21 Ala. N. S. 309; 6 Ohio St. 187; trespass to lands; 24 Wend. 188; 2 Tex. 206; see 4 Jones, No. C. 139; neglect of official duties, in some cases, 5 Metc. Mass. 517; 12 id. 535; 1 Denio, 548; 27 Vt. 563; 23 id. 306; 12 N. H. 341; breach of contracts; 1 Du. N. Y. 363; 2 Hill, N. Y. 644; 5 id. 290, 505; 6 Md. 274; and many other cases where the effect of the suit will be to determine a right; 2 Wils. 414; 12 Ad. & E. 488; 3 Scott, N. R. 390; 13 Conn. 361; 20 Mo. 603; 28 Me. 505; 19 Miss. 98; 2 La. An. 907. And see, in explanation and limitation; 10 B. & C. 145; 14 C. B. 595; 1 Q. B. 636; 18 id. 252; 22 Vt. 231; 1 Dutch. 255; 14 B. Monr. 330; 5 Ind. 250; 6 Rich. 75.

The title or right is as firmly established as though the damages were substantial; Sedgw. Dam. 47. As to its effect upon costs, see Sedgw. Dam. 55; 2 Metc. Mass. 96; 1 Dow, P. C. 201; 1 Curt. C. C. 434; 22 Vt. 231.

NOMINAL PARTNER. One who allows his name to appear as a member of a firm, wherein he has no real interest, is liable as a partner to strangers who have no notice of his want of interest in the partnership; 2 Steph. Com. 101.

NOMINAL PLAINTIFF. One who is named as the plaintiff in an action, but who has no interest in it, having assigned the cause or right of action to another, for whose use it is brought.

In general, he cannot interfere with the rights of his assignee, nor will he be permitted to discontinue the action, or to meddle with it; 1 Wheat. 233; 7 Cra. 152; 1 Johns. Cas. 411; 3 id. 242; 1 Johns. 532, n.; 3 id. 426; 11 id. 47; 12 id. 237; 1 Phill. Ev. 90, Cowen's note, 172; Greenl. Ev. § 173.

NOMINATE CONTRACT. A contract distinguished by a particular name, the use of which name determines the rights of all the parties to the contract: as, purchase and sale, hiring, partnership, loan for use, deposit, and the like. The law thus supersedes the necessity for special stipulations, and creates an obligation in the one party to perform, and a right in the other to demand, whatever is necessary to the explication of that contract. In Roman law there were twelve nominate contracts, with a particular action for each. Bell, Dict. Nominate and Innominate; Mackeldey, Civ. Law. §§ 395, 408; Dig. 2. 14. 7. 1.

NOMINATION (from Lat. nominare, to name). An appointment: as I nominate A B executor of this my last will.

A proposal. The word nominate is used in this sense in the constitution of the United States, art. 2, s. 2, § 2: the president "shall nominate, and by and with the consent of the senate shall appoint, ambassadors," etc.

NOMINE POENÆ (Lat. in the nature of a penalty). In Civil Law. A condition annexed to heirship by the will of the deceased person. Domat, Civ. Law; Hallifax, Anal.

At Common Law. A penalty fixed by covenant in a lease for non-performance of its conditions. 2 Lilly, Abr. 221.

It is usually a gross sum of money, though it may be any thing else, appointed to be paid by the tenant to the reversioner, if the duties are in arrear, in addition to the duties themselves. Hamm. N. P. 411, 412.

To entitle himself to the nomine pœnæ, the landlord must make a demand of the rent on the very day, as in the case of a re-entry; 1 Saund. 287 b, note; 7 Co. 28 b; Co. Litt. 202 a; 7 Term, 117. A distress cannot be taken for a nomine pœnæ unless a special power to distrain be annexed to it by deed; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2451. See Bacon, Abr. Rent (K 4); Woodf. Landl. & T. 253; Dane, Abr. Index.

NOMINEE. One who has been named or proposed for an office.

NON ACCEPTAVIT (Lat. he did not accept). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange upon a supposed acceptance by him. See 4 M. & G. 561.

NON-ACCESS. The non-existence of sexual intercourse between husband and wife is generally expressed by the words non-access of the husband to the wife; which expressions, in a case of bastardy, are understood to mean the same thing. 2 Stark. Ev. 218, n.

In Pennsylvania, when the husband has access to the wife, no evidence short of his absolute impotence is sufficient to bastardize the issue; 6 Binn. 283.

In the civil law the maxim is, Pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. Toullier, tom. 2, n. 787. The Code Napoléon, art. 312, enacts "que l'enfant conçu pendant le mariage a pour père le mari." See, also, 1 Browne, Penn. Appx. xlvii.

A married woman cannot prove the non-access of her husband. See 8 East, 193, 202; 11 id. 132; 12 id. 550; 13 Ves. 58; 4 Term, 251, 336; 6 id. 330.

NON-AGE. By this term is understood that period of life from birth till the arrival of twenty-one years. In another sense it means under the proper age to be of ability to do a particular thing: as, when non-age is applied to one under the age of fourteen, who is unable to marry.

NON ASSUMPSIT (Lat. he did not undertake). In Pleading. The general issue in an action of assumpsit.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not undertake or promise, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this he puts himself upon the country."

Under this plea almost every matter may be given in evidence, on the ground, it is said, that as the action is founded on the contract, and the injury is the non-performance of it, evidence which disaffirms the obligation of the contract, at the time when the action was commenced, goes to the gist of the action. Gilbert, C. P. 65; Salk. 279; 2 Stra. 738; 1 B. & P. 481. See 12 Viner, Abr. 189; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 G 1).

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS (Lat. he has not undertaken within six years). In Pleading. The plea by which, when pleadings were in Latin, the defendant alleged that the obligation was not undertaken and the right of action had not accrued within six years, the period of limitation of the right to bring suit.

NON BIS IN IDEM. In Civil Law. A phrase which signifies that no one shall be twice tried for the same offence: that is, that when a party accused has been once tried by a tribunal in the last resort, and either convicted or acquitted, he shall not again be tried. Code, 9. 2. 9. 11; Merlin, Répert. See JEOPARDY.

NON CEPIT MODO ET FORMA (Lat. he did not take in manner and form). In Pleading. The plea which raises the general issue in an action of replevin; or rather which involves the principal part of the declaration, for, properly speaking, there is no general issue in replevin; Morris, Repl. 142.

Its form is "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not take the said cattle (or, goods and chattels, according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration mentioned, or any of them, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

It denies the taking the things and having them in the place specified in the declaration, both of which are material in this action. Stephen, Pl. 183, 184; 1 Chitty, Pl. 490.

NON-CLAIM. An omission or neglect by one entitled to make a demand within the time limited by law: as, when a continual claim ought to be made, a neglect to make such claim within a year and a day.

NON COMPOS MENTIS (Lat. not of sound mind, memory, or understanding). A generic term, including all the species of madness, whether it arise from idiocy, sickness, lunacy, or drunkenness. Co. Litt. 247; 4 Co. 124; 1 Phill. 100; 4 Comyns, Dig. 613; 5 id. 186; Shelf. Lun. 1; IDIOCY; LUNACY.

In some states, idiots and lunatics are expressly excluded from the right of suffrage; and it has been supposed that these classes, by the common political law of England and of this country, were excluded from exercising the right of suffrage even though not prohibited therefrom by any express constitutional or statutory provisions; Cooley, Const. Lim. 753.

NON CONCESSIT (Lat. he did not grant). In English Law. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that the crown granted to the plaintiff by letters-patent the rights which he claims as a concession from the king: as, for example, when a plaintiff sues another for the infringement of his patent right, the defendant may deny that the crown has granted him such a right. It does not deny the grant of a patent, but of the patent as described in the plaintiff's declaration; 3 Burr. 1544; 6 Co. 15 b. Also a plea resorted to by a stranger to a deed, because estoppels do not hold with respect to strangers. It brought into issue the title of the grantor as well as the operation of the deed; Whart. Dic.

NON-CONFORMISTS. In English Law. A name given to certain dissenters from the rites and ceremonies of the church of England.

NON CONSTAT (Lat. it does not appear. It is not certain). Words frequently used, particularly in argument, to express dissatisfaction with the conclusions of the other party: as, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was not good, because non constat whether A B was seventeen years of age when the action was commenced. Swinb. pt. 4, § 22, p. 331.

NON CULPABILIS (Lat.). In Pleading. Not guilty. It is usually abbreviated non cul.; 16 Viner, Abr. 1; 2 Gabb. Cr. Law, 317.

NON DAMNIFICATUS (Lat. not injured). In Pleading. A plea in the nature of a plea of performance to an action of debt on a bond of indemnity, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff has received no damage. 1 B. & P. 640, n. a; 1 Taunt. 428; 1 Saund. 116, n. 1; 2 id. 81; 7 Wentw. Pl. 615, 616; 1 H. Blackst. 253; 14 Johns. 177; 5 id. 42; 20 id. 153; 10 Wheat. 396; 405; 3 Halst. 1.

NON DECIMANDO. See DE NON DECIMANDO.

NON DEDIT. In Pleading. The general issue in formedon. See NE DONA PAS.

NON DEMISIT (Lat. he did not demise). In Pleading. A plea proper to be pleaded to an action of debt for rent, when the plaintiff declares on a parol lease. Gilb. Debt, 436, 438; Bull. N. P. 177; 1 Chitty, Pl. 477. A plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowant did not demise. Morris, Repl. 179; 5 A. & E. N. S. 373.

It cannot be pleaded when the demise is stated to have been by indenture. 12 Viner, Abr. 178; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 W 48). See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. xix. rr. 20, 23.

NON DETINET (Lat. he does not detain). In Pleading. The general issue in an action of detinue. Its form is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not detain the said goods and chattels (or "deeds and writings," according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration specified; or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

It puts in issue the detainer only: a justification must be pleaded specially. 8 Dowl. Pract. Cas. 347. It is a proper plea to an action of debt on a simple contract in the case of executors and administrators. 6 East, 549; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I); 1 Chitty, Pl. 476. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. xix. rr. 20, 23. See DETINET.

NON EST FACTUM (Lat. is not his deed). In Pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond or other specialty.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that the said supposed writing obligatory (or "indenture," or "articles of agreement," according to the subject of the action) is not his deed. And of this he puts himself upon the country." 6 Rand. 86; 1 Litt. 158.

It is a proper plea when the deed is the foundation of the action; 1 Wms. Saund. 38, note 3; 2 id. 187 a, note 2; 2 Ld. Raym. 1500; 11 Johns. 476: and cannot be proved as declared on; 4 East, 585; on account of non-execution; 6 Term, 317; or variance in the body of the instrument; 1 Campb. 70; 11 East, 633; 6 Taunt. 394; 4 Maule & S. 470; 2 D. & R. 662. Under this plea the plaintiff may show that the deed was void ab initio; 2 Wils. 341; 2 Campb. 272; 3 id. 33; 12 Mod. 101; 1 Ld. Raym. 315; 12 Johns. 337; 13 id. 430; 10 S. & R. 25; 14 id. 208; see 2 Salk. 275; 6 Cra. 219; or became so after making and before suit; 5 Co. 119 b; 11 id. 27; 4 Cruise, Dig. 368. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 417, n.

In covenant, the defendant may, under this plea, avail himself of a mis-statement or omission of a qualifying covenant; 2 Stra. 1146; 9 East, 188; 11 id. 639; 1 Campb. 70; 4 id. 20; or omission of a condition precedent; 11 East, 639; 7 D. & R. 249. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. xix. rr. 20, 23.

NON EST INVENTUS (Lat. he is not found). In Practice. The sheriff's return to a writ requiring him to arrest the person of the defendant, which signifies that he is not to be found within his jurisdiction. The return is usually abbreviated N. E. I. Chitty, Pr. The English form "not found" is also commonly used.

NON-FEASANCE. The non-performance of some act which ought to be performed.

When a legislative act requires a person to do a thing, its non-feasance will subject the party to punishment: as, if a statute require the supervisors of the highways to repair such highways, the neglect to repair them may be punished. See 1 Russ. Cr. 48. See, also, MANDATUM.

NON FECIT (Lat. he did not make it). The name of a plea, for example, in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note. 3 M. & G. 446. Rarely used.

NON FECIT VASTUM CONTRA PROHIBITIONEM (Lat. he did not commit waste against the prohibition). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action founded on a writ of estrepement, that the defendant did not commit waste contrary to the prohibition. 2 Bla. Com. 226, 227.

NON IMPEDIVIT (Lat. he did not impede). In Pleading. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. 3 Bla. Com. 305; 3 Woodd. Lect. 36. In law French, ne disturba pas.

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM (Lat. he has not broken the covenant). In Pleading. A plea in an action of covenant. This plea is not a general issue: it merely denies that the defendant has broken the covenants on which he is sued. It being in the negative, it cannot be used where the breach is also in the negative. Bacon, Abr. Covenant (L); 3 Lev. 19; 2 Taunt. 278; 1 Aik. 150; 4 Dall. 436; 7 Cow. 71.

NON-JOINDER. In Pleading. The omission of one or more persons who should have been made parties to a suit at law or in equity, as plaintiffs or defendants.

IN EQUITY. Parties may be omitted when the number is great. 1 Smedes & M. 404. The relief granted in such cases will be so modified as not to affect the interests of others; 1 Pet. 299; 2 Paine, 536; 11 Ill. 254; 2 Johns. Ch. 242. See PARTIES. It must be taken advantage of before the final hearing; Ril. Ch. 138; 1 Ala. N. S. 580; 18 id. 576; 24 Conn. 586; 1 Des. 315; 1 Stockt. Ch. 401; 10 Paige, Ch. 445; 2 Sandf. Ch. 17; 2 Iowa, 55; 2 McLean, 376; except in very strong cases; 1 Pet. 299; as, where a party indispensable to rendering a decree appears to the court to be omitted; 14 Vt. 178; 19 Ala. N. S. 213; 5 Ill. 424; 24 Me. 119. The objection may be taken by demurrer, if the defect appear on the face of the bill; 5 Ill. 424; 1 Des. 315; 8 Ga. 506; 19 Ala. N. S. 121; 4 Rand. 451; or by plea, if it do not appear; 9 Mo. 605. See 3 Cra. 220. The objection may be avoided by waiver of rights as to the party omitted; 4 Wisc. 54; or a supplemental bill filed, in some cases; 4 Johns. Ch. 605. It will not cause dismissal of the bill in the first instance; 3 Cra. 189; 6 Conn. 421; 17 Ala. 270; 1 T. B. Monr. 189; 1 Dev. Eq. 354; 1 Hill, So. C. 53; but will, if it continues after objection made; 17 Ala. 270; 5 Mas. 561; without prejudice; 5 Mas. 561; 1 J. J. Marsh. 76; 3 id. 103; 6 id. 622; 4 B Monr. 594; 6 id. 330; 7 Paige, Ch. 451; 1 Sandf. Ch. 46. The cause is ordered to stand over in the first instance; 20 Me. 59; 9 Cow. 320; 2 Edw. Ch. 242.

IN LAW. See ABATEMENT; PARTIES.

In England, the Judicature Act of 1875, Ord. xvi., has made very full provisions as to the joinder of parties, and the consequences of misjoinder and non-joinder. All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative.

NON JURIDICUS. See DIES NON.

NON JURORS. In English Law. Persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. See 1 Dall. 170.

NON LIQUET (Lat. it is not clear). In Civil Law. Words by which the judges (judices), in a Roman trial, were accustomed to free themselves from the necessity of deciding a cause when the rights of the parties were doubtful. On the tablets which were given to the judges wherewith to indicate their judgment, was written N. L. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

NON OBSTANTE. In English Law. These words, which literally signify notwithstanding, are used to express the act of the English king by which he dispenses with the law, that is, authorizes its violation.

He cannot by his license or dispensation make an offence dispunishable which is malum in se; but in certain matters which are mala prohibita he may, to certain persons and on special occasions, grant a non obstante. Vaugh. 330–359; Lev. 217; Sid. 6, 7; 12 Co. 18; Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (D 7); 2 Reeve, Eng. L. C. 8, p. 83. But the doctrine of non obstante, which set the prerogative above the laws, was demolished by the bill of rights at the revolution; 1 W. & M. Stat. 2 c. 2; 1 Bla. Com. 342; 1 Steph. Com. 460. See JUDGMENT NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. Notwithstanding the verdict. See JUDGMENT NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

NON OMITTAS (Lat. more fully, non omittas propter libertatem, do not omit on account of the liberty or franchise). In Practice. A writ which lies when the sheriff returns on writ to him directed, that he hath sent to the bailiff of such a franchise, which hath return of writs, and he hath not served the writ; then the plaintiff shall have this writ directed to the sheriff, that he omit not on account of any franchise, but himself enter into the franchise and execute the king's writ.

This clause is now usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs. Wharton, Lex.; 2 Will. IV. c. 39; 3 Chitty, Stat. 494; 3 Chitty, Pr. 190, 310.

NON-PLEVIN. In Old English Law. A neglect to replevin land taken into the hands of the king upon default, within fifteen days, by which seisin was lost, as by default. Heugh. de Magn. Ch. c. 8. By 9 Edw. III. c. 2, no man shall lose his land by non-plevin.

NON PROS. An abbreviation of non prosequitur, he does not pursue. Where the plaintiff, at any stage of the proceedings, fails to prosecute his action, or any part of it, in due time, the defendant enters non prosequitur, and signs final judgment, and obtains costs against the plaintiff, who is said to be non pros'd. 2 Archb. Pr. Chitty ed. 1409; 3 Bla. Com. 296; 1 Tidd, Pr. 458; 3 Chitty, Pr. 10; Caines, Pract. 102. The name non pros. is applied to the judgment so rendered against the plaintiff; 1 Sell. Pr., and authorities above cited.

In modern English practice under the Jud. Act, 1875, a plaintiff, failing to deliver a statement of his claim in due time, may have his action dismissed for want of prosecution. And the same course may be taken with a plaintiff who fails to comply with an order to answer interrogatories; besides that the party so making default renders himself liable to "attachment." If the plaintiff fail in due time to give "notice of trial," the defendant may do so for him; Moz. & W.

NON-RESIDENCE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

NON-RESIDENTS. Service of process on non-resident defendants is void, excepting cases which proceed in rem, such as proceedings in admiralty or by foreign attachment, in which the property of a non-resident debtor is seized as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be obtained against him.

NON SUBMISSIT (Lat.). The name of a plea to an action of debt, or a bond to perform an award, by which the defendant pleads that he did not submit. Bacon, Abr. Arbitration, etc. (G).

NON SUM INFORMATUS (Lat.). In Pleading. I am not informed. See JUDGMENT.

NON TENENT INSIMUL (Lat. they do not hold together). In Pleading. A plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denies that he holds the property which is the subject of the suit, together with the complainant or plaintiff.

NON TENUIT (Lat. he did not hold). In Pleading. The name of a plea in bar in replevin, when the defendant has avowed for rent-arrear, by which the plaintiff avows that he did not hold in manner and form as the avowry alleges; Rose. Real Act. 628.

NON-TENURE. In Pleading. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserted that he did not hold the land, or at least some part of it, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration; 1 Mod. 250; in which case the writ abates as to the part with reference to which the plea is sustained. 8 Cra. 242. It may be pleaded with or without a disclaimer. It was a dilatory plea, though not strictly in abatement; 2 Saund. 44, n. 4; Dy. 210: Booth, Real Act. 179; 3 Mass. 312; 11 id. 216; but might be pleaded as to part along with a plea in bar as to the rest; 1 Lutw. 716; Rast. Ent. 231 a, b; and was subsequently considered as a plea in bar; 14 Mass. 239; 1 Me. 54; 2 N. H. 10; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I 9).

NON-TERM. The vacation between two terms of a court.

NON-USER. The neglect to make use of a thing.

A right which may be acquired by use may be lost by non-user; and an absolute discontinuance of the use for twenty years affords presumption of the extinguishment of the right in favor of some other adverse right. 5 Whart. 584; 23 Pick. 141. See ABANDONMENT; EASEMENT.

Every public officer is required to use his office for the public good: a non-user of a public office is, therefore, a sufficient cause of forfeiture; 2 Bla. Com. 153; 9 Co. 50. Non-user for a great length of time will have the effect of repealing an old law. But it must be a very strong case which will have that effect; 13 S. & R. 452; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 94.

NONSENSE. That which in a written agreement or will is unintelligible.

It is a rule of law that an instrument shall be so construed that the whole, if possible, shall stand. When a matter is written grammatically right, but it is unintelligible and the whole makes nonsense, some words cannot be rejected to make sense of the rest; 1 Salk. 324; but when matter is nonsense by being contrary and repugnant to some precedent sensible matter, such repugnant matter is rejected; 14 Viner, Abr. 142; 15 id. 560. The maxim of the civil law on this subject agrees with this rule: Quæ in testamento ita sunt scripta, ut intelligi non possent: perinde sunt, ac si scripta non essent; Dig. 50. 17. 73. 3. See AMBIGUITY; CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

In pleading, when matter is nonsense by being contradictory and repugnant to something precedent, the precedent matter, which is sense, shall not be defeated by the repugnancy which follows, but that which is contradictory shall be rejected: as in ejectment where the declaration is of a demise on the second day of January, and that the defendant postea scilicet, on the first of January, ejected him, here the scilicet may be rejected as being expressly contrary to the postea and the precedent matter; 5 East, 255; 1 Salk. 324.

NONSUIT. The name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to the trial of a cause after it has been put at issue, without determining such issue.

A voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by plaintiff, who allows a judgment for costs to be entered against him by absenting himself or failing to answer when called upon to hear the verdict; 1 Dutch. 556.

An involuntary nonsuit takes place when the plaintiff, on being called, when his case is before the court for trial, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict; 13 Johns. 334.

In English practice, when issue has been joined, and the plaintiff neglects to bring on the issue to be tried during or before the following term and vacation, etc., the defendant may give twenty days' notice to the plaintiff to bring on the issue, to be tried at the sittings or assizes next after the expiration of the notice; and if plaintiff afterwards neglects to give notice of trial for such sittings or assizes, or to proceed to trial in pursuance of such notice of defendant, the defendant may suggest on record that the plaintiff has failed to proceed to trial, etc., and may sign judgment for his costs: provided that the judge may have power to extend time for proceeding to trial with or without terms; Com. Law Proc. Act 1852, §§ 100, 101; 3 Chitty, Stat. 519, 550.

A nonsuit is no bar to another action for the same cause. The courts of the United States; 1 Pet. 469, 476; 1 McCrary, 436; 9 Ind. 551; 14 Ark. 706; Wisconsin; 50 Wis. 247; Massachusetts; 6 Pick. Mass. 117; Tennessee; 2 Ov. Tenn. 57; 4 Yerg. 528; and Virginia; 1 Wash. Va. 87, 219; cannot order a nonsuit against a plaintiff who has given evidence of his claim. In Alabama, unless authorized by statute, the courts cannot enter a nonsuit; 1 Ala. 75; 4 id. 42. See 22 Ala. N. S. 613.

In New York; 12 Johns. 299; 13 id. 334; 1 Wend. 376; South Carolina; 2 Bay, 126, 445; 2 Bail. 321; 2 M'Cord, 26; Maine; 2 Me. 5: 42 id. 259; New Hampshire; 26 N. H. 351; 31 id. 92; Ohio; 4 Ohio, 628; Illinois; 17 Ill. 494; Florida; 5 Fla. 476; Indiana; 9 Ind. 179; Georgia; 16 Ga. 154; California; 1 Cal. 108, 125, 221; Missouri; 19 Mo. 101; a nonsuit may, in general, be ordered where the evidence is insufficient to support the action, but not till final submission of the cause. See 3 Chitty, Pr. 910; 1 Archb. Pr. 787; Bacon, Abr.; 15 Viner, Abr. 560; 3 Bla. Com. 376; 2 Tidd. Pr. 916 et seq; 1 T. & H. Pr. § 715.

NORTH CAROLINA. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

The territory which now forms this state was included in the grant made in 1663 by Charles II., to Lord Clarendon and others, of a much more extensive country. The boundaries were enlarged by a new charter granted by the same prince to the same proprietaries in the year 1665. By this charter the proprietaries were authorized to make laws, with the assent of the freemen of the province or their delegates, and they were invested with various other powers. Being dissatisfied with the form of government, the proprietaries procured the celebrated John Locke to draw up a plan of government for the colony, which was adopted, and proved to be impracticable: it was highly exceptionable on account of its disregard of the principles of religious toleration and national liberty, which are now universally admitted. After a few years of unsuccesful operation it was abandoned. The colony had been settled at two points, one called the Northern and the other the Southern settlement, which were governed by separate legislatures. In 1729 the proprietaries surrendered their charter, when it became a royal province, and was governed by a commission and a form of government in substance similar to that established in other royal provinces. In 1732 the territory was divided, and the divisions assumed the names of North Carolina and South Carolina.

A constitution of North Carolina was adopted December 18, 1776. To this constitution amendments were made in convention June 4, 1835, which were ratified by the people on the 9th day of November of the same year, and took effect on the 1st day of January, 1836. There was a second constitution of 1868, and the amended constitution of 1876.

Every man of the age of twenty-one years, being a native or naturalized citizen of the United States, and who has been an inhabitant of the state for twelve months immediately preceding the day of any election, and ninety days in the county in which he offers to vote, is entitled to vote. Amended Const. 1876, art. 6, § 1.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The Senate consists of fifty members, chosen biennially, for the term of two years, by ballot. Each senator must be twenty-five years of age, a resident of the state as a citizen for two years, and usually a resident of the district for which he is chosen one year immediately preceding his election. Art. 2, §§ 3, 7.

The House of Representatives is composed of one hundred and twenty representatives, apportioned among the counties in the ratio of the population as enumerated for the purposes of federal representation. They are elected biennially, for the term of two years. The qualifications required are that each representative be a qualified elector of the state and a resident in the county for which he is chosen, one year immediately preceding his election. Art. 2, §§ 5, 8.

The following classes of persons are disqualified for office: 1. All persons denying the being of Almighty God. 2. All persons having been convicted of treason, perjury, or any other infamous crime, since becoming citizens of the United States, or of corruption or malpractice in office, unless such person has been legally restored to the rights of citizenship. Const. art. 6, § 5.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the qualified voters of the state, for the term of four years from the first day of January next following his election. He is not eligible more than four years in any term of eight years, unless the office shall have been cast upon him as lieutenant-governor or president of the senate. He must be thirty years of age, and a citizen of the United States five years, and a resident of the state for two years next before election. Const. art. 3, §§ 1–3. The candidate having the largest number of votes is elected; and in case of no election or a contested election, the matter is to be decided by the joint action of the two houses.

There are also a lieutenant-governor, a secretary of state, an auditor, a treasurer, a superintendant of public instruction, and an attorney-general, elected for a term of four years by the qualified electors of the state; the attorney-general being ex-officio the legal adviser of the executive department, and the secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, and superintendent of public instruction forming a council of state ex-officio to advise the governor in the execution of his office. Any three constitute a quorum.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The distinction between law and equity is done away with. There is but one form of action in all civil actions. Feigned issues also are abolished, and the issue is tried before a jury.

The Supreme Court is composed of three judges, elected by joint ballot in the two houses of assembly, to hold their office for eight years. Of these, one is selected by his associates to preside, and is styled the chief justice. It is almost entirely an appellate tribunal, having original jurisdiction only in proceedings by a bill in equity, or an information in the nature of a bill in equity, filed on behalf of the state, in the name of the attorney-general, to repeal grants and other letters patent obtained by fraud or false suggestions, and such decisions are merely recommendations to the general assembly. It has appellate jurisdiction over all cases in law or equity brought before it by appeal or otherwise from a superior court of law or a court of equity. It has also power to issue writs of certiorari, scire facias, habeas corpus, and other writs which may be necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction, and agreeable to the principles and usages of law. Criminal cases are to be certified to the superior court from which the appeal was taken, which court proceeds to judgment in accordance with the decision of the supreme court.

A Superior Court is held by one judge, at the court house in each county of the state, twice in each year. For this purpose the state is divided into nine circuits, each composed of ten or more counties; and the nine judges who are appointed to hold these courts ride the circuits alternately, with the power to interchange; but no judge rides the same circuit twice in succession. The judges are appointed in the same manner and for the same term as the supreme judges. The superior courts "have cognizance and legal jurisdiction, unless otherwise provided, of all pleas, real, personal, and mixed, and also all suits and demands relative to dower, partition, legacies, filial portions, and estates of intestates; and, unless it be otherwise provided, of all pleas of the state, and criminal matters of what nature, degree, or denomination soever, whether brought before them by original or by mesne process, or by certiorari, writ of error, appeal from any inferior court, or by any other way or manner whatsoever; and they are hereby declared to have full power and authority to give judgment and to award execution and all necessary process therein," etc. See Revised Code, c. 31, § 17.

The same judges who hold the superior courts of law are required and authorized to hold, at the same times and places, courts of equity, and in doing so shall "possess all the powers and authorities within the same that the court of chancery, which was formerly held in this state under the colonial government, used and exercised, and that are properly and rightfully incident to such a court, agreeable to the laws and usages now in force and practice." See Revised Code, c. 32, §§ 1–3.

The Courts of Pleas and Quarter Sessions are held four times in each year, in the several counties of the state, by three or more justices of the peace, who "shall take cognizance of, and have full power and authority and original jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine, all causes of a civil nature whatever at the common law within their respective counties, where the original jurisdiction is not by statute confined to one or more magistrates out of court, or to the supreme or superior courts; of all penalties to the amount of one hundred dollars and upwards incurred by violation of the penal statutes of the state or of laws passed by the congress of the United States, where by such law jurisdiction is given to the courts of the several states; of suits for dower, partition, filial portions, legacies, and distributive shares of intestates' estates, and all other matters relating thereto; to try, hear, and determine all matters relating to orphans, idiots, and lunatics, and the management of their estates, in like manner as courts of equity exercise jurisdiction in such cases; to inquire of, try, hear, and determine all petit larcenies, assaults and batteries, all trespasses and breaches of the peace, and all other crimes and misdemeanors the judgment upon conviction whereof shall not extend to life, limb, or member: excepting those only whereof the original jurisdiction is given exclusively to a single justice or to two justices of the peace, to the superior or to the supreme court."

In some of the counties jury trials are abolished by special acts of the legislature, and in others such trials are had twice only in the year.

Justices of the Peace are elected. They have jurisdiction of civil actions founded on contract, where the sum demanded does not exceed two hundred dollars, and where the title to real estate is not in controversy, and all criminal matters arising within their counties, where the punishment cannot exceed a fine of fifty dollars or imprisonment for thirty days. Jurisdiction may be given to them by the assembly in other civil actions where the value of the property in controversy does not exceed fifty dollars. In issues of fact, on demand of either party, a jury of six men is summoned to try the same. Amended Const. 1876, art. 4, § 27.

NOSOCOMI. In Civil Law. Persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers. Clef Lois Rom. mot Administrateurs.

NOT FOUND. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, when they have not sufficient evidence to find a true bill. See IGNORAMUS.

NOT GUILTY. In Pleading. The general issue in several sorts of actions.

In trespass, its form is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the force and injury, when, etc., and says that he is not guilty of the said trespasses above laid to his charge, or any part thereof, in the manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

Under this issue the defendant may give in evidence any matter which directly controverts the truth of any allegation, which the plaintiff on such general issue will be bound to prove; 1 B. & P. 213; and no person is bound to justify who is not primâ facie a trespasser; 2 B. & P. 359; 2 Saund. 284 d. For example, the plea of not guilty is proper in trespass to persons, if the defendant have committed no assault, battery, or imprisonment, etc.; and in trespass to personal property, if the plaintiff had no property in the goods, or the defendant were not guilty of taking them, etc.; and in trespass to real property, this plea not only puts in issue the fact of trespass, etc., but also the title, which, whether freehold or possessory in the defendant or a person under whom he claims, may be given in evidence under it, which matters show primâ facie that the right of possession, which is necessary in trespass, is not in the plaintiff, but in the defendant or the person under whom he justifies; 7 Term, 354; 8 id. 403; Willes, 222; Steph. Pl. 178; 1 Chitty, Pl. 491, 492.

In trespass on the case in general, the formula is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he is not guilty of the premises above laid to his charge, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

This, it will be observed, is a mere traverse, or denial, of the facts alleged in the declaration, and therefore, on principle, should be applied only to cases in which the defence rests on such a denial. But here a relaxation has taken place; for, under this plea, a defendant is permitted not only to contest the truth of the declaration, but, with some exceptions, to prove any matter of defence that tends to show that the plaintiff has no cause of action, though such matters be in confession and avoidance of the declaration: as, for example, a release given, or satisfaction made; Steph. Pl. 182, 183; 1 Chitty, Pl. 486.

In trover. It is not usual in this action to plead any other plea, except the statute of limitations: and a release, and the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, may be given in evidence under the general issue; 7 Term, 391.

In debt on a judgment suggesting a devastavit, an executor may plead not guilty; 1 Term, 462.

In criminal cases, when the defendant wishes to put himself on his trial, he pleads not guilty. This plea makes it incumbent upon the prosecutor to prove every fact and circumstance constituting the offence, as stated in the indictment, information, or complaint. On the other hand, the defendant may give in evidence under this plea not only every thing which negatives the allegations in the indictment, but also all matter of excuse and justification.

In English practice, under the Jud. Act, 1875, it is not sufficient for a defendant to deny generally the facts alleged by the plaintiff's statement of claim, but he must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth. But this does not affect defendant's right to plead "not guilty by statute," which is a plea of the general issue by a defendant in a civil action, when he intends to give special matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament; in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether they are public or otherwise. Rule 21 of the Rules of Trinity Term, 1853. But if a defendant so plead, he will not be allowed to plead any other defence without the leave of the court or a judge. Jud. Act, 1875, 1st Sched. Ord. xix. r. 16. Moz. & W.

NOT POSSESSED. In Pleading. A plea sometimes used in actions of trover, when the defendant was not possessed of the goods at the commencement of the action. 3 M. & G. 101, 103. This plea would probably be held "evasive" within the meaning of Ord. xix. r. 22, Jud. Act, 1875. Moz. & W.

NOT PROVEN. In Scotch Criminal Law. It is a peculiarity of the Scotch jury system in criminal trials that it admits a verdict of not proven, corresponding to the non liquet of the Roman law. The legal effect of this is equivalent to not guilty; for a prisoner in whose case it is pronounced cannot be tried again. According to the homely but expressive maxim of the law, no man can be made to thole an assize twice. But, although the verdict of not proven is so far tantamount to an acquittal that the party cannot be tried a second time, it falls very far short of it with regard to the effect upon his reputation and character. He goes away from the bar of the court with an indelible stigma upon his fame. There stands recorded against him the opinion of a jury that the evidence respecting his guilt was so strong that they did not dare to pronounce a verdict of acquittal. So that many of the evil consequences of a conviction follow, although the jury refuse to convict. When Sir Nicholas Throckmorton was tried and acquitted by an English jury in 1554, he said, "It is better to be tried than to live suspected." But in Scotland a man may be not only tried, but acquitted, and yet live suspected, owing to the sinister influence of a verdict of not proven. Forsyth, Hist. Trial by Jury, 334–339.

NOTARIUS. In Civil Law. One who took notes or draughts in short-hand of what was said by another, or of proceedings in the senate or in a court. One who draughted written instruments, wills, conveyances, etc. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

In English Law. A notary. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Cowel.

NOTARY, NOTARY PUBLIC. An officer appointed by the executive or other appointing power, under the laws of different states.

Notaries are of ancient origin; they existed in Rome during the republic, and were called tabelliones forenses, or personæ publicæ. Their employment consisted in the drawing up of legal documents. They exist in all the countries of Europe, and as early as A. D. 803 were appointed by the Frankish kings and the popes. Notaries in England are appointed by the archbishop of Canterbury. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, § 4. They are officers of the civil and canon law; Brooke, Office & Pr. of a Notary, 9. In most of the states, notaries are appointed by the governor alone, in others by the governor, by and with the advice of his council, in others by and with the advice and consent of the senate. As a general rule, throughout the United States, the official acts of a notary public must be authenticated by seal as well as signature; 10 Iowa, 305; 49 Ala. 242; 12 Ill. 162.

Their duties differ somewhat in the different states, and are prescribed by statutes. They are generally as follows: to protest bills of exchange and draw up acts of honor; to authenticate and certify copies of documents; to receive the affidavits of mariners and draw up protests relating to the same; to attest and take acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments, and to administer oaths.

By act of congress, Sept. 16, 1850, notaries are authorized to administer oaths and take acknowledgments in all cases where under the laws of the United States justices of the peace were formerly authorized to act.

By act of Aug. 15, 1876, c. 304, notaries are authorized to take depositions and do all other acts in relation to taking testimony to be used in the courts of the United States, and to take acknowledgments and affidavits with the same effect as commissioners of the United States circuit courts may do. R. S. § 1778. By act of June 22, 1874, c. 390, notaries may take proof of debts against the estate of a bankrupt. By act of Feb. 26, 1881, c. 82, reports of national banks may be sworn to before notaries; R. S. § 5211. By act of Aug. 18, 1856, c. 127, every secretary of legation and consular officer may, within the limits of his legation, perform any notarial act; R. S. § 1750.

The acts of notaries are respected by the custom of merchants and the law of nations. Their protest of a bill is received as evidence in the courts of all civilized countries. Except in cases of protest of bills, the signature of a notary to an instrument going to a foreign country ought to be authenticated by the consul or representative of that country.

The notaries of England have always considered themselves authorized to administer oaths; and the act 5 & 6 Will. IV. has placed it beyond dispute. In this country they do not exercise the power unless authorized by statute, except in cases where the oath is to be used out of the state or in the courts of the United States.

Where an action is brought against a notary for a false certificate of acknowledgment, the presumption is that the defendant, acting in his judicial capacity, did so on reasonable information, and discharged his full duty. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove a clear and intentional dereliction of duty. 97 Penn. 228; Proff. Notaries §§ 48 and 135; Sewell, Bank; Notary's Manual.

NOTE OF A FINE. The fourth step of the proceedings in acknowledging a fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord, naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement, and enrolled of record in the proper office. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 351, App. n. iv. § 3; 1 Steph. Com. 518.

NOTE OF HAND. A popular name for a promissory note.

NOTE, OR MEMORANDUM. An informal note or abstract of a transaction made on the spot, and required by the Statute of Frauds.

The form of it is immaterial; but it must contain the essential terms of the contract expressed with such a degree of certainty that it may be understood without reference to parol evidence to show intent of parties; Browne, Stat. of Frauds, 353, 386, and cases cited; 43 Me. 158; 4 R. I. 14; 14 N. Y. 584; 1 E. D. Smith, 144; 2 id. 93; 31 Miss. 17; 11 Cush. 127; 9 Rich. 215; 10 id. 60; 23 Mo. 423; 17 Ill. 354; 3 Iowa, 430. In some states, and in England, the consideration need not be stated in the note or memorandum; 5 East, 10; 4 B. & Ald. 595; 5 Cra. 142; 17 Mass. 122; 6 Conn. 81. See Browne, Stat. of Frauds; MEMORANDUM.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A note or minute of the protest, made by the notary, at time of protest, on the bill, to be completed or filled out at his leisure. Byles, Bills, 9.

NOTES. See JUDGE'S NOTES; MINUTES.

NOTICE. The information given of some act done, or the interpellation by which some act is required to be done. Knowledge: as, A had notice that B was a slave. 5 How. 216; 7 Penn. L. J. 119.

Actual notice exists when knowledge is actually brought home to the party to be affected by it. This definition is criticized, as being too narrow, in Wade, Notice, 4. This writer divides actual knowledge into two classes, express and implied: the former includes all knowledge of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon the party the further duty of inquiry; the latter imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge, though he does not use them, choosing to remain ignorant of the fact, or is grossly negligent in not following up the inquiry which the known facts suggest; Wade, Notice, 5. In 42 Conn. 146, there is a division into "particular or explicit" and "general or implied" notice.

Constructive notice exists when the party, by any circumstance whatever, is put upon inquiry (which is the same as implied notice, supra), or when certain acts have been done which the party interested is presumed to have knowledge of on grounds of public policy; 2 Mas. 531; 14 Pick. 224; 4 N. H. 397; 14 S. & R. 333. The recording a deed; 23 Mo. 237; 25 Barb. 635; 28 Miss. 354; 4 Kent, 182, n.; an advertisement in a newspaper, when authorized by statute as a part of the process, public acts of government, lis pendens (but see LIS PENDENS), and the record of a deed, furnish constructive notice. Judge Story defines the term as "knowledge" imputed by the court on presumption, too strong to be rebutted, that the information must have been communicated; Story, Eq. Jur. § 399; and see 2 Anstr. 432. "Constructive notice is a legal inference of notice, of so high a nature, as to be conclusive, unless disproved, and is in most cases insusceptible of explanation or rebuttal by evidence that the purchaser had no actual notice, and believed the vendor's title to be good;" 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 77. Constructive notice is sometimes called notice in law; 1 Johns. Ch. 261. The constructive notice given by the record of a deed is sometimes called record notice. Where an instrument affecting the title to real estate is properly recorded, the record thereof is notice to subsequent purchasers, etc., from the same grantor; Wade, Notice, 54; 38 Tex. 530; 30 Ark. 407; 28 N. J. Eq. 49.

Notice to an agent in the same transaction is, in general, notice to the principal; 25 Conn. 444; 10 Rich. 293; 3 Penn. 67; 39 N. Y. 70. See 25 Am. L. Reg. 1.

The giving notice in certain cases is in the nature of a condition precedent to the right to call on the other party for the performance of his engagement, whether his contract were express or implied. Thus, in the familiar instance of bills of exchange and promissory notes, the implied contract of an indorser is that he will pay the bill or note, provided it be not paid, on presentment at maturity, by the acceptor or maker (being the party primarily liable), and provided that he (the indorser) has due notice of the dishonor, and without which he is discharged from all liability: consequently, it is essential for the holder to be prepared to prove affirmatively that such notice was given, or some facts dispensing with such notice; 1 Chitty, Pr. 496.

Whenever the defendant's liability to perform an act depends on another occurrence which is best known to the plaintiff, and of which the defendant is not legally bound to take notice, the plaintiff must prove that due notice was in fact given. So, in cases of insurances on ships, a notice of abandonment is frequently necessary to enable the assured plaintiff to proceed as for a total loss when something remains to be saved, in relation to which, upon notice, the insurers might themselves take their own measures.

Notice may be written or oral, in many cases, at the option of the party required to give it; but written notice is generally preferable, both as avoiding doubt and ambiguity in its terms, and as admitting more easy and exact proof of delivery.

NOTICE, AVERMENT OF. In Pleading. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

When the matter alleged in the pleading is to be considered as lying more properly in the knowledge of the plaintiff than of the defendant, then the declaration ought to state that the defendant had notice thereof: as, when the defendant promised to give the plaintiff as much for a commodity as another person had given or should give for the like.

But where the matter does not lie more properly in the knowledge of the plaintiff than of the defendant, notice need not be averred; 1 Saund. 117, n. 2; 2 id. 62 a, n. 4; Freem. 285. Therefore, if the defendant contracted to do a thing on the performance of an act by a stranger, notice need not be averred; for it lies in the defendant's knowledge as much as the plaintiff's, and he ought to take notice of it at his peril; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 65). See Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 73, 74, 75); Viner, Abr. Notice; Hardr. 42; 5 Term, 621.

The omission of an averment of notice, when necessary, will be fatal on demurrer or judgment by default; Cro. Jac. 432; but may be aided by verdict; 1 Stra. 214; 1 Saund. 228 a; unless in an action against the drawer of a bill, when the omission of the averment of notice of non-payment by the acceptor is fatal, even after verdict; Dougl. 679.

NOTICE OF DISHONOR. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or an indorser of a negotiable note, by a subsequent party, that it has been dishonored either by non-acceptance in the case of a bill, or by non-payment in the case of an accepted bill or a note.

The notice must contain a description of the bill or note; 5 Cush. 546; 14 Conn. 362; 1 Fla. 301; 1 Wisc. 264; sufficient to leave no doubt in the mind of the indorser, as a reasonable man, what note was intended; 3 Mete. Mass. 495; 5 Cush. 546; 7 Ala. N. S. 205; 12 N. Y. 551; 19 id. 518; 26 Me. 45; 11 Wheat. 431. See 10 N. Y. 279; 11 M. & W. 809; 5 Humphr. 335. As to what is a mis-description, see 7 Exch. 578; 1 M. & G. 76; 11 M. & W. 809; 15 id. 231; 9 Q. B. 609; 9 Pet. 33; 11 Wheat. 431; 17 How. 606; 1 N. Y. 413; 7 id. 19; 13 Miss.

44; 19 id. 382; 2 Mich. 238; 12 Mass. 6; 2 Penn. 355; 14 id. 483; 2 Ohio St. 345.

It must also contain a clear statement of the dishonor of the bill; 7 Bingh. 530; 1 Bingh. N. C. 194; 3 id. 368; 2 Cl. & F. 93; 2 M. & W. 799; 11 C. B. 1011; 3 Metc. Mass. 495; 18 Conn. 361; and something more than the mere fact of non-acceptance or non-payment must be stated; 3 Bingh. N. C. 688; 10 Ad. & E. 125; 8 C. & P. 355; 2 Q. B. 388; 14 M. & W. 44; 11 Wheat. 431; 3 Metc. Mass. 495; 9 id. 174; 5 Barb. 490; 1 Spears, 244; 2 Ohio St. 345; 3 Md. 202, 251; 11 id. 148; 1 Litt. Ky. 194; 2 Hawks, 560; 5 How. Miss. 552; except in some cases; 5 Cush. 546; 1 Md. 59, 504; 4 id. 409; as to 279; 19 Me. 31; 23 id. 392; 10 N. H. 526; the effect of the use of the word protested; 11 Wheat. 431; 9 Pet. 33; 7 Ala. N. S. 205; 2 Dougl. Mich. 495; 1 N. Y. 413; 10 id. 9 Rob. La. 161; 14 Conn. 362; 5 Cush. 546; 1 Wisc. 264; 4 N. J. 71. See some cases where the notice was held sufficient; 2 M. & W. 109, 799; 6 id. 400; 7 id. 515; 14 id. 7, 44; 6 Ad. & E. 499; 10 id. 131; 2 Q. B. 421; 1 E. & B. 801; 5 C. B. 388; 1 M. & G. 76.

As to whether there must be a statement that the party to whom the notice is sent is looked to for payment, see 1 Term, 169; 11 M. & W. 372; 2 Exch. 719; 2 Q. B. 388, 419; 14 id. 200; 7 C. B. 400; 4 D. & L. 744.

The notice is generally in writing, but may be oral; 4 Wend. 566; 16 Barb. 146; 3 Metc. Mass. 495; 8 Mo. 336; 7 C. B. 400; 11 id. 1011; 2 M. & W. 848; 8 C. & P. 355; 1 H. & W. 3. It need not be personally served, but may be sent by mail; 7 East, 385; 6 Wheat. 102; 6 Mass. 316; 14 id. 116; 1 Pick. 401; 28 Vt. 316; 15 Md. 285; 5 Penn. 178; 1 Conn. 329; 2 R. I. 467; 23 Mo. 213; 13 N. Y. 549; otherwise, perhaps, if the parties live in the same town; see 5 Metc. Mass. 352; 10 Johns. 490; 20 id. 372; 3 McLean, 96; 1 Conn. 367; 28 N. H. 302; 15 Me. 141; 15 Md. 285; 3 Rob. La. 261; 6 Blackf. 312; 3 Jones, 387; 3 Ala. N. S. 34; 3 Harr. Del. 419; 8 Ohio, 507; or left in the care of a suitable person, representing the party to be notified; 15 Me. 207; 2 Johns. 274; 20 Miss. 332; 16 Pick. 392; 14 La. 494; 19 Ill. 598; Holt, 476.

It should be sent to the place where it will most probably find the party to be notified most promptly; 6 Metc. 1, 7; 1 Pet. 578; 2 id. 543; whether the place of business; 1 Pet. 578; 3 McLean, 96; 5 Metc. Mass. 212, 352; 11 Johns. 231; 15 Me. 139; 8 W. & S. 138; 5 Penn. 178; 3 Harr. Del. 419; 6 Blackf. 312; 5 Humphr. 403; 3 Rob. La. 261; 1 La. An. 95; 1 Maule & S. 545; or place of residence; 4 Wash. C. C. 464; 28 Vt. 316; 1 Conn. 329. When sent by mail, it should be to the post-office to which the party usually resorts; 2 Pet. 543; 4 Wend. 328; 5 Denio, 329; 5 Penn. 160; 3 McLean, 91; 15 La. 38; 4 Humphr. 86; 3 Ga. 486; 11 Md. 486; 3 Ohio, 307; 8 Mo. 443; 6 Metc. 106; 6 H. & J. 172. See 2 Pet. 543; 8 Cush. 425; 2 Halst. 130.

Every person who, by and immediately upon the dishonor of the note or bill, and only upon such dishonor, becomes liable to an action either on the paper or on the consideration for which the paper was given, is entitled to immediate notice; 1 Pars. Notes & B. 499. The holder need give notice only to the parties and to the indorser whom he intends to hold liable; 25 Barb. 138; 19 Me. 62; 16 Mart. La. 220; 11 La. An. 137; 1 Ohio St. 206; 1 Rich. 369; 5 Miss. 272; 17 Ala. 258; 15 M. & W. 231.

Notice may be given by any party to a note or bill not primarily liable thereon as regards third parties, and not discharged from liability on it at the time notice is given; 8 Mo. 336; 16 S. & R. 157; 3 Dana, 126; 5 Miss. 272; 17 Ala. 258; 3 Wend. 173; 25 Barb. 138; 15 Md. 150; 15 La. 321; 14 Mass. 116; 2 Campb. 373; 4 id. 87; 5 Maule & S. 68; 3 Ad. & E. 193; 9 C. B. 46; 13 id. 249; 15 M. & W. 231. The late English doctrine that any party to a note or bill may give the notice by which an antecedent party may be held liable to subsequent parties, is now quite firmly established; Wade, Notice, § 709. Such notice may be by the holder's agent; 4 How. 336; 11 Rob. La. 454; 21 Tex. 680; 8 Mo. 704; 7 Ala. N. S. 205; 4 D. & L. 744; 15 M. & W. 231; an indorsee for collection; 2 Hall, N. Y. 112; 3 N. Y. 243; a notary; 2 How. 66; 28 Mo. 339; the administrator or executor of a deceased person; Story, Pr. Notes, § 304; the holder of the paper as collateral security; 14 C. B. N. S. 728. It has been held that notice by a stranger, pretending to be the holder, may be ratified by the real holder; 2 C. & K. 1016.

The notice must be forwarded as early as by a mail of the day after the dishonor which does not start at an unreasonably early hour; 9 N. H. 558; 2 Harr. N. J. 587; 24 Me. 458; 2 R. I. 437; 24 Penn. 148; 4 N. J. 71; 1 Ohio St. 206; 9 Miss. 261, 644; 13 Ark. 645; 7 Gill & J. 78; 4 Wash. C. C. 464; 2 Stor. 416; 4 Bingh. 715.

Notice of dishonor may be excused: where it is prevented by inevitable accident, or overwhelming calamity; by the prevalence of a malignant disease which suspends the operations of trade; by war, blockade, invasion or occupation by the enemy; by the interdiction of commerce between the countries from which or to which the notice is to be sent; by the impracticability of giving notice, by reason of the party entitled thereto having absconded, or having no fixed place of residence, or his place of business or residence being unknown, and incapable of being ascertained upon reasonable inquiries. These are the excuses of a general nature given by Story, on Pr. Notes and on Bills. Special excuses are: That the note was for the accommodation of the indorser only; an original agreement on the part of the indorser, made with the maker or other party, at all events to pay the note at maturity; the receiving security or indemnity from the maker, or other party for whose benefit the note is made, by the indorser, or money to take it up with; receiving the note as collateral security for another debt where the debtor is no party to the note, or, if a party has not indorsed it; an original agreement by the indorser to dispense with notice; an order or direction from the makee to the maker not to pay the note at maturity. See Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 293, 357.

Consult Bayley, Byles, Chitty, Story, on Bills of Exchange; Story, Promissory Notes; Parsons, Notes & Bills; Daniel, Negotiable Instruments; Wade, Notice.

NOTICE TO PLEAD. Written notice to defendant, requiring him to plead within a certain time. It must always be given before plaintiff can sign judgment for want of a plea. 1 Chitty, Archb. Pr. Prent. ed. 221. Notice to plead, indorsed on the declaration or delivered separately, is sufficient without demanding plea or rule to plead, in England, by statute. See 3 Chitty, Stat. 515.

NOTICE OF PROTEST. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or to an indorser of a note, by a prior party that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS. In Practice. When it is intended to give secondary evidence of a written instrument or paper which is in the possession of the opposite party, it is, in general, requisite to give him notice to produce the same on the trial of the cause, before such secondary evidence can be admitted.

To this general rule there are some exceptions: first, in cases where, from the nature of the proceedings, the party in possession of the instrument has notice that he is charged with the possession of it, as in the case of trover for a bond; 14 East, 274; 4 Taunt. 865; 6 S. & R. 154; 4 Wend. 626; 1 Campb. 143; second, where the party in possession has obtained the instrument by fraud; 4 Esp. 256. See 1 Phill. Ev. 425; 1 Stark. Ev. 362; Rosc. Civ. Ev. 4.

In general, a notice to produce papers ought to be given in writing, and state the title of the cause in which it is proposed to use the papers or instruments required; 2 Stark. 19. It seems, however, that the notice may be by parol; 1 Campb. 440. It must describe with sufficient certainty the papers or instruments called for, and must not be too general and by that means be uncertain; Ry. & M. 341; M'Cl. & Y. 139.

The notice may be given to the party himself, or to his attorney; 2 Term, 203, n.; 3 id. 306; Ry. & M. 327; 1 Mood. & M. 96.

The notice must be served a reasonable time before trial, so as to afford an opportunity to the party to search for and produce the instrument or paper in question; 1 Stark. 283; Ry. & M. 47, 327; 1 Mood. & M. 96, 335, n.

When a notice to produce an instrument or paper in the cause has been proved, and it is also proved that such paper or instrument was, at the time of the notice, in the hands of the party or his privy, and upon request in court he refuses or neglects to produce it, the party having given such notice and made such proof will be entitled to give secondary evidence of such paper or instrument thus withheld.

NOTICE TO QUIT. A request from a landlord to his tenant to quit the premises leased, and to give possession of the same to him, the landlord, at a time therein mentioned. 3 Wend. 337, 357; 7 Halst. 99.

The form of the notice. The notice or demand of possession should contain a request from the landlord to the tenant or person in possession to quit the premises which he holds from the landlord (which premises ought to be particularly described, as being situate in the street and city or place, or township and county), and to deliver them to him on or before a day certain,—generally, when the lease is for a year, the same day of the year on which the lease commences. But where there is some doubt as to the time when the lease is to expire, it is proper to add, "or at the expiration of the current year of your tenancy." 2 Esp. 589. It should be dated, signed by the landlord himself, or by some person in his name, who has been authorized by him, and directed to the tenant. The notice must include all the premises under the same demise; for the landlord cannot determine the tenancy as to part of the premises demised and continue it as to the residue. For the purpose of bringing an ejectment, it is not necessary that the notice should be in writing, except when required to be so under an express agreement between the parties; Comyns, Dig. Estate by Grant (G 11, n. p.); 2 Campb. 96; 2 M. & R. 439. But it is the general and safest practice to give written notices; and it is a precaution which should always, when possible, be observed, as it prevents mistakes and renders the evidence certain and correct. Care should be taken that the words of a notice be clear and decisive, without ambiguity or giving an alternative to the tenant; for if it be really ambiguous or optional, it will be invalid; Adams, Ej. 122.

As to the person by whom the notice is to be given. It must be given by the person interested in the premises, or his agent properly appointed; Adams, Ej. 120. See 3 C. B. 215. As the tenant is to act upon the notice at the time it is given to him, it is necessary that it should be such as he may act upon with security, and should, therefore, be binding upon all the parties concerned at the time it is given. Where, therefore, several persons are jointly interested in the premises, they need not all join in the notice; but, if any of them be not a party at the time, no subsequent ratification by him will be sufficient by relation to render the notice valid. But see 5 East, 461; 2 Phill. Ev. 184; 2 Esp. 677; 1 B. & Ad. 135; 7 M. & W. 139. But if the notice be given by an agent, it is sufficient if his authority is afterwards recognized; 3 B. & Ald. 689. But see 10 B. & C. 621.

As to the person to whom the notice should be given. When the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, difficulties can seldom occur as to the party upon whom the notice should be served. It should invariably be given to the tenant of the party serving the notice notwithstanding a part may have been underlet or the whole of the premises may have been assigned; Adams, Ej. 119; 5 B. & P. 330; 14 East, 284; 6 B. & C. 41; unless, perhaps, the lessor has recognized the sub-tenant as his tenant; 10 Johns. 270. When the premises are in possession of two or more as joint tenants or tenants in common, the notice should be to all. A notice addressed to all and served upon one only will, however, be a good notice; Adams, Ej. 128.

As to the mode of serving the notice. The person about serving the notice should make two copies of it, both signed by the proper person, then procure one or more respectable persons for witnesses, to whom he should show the copies, who, upon comparing them and finding them alike, are to go with the person who is to serve the notice. The person serving the notice then, in their presence, should deliver one of these copies to the tenant personally, or to one of his family, at his usual place of abode, although the same be not upon the demised premises; 2 Phill. Ev. 185; or serve it upon the person in possession; and where the tenant is not in possession, a copy may be served on him, if he can be found, and another on the person in possession. The witnesses should then, for the sake of security, sign their names on the back of the copy of the notice retained, or otherwise mark it so as to identify it; and they should also state the manner in which the notice was served. In the case of a joint demise to two defendants, of whom one alone resided upon the premises, proof of the service of the notice upon him has been held to be sufficient ground for the jury to presume that the notice so served upon the premises has reached the other who resided in another place; 7 East, 553; 5 Esp. 196.

At what time it must be served. At common law it must be given six calendar months before the expiration of the lease; 1 Term, 159; 3 id. 13; 8 Cow. 13; 1 Vt. 311; 1 Dana, 30; 5 Yerg. 431; 4 Ired. 291; 17 Mass. 287; see 2 Pick. 70, 71; 8 S. & R. 458; 2 Rich. 346; and three months is the common time under statutory regulations; and where the letting is for a shorter period the length of notice is regulated by the time of letting; 6 Bing. 362; 5 Cush. 563; 23 Wend. 616. Difficulties sometimes arise as to the period of the commencement of the tenancy; and when a regular notice to quit on any particular day is given, and the time when the term began is unknown, the effect of such notice, as to its being evidence or not of the commencement of the tenancy, will depend upon the particular circumstances of its delivery: if the tenant, having been applied to by his landlord respecting the time of the commencement of the tenancy, has informed him it began on a certain day, and in consequence of such information a notice to quit on that day is given at a subsequent period, the tenant is concluded by his act, and will not be permitted to prove that in point of fact the tenancy has a different commencement; nor is it material whether the information be the result of design or ignorance, as the landlord is in both instances equally led into error; Adams, Ej. 130; 2 Esp. 635; 2 Phill. Ev. 186. In like manner, if the tenant at the time of delivery of the notice assent to the terms of it, it will waive any irregularity as to the period of its expiration; but such assent must be strictly proved; 4 Term, 361; 2 Phill. Ev. 183. When the landlord is ignorant of the time when the term commenced, a notice to quit may be given not specifying any particular day, but ordering the tenant in general terms to quit and deliver up the possession of the premises at the end of the current year of his tenancy thereof, which shall expire next after the end of three months from the date of the notice. See 2 Esp. 589.

What will amount to a waiver of the notice. The acceptance of rent accruing subsequently to the expiration of the notice is the most usual means by which a waiver of it may be produced; but the acceptance of such rent is open to explanation; and it is the province of the jury to decide with what views and under what circumstances the rent is paid and received; Adams, Ej. 139; 2 Campb. 387. If the money be taken with an express declaration that the notice is not thereby intended to be waived, or accompanied by other circumstances which may induce an opinion that the landlord did not intend to continue the tenancy, no waiver will be produced by the acceptance: the rent must be paid and received as rent, or the notice will remain in force; Cowp. 243. The notice may also be waived by other acts of the landlord; but they are generally open to explanation, and the particular act will or will not be a waiver of the notice, according to the circumstances which attend it; 2 East, 236; 10 id. 13; 1 Term, 53. It has been held that a notice to quit at the end of a certain year is not waived by the landlord's permitting the tenant to remain in possession an entire year after the expiration of the notice, notwithstanding the tenant held by an improving lease,—that is, to clear and fence the land and pay the taxes; 1 Binn. 333. In cases, however, where the act of the landlord cannot be qualified, but must of necessity be taken as a confirmation of the tenancy, as if he distrain for rent accruing after the expiration of the notice, or recover in an action for use and occupation, the notice of course will be waived; Adams, Ej. 144; 1 H. Blackst. 311; 6 Term, 219; 19 Wend. 391. See 13 C. B. 178.

NOTING. A term denoting the act of a notary in minuting on a bill of exchange, after it has been presented for acceptance or payment, the initials of his name, the date of the day, month, and year when such presentment was made, and the reason, if any has been assigned, for non-acceptance or non-payment, together with his charge. The noting is not indispensable, it being only a part of the protest: it will not supply the protest. 4 Term, 175.

NOTOUR. In Scotch Law. Open; notorious. A notour bankrupt is a debtor who, being under diligence by horning and caption of his creditor, retires to sanctuary, or absconds, or defends by force, and is afterwards found insolvent by court of sessions. Bell, Dict.; Act of 1696, c. 5; Burton, Law of Scotl. 601.

NOVA CUSTOMA. An imposition or duty. See ANTIQUA CUSTOMA.

NOVA SCOTIA. A province of British North America, and now, by the "British North American Act, 1867," a part of the Dominion of Canada.

It includes Nova Scotia proper, a peninsula two hundred and eighty miles long and from fifty to one hundred miles wide, trending E. N. E., and connected with the province of New Brunswick by an isthmus only eight miles wide in its widest part, and the island of Cape Breton, separated from the eastern extremity of Nova Scotia proper by the Gut of Canso. Nova Scotia proper lies between latitude 43° 25′ and 46° north, and long. 61° and 66° 30′ west.

England founds her claim to the original discovery of this province upon the patent granted by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Humphrey Gilbert, A. D. 1578.

This was followed by De la Roche's unfortunate attempt to colonize the Isle of Sable.

De Monts, having in 1603 received an appointment from Henri IV. of France, sailed the following year, with Champlain, De Poutrincourt, and others.

After exploring the outer shore of the peninsula, having entered the bay of Fundy, De Poutrincourt settled Port Royal, A. D. 1605,—the first permanent settlement in British North America. From this time the English began to assert their claims, and colonists from Virginia expelled the colony of De Monts.

The French regained possession, but only to be again expelled by the strong force sent against them by Cromwell, A. D. 1654.

Thirteen years later, England ceded the province to France by the treaty of Breda, A. D. 1667; but in the new wars it was again ravaged by the English, who reacquired it in A. D. 1713; and in 1749 it was formally colonized by the British Government.

The French colonists, having resisted and joined the Indians, were defeated by the British, and their stronghold, Louisburgh on Cape Breton, was taken by Massachusetts colonists acting under a plan suggested by a Massachusetts lawyer.

In 1758 the province received its constitution, and in 1763 France, by the treaty of Paris, ceded all rights whatsoever.

In 1784 New Brunswick and Cape Breton were separated from Nova Scotia; but Cape Breton was reattached in 1819.

In 1867 it became a province of the Dominion of Canada. See supra; CANADA.

NOVA STATUTA. New statutes. A term including all statutes passed in the reign of Edw. III. and subsequently. VETERA STATUTA.

NOVÆ NARRATIONES. "New counts or talys." A book of such pleadings as were then in use, published in the reign of Edw. III. 3 Bla. Com. 297; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 439.

NOVATION (from Lat. novare, novus, new). The substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished.

Novation takes place when a debtor contracts towards his creditor a new debt that is substituted for the old one that is extinguished. French Civil Code, art. 1271. It is one of the modes by which debts become extinct.

In Civil Law. There are three kinds of novation.

First, where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one. Here, either the subject-matter of the debt may be changed, or the conditions of time, place, etc. of payment.

Second, where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted for the old. This novation may be made without the intervention or privity of the old debtor (in this case the new agreement is called expromissio, and the new debtor expromissor), or by the debtor's transmission of his debt to another, who accepts the obligation and is himself accepted by the creditor. This transaction is called delegatio. Domat lays down the essential distinction between a delegation and any other novation, thus: that the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt.

Third, where the debt remains the same, but a new creditor is substituted for the old. This also is called delegatio, for the reason adduced above, to wit: that all three parties must assent to the new bargain. It differs from the cessio nominis of the civil law by completely cancelling the old debt, while the cessio nominis leaves the creditor a claim for any balance due after assignment.

In every novation the old debt is wholly extinguished by the new. To effect such a transformation, several things are requisite.

First, there must be an anterior obligation of some sort, to serve as a basis for the new contract. If the old debt be void, as being, e. g., contra bonos mores, then the new debt is likewise void; because the consideration for the pretended novation is null. But if the old contract is only voidable, in some cases the new one may be good, operating as a ratification of the old. Moreover, if the old debt be conditional, the new is also conditional, unless made otherwise by special agreement,—which agreement is rarely omitted.

Second, the parties innovating must consent thereto. In the modern civil law, every novation is voluntary. Anciently, a novation not having this voluntary element was in use. And not only consent is exacted, but a capacity to consent. But capacity to make or receive an absolute payment does not of itself authorize an agreement to innovate.

Third, there must be an express intention to innovate,—the animus novandi. A novation is never presumed. If an intent to destroy the old debt be not proved, two obligations now bind the debtor,—the old and the new. Conversely, if the new contract be invalid, without fraud in the transaction, the creditor has now lost all remedy. The anterior obligation is destroyed without being replaced by a new one.

An important rule of novation is that the extinction of the debt destroys also all rights and liens appertaining thereto. Hence, if any hypothecations be attached to the ancient agreement, they are cancelled by the new one, unless express words retain them. The second contract is simple and independent, and upon its terms is the action ex stipulatu to be brought. Hence, too, the new parties cannot avail themselves of defences, claims, and set-offs which would have prevailed between the old parties.

Obviously, a single creditor may make a novation with two or more debtors who are each liable in solido. In this case any one debtor may make the contract to innovate; and if such a contract be completed, all his fellow-debtors are discharged with him from the prior obligation. Therefore Pothier says that, under the rule that novation cancels all obligations subsidiary to the main one, sureties are freed by a novation contracted by their principal. The creditor must specially stipulate that co-debtors and guarantors shall consent to be bound by the novation, if he wish to hold them liable. If they do not consent to such novation, the parties all remain, as before, bound under the old debt. So in Louisiana the debt due to a community creditor is not necessarily novated by his taking the individual note of the surviving spouse, with mortgages to secure its payment. 11 La. An. 687.

It follows that the new debtor, in a delegation, can claim nothing under the old contract, since he has consented to the destruction of that contract. For the same reason, a creditor cannot proceed against the discharged debtor. And this is true though the new debtor should become insolvent while the old remains solvent. And even though at the time of the novation the new debtor was insolvent, still the creditor has lost his remedy against the old debtor. But the rule, no doubt, applies only to a bona fide delegation. And a suit brought by the creditor against a delegated debtor is not evidence of intention to discharge the original debtor. 11 La. An. 93.

In a case of mistake, the rule is this: if the new debtor agree to be substituted for the old, under the belief that he himself owes so much to the discharged debtor, although he do not in fact owe the amount, yet he is bound to the creditor on the novation; because the latter has been induced to discharge the old debtor by the contract of the new, and will receive only his due in holding the new debtor bound. But where the supposed creditor had really no claim upon the original debtor, the substitute contracts no obligation with him; and even though he intended to be bound, yet he may plead the fact of no former debt against any demand of the creditor, as soon as this fact is made known to him.

A novation may be made dependent on a condition. In that case the parties remain bound, as before, until the condition is fulfilled. The new debtor is not freed from a conditional novation as to the creditor until the condition happens; and he is not liable in an action to the old debtor until it is performed.

Any obligation which can be destroyed at all may be destroyed by novation. Thus, legacies, judgments, etc., with mortgages, guarantees, and similar accessories, are as much the subjects of novation as simple contract debts. But a covenant by the obligee of a bond not to sue the obligor within a certain time is not an example of the civil-law novation. The agreement was not a release, not a substituted contract, but a covenant merely, for the breach of which the obligee has his action; 19 Johns. 129.

The preceding summary is founded on Massé, Droit Commercial, liv. v. tit. 1, ch. 5, § 2; Mackeldey, Römischen Rechts, and Pothier, Traité des Obligations, pt. 3, ch. 2. See, also, Domat's Civil Law, trans. by Dr. Strahan (Cushing's ed.), part. i. b. iv. tit. 3, 4; and Burge, Suretyship, b. 2, c. 5, Am. ed. pp. 168–190.

At Common Law. The common-law doctrine of novation mainly agrees with that of the civil law, but in some parts differs from it.

The term novation is rarely employed. The usual common-law equivalent is assignment, and sometimes merger. Still, this form of contract found its way into common-law treatises as early as Fleta's day, by whom it was called innovatio. Item, per innovationem, ut si transfusa sit obligatio de una persona in aliam, quæ in se susceperit obligationem. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 12. The same words here quoted are also in Bracton, lib. 3, c. 2, § 13, but we have novationem for innovationem. In England, recently, the term novation has been revived in some cases.

A case of novation is put in Tatlock vs. Harris, 3 Term, 180. "Suppose A owes B £100, and B owes C £100, and the three meet, and it is agreed between them that A shall pay C the £100: B's debt is extinguished, and C may recover that sum against A."

The subject of novation has been much before the courts in reference to the transfers of the business of life assurance companies. In order to constitute a novation the old obligation must be discharged; and it has often been the interest of claimants on the transferor company, where the transferee company has become insolvent, to contend that there is no "novation," but that the old obligation is still in force. In England the questions which have arisen on this matter are for the most part set at rest by the stat. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 41, s. 7, providing that no policy-holder shall be deemed to have abandoned any claim against the original company, and to have accepted in lieu thereof the liability of the new company, unless such abandonment and acceptance shall have been signified by some writing signed by him, or by his agent lawfully authorized. Moz. & W.

There must always be a debt once existing and now cancelled, to serve as a consideration for the new liability. The action in all cases is brought on the new agreement. But in order to give a right of action there must be an extinguishment of the original debt; 4 B. & C. 163; 1 M. & W. 124; 14 Ill. 34; 4 La. An. 281; 15 N. H. 129.

No mere agreement for the transformation of one contract into another is of effect until actually carried into execution and the consent of the parties thereto obtained. A good novation is an accord executed; 5 B. & Ad. 925; 3 N. & M'C. 171; 1 Strs. 426; 15 M. & W. 23; see 1 Ad. & E. 106; 2 Campb. 383; 1 La. 410; 1 Exch. 601; 24 Conn. 621; otherwise, if there be no satisfaction; 2 Scott, N. R. 938.

But where an agreement is entered into by deed, that deed gives in itself a substantial cause of action; and the giving such deed may be a sufficient accord and satisfaction for a simple contract debt; Co. Litt. 212 b; 1 Burr. 9; 2 Rich. 608; 3 W. & S. 276; 1 Hill, N. Y. 567. See 1 Mass. 503; 11 Wend. 321.

In the civil law delegatio, no new creditor could be substituted without the debtor's consent. This rule is observed in the common law. Hence, without this consent and promise to pay, a new creditor can have no action against the debtor, because there is no privity of contract between them. To establish such privity there must be a new promise founded on sufficient consideration; 14 East, 582; 3 Mer. 652; 5 Wheat. 277; 12 Ga. 406; 15 id. 486; 5 Ad. & E. 115; 7 Harr. & J. 213, 219; 21 Me. 484.

But in equity a creditor may assign his claim fully to another without any intervention of the debtor; and the assignee is not even compelled to sue in his assignor's name; 14 Conn. 141; 3 Swanst. 392; 4 Rand. 392; Mart. & Y. 378.

The extinction of the prior debt is consideration enough to support a novation. If A holds B's note, payable to A, and assigns this for value to C, B is by such transfer released from his promise to A, and this is sufficient consideration to sustain his promise to C; 1 Pars. Contr. ch. 13; 2 Barb. 349. And a consideration need not be expressed in the contract of novation; though one must be proved in order to defend in a suit brought by creditors of the assignor.

When assent or consideration is wanting, the novation operates only as a species of collateral security. The transferee cannot sue in his own name, and will be subject to all the equitable defences which the debtor had against the original creditor. This assent on the debtor's part is said to be essential, for the reason that he may have an account with his assignor, and he shall not be barred of his right to a set-off. Still, if any thing like an assent on the part of a holder of money can be inferred, he will be considered as the debtor; 4 Esp. 203; 6 Tex. 163; If the debtor's assent be not secured, the order of transfer may be revoked before it is acted on.

In a delegation, if the old debtor agree to provide a substitute, he must put his creditor into such a position that the latter can claim full satisfaction from the delegated debtor, or otherwise the original liability remains, and there is no novation; 19 Mo. 322, 637. See 3 B. & Ald. 64; 5 id. 925; 5 B. & C. 196; 4 Esp. 89; 4 Price, 200; 2 M. & W. 484; 6 Cra. 253; 12 Johns. 409; 7 id. 311; 21 Wend. 450.

The existing Louisiana law is based upon the doctrines of the Civil Code considered above. It is held in numerous cases that "novation is not to be presumed:" hence the receipt of a bill or note is not necessarily a novation, or extinguishment of the debt for which it is given. An express declaration to that effect is required in most of our states, or else acts tantamount to a declaration. An intention to discharge the old debt must be shown in all cases; and this intention is sufficient to work a novation; 4 La. An. 329, 543; 6 id. 669; 9 id. 228, 497; 12 id. 299. "The delegation by which the debtor gives to the creditor another debtor, who obliges himself towards such creditor, does not operate a novation unless the creditor has expressly declared his intention to discharge the debtor who made the delegation." 13 La. An. 238.

One of the most common of modern novations is the surrender and destruction of an old promissory note or bill of exchange, and the receipt of a new one in payment thereof. The rules of novation apply as completely to debts evidenced by mercantile paper as to all other obligations; Story, Bills, § 441; Pothier, de Change, n. 189; Thoms. Bills, ch. 1, § 3. Hence, everywhere, if the parties intend that a promissory note or bill shall be absolute payment, it will be so considered; 10 Ad. & E. 593; 4 Mas. 336; 1 Rich. 37, 112; 9 Johns. 310; 13 Vt. 452. In some states, the receipt of a negotiable promissory note is prima facie payment of the debt upon which it is given, and has an action upon the account unless the presumption is controverted; 12 Mass. 237; 12 Pick. 268; 5 Cush. 158; 8 Me. 298; 29 Vt. 32. "If a creditor gives a receipt for a draft in payment of his account, the debt is novated." 2 La. 109. But see the cases cited supra for the full Louisiana law. In most states, however, the rule is, as in England, that, whether the debt be pre-existing or arise at the time of giving the note, the receipt of a promissory note is prima facie a conditional payment only, and works no novation.

It is payment only on fulfilment of the condition, i. e. when the note is paid; 5 Beav. 415; 40 E. L. & Eq. 625; 6 Cra. 264; 2 Johns. Cas. 438; 15 Johns. 224, 247; 27 N. H. 253; 11 Gill & J. 416; 4 R. I. 383; 8 Cal. 501; 2 Speers, 438; 2 Rich. 244; 15 S. & R. 162.

If a vendor transfer his vendee's note, he can only sue on the original contract when he gets back the note, and has it in his power to return it to his vendee; 1 Pet. C. C. 262; 4 Rich. 59. See DISCHARGE; PAYMENT;

NOVEL ASSIGNMENT. See NEW ASSIGNMENT.

NOVEL DISSEISIN. The name of an old remedy which was given for a new or recent disseisin.

When tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, was put out and disseised of his lands or tenements, rents, and the like, he might sue out a writ of assize or novel disseisin; and if, upon trial, he could prove his title and his actual seisin, and the disseisin by the present tenant, he was entitled to have judgment to recover his seisin and damages for the injury sustained; 3 Bla. Com. 187. This remedy is obsolete.

NOVELLÆ LEONIS. The ordinances of the emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains one hundred and thirteen Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilæus.

NOVELS, NOVELLÆ CONSTITUTIONES. In Civil Law. The name given to the constitutions or laws of Justinian and his immediate successors, which were promulgated soon after the Code of Justinian.

It appears to have been the intention of Justinian, after the completion of the second and revised edition of the Code, to supply what had not been foreseen in the preceding laws, together with any necessary amendments or alterations, not by revising the Code, but by supplementary laws. Such laws he promulgated from time to time; but no official compilation of them is known to have been made until after his death, when his laws, 159 in number, with those of the reigns of Justin II. and Tiberius, nine in number, were collected, together with some local edicts, under this name. They belong to various times between 535 and 565 A.D.

Although the Novels of Justinian are the best known, and when the word Novels only is mentioned those of Justinian are always intended, he was not the first who used that name. Some of the acts of Theodosius, Valentinian, Leo, Severus, Authennius, and others, were also called Novels. But the Novels of the emperors who preceded Justinian had not the force of law after the legislation of that emperor. Those Novels are not, however, entirely useless; because, the Code of Justinian having been compiled to a considerable extent from the Theodosian Code and the earlier Novels, the latter frequently remove doubts which arise on the construction of the Code.

The original language of the Novels was for the most part Greek; but they are represented in the Corpus Juris Civilis by a Latin translation of 134 of them. These form the fourth part of the Corpus Juris Civilis. They are directed either to some officer, or an archbishop or bishop, or to some private individual of Constantinople; but they all had the force and authority of law.

The 118th Novel is the foundation and groundwork of the English Statute of Distribution of Intestates' Effects, which has been copied in many states of the Union. See 1 P. Wms. 27; Prec. in Chanc. 593.

NOVELTY. In Patent Law. Every device for which a patent is sought should have, to some extent, the attributes of novelty. It is said to be difficult to lay down a rule as to novelty which will meet all cases. The subject matter of a patent is said to be new when it is substantially different from what has gone before; Curtis, Pat. § 41. In patents for a composition of matter the test is said to be not whether the materials of which the combination is made are new, but whether the combination is new. See Curtis, Pat.; 12 O. G. 351; 2 Fish. 120.

NOVUS HOMO (Lat. a new man). This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, by which he is restored to society and is rehabilitated.

NOXA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Damage resulting from an offence committed by an irresponsible agent. The offence itself. The punishment for the offence. The slave or animal who did the offence, and who is delivered up to the person aggrieved (datur noxæ) unless the owner choose to pay the damage. The right of action is against whoever becomes the possessor of the slave or animal (noxa caput sequitur). D. de furt. L. 41; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calv. Lex.

NOXAL ACTION. See NOXA.

NUBILIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who is of a proper age to be married. Dig. 32. 51.

NUDE. Naked. Figuratively, this word is applied to various subjects.

A nude contract, nudum pactum, is one without a consideration. Nude matter is a bare allegation of a thing done, without any evidence of it.

NUDUM PACTUM. A contract made without consideration.

It is a mere agreement, without the requisites necessary to confer upon it a legal obligation to perform. 3 McLean, 330; 2 Denio, 463; 6 Ired. 480; 1 Strobh. 329; 1 Ga. 294; 1 Dougl. Mich. 188. The term, and the rule which decides upon nullity of its effects, are borrowed from the civil law; yet the common law has not in any degree been influenced by the notions of the civil law in defining what constitutes a nudum pactum. Dig. 19. 5. 5. See, on this subject, a learned note in Fonbl. Eq. 335, and 2 Kent, 364. Toullier defines nudum pactum to be an agreement not executed by one of the parties. Tom. 6, n. 13, page 10.

It is of no consequence whether the agreement be oral or written; 7 Term, 350; 7

Bro. P. C. 550; 4 Johns. 235; 5 Mass. 301, 392; 2 Day, 22; but a contract under seal cannot be held a nudum pactum for lack of consideration, since the seal imports consideration; 2 B. & Ald. 551. See CONSIDERATION; MAXIMS, Ex nudo pacto; 2 Bla. Com. 445; 16 Vin. Abr. 16.

NUISANCE. Any thing that unlawfully worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. 3 Bla. Com. 5, 216.

That class of wrongs that arise from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, either real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or to the right of another or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt that the law will presume a consequent damage. Wood, Nuisance.

A private nuisance is anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. It produces damage to but one or a few persons, and cannot be said to be public; 36 N. Y. 297; 35 N. H. 357; 5 R. I. 185; Adams, Eq. 210; 3 Bla. Com. 215.

A public or common nuisance is such an inconvenience or troublesome offence as annoys the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person. It produces no special injury to one more than another of the people; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 197; 4 Bla. Com. 166.

A mixed nuisance is one which, while producing injury to the public at large, does some special damage to some individual or class of individuals; Wood, Nuisance, 22.

It is difficult to say what degree of annoyance constitutes a nuisance. If a thing is calculated to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of a man's house, it is a nuisance; 3 Jur. N. S. 571. In relation to offensive trades, it seems that when such a trade renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable it is a nuisance; 1 Burr. 333; 5 Esp. 217; 13 Allen, 95; 116 E. C. L. 608; 45 Cal. 55; 35 Iowa, 221; for the neighborhood have a right to pure and fresh air; 2 C. & P. 485; 6 Rog. 61; 26 L. T. (N. S.) 277; 22 N. J. 26; 58 Penn. 275; 4 B. & S. 608.

A thing may be a nuisance in one place which is not so in another; therefore the situation or locality of the nuisance must be considered. A tallow-chandler, for example, setting up his business among other tallow-chandlers, and increasing the noxious smells of the neighborhood, is not guilty of setting up a nuisance unless the annoyance is much increased by the new manufactory; Peake, 91. Such an establishment might be a nuisance in a thickly populated town of merchants and mechanics where no such business was carried on; 3 Grant, 302. The same doctrine obtains as regards other trades or employments. Persons living in populous manufacturing towns must expect more noise, smoke, and disturbance than those living elsewhere, and the circumstances of every case must govern; 21 Conn. 213; 58 Penn. 275; 54 Me. 272. Carrying on an offensive trade for several years in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood, to the occupants of and travellers upon which it is a nuisance. Formerly the contrary doctrine obtained, on the ground that the complainants were in fault in coming to a nuisance. This doctrine is now very properly exploded, as it is manifest that an observance of it would interfere greatly with the growth of towns and cities; 6 Gray, 473; 7 Blackf. 534; 2 C. & P. 483; 7 East, 191; 23 Wend. 446; 8 Phila. 10; 5 Scott, 500; 3 Barb. 167. The trade may be offensive for noise; 51 N. Y. 300; 10 L. T. (N. S.) 241; 2 Bing. 34; Keames, Sel. Dec. 175; L. R. 4 Ch. App. 388; 2 Sim. N. S. 133; L. R. 8 Ch. App. 467; 2 Show. 327; 22 Vt. 321; 6 Cush. 80; or smell; 2 C. & P. 485; 13 Metc. Mass. 365; 1 Denio, 524; 34 Tex. 230; 100 Mass. 597; 33 Conn. 121; 43 N. H. 415; or for other reasons; 1 Johns. 78; 1 Swan, 213; Thach. Crim. Cas. 14; 3 East, 192; 3 Jur. N. S. 570; 73 Penn. 84; L. R. 5 Eq. Ca. 166; 52 N. H. 262.

To constitute a public nuisance, there must be such a number of persons annoyed that the offence can no longer be considered a private nuisance; 1 Burr. 337; 4 Esp. 200; 1 Stra. 686, 704; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 607, n.; 8 Ind. 494; 1 Wheat. 469; 37 Barb. 301.

Public nuisances arise in consequence of following particular trades, by which the air is rendered offensive and noxious; Cro. Car. 510; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 75, § 10; 2 Ld. Raym. 1163; 1 Burr. 333; 1 Stra. 686; 4 B. & S. 608; 23 Vt. 92; from acts of public indecency, as bathing in a public river in sight of the neighboring houses; 1 Russell, Crimes, 302; 2 Campb. 89; Sid. 168; 29 Ind. 517; 18 Vt. 574; 5 Barb. 203; 20 Ala. 65; 5 Rand. 627; or for acts tending to a breach of the public peace, as for drawing a number of persons into a field for the purpose of pigeon-shooting, to the disturbance of the neighborhood; 3 B. & Ald. 184; or for rude and riotous sports or pastimes; 5 Hill, 121; 1 Mod. 76; 8 Cow. 169; 3 Keb. 510; 1 S. & R. 40; 6 C. P. 324; or keeping a disorderly house; 1 Russell, Crimes, 298; 13 Gray, 26; 5 Cranch, 304; 8 Blackf. 208; 1 Salk. 282; 30 N. J. 103; or a gaming-house; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 75, § 6; or a bawdy-house; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1. c. 74 § 1; 9 Conn. 350; 13 Gray, 26; 26 N. Y. 190; 54 Barb. 299; or a dangerous animal, known to be such, and suffering him to go at large, as a large bulldog accustomed to bite people; 4 Burn, Just. 578; 90 B. 101; 28 Wisc. 480; 40 Vt. 347; or exposing a person having a contagious disease, as the smallpox, in public; 4 M. & S. 73, 472; and the like. The bringing a horse infected with the glanders into a public place, to the danger of infecting the citizens, is a misdemeanor at common law; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 24; 2 H. & N. 299; 16 Conn. 272; 41 Barb. 329. The selling of tainted and unwholesome food is likewise indictable; 4 N. C. L. 309; 3 Hawks. 376; 3 M. & S. 11. The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant was bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable nuisance, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 325. See 3 Jur. N. S. 570. So of storing combustible articles in undue quantities or in improper places; 56 Barb. 72; 3 East, 192; 57 Penn. 274; 2 Hen. & M. 345; or the erection and maintenance of purprestures; Story, Eq. § 921; 9 Wend. 571; 28 N. Y. 396; 55 Barb. 404; 10 Pet. 623; 23 Vt. 92; 2 Wall. 403; 10 id. 557.

Private nuisances may be to corporeal inheritances: as, for example, if a man should build his house so as to throw the rain-water which fell on it on my land; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 184; 39 Barb. 400; 5 Rep. 101; keep hogs or other animals so as to incommode his neighbor and render the air unwholesome; 9 Co. 58; or to incorporeal hereditaments; as, for example, obstructing a right of way by ploughing it up or laying logs across it, and the like; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 183; 2 Rolle, Abr. 140; or obstructing a spring; 1 Campb. 463; 6 East, 208; interfering with a franchise, as a ferry or railroad, by a similar erection unlawfully made. It is impossible to state here a list of the offences held to be nuisances. Any annoyance arising from odors, smoke, unhealthy exhalations, noise, interference with water-power, etc. etc., whereby a man is prevented from fully enjoying his own property, may be ranked as a private nuisance.

The remedies are by an action for the damage done, by the owner, in the case of a private nuisance; 3 Bla. Com. 220; or by any party suffering special damage, in the case of a public nuisance; 4 Wend. 9; 3 Vt. 529; 1 Penn. 309; Carth. 194; Vaugh. 341; 3 M. & S. 472; 2 Bingh. 283; 1 Esp. 148; 28 Vt. 142; 36 Cal. 193; 2 R. I. 493; by abatement by the owner, when the nuisance is private; 2 Rolle, Abr. 565; Rolle, 394; 3 Bulstr. 198; 3 Dowl. & R. 556; 37 Penn. 503; 8 Dana, 158; and in some cases when it is public; 9 Co. 55; 2 Salk. 458; 3 Bla. Com. 5. But in neither case must there be any riot, and very pressing exigency is requisite to justify summary action of this character, particularly in the case of a public nuisance; 14 Wend. 397; 11 Ark. 252; 16 Q. B. 546; by injunction, which is the most usual and efficacious remedy; see INJUNCTION; or by indictment for a public nuisance; 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 856; Whart. Crim. Law (2 ed.) § 1410, etc.

See Wood on Nuisance.

NUL AGARD (L. Fr. no award). In Pleading. A plea to an action on an arbitration bond, when the defendant avers that there was no legal award made. 3 Burr. 1730; 2 Stra. 923.

NUL DISSEISIN. In Pleading. No disseisin. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin. It is a species of the general issue.

NUL TIEL RECORD (Fr. no such record). In Pleading. A plea which is proper when it is proposed to rely upon facts which disprove the existence of the record on which the plaintiff founds his action.

Any matters may be introduced under it which tend to destroy the validity of the record as a record, provided they do not contradict the recitals of the record itself; 10 Ohio, 100. It is frequently used to enable the defendant to deny the jurisdiction of the court from which the alleged record emanates; 2 McLean, 129; 22 Wend. 293.

It is said to be the proper plea to an action on a foreign judgment, especially if of a sister state, in the United States; 2 Leigh, 72; 6 id. 570; 17 Vt. 302; 6 Pick. 232; 11 Miss. 210; 1 Penn. 499; 2 South. 778; 2 Breese, 2; though it is held that nil debet is sufficient; 33 Me. 268; 3 J. J. Marsh. 600; especially if the judgment be that of a justice of the peace; 3 Harr. N. J. 408. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

NUL TORT (L. Fr. no wrong). In Pleading. A plea to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong. It is a species of general issue.

NUL WASTE. In Pleading. The general issue in an action of waste; Co. 3d Inst. 700 a, 708 a. The plea of nul waste admits nothing, but puts the whole declaration in issue; and in support of this plea the defendant may give in evidence any thing which proves that the act charged is no waste, as that it happened by tempest, lightning, and the like; Co. Litt. 283 a; 3 Wms. Saund. 238, n. 5.

NULL. Properly, that which does not exist; that which is not in the nature of things. In a figurative sense it signifies that which has no more effect than if it did not exist. 8 Toullier, n. 320.

NULLA BONA (L. Lat. no goods). The return made to a writ of fieri facias by the sheriff, when he has not found any goods of the defendant on which he could levy. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3393.

NULLITY. An act or proceeding which has absolutely no legal effect whatever. See Chitty, Contr. 228.

NULLITY OF MARRIAGE. The requisites of a valid and binding marriage have been considered in the article on that subject. If any of these requisites are wanting in a given case, the marriage is either absolutely void, or voidable at the election of one or both of the parties. The more usual imperfections which thus render a marriage void or voidable are: 1. Unsoundness of mind in either of the parties. 2. Want of age; i. e., fourteen in males and twelve in females. 3. Fraud or error; but these must relate to the essentials of the relation, as personal identity, and not merely to the accidentals, as character, condition, or fortune. 4. Duress. 5. Physical impotence, which must exist at the time of the marriage and be incurable. 6. Consanguinity or affinity within the prohibited degrees. 7. A prior subsisting marriage of either of the parties. The fifth and sixth are termed canonical, the remainder, civil impediments.

The distinction between the two is important,—the latter rendering the marriage absolutely void, while the former only renders it voidable. In the one case, it is not necessary (though it is certainly advisable) to bring a suit to have nullity of the marriage ascertained and declared: it may be treated by the parties as no marriage, and will be so regarded in all judicial proceedings. In the other case, the marriage will be treated as valid and binding until its nullity is ascertained and declared by a competent court in a suit instituted for that purpose; and this must be done during the lifetime of both parties: if it is deferred until the death of either, the marriage will always remain good. But the effect of such sentence of nullity, when obtained, is to render the marriage null and void from the beginning, as in the case of civil impediments.

For the origin and history of this distinction between void and voidable marriages, see Bish. Marr. & D. c. 4.

A suit for nullity is usually prosecuted in the same court, and is governed by substantially the same principles, as a suit for divorce; Bish. Marr. & D. c. 15.

In its consequences, a sentence of nullity differs materially from a divorce. The latter assumes the original validity of the marriage, and its operation is entirely prospective. The former renders the marriage void from the beginning, and nullifies all its legal results. The parties are to be regarded legally as if no marriage had ever taken place: they are single persons, if before they were single; their issue are illegitimate; and their rights of property as between themselves are to be viewed as having never been operated upon by the marriage. Thus, the man loses all right to the property, whether real or personal, which belongs to the woman; and the woman loses her right to dower; Bish. Marr. & D. §§ 647, 659.

Neither is the woman, upon a sentence of nullity, entitled to permanent alimony; though the better opinion is that she is entitled to alimony pendente lite; Bish. Marr. & D. §§ 563, 579–580. See ALIMONY.

NULLIUS FILIUS (Lat.). The son of no one; a bastard.

A bastard is considered nullius filius as far as regards his right to inherit. But the rule of nullius filius does not apply in other respects, and has been changed by statute in most states so as to make him the child of his mother.

The mother of a bastard, during its age of nurture, is entitled to the custody of her child, and is bound to maintain it; 6 S. & R. 255; 2 Johns. 375; 15 id. 208; 2 Mass. 109; 12 id. 387, 433; 4 B. & P. 148. But see 5 East, 224, n.

The putative father, too, is entitled to the custody of the child as against all but the mother; 1 Ashm. 56. And it seems that the putative father may maintain an action, as if his child were legitimate, for marrying him without his consent, contrary to law. Add. Penn. 212. See BASTARD; CHILD; FATHER; MOTHER; PUTATIVE FATHER.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM (Lat.). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action on an arbitration bond for not fulfilling the award, by which the defendant asserts that there is no award.

NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM (Lat.). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action of debt upon an obligation for the performance of an award, by which the defendant denies that he submitted to arbitration, etc. Bacon, Abr. Arbitr. etc. (G).

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT. The statute 3 Geo. III. c. 16. See 32 Geo. III. c. 58, and 7 Will. c. 3. It was so called because the right of the crown to sue, etc., was limited by it to sixty years, in contradiction to the maxim, Nullum tempus occurrit regi; 3 Chitty, Stat. 63.

NUMBER. A collection of units.

In pleading, numbers must be stated truly when alleged in the recital of a record, written instrument, or express contract; Lawes, Pl. 48; 4 Term, 314; Cro. Car. 262; Dougl. 669; 2 W. Blackst. 1104. But in other cases it is not, in general, requisite that they should be truly stated; because they are not required to be strictly proved. If, for example, in an action of trespass the plaintiff proves the wrongful taking away of any part of the goods duly described in his declaration, he is entitled to recover pro tanto; Bacon, Abr. Trespass (I 2); Lawes, Pl. 48.

And sometimes, when the subject to be described is supposed to comprehend a multiplicity of particulars, a general description is sufficient. A declaration in trover alleging the conversion of "a library of books," without stating their number, titles, or quality, was held to be sufficiently certain; 3 Bulstr. 31; Carth. 110; Bacon, Abr. Trover (F 1); and in an action for the loss of goods by burning the plaintiff's house, the articles may be described by the simple denomination of "goods" or "divers goods." 1 Kebl. 825; Plowd. 85, 118, 123; Cro. Eliz. 837; 1 H. Blackst. 284.

NUMERATA PECUNIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Money counted or paid; money given in payment by count. See PECUNIA NUMERATA and PECUNIA NON-NUMERATA. L. 3, 10, C. de non numerat. pecun.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

NUNC PRO TUNC (Lat. now for then). A phrase used to express that a thing is done at one time which ought to have been performed at another.

Leave of court must be obtained to do things nunc pro tunc; and this is granted to answer the purposes of justice, but never to do injustice. A judgment nunc pro tunc can be entered only when the delay has arisen from the act of the court; 3 C. B. 970. See 1 V. & B. 312; 1 Moll. 462; 13 Price, 604.

A plea puis darrein continuance may be entered nunc pro tunc after an intervening continuation, in some cases; 11 N. H. 299; and lost pleadings may be replaced by new pleadings made nunc pro tunc; 1 Mo. 327.

By the Jud. Act of 1875, Ord. xli. r. 2, the entry of a judgment pronounced by a judge in court, shall be dated as of the day on which such judgment is pronounced, and the judgment shall take effect from that date. And in other cases, by r. 3, the entry of judgment shall be dated as of the day on which the requisite documents are left with the proper officer for the purpose of such entry, and the judgment shall take effect from that date. Moz. & W.

NUNCIATIO. In Civil Law. A formal proclamation or protest. It may be by acts (realis) or by words. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 237. Thus, nunciatio novi operis was an injunction which one man could place on the erection of a new building, etc. near him, until the case was tried by the prætor. Id.; Calv. Lex. An information against a criminal. Calv. Lex.

NUNCIO. The name given to the pope's ambassador. Nuncios are ordinary or extraordinary; the former are sent upon usual missions, the latter upon special occasions.

NUNCIUS. In International Law. A messenger; a minister; the pope's legate, commonly called a nuncio.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL. An oral will, declared by testator in extremis, or under circumstances considered equivalent thereto, before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. 4 Kent. 576; 2 Bla. Com. 500; 1 Jarm. Wills, 130, 136. In early times this kind of will was very common, and before the Statute of Frauds, by which it was virtually abolished, save in the case of soldiers and sailors, was of equal efficacy, except for lands, tenements, and hereditaments, with a written testament. Such wills are subject to manifest abuses, and by stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 9, 11 (preceded by 1 Will. IV. c. 20), the privilege is confined to soldiers in actual service, and sailors at sea, and extends only to personal estate. Similar provisions have been enacted in Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, Rhode Island, Virginia, West Virginia, and the territory of Montana. In Georgia, the statute embraces both real and personal property. In California and Dakota, the decedent must have been in actual military service, or at sea, and in immediate fear of death. In the other states, nuncupative wills by persons in extremis are still recognized, subject to restrictions as to amount of property bequeathed similar to those of the English statute of frauds. The following principles, among others, are well established: Statutes relating to nuncupative wills are strictly construed; 2 Phillim. 194; id. 190; 78 Ill. 287; 47 Penn. 31; 33 Miss. 629. The testator must be in extremis, overtaken by violent sickness, in contemplation of death, and without time to make a written will; 1 Addams, 389; 20 Johns. 502; 6 W. & S. 184; 10 Gratt. 548; but see 2 Ala. (N. S.) 242; 82 Ill. 50; the deceased must have clearly intimated by word or signs to those present that he intended to make the will; 9 B. Monr. 553; 27 Ill. 247; 26 N. H. 372; 14 La. An. 729; 36 Md. 630; 2 Greenl. 298; 63 Ill. 455; 46 Iowa, 694; testamentary capacity must be most clearly proved; 12 Gill & J. 192; 78 Ill. 287. In "actual military service," is held to mean during warfare, and while on an expedition; 3 Curt. 531; 58 Me. 561; but this rule has been somewhat freely treated; 39 Vt. 498; 1 Abb. Pr. (U. S.) 112. Sailors must be serving on shipboard; 2 Curt. 339; 2 R. I. 133. The term mariner applies to every one in the naval or mercantile service; 4 Bradf. 154. See, in general, 1 Wms. Exec. 59; Swinb. Wills; Redf. Wills, 185; Ayliffe, Pand.; Proff. Wills; note to Sykes vs. Sykes, 20 Am. Dec. 44.

NUNDINÆ (Law Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Fair or fairs. Dion. Halicarnass. lib. 2, p. 98; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. Hence Nundination, traffic at fairs.

NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS (Lat. never indebted). In Pleading. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 C. & P. 545; 1 M. & W. 542; 1 Q. B. 77. In England, this plea has been substituted for nil debet, q.v., as the general issue in debt on a simple contract.

NUNTIUS, NUNCIUS. In Old English Practice. One who made excuse for absence of one summoned. An apparitor, beadle, or sergeant. Cowel. A messenger or legate: e.g. pope's nuncio. Jacob, Law Dict. Essoniator was sometimes wrongly used for nuntius in the first sense. Bracton, fol. 345, § 2.

NUPER OBIIT (Lat. he or she lately died). In Practice. The name of a writ which in the English law lies for a sister coheiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee-simple. Fitzh. N. B. 197. Abolished in 1833.

NURTURE. The act of taking care of children and educating them. The right to the nurture of children generally belongs to the father till the child shall arrive at the age of fourteen years, and not longer. Till then he is guardian by nurture; Co. Litt. 38 b.

But in special cases the mother will be preferred to the father; 5 Binn. 520; 2 S. & R. 174; and after the death of the father the mother is guardian by nurture. Fleta, l. 1, c. 6; Comyns, Dig. Guardian (D). See GUARDIAN; HABEAS CORPUS.

NURUS (Lat.). A daughter-in-law. Dig. 50. 16. 50.

O.

OATH. An outward pledge given by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God. Tyler, Oaths, 15.

The term has been variously defined: as, "a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness if he do not declare the whole truth, so far as he knows it," 1 Stark. Ev. 22; or, "a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth," 2 Leach, 482; or, as "a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to avenge his imposture or violated faith, or, in other words, to punish his perjury if he shall be guilty of it," 10 Toullier, nn. 343-348; Puffendorff, b. 4, c. 2, § 4. The essential idea of an oath would seem to be, however, that of a recognition of God's authority by the party taking it, and an undertaking to accomplish the transaction to which it refers as required by his laws.

In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

Assertory oaths are those required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office: such, for example, as custom-house oaths.

Extra-judicial oaths are those taken without authority of law. Though binding in foro conscientiæ, they do not, when false, render the party liable to punishment for perjury.

Judicial oaths are those administered in judicial proceedings.

Promissory or official oaths are oaths taken, by authority of law, by which the party declares that he will fulfil certain duties therein mentioned: as, the oath which an alien takes, on becoming naturalized, that he will support the constitution of the United States: the oath which a judge takes that he will perform the duties of his office. The breach of this does not involve the party in the legal crime or punishment of perjury; 3 Zabr. 49. Where an appointee neglects to take an oath of office when required by statute to do so, he cannot be considered qualified, nor justify his doings as an officer; 2 N. H. 202; s. c. 9 Am. Dec. 50.

The form of administering the oath may be varied to conform to the religious belief of the individual, so as to make it binding upon his conscience; 16 Pick. 154; 2 Gall. 346; 3 Park. Cr. 590; 2 Hawkes, 458; 7 Ill. 540; Ry. & M. 77. The most common form is upon the gospel, by taking the book in the hand: the words commonly used are, "You do swear that," etc., "so help you God," and then kissing the book; 9 C. & P. 137. The origin of this oath may be traced to the Roman law; Nov. 8, tit. 3; Nov. 74, cap. 5; Nov. 124, cap. 1; and the kissing the book is said to be an imitation of the priest's kissing the ritual, as a sign of reverence, before he reads it to the people; Rees, Cycl. In New England, New York, and in Scotland the gospels are not generally used, but the party taking the oath holds up his right hand and repeats the words here given; 1 Leach, 412, 498.

Another form is by the witness or party promising holding up his right hand while the officer repeats to him, "You do swear by Almighty God, the searcher of hearts, that," etc., "and this as you shall answer to God at the great day."

In another form of attestation, commonly called an affirmation (q. v.), the officer repeats, "You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that," etc.

A Jew is sworn on the Pentateuch, or Old Testament, with his head covered; Stra. 821, 1113; a Mohammedan, on the Koran; 1 Leach, 54; a Gentoo, by touching with his hand the foot of a Brahmin or priest of his religion; a Brahmin, by touching the hand of another such priest; Wils. 549; 1 Atk. 21; a Chinaman, by breaking a china saucer; 1 C. & M. 248. See 25 Alb. L. J. 301.

The form and time of administering oaths, as well as the person authorized to administer, are usually fixed by statute. See Gilp. 439; 1 Tyl. 347; 1 South. 297; 4 Wash. C. C. 555; 2 Blackf. 35; 2 McLean, 135; 9 Pet. 238; 1 Va. Cas. 181; 8 Rich. So. C. 456; 1 Swan, 157; 5 Mo. 21; 48 Cal. 197; 41 Conn. 206. The administering of unlawful oaths is an offence against the government, punishable in England by transportation; Whart. Lex.

The subject of oaths has undergone much revision of late years by parliament. By the Promissory Oaths Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72) a number of unnecessary oaths have been abolished, and declarations substituted. The same act provides a new form of the oath of allegiance, and forms of a judicial oath and an official oath to be taken by particular officers. See also Promissory Oaths Act of 1871.

OATH AGAINST BRIBERY. One which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854. Whart. Lex.

OATH OF CALUMNY. In Civil Law. An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not actuated by a spirit of chicanery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action. Pothier, Pand. lib. 5, tt. 16, 17, s. 124. This oath is somewhat similar to our affidavit of a cause of action. See Dunl. Adm. Pr. 289, 290; JURAMENTUM CALUMNIÆ.

OATH DECISORY. In Civil Law. An oath which one of the parties defers or refers back to the other for the decision of the cause.

It may be deferred in any kind of civil contest whatever, in questions of possession or of claim, in personal actions, and in real. The plaintiff may defer the oath to the defendant whenever he conceives he has not sufficient proof of the fact which is the foundation of his claim; and in like manner the defendant may defer it to the plaintiff when he has not sufficient proof of his defence. The person to whom the oath is deferred ought either to take it or refer it back; and if he will not do either, the cause should be decided against him. Pothier, Obl. pt. 4, c. 3, s. 4.

The decisory oath has been practically adopted in the district court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts; and admiralty causes have been determined in that court by the oath decisory. But the cases in which this oath has been adopted have been where the tender has been accepted; and no case is known to have occurred there in which the oath has been refused and tendered back to the adversary. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 290, 291.

OATH EX OFFICIO. The oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offence was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence; 3 Bla. Com. 101, 447; Mox. & W.

OATH IN LITEM. An oath which in the civil law was deferred to the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, particularly when there was a fraud on the part of the defendant and he suppressed proof in his possession. See Greenl. Ev. § 348; Tait, Ev. 280; 1 Vern. 207; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; 1 Me. 27; 1 Yeates, 34; 12 Viner, Abr. 24.

In general, the oath of the party cannot, by the common law, be received to establish his claim, but is admitted in two classes of cases: first, where it has been already proved that the party against whom it is offered has been guilty of some fraud or other tortious or unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence can be had of the amount of damages. See 1 Pet. 591; 9 Wheat. 486; 5 Pick. 436; 15 id. 368; 16 Johns. 193; 17 Ohio, 156; 3 N. H. 135. As, for example, where a trunk of goods was delivered to a shipmaster at one port to be carried to another, and on the passage he broke the trunk open and rifled it of its contents, in an action by the owners of the goods against the shipmaster, the facts above mentioned having been proved aliunde, the plaintiff was held a competent witness to testify as to the contents of the trunk; 1 Me. 27; 11 id. 412. And see 10 Watts, 335; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348; 12 Metc. 44; 2 Watts, 220; 12 Mass. 360. Second, the oath in litem is also admitted on the ground of public policy where it is deemed essential to the purposes of justice; Tait, Ev. 280; 1 Pet. 596; 6 Mood. 137; 2 Stra. 1186. But this oath is admitted only on the ground of necessity. An example may be mentioned of a case where a statute can receive no execution unless the party interested be admitted as a witness; 16 Pet. 203.

OATH PURGATORY. An oath by which one destroys the presumptions which were against him, for he is then said to purge himself, when he removes the suspicions which were against him: as, when a man is in contempt for not attending court as a witness, he may purge himself of the contempt, by swearing to a fact which is an ample excuse. See PURGATION.

OATH SUPPLETORY. In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. An oath required by the judge from either party in a cause, upon half-proof already made, which being joined to half-proof, supplies the evidence required to enable the judge to pass upon the subject. See 3 Bla. Com. 270.

OBEDIENCE. The performance of a command.

Officers who obey the command of their superiors, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, are not responsible for their acts. A sheriff may, therefore, justify a trespass under an execution, when the court has jurisdiction, although irregularly issued; 3 Chitty, Pr. 75; Hamm. N. P. 48.

A child, an apprentice, a pupil, a mariner, and a soldier owe respectively obedience to the lawful commands of the parent, the master, the teacher, the captain of the ship, and the military officer having command; and in case of disobedience submission may be enforced by correction.

OBIT. That particular solemnity or office for the dead which the Roman Catholic church appoints to be read or performed over the body of a deceased member of that communion before interment; also, the office which upon the anniversary of his death was frequently used as a commemoration or observance of the day; Dy. 313.

OBITER DICTUM. See DICTUM.

OBJECTS OF A POWER. The persons who are intended to be benefited by the distribution of property settled subject to a power.

OBLATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A tender of money in payment of debt made by debtor to creditor. L. 9, C. de solut. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious. Calv. Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

OBLIGATIO. In Roman Law. A legal bond which obliges us to the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1179.

It corresponded nearly to our word contract. Justinian says, "Obligatio est juris vinculum, quo necessitate adstringimur alicujus solvendæ rei, secundum nostræ civitatis jura." Pr. J. 3. 13.

The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civile. In the course of time, however, the prætorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them: hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles, and obligationes prætoriæ. Inst. 1. 3. 13. But there was a third class, the obligationes naturales, which derived their validity from the law of nature and nations, or the natural reason of mankind. These had not the binding force of the other classes, not being capable of enforcement by action, and are, therefore, not noticed by Justinian in his classification; but they had, nevertheless, a certain efficacy even in the civil law: for instance, though a debt founded upon a natural obligation could not be recovered by an action, yet if it was voluntarily paid by the debtor he could not recover it back, as he might do in the case of money paid by mistake, etc. where no natural obligation existed. L. 38, pr. D. 12. 6. And see Ortolan, 2, § 1180.

The second classification of obligations made by Justinian has regard to the way in which they arise. They were, in this aspect, either ex contractu or quasi ex contractu, or ex maleficio or quasi ex maleficio. Inst. 2. 3. 13. These will be discussed separately.

Obligationes ex contractu, those founded upon an express contract, are again subdivided into four classes, with reference to the mode in which they are contracted. The contract might be entered into re, verbis, literis, or consensu.

A contract was entered into re by the actual transfer of a thing from one party to the other. Though in such cases the understanding of the parties as to the object of the transfer, and the conditions accompanying it, formed an essential part of the contract, yet it was only by the actual delivery of the thing that the contract was generated. The only contracts which could be entered into in this way were those known to our law as bailments,—a term derived from the French word bailler, to deliver, and evidently pointing to the same characteristic feature in the translation which the Romans indicated by the word re. These were the mutuum, or loan of a thing to be consumed in the using and to be returned in kind, the commodatum, or gratuitous loan of a thing to be used and returned, the depositum, or delivery of a thing to be kept in safety for the benefit of the depositor, and the pignus, or delivery of a thing in pledge to a creditor, as security for his debt. See MUTUUM; COMMODATUM; DEPOSITUM; PIGNUS; Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1208 et seq.; Mackeldey, Röm. Recht, §§ 396–408. Besides the above named contractus reales, a large class of contracts which had no special names, and were thence called contractus innominati, were included under this head, from the fact that they, like the former, gave rise to the actio præscriptis verbis. Some of these were the contracts of exchange, of mutual compromise, of doubtful or contested claims (somewhat resembling our accord and satisfaction), of factorship, etc. See Mackeldey, §§ 409–414.

Contracts were entered into verbis, by a formal interrogation by one party and response by the other. The interrogation was called stipulatio, and the party making it, reus stipulandi. The response was called promissio, and the respondent, reus promittendi. The contract itself, consisting of the interrogation and response, was often called stipulatio. In the time of the earlier jurists, the stipulation could only be entered into by the use of certain formulary words by the parties: as, for instance, Spondes? do you promise? Spondeo, I promise; Dabis? will you give? Dabo, I will give; Facies? will you do this? Faciam, I will do it, etc. etc. But by a constitution of the emperor Leo, A. D. 469, the obligation to use these particular words was done away, and any words which expressed the meaning of the parties were allowed to create a valid stipulation, and any language understood by the parties might be used with as much effect as Latin. Such contracts were called verbis, because their validity depended entirely upon the use of the words. The mere agreement of the parties without using the question and response could not beget a stipulation; and, on the other hand, if the question and response had been used, the obligation was created although there might be an absence of consent. In this latter case, however, equitable relief would be granted by the prætor. Ortolan, Inst. § 1250. Stipulations, and, indeed, all other forms of contracts, might be made either pure, i. e. absolutely, or in diem, i. e. to take effect at a future day, or sub conditione, i. e. conditionally. But some kinds of conditions, such as those physically impossible, were inadmissible, and invalidated the contract; while others, such as those which were absurd, were themselves invalidated, and the contract was considered as having been made absolutely. Mackeldey, §§

415–421; Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1235–1413; Inst. 3. 13–20.

Contracts entered into literis were obsolete in the reign of Justinian. In the earlier days of Roman jurisprudence, every citizen kept a private account-book. If a creditor, at the request of his debtor, entered in such book his charge against his debtor, such entry, in pursuance of the request, constituted not merely evidence of a contract, but the contract itself. This was the contract formed litiris, in writing. The debtor, on his part, might also make a corresponding entry of the transaction in his own book. This was, in fact, expected of him, and was generally done; but it seems not to have been necessary to the validity of the contract. The entry was made in the form of a fictitious payment; it was allowable only in pecuniary transactions; it must be simple and unconditional, and could not be made to take effect at a future day. The charge might be made against the original debtor, a re in personam, or against a third person who agreed to take his place, a persona in personam. This species of literal contract was called nomina, nomina transcriptitia, or acceptilatio et expensilatio. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1414–1428. This species of contract seems never to have been of great importance; they had disappeared entirely before the time of Justinian; Hadley, Rom. Law, 216.

There were two other literal contracts known to the early jurisprudence, called syngraphia and chirographia; but these even in the times of Gaius had become so nearly obsolete that very little is known about them. All these, it must be borne in mind, were contracts themselves, not merely evidences of a contract; and this distinguishes them from the instruments of writing in use during the latter ages of the civil law. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1414–1441; Mackeldey, § 422.

Contracts were made consensu, by the mere agreement of the contracting parties. Although such agreement might be proved by a written instrument, as well as in other ways, yet the writing was only evidence of the contract, not the contract itself. This species of consensual contracts are emptio et venditio, or sale, locatio et conductio, or hiring, emphyteusis, or conveyance of land reserving a rent, societas, or partnership, and mandatum, or agency. See these words.

Obligationes quasi ex contractu. In the Roman law, persons who had not in fact entered into a contract were sometimes treated as if they had done so. Their legal position in such cases had considerable resemblance to that of the parties to a contract, and is called an obligatio quasi ex contractu. Such an obligation was engendered in the cases of negotiorum gestio, or unauthorized agency, of communio incidens, a sort of tenancy in common not originating in a contract, of solutio indebiti, or the payment of money to one not entitled to it, of the tutela and cura, resembling the relation of guardian and ward, of the additio hereditatis and agnitio bonorum possessionis, or the acceptance of an heirship, and many others. Some include in this class the constitutio dotis, settlement of a dower. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1522–1632; Mackeldey, §§ 457–468.

Obligationes ex maleficio or ex delicto. The terms maleficium, delictum, embraced most of the injuries which the common law denominates torts, as well as others which are now considered crimes. This class includes furtum, theft, rapina, robbery, damnum, or injury to property, whether direct or consequential, and injuria, or injury to the person or reputation. The definitions here given of damnum and injuria are not strictly accurate, but will serve to convey an idea of the distinction between them. All such acts, from the instant of their commission, rendered the perpetrator liable for damages to the party injured, and were, therefore, considered to originate an obligatio. Inst. 4. 1–4; Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1715–1780.

Obligationes quasi ex delicto. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1781–1792.

Obligationes ex variis causarum figuris. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to the four classes which have been enumerated, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities have, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and have given to this class the above designation, borrowed from Gaius, l. 1, pr. § 1 D. 44, 7. See Mackeldey, §§ 474–482. See, generally, Hadley, Roman Law, 209, etc.

OBLIGATION (from Lat. obligo, ligo, to bind). A duty.

A tie which binds us to pay or do something agreeably to the laws and customs of the country in which the obligation is made. Inst. 3. 14.

A bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like, and which differs from a bill, which is generally without a penalty or condition, though it may be obligatory. Co. Litt. 172.

A deed whereby a man binds himself under a penalty to do a thing. Comyns, Dig. Obligation (A); 2 S. & R. 502; 6 Vt. 40; 1 Blackf. 241; Harp. 434; Baldw. 129.

An absolute obligation is one which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfilment according to the engagement.

An accessory obligation is one which is dependent on the principal obligation; for example, if I sell you a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on my part is to make you a title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver you all the title-papers which I have relating to it, to take care of the estate till it is delivered to you, and the like.

An alternative obligation is where a person engages to do or to give several things in such a manner that the payment of one will acquit him of all.

Thus, if A agrees to give B, upon a sufficient consideration, a horse, or one hundred dollars, it is an alternative obligation. Pothier, Obl. pt. 2, c. 3, art. 6, no. 245.

In order to constitute an alternative obligation, it is necessary that two or more things should be promised disjunctively: where they are promised conjunctively, there are as many obligations as the things which are enumerated; but where they are in the alternative, though they are all due, there is but one obligation, which may be discharged by the payment of any of them.

The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor; Dougl. 14; 1 Ld.Raym. 279; 4 Mart. La. N. s. 167. If one of the acts is prevented by the obligee or the act of God, the obligor is discharged from both. See 2 Evans, Pothier, Obl. 52-54; Viner, Abr. Condition (S b); CONJUNCTIVE; DISJUNCTIVE; ELECTION.

A civil obligation is one which has a binding operation in law, and which gives to the obligee the right of enforcing it in a court of justice; in other words, it is an engagement binding on the obligor. 4 Wheat. 197; 12 id. 318, 337.

Civil obligations are divided into express and implied, pure and conditional, primitive and secondary, principal and accessory, absolute and alternative, determinate and indeterminate, divisible and indivisible, single and penal, and joint and several. They are also purely personal, purely real, or mixed.

A conditional obligation is one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus. In this case the obligation can only be discharged by delivering the identical horse.

A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided with or without the consent of the parties.

It is clear that it may be divided by consent, as those who made it may modify or change it as they please. But some obligations may be divided without the consent of the obligor: as, where a tenant is bound to pay two hundred dollars a year rent to his landlord, the obligation is entire; yet, if his landlord dies and leaves two sons, each will be entitled to one hundred dollars; or if the landlord sells one undivided half of the estate yielding the rent, the purchaser will be entitled to receive one hundred dollars and the seller the other hundred. See APPORTIONMENT.

Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation.

Imperfect obligations are those which are not binding on us as between man and man, and for the non-performance of which we are accountable to God only: such as charity or gratitude. In this sense an obligation is a mere duty. Pothier, Obl. art. prél. n. 1.

An implied obligation is one which arises by operation of law: as for example, if I send you daily a loaf of bread, without any express authority, and you make use of it in your family, the law raises an obligation on your part to pay me the value of the bread.

An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share. See DIVISIBLE.

A joint obligation is one by which several obligors promise to the obligee to perform the obligation. When the obligation is only joint, and the obligors do not promise separately to fulfil their engagement, they must be all sued, if living, to compel the performance: or, if any be dead, the survivors must all be sued. See PARTIES TO ACTIONS.

A natural or moral obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice.

As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished; 5 Binn. 573. Although natural obligations cannot be enforced by action, they have the following effect; first, no suit will lie to recover back what has been paid or given in compliance with a natural obligation: 1 Term, 285; 1 Dall. 184; second, a natural obligation has been held to be a sufficient consideration for a new contract; 2 Binn. 501; 5 id. 33; Yelv. 41 a, n. 1; Cowp. 290; 2 Bla. Com. 445; 3 Bos. & P. 249, n.; 2 East, 506; 3 Taunt. 311; 5 id. 36; 3 Pick. 207; Chitty, Contr. 10; but see MORAL OBLIGATION; CONSIDERATION.

A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

A perfect obligation is one which gives a right to another to require us to give him something or not to do something. These obligations are either natural or moral, or they are civil.

A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance.

It also denotes an obligation in which the obligor binds himself only, not including his heirs or representatives.

A primitive obligation, which in one sense may also be called a principal obligation, is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled.

A principal obligation is one which is the most important object of the engagement of the contracting parties.

A pure or simple obligation is one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, it has been fulfilled.

A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

A familiar example will explain this. When an estate owes an easement as a right of way, it is the thing, and not the owner, who owes the easement. Another instance occurs when a person buys an estate which has been mortgaged, subject to the mortgage: he is not liable for the debt, though the estate is. In these cases the owner has an interest only because he is seised of the servient estate or the mortgaged premises, and he may discharge himself by abandoning or parting with the property. The obligation is both personal and real when the obligor has bound himself and pledged his estate for the fulfilment of his obligations.

A secondary obligation is one which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. For example, if I sell you my house, I bind myself to give a title: but I find I cannot, as the title is in another: then my secondary obligation is to pay you damages for my non-performance of my obligation.

A several obligation is one by which one individual, or, if there be more, several individuals, bind themselves separately to perform the engagement. In this case each obligor may be sued separately; and if one or more be dead, their respective executors may be sued. See PARTIES TO ACTIONS.

A single obligation is one without any penalty: as where I simply promise to pay you one hundred dollars. This is called a single bill, when it is under seal.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATIONS OF CONTRACTS.

OBLIGEE. The persons in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 11.

Obligees are either several or joint. An obligee is several when the obligation is made to him alone; obligees are joint when the obligation is made to two or more; and in that event each is not a creditor for his separate share, unless the nature of the subject or the particularity of the expression in the instrument lead to a different conclusion. 2 Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 56; Dy. 350 a, pl. 20; Hob. 172; 2 Brownl. 207; Yelv. 177; Cro. Jac. 251.

OBLIGOR. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 12. One who makes a bond.

Obligors are joint and several. They are joint when they agree to pay the obligation jointly; and then the survivors only are liable upon it at law, but in equity the assets of a deceased joint obligor may be reached; 1 Bro. C. 29; 2 Ves. 101, 371. They are several when one or more bind themselves each of them separately to perform the obligation. In order to become an obligor, the party must actually, either himself or by his attorney, enter into the obligation and execute it as his own. If a man sign and seal a bond as his own, and deliver it, he will be bound by it although his name be not mentioned in the bond; 4 Ala. 479; 4 Hayw. 239; 4 M'Cord, 203; 7 Cow. 484; 2 Hen. & M. 398; 5 Mass. 538; 2 Dana, 463; 4 Munf. 380; 4 Dev. 272. When the obligor signs between the penal part and the condition, still the latter will be a part of the instrument; 7 Wend. 345; 3 Hen. & M. 144.

The execution of a bond by the obligor, in blank, with verbal authority to fill it up, does not bind the obligor, though it is afterwards filled up, unless the bond is redelivered or acknowledged or adopted; 1 Yerg. 69, 149; 1 Hill, N. Y. 267; 2 N. & M'C. 125; 2 Brock. 64; 1 Ohio, 368; 2 Dev. 369; 6 Gill & J. 250. But see, contra, 17 S. & R. 438; and see 6 id. 308; Wright, Ohio, 742; BLANK.

OBLITERATION. In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the obliteration of part of a will, leaving it otherwise complete, with the intention by the testator to annul only what was cancelled, leaves the residue valid; 123 Mass. 102; 19 Alb. L. J. 328; 39 L. T. (N. S.) 581; 22 N. J. Eq. 463. But under the present Wills Act in England; 1 Vict. c. 26; any obliterations or other alterations must be duly attested as is required for the execution of a will, except that such attestation may be limited to the alterations; 1 Wms. Exec. 144. For a review of the cases see note to 25 Am. Rep. 35; WILLS.

OBREPTION. Acquisition of escheats, etc. from sovereign, by making false representations. Bell, Dic. Subreption; Cal. Lex.

OBROGATION. The annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it. The alteration of a law. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calv. Lex.

OBSCENITY. In Criminal Law. Such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of the law and the general corruption of morals. In all cases the indictment must aver exposure and offence to the community generally; mere private indecency is not indictable at common law; 2 Whart. Cr. L. §§ 1431, 1432.

The exhibition of an obscene picture is an indictable offence at common law, although not charged to have been exhibited in public, if it be averred that the picture was exhibited to sundry persons for money; 2 S. & R. 91. The stat. 20 and 21 Vict. c. 83, gives summary powers for the searching of houses in which obscene books, etc., are suspected to be kept, and for the seizure and destruction of such books. By various acts of congress, the importation and circulation through the mails or otherwise, of obscene literature or articles of any kind is rendered punishable with fine or imprisonment; R. S. §§ 2491, 3893, 5389. See 8 Phila. 453; 126 Mass. 46; 92 Ill. 182. Legislative provisions forbidding the keeping, exhibition, or sale of indecent books or pictures, and authorizing their destruction if seized, are within the police powers of the states and are constitutional; Cooley, Const. Lim. 749.

OBSERVE. In Civil Law. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. Dig. 1. 3. 32.

OBSOLETE. A term applied to laws which have lost their efficacy without being repealed.

A positive statute, unrepealed, can never be repealed by non-user alone; 4 Yeates, 181, 215; 1 P. A. Browne, App. 28; 13 S. & R. 447. The disuse of a law is at most only presumptive evidence that society has consented to such a repeal: however this presumption may operate on an unwritten law, it cannot, in general, act upon one which remains as a legislative act on the statute-book; because no presumption can set aside a certainty. A written law may indeed become obsolete when the object to which it was intended to apply, or the occasion for which it was enacted, no longer exists; 1 P. A. Browne, App. 28. "It must be a very strong case," says Chief-Justice Tilghman, "to justify the court in deciding that an act standing on the statute-book, unrepealed, is obsolete and invalid. I will not say that such case may not exist,—where there has been a non-user for a great number of years,—where, from a change of times and manners, an ancient sleeping statute would do great mischief if suddenly brought into action,—where a long practice inconsistent with it has prevailed, and specially where from other and latter statutes it might be inferred that in the appprehension of the legislature the old one was not in force." 13 S. & R. 452; Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 6, s. 19; Merlin, Répert. Desuetude.

OBSTRUCTING MAIL. See MAIL.

OBSTRUCTING PROCESS. In Criminal Law. The act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent, or do prevent, the execution of lawful process.

The officer must be prevented by actual violence, or by threatened violence accompanied by the exercise of force, or by those having capacity to employ it, by which the officer is prevented from executing his writ. The officer is not required to expose his person by a personal conflict with the offender; 2 Wash. C. C. 169. See 3 id. 335; 12 Ala. N. S. 199.

This is an offence against public justice of a very high and presumptuous nature; and more particularly so where the obstruction is of an arrest upon criminal process. A person opposing an arrest upon criminal process becomes thereby particeps criminis; that is, an accessory in felony, and a principal in high treason; 4 Bla. Com. 128; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 17, s. 1; 1 Russ. Cr. 360. See 2 Gall. 15: 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 145, note a; 3 Vt. 110; 25 id. 415; 2 Strobh. 73; 15 Mo. 486; 4 Am. L. J. 489.

OBSTRUCTING RAILWAYS. Under a statute for the punishment of any who shall wilfully obstruct any engine or carriage passing upon any railroad, so as to endanger the safety of any person conveyed therein, it is not necessary for conviction that any engine or carriage should be actually obstructed. It is the character and intention of the act, and not the actual consequence of it, which fixes its criminality; State vs. Kilty, S. C. of Minn., 25 Alb. L. J. 419; see RAILWAY.

OBVENTIO (Lat. obvenire, to fall in). In Civil Law. Rent or profit accruing from a thing, or from industry. It is generally used in the plural.

In Old English Law. The revenue of spiritual living, so called. Cowel. Also, in the plural, offerings. Co. 2d Inst. 661.

OCCUPANCY. The taking possession of those things corporeal which are without an owner, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use.

Pothier defines it to be the title by which one acquires property in a thing which belongs to nobody, by taking possession of it with design of acquiring it. Tr. du Dr. de Propriété, n. 20. The Civil Code of Louisiana, art. 3375, nearly following Pothier, defines occupancy to be "A mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with an intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it." Occupancy is sometimes used in the sense of occupation or holding possession; indeed it has come to be very generally so used in this country in homestead laws, public-land laws, and the like; 21 Ill. 178; 25 Barb. 54; Act of Cong. May 29, 1830 (4 Stat. at L. 420); 36 Wisc. 73; but this does not appear to be a common legal use of the term, as recognized by English authorities.

To constitute occupancy, there must be a taking of a thing corporeal, belonging to no body, with an intention of becoming the owner of it; Co. Litt. 416.

A right by occupancy attaches in the finder of lost goods unreclaimed by the owner; in the captor of beasts ferœ naturæ, so long as he retains possession; 2 Bla. Com. 403; the owner of lands by accession, and the owner of goods acquired by confusion.

It was formerly considered, also, that the captor of goods contraband of war acquired a right by occupancy; but this is now held otherwise, such goods being now held to be primarily vested in the sovereign, and as belonging to individual captors only, to the extent and under such regulations as positive laws may prescribe; 2 Kent, 290.

OCCUPANT, OCCUPIER. One who has the actual use or possession of a thing.

When the occupiers of a house are entitled to a privilege in consequence of such occupation, as to pass along a way, to enjoy a pew, and the like, a person who occupies a part of such house, however small, is entitled to some right, and cannot be deprived of it; 2 B. & Ald. 164; 1 Chitty, Pr. 209, 210; 4 Comyns, Dig. 64; 5 id. 199.

OCCUPATION. Use of tenure: as, the house is in the occupation of A B. A trade, business, or mystery: as, the occupation of a printer.

A putting out of a man's freehold in time of war. Co. Litt. s. 412.

OCCUPAVIT (Lat.). In Old Practice. The name of a writ which lies to recover the possession of lands when they have been taken from the possession of the owner by occupation (q. v.).

OCCUPIER. One who is in the enjoyment of a thing.

He may be the occupier by virtue of a lawful contract, either express or implied, or without any contract. The occupier is, in general, bound to make the necessary repairs to the premises he occupies: the cleansing and repairing of drains and sewers, therefore, is primâ facie the duty of him who occupies the premises; 3 Q. B. 449.

OCHLOCRACY. A government where the authority is in the hands of the multitude; the abuse of a democracy. Vaumène, Dict. du Langage Politique.

OCTAVE (Law Lat. utas). In Old English Practice. The eighth day inclusive after a feast. 3 Bla. Com. 277.

OCTO TALES (Lat. eight such). If, when a trial at bar is called on, the number of jurors in attendance is too small, the trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo tales awarded, according to the number deficient; as, at common law, namely, a writ to the sheriff to summon eight more such men as were originally summoned. 3 Bla. Com. 364.

ODHALL RIGHT. The same as allodial. Odio et atia. See De Odio et atia.

OF COURSE. That which may be done in the course of legal proceedings without making any application to the court; that which is granted by the court, without further inquiry, upon its being asked: as, a rule to plead is a matter of course.

OFFENCE. In Criminal Law. The doing that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands. In this sense, it is nearly synonymous with crime. In a more confined sense, it may be considered as having the same meaning with misdemeanor; but it differs from it in this, that it is not indictable, but punishable summarily by the forfeiture of a penalty. 1 Chitty, Pr. 14.

OFFER. A proposal to do a thing.

An offer, as an element of a contract, is a proposal to make a contract. It must be made by the person who is to make the promise, and it must be made to the person to whom the promise is made. It may be made either by words or by signs, either orally or in writing, and either personally or by a messenger; but in whatever way it is made, it is not in law an offer until it comes to the knowledge of the person to whom it is made; Langd. Contr. § 151; 18 Dunl. 1. While an offer remains in force, it confers upon the offeree the power to convert it into a promise by accepting it. The offerer may state how long it shall remain in force; and it will then remain in force during the time so stated, unless sooner revoked; 3 Cush. 224. In the absence of any specification by the offerer, an offer will remain in force a reasonable time unless sooner revoked. As to what will be a reasonable time, no uniform positive rule can be laid down. When an offer is made personally, it will prima facie continue until the interview or negotiation terminates, and longer; 6 Wend. 103. In commercial transactions, when an offer is made by mail, the general rule is that the offerer is entitled to an answer by return mail; but this will not apply in all cases, e.g., when there are several mails each day. In transactions which are not commercial, much less promptitude in answering is required; Langd. Contr. § 152.

Where the offer contemplates a unilateral contract, the length of time that the offer will continue in force depends upon different considerations. The question is no longer one of accepting the offer orally or by letter, but of performing the consideration. The duration of such an offer, therefore, in the absence of any express limitation, will be measured by the length of time which may be reasonably required for the performance of the consideration. When performance of the consideration has been begun in good faith, it seems that the offer will continue, in the absence of actual revocation, until the performance is either completed or abandoned, especially when the performance of the consideration is constantly within the knowledge of the offerer; Langd. Contr. § 155. An offer which contains no stipulation as to how long it shall continue is revocable at any moment. A stipulation that an offer shall remain open for a specified time, must be supported by a sufficient consideration, or be contained in an instrument under seal, in order to be binding; Langd. Contr. § 178; 3 Term, 653. When thus made binding, the offer is not irrevocable, but the only effect is to give the offerer a claim for damages if the stipulation be broken by revoking the offer.

As an offer can only be made by communication from the offerer to the offeree, so it can only be revoked in the same manner. But the death or insanity of the offerer during the pendency of the offer, revokes it; Langd. Contr. § 180.

An offer can only be accepted in the terms in which it is made; an acceptance, therefore, which modifies the offer in any particular, goes for nothing; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 587.

A man may change his will at any time, if it is not to the injury of another; he may, therefore, revoke or recall his offers at any time before they have been accepted; and, in order to deprive him of this right, the offer must have been accepted on the terms in which it was made; 10 Ves. 438; 2 C. & P. 553.

Any qualification of, or departure from, those terms, invalidates the offer, unless the same be agreed to by the party who made it; 4 Wheat. 225; 3 Johns. 584; 7 id. 470; 6 Wend. 103.

When the offer has been made, the party is presumed to be willing to enter into the contract for the time limited, and, if the time be not fixed by the offer, then until it be expressly revoked or rendered nugatory by a contrary presumption; 6 Wend. 103. See 8 S. & R. 243; 1 Pick. 278; 10 id. 326; 12 Johns. 190; 9 Port. Ala. 605; 1 Bell, Com. 326, 5th ed.; Pothier, Vente, n. 32. And see ACCEPTANCE OF CONTRACTS; ASSENT; BID.

OFFICE. A right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. Shelf. Mortm. 797; Cruise, Dig. Index; 3 S. & R. 149. An office may exist without an incumbent; 28 Cal. 382.

Judicial offices are those which relate to the administration of justice, and which must be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them.

Military offices are such as are held by soldiers and sailors for military purposes.

Ministerial offices are those which give the officer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a superior. 7 Mass. 280. See 5 Wend. 170; 10 id. 514; 8 Vt. 512; 1 Ill. 280; 12 Ind. 569. It is a general rule that a judicial office cannot be exercised by deputy, while a ministerial may.

Political offices are such as are not connected immediately with the administration of justice or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer: the offices of the president of the United States, of the heads of departments, of the members of the legislature, are of this number.

In England, offices are public or private. The former affect the people generally; the latter are such as concern particular districts belonging to private individuals. In the United States, all offices, according to the above definition, are public; but in another sense employments of a private nature are also called offices: for example, the office of president of a bank, the office of director of a corporation. For the incompatibility of office, see INCOMPATIBILITY; 4 S. & R. 277; 4 Co. Inst. 100; Comyns, Dig. b. 7. And see, generally, 3 Kent, 362; Cruise, Dig. tit. 25; 16 Viner, Abr. 101; Ayliffe, Parerg. 395; Pothier, Traité des Choses, § 2; 17 S. & R. 219; 6 Wall. 385; 22 Barb. 595; 29 Ohio, 347; 27 Am. Rep. 754; MANDAMUS; QUO WARRANTO.

For the word "office," as used of a place for transacting public business, see 6 Cush. 181. See, as to tenure of office, R. S. §§ 1767–1775. See RANK.

OFFICE-BOOK. A book kept in a public office, not appertaining to a court, authorized by the law of any state.

An exemplification of any such office-book, when authenticated under the act of congress of 27th March, 1804, is to have such faith and credit given to it in every court and office within the United States as such exemplification has by law or usage in the courts or offices of the state from whence the same has been taken. See FOREIGN LAWS; FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

OFFICE-COPY. A transcript of a record or proceeding filed in an office established by law, certified under the seal of the proper officer.

OFFICE FOUND. In English Law. When an inquisition is made to the king's use of any thing, by virtue of office of him who inquires, and the inquisition is found, it is said to be office found. See INQUEST OF OFFICE.

OFFICE GRANT. See GRANT.

OFFICE OF A JUDGE. In English Law. A criminal suit in an ecclesiastical court, not being directed to the reparation of a private injury, is regarded as a proceeding emanating from the office of the judge, and may be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But in practice these suits are instituted by private individuals, with the permission of the judge or his surrogate; and the private prosecutor, in any such case is, accordingly, said to promote the office of the judge. Coote's Eccl. Practice; Moz. & W.

OFFICER. He who is lawfully invested with an office. An office in this country is not property, nor are the prospective fees of an office the property of the incumbent; 37 N. Y. 518. He cannot sell, or purchase, or encumber his office. Payment of salary to a de facto officer is a good defence to an action by a de jure officer for the same salary after he had acquired possession; 68 N. Y. 279; s. c. 23 Am. Rep. 168; 30 Barb. 193; 20 Kans. 298; 12 Ad. & E. 702; but see contra, 12 Heisk. 499; s. c. 27 Am. Rep. 754; 28 Cal. 21; 53 Ill. 428.

Executive officers are those whose duties are mainly to cause the laws to be executed.

For example, the president of the United States of America, and the several governors of the different states, are executive officers. Their duties are pointed out in the national constitution and in the constitutions of the several states.

Legislative officers are those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures.

These officers are confined in their duties, by the constitution, generally to make laws; though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury; by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachment. The legislatures have, besides, the power to inquire into the conduct of their members, judge of their elections, and the like.

Judicial officers are those whose duties are to decide controversies between individuals, and accusations made in the name of the public against persons charged with a violation of the law.

Ministerial officers are those whose duty it is to execute the mandates, lawfully issued, of their superiors.

Military officers are those who have command in the army; and Naval officers are those who are in command in the navy.

Officers are also divided into public officers and those who are not public. Some officers may bear both characters: for example, a clergyman is a public officer when he acts in the performance of such a public duty as the marriage of two individuals; 4 Conn. 200; and he is merely a private person when he acts in his more ordinary calling of teaching his congregation. See 4 Conn. 134; 18 Me. 155.

Officers are required to exercise the functions which belong to their respective offices. The neglect to do so may, in some cases, subject the offender to an indictment; 1 Yeates, 519; and in others he will be liable to the party injured; 1 Yeates, 506.

The word "officer" has been held strictly applicable, among others, in the following cases: persons entrusted by authority of law with the receipt of public money; 74 Penn. 124; a deputy of a United States marshal; 3 Bla. 425; the legally appointed receiver of a national bank; 2 Ben. 303; clerks in the executive departments of the federal or of a state goverment; 10 Ct. Cl. 426; a collector of city taxes; 7 Metc. 152; a representative in a state legislature; 2 N. H. 246; president and directors of a bank, or treasurer of a railroad corporation; 8 Metc. 247; 10 Gray, 173; while the reverse has been held as to: one who receives no certificate of appointment, takes no oath, and has no term of office; 42 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 481; one who has been elected, but has not qualified; 1 Neb. 130; 28 Md. 1; a special deputy of a sheriff; 41 Ala. 399; a road supervisor; 35 Iowa, 361; 50 How. Pr. 353; a police juryman; 25 La. An. 138; a pension officer of the United States; 33 Miss. 508; a public printer; 70 N. C. 93; see 20 Wall. 179; 22 id. 493.

OFFICIAL. In Old Civil Law. The person who was the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate.

In Canon Law. The person to whom the bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction bears this name. Wood, Inst. 30, 505; Merlin, Répert.

OFFICINA JUSTITIÆ. The workshop or office of justice. In English Law. The chancery was formerly so called, because all writs issued from it, under the great seal, returnable into the courts of common law. See CHANCERY.

OHIO. One of the states of the American Union.

Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Virginia claimed, under their respective charters, the territory lying northwest of the river Ohio. At the solicitation of the continental congress, these claims were, soon after the close of the war of independence, ceded to the United States. Virginia, however, reserved the ownership of the soil of three million seven hundred thousand acres between the Scioto and the Little Miami rivers, for military bounties to the soldiers of her line who had served in the revolutionary war; and Connecticut reserved three million six hundred and sixty-six thousand acres in northern Ohio, now usually called "the Western Reserve." The history of these reservations, and of the several "purchases" under which land-titles have been acquired in various parts of the state, will be found in Albach's Annals of the West; in the Preliminary Sketch of the History of Ohio, in the first volume of Chase's Statutes of Ohio; and in Swan's Land Laws of Ohio. The conflicting titles of the states having been extinguished, congress, on July 13, 1787, passed the celebrated ordinance for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio. 1 Curwen's Revised Statutes of Ohio, 86. It provided for the equal distribution of the estates of intestates among their children, gave the widow dower as at common law, regulated the execution of wills and deeds, secured perfect religious toleration, the right of trial by jury, judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law, the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, security against cruel and unusual punishments, the right of reasonable bail, the inviolability of contracts and of private property, and declared that "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

These provisions have been, in substance, incorporated into the constitution and laws of Ohio, as well as of the other states which have since been formed within "the territory." The legal effect of the ordinance has been much discussed, and the supreme court of Ohio and the circuit court of the United States for the seventh circuit, on the one hand, and the supreme court of the United States, on the other, have arrived at directly opposite conclusions in respect to it. By the former it was considered a compact not incompatible with state sovereignty, and as binding on the state of Ohio as her own constitution; while the latter treated it as a mere temporary statute, which was abrogated by the adoption of the constitution of the United States. 5 Ohio, 410; 7 id. 416; 17 id. 425; 1 McLean, 336; 3 id. 226; 3 How. 212, 589; 10 id. 82; s. c., 8 West. L. J., 232.

On the 30th of October, 1802, congress passed an act making provision for the formation of a state constitution, under which, in 1803, Ohio was admitted into the Union, under the name of "the State of Ohio." This constitution was never submitted to a vote of the people. It continued to be the organic law of Ohio until September 1, 1851, when it was abrogated by the adoption of the present constitution.

The bill of rights which forms a part of this constitution contains the provisions common to such instruments in the constitutions of the different states. Such are the prohibitions against any laws impairing the right of peaceably assembling to consult for the common good, to bear arms, to have a trial by jury, to worship according to the dictates of one's own conscience, to have the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, to be allowed reasonable bail, to be exempt from excessive fines and cruel and unusual punishments, not to be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, to have a copy of the indictment, the aid of counsel, compulsory process for witnesses, a speedy and public trial, to be privileged from testifying against one's self or to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence. Provision is also made against the existence of slavery, against transporting offenders out of the state, against imprisonment for debt unless in cases of fraud, against granting hereditary honors, against quartering soldiers in private houses, for the security of persons from unreasonable arrest or searches, and for the freedom of speech and the press.

Every male citizen of the United States, twenty-one years of age, who has resided in the state one year, and in the county, township, or ward such period as may be fixed by law, next preceding election, is entitled to vote.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—This is lodged in a General Assembly, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The Senate is composed of thirty-five members, elected biennially, one in each of the senatorial districts into which the state is divided, for the term of two years. Senators must have resided in their respective districts one year next before election, unless absent on business of the state or the United States.

The House of Representatives is composed of one hundred members, elected biennially, one in each of the representative districts of the state, for the term of two years, by the voters of the district. A representative must have resided one year next preceding the election in the county or district for which he is elected. No person can be elected to either house who holds office under the United States or an office of profit under the state. Provision is made for re-districting the state every ten years from 1851, by dividing and combining the existing districts, and affording additional representatives during a part of the decennial period to those districts which have a surplus population over the ratio. The assembly cannot grant special charters to corporations, but may provide for their creation by general laws. No association with banking powers can be authorized until the act creating it has been submitted to the people and approved by a majority voting at that election. A debt cannot be contracted for purposes of internal improvement. Cities and incorporated villages are corporations under general laws. The general assembly may not pass retroactive laws, but may authorize courts to carry into effect, upon such terms as may be just and equitable, the manifest intention of parties and officers, by curing omissions, defects, and errors in instruments and proceedings arising out of their want of conformity with the laws of the state.

THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.—The Governor is elected biennially, for the term of two years from the second Monday of January next following his election, and until his successor is qualified. He may require information, in writing, from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and shall see that the laws are faithfully executed; may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly by proclamation; in case of disagreement between the two houses in respect to the time of adjournment, has power to adjourn the general assembly to such time as he may think proper, but not beyond the regular meetings thereof; is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States; and has power, after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons for all crimes and offences, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper, subject, however, to such regulations, as to the manner of applying for pardons, as may be prescribed by law. Upon conviction for treason, he may suspend the execution of the sentence, and report the case to the general assembly at its next meeting, when the general assembly shall either pardon, commute the sentence, direct its execution, or grant a further reprieve. He must communicate to the general assembly, at every regular session, each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, stating the name and crime of the convict, the sentence, its date, and the date of the commutation, pardon, or reprieve, with his reasons therefor.

He has no veto power upon the acts of the legislature, and his power of appointment is extremely limited.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, and for the same term of office, as the governor.

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office, for the residue of the term, or until he is acquitted or the disability be removed, devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.

He is president of the senate ex officio but possesses only a casting vote.

A Secretary of State, a Treasurer, and an Attorney-General are also elected at the same time, for the same term.

An Auditor is elected once in four years. If any of these offices become vacant, the governor appoints incumbents to serve till the next general election, after thirty days, occurs, when a successor is elected for a full term.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court consists of five judges, elected by the people for five years. The judges are so classified that one goes out of office each year. It has original jurisdiction over writs of quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, and procedendo, and a large appellate jurisdiction by writs of error from inferior courts. It may issue writs of error and certiorari in any criminal case, and supersedeas in any case, and all writs, not provided for, which are necessary to enforce the administration of justice. Writs of error, certiorari, habeas corpus, and supersedeas may be issued by the judge in vacation.

The District Court is composed of one judge of the supreme court and the judges of the common pleas court for the district in which the court is held. One session at least of this court is to be held annually in each county, or at least three sessions annually in three places in the district. It has like original and appellate jurisdiction with the supreme court upon writ of error granted by the supreme court, or some judge thereof in vacation.

The Court of Common Pleas under the constitution of 1851, was originally composed of three judges, elected by the people in each of the nine districts into which the state was divided, for the term of five years. Each of these nine districts was divided into three parts, following county-lines, and as nearly equal as possible; and in each of these sub-districts one judge was elected. The general assembly may increase or diminish the number of judges in any district, and may alter the number of districts, and has in several districts increased the number of judges, and has increased the number of districts to ten. Courts of common pleas are to be held by one or more of these judges; and more than one common pleas court may be held in the district at the same time. This court has original jurisdiction of all civil causes where the matter in controversy exceeds one hundred dollars, and a service, personal or by attachment of property, can be made in the county or where the property in question is situated in the county. This court has also almost exclusively the criminal jurisdiction, with the exception of a petty jurisdiction exercised in some instances by local police courts. It has a supervisory jurisdiction in cases of distribution of decedent's property or the probate courts. Acts 1857, p. 202. It may effectuate the intentions of parties, by curing defective instruments. Acts 1859, p. 40. It exercises appellate jurisdiction also of cases brought from justices of the peace and all other inferior judicial tribunals. A writ of error lies from this court to the district court.

A Probate Court is held in each county by a probate judge, elected for three years by the people of the county. This court has jurisdiction in probate and testamentary matters, the appointment of administrators and guardians, the settlement of the accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians, and such jurisdiction in habeas corpus, the issuing of marriage licenses, and for the sale of land by executors, administrators, and guardians, and such other jurisdiction, in any county or counties, as may be provided by law.

A very extensive jurisdiction is now exercised over the administration of trusts upon assignments made by failing debtors for the benefit of their creditors, and over judgment debtors who are accused of secreting their effects.

Superior Courts have been established, under authority of the constitution, in Cincinnati, and Dayton, whose jurisdiction in civil causes is concurrent with the courts of common pleas within their respective territorial limits. Their decisions are supervised by the supreme court, by writ of error allowed by that court, or by one of its judges in vacation.

Jurisprudence.—The common law of England is the basis of the civil law of this state, modified by the judicial rejection of that part which is "inapplicable to the condition of the people of Ohio." A revision and consolidation of the statutes was adopted by the general assembly in June, 1879, and published in two volumes under the title of the "Revised Statutes of Ohio, 1880." This work contains all the statutes of a general nature in force on January 1, 1880. No attempt has ever been made to arrange or classify the great mass of local legislation, including the charters of banks, turnpikes, railroads, and manufacturing companies, the boundaries of counties, sales of school lands, acts for the relief of private persons, and others of a kindred nature; and complete editions of these latter laws have now become very rare.

The criminal law of the state is wholly statutory, and there are no offences recognized as common-law offences. The formal distinction between actions at law and in equity is abolished. Actions are brought by a petition stating the facts of the case.

OIL. Coal oil, or petroleum, is a mineral, and forms part of the realty; 9 Pitts. L. J. N. S. 139.

OLD NATURA BREVIUM. The title of an English book, so called to distinguish it from Fitzherbert's work entitled Natura Brevium. It contains the writs most in use in the reign of Edward III., together with a short comment on the application and properties of each of them.

OLD STYLE. The mode of reckoning time in England until the year 1752, when the New Style, at present in use, and which had prevailed in the Roman Catholic countries of the continent since 1582, was introduced. According to the O. S., the year commenced on the 25th of March; every fourth year was a leap-year, instead of, as now, but 97 leap years in 400 years; Moz. & W.

OLD TENURES. The title of a small tract, which, as its title denotes, contains an account of the various tenures by which land was holden in the reign of Edward III. This tract was published in 1719, with notes and additions, with the eleventh edition of the First Institutes, and reprinted in 8vo. in 1764, by Serjeant Hawkins, in a selection of Coke's Law Tracts.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A maritime code promulgated by Eleanor, duchess of Guienne, mother of Richard I., at the isle of Oleron,—whence their name. They were modified and enacted in England under Richard I., and again promulgated under Henry III. and Edward III., and are constantly quoted in proceedings before the admiralty courts, as are also the Rhodian Laws. Co. Litt. 2. See CODE.

OLIGARCHY (Gr. ὀλίγος and ἀρχή. The government of a few). A name given to designate the power which a few citizens of a state have usurped, which ought by the constitution to reside in the people. Among the Romans, the government degenerated several times into an oligarchy,—for example, under the decemvirs, when they became the only magistrates in the commonwealth.

OLOGRAPH. A term which signifies that an instrument is wholly written by the party. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1581; Code Civ. 970; 5 Toullier, n. 357; 1 Stu. Low. C. 327; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2139. And see TESTAMENT; WILL.

OMISSION. The neglect to perform what the law requires.

When a public law enjoins on certain officers duties to be performed by them for the public, and they omit to perform them, they may be indicted: for example, supervisors of the highways are required to repair the public roads: the neglect to do so will render them liable to be indicted.

When a nuisance arises in consequence of an omission, it cannot be abated, if it be a private nuisance, without giving notice, when such notice can be given. See COMMISSION; NUISANCE.

OMNIA PERFORMAVIT (Lat. he has done all). In Pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative. 1 Me. 189.

OMNIUM (Lat.). In Mercantile Law. A term used to express the aggregate value of the different stock in which a loan is usually funded. 2 Esp. 361; 7 Term, 630.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A clause in policies of insurance, under which all are insured who have an insurable interest at the time of effecting the insurance and who were then contemplated by the party effecting the insurance. 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, 30.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. See JEOPARDY.

ONERARI NON (Lat. ought not to be burdened). In Pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged. It is used in an action of debt; 1 Saund. 290, n. a.

O. NI. In the exchequer, when the sheriff made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., he marked upon each head O. Ni., which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc.; 4 Inst. 116. But sheriffs now account to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts; Whart. Lex.

ONERIS FERENDI (Lat. of bearing a burden). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude by which the wall or pillar of one house is bound to sustain the weight of the buildings of the neighbor.

The owner of the servient building is bound to repair and keep it sufficiently strong for the weight it has to bear. Dig. 8. 2. 23; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1627.

ONEROUS CAUSE. In Civil Law. A valuable consideration.

ONEROUS CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One made for a consideration given or promised, however small. La. Civ. Code, art. 1767.

ONEROUS DEED. In Scotch Law. A deed given for valuable consideration. Bell, Dict.; CONSIDERATION.

ONEROUS GIFT. The gift of a thing subject to certain charges imposed by the giver on the donee. Pothier, Obl.

ONOMASTIC. A term applied to a signature which is in a different handwriting from the body of the instrument. 2 Benth. Jud. Ev. 460, 461.

ONUS PROBANDI (Lat.) In Evidence. The burden of proof.

It is a general rule that the party who alleges the affirmative of any proposition shall prove it. It is also a general rule that the onus probandi lies upon the party who seeks to support his case by a particular fact of which he is supposed to be cognizant: for example, when to a plea of infancy the plaintiff replies a promise after the defendant had attained his age, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove the promise, and it lies on the defendant to show that he was not of age at the time; 1 Term, 648. But where the negative involves a criminal omission by the party, and, consequently, where the law, by virtue of the general principle, presumes his innocence, the affirmative of the fact is also presumed. See 11 Johns. 513; 19 id. 345; 9 Mart. La. 48; 3 Mart. La. N. s. 576.

In general, wherever the law presumes the affirmative, it lies on the party who denies the fact to prove the negative; as when the law raises a presumption as to the continuance of life, the legitimacy of children born in wedlock, or the satisfaction of a debt. See, generally; 1 Phill. Ev. 156; 1 Stark. Ev. 376; Rosc. Civ. Ev. 51; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 55; Bull. N. P. 298; 2 Gall. 485; 1 M'Cord, 573; 1 Houst. 44; 12 Viner. Abr. 201.

The party on whom the onus probandi lies is entitled to begin, notwithstanding the technical form of the proceedings; 1 Stark. Ev. 584; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3048. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

OPEN. To begin. He begins or opens who has the affirmative of an issue. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74.

To open a case is to make a statement of the pleadings in a case, which is called the opening. This should be concise, very distinct, and perspicuous. Its use is to enable the judge and jury to direct their attention to the real merits of the case and the points in issue; 1 Stark. 439; 2 id. 317.

To vacate; to relieve a party who has an equitable right to such relief against a proceeding which is to him a formal or legal bar; to allow a re-discussion on the merits.

For example, to open a rule of court. 2 Chitty, Bail, 265; 5 Taunt. 628; 1 Mann. & G. 555; 7 Ad. & E. 519. To open a judgment or default. 4 R. I. 324; 1 Wisc. 631. See OPENING A JUDGMENT. To open an account; to make a judicial announcement, that a party, e. g. an executor, shall not be absolutely bound by the account he has rendered, but may show that it contains errors to his prejudice. To open a marriage settlement or an estate-tail; i. e. to allow a new settlement of the estate. To open biddings; i. e. to allow a re-sale. See OPENING BIDDINGS. To open contract. 44 Me. 206.

OPEN ACCOUNT. A running or unsettled account; not completely settled, but subject to future adjustment. 1 Ala. 62; 6 id. 438; 21 La. An. 406.

OPEN A CREDIT. To accept or pay the draft of a correspondent who has not furnished funds. Pardessus, n. 296.

OPEN COURT. A court formally opened and engaged in the transaction of all judicial functions. 45 Iowa, 501.

A court to which all persons have free access as spectators while they conduct themselves in an orderly manner.

The term is used in the first sense as distinguishing a court from a judge sitting in chambers or informally for the transaction of such matters as may be thus transacted. See CHAMBERS; COURT.

In the second sense, all courts in the United States are open; but in England, formerly, while the parties and probably their witnesses were admitted freely in the courts, all other persons were required to pay in order to obtain admittance. Stat. 13 Edw. I. cc. 42, 44; Barr. on the Stat. 126, 127. See Prin. of Pen. Law, 165.

OPEN ENTRY. See ENTRY.

OPEN LAW. The waging of law; Magna Charta, c. 21.

OPEN POLICY. An open policy is one in which the amount of the interest of the insured is not fixed by the policy, and is to be ascertained in case of loss. See POLICY.

OPENING. In American Practice. The beginning. The commencement. The first address of the counsel.

The opening is made immediately upon the impanelling of the jury: it embraces the reading of such of the pleadings as may be necessary, and a brief outline of the case as the party expects to prove it, where there is a trial, or of the argument, where it is addressed to the court.

OPENING AND CLOSING. After the evidence is all in, the plaintiff has the privilege of the opening and closing or summing up speeches to the jury; in the closing address he should confine himself to a reply to defendant's speech. It seems doubtful whether it is within the discretion of the court to interfere with this established mode of procedure; at least it should only be done with great caution; 36 Mich. 254; 32 Ohio, 224; 8 Daly, 61; 16 West. Jur. 18. See Best's Right to Begin and Reply; TRIAL.

In English Practice. The address made immediately after the evidence is closed. Such address usually states—first, the full extent of the plaintiff's claims, and the circumstances under which they are made, to show that they are just and reasonable; second, at least an outline of the evidence by which those claims are to be established; third, the legal grounds and authorities in favor of the claim or of the proposed evidence; fourth, an anticipation of the expected defence, and statement of the grounds on which it is futile, either in law or justice, and the reasons why it ought to fail. But the court will sometimes restrict counsel from an anticipation of the defence. 3 Chitty Pr. 881.

OPENING A COMMISSION. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

OPENING BIDDINGS. Ordering a resale. When estates are sold under decree of equity to the highest bidder, the court will, on notice of an offer of a sufficient advance on the price obtained open the biddings, i. e. order a re-sale. But this will not generally be done after the confirmation of the certificate of the highest bidder. So, by analogy, a re-sale has been ordered of an estate sold under bankruptcy. Sugd. Vend. 90; 22 Barb. 167; 8 Md. 322; 9 id. 228; 13 Gratt. 639; 4 Wisc. 242; 31 Miss. 514.

In England, by stat. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, s. 7, the opening of biddings is now allowed only in cases of fraud or misconduct in the sale; Wms. R. P. The courts of this country also will not generally open the biddings merely to obtain a higher price, but require irregularity, fraud, or gross inadequacy of price to be shown.

OPENING A JUDGMENT. In Practice. An act of the court by which a judgment is so far annulled that it cannot be executed, although it still retains some qualities of a judgment: as for example, its binding operation or lien upon the real estate of the defendant.

The opening of the judgment takes place when some person having an interest makes affidavit to facts which, if true, would render the execution of such judgment inequitable. The judgment is opened so as to be in effect an award of a collateral issue to try the facts alleged in the affidavit; 6 W. & S. 493, 494.

The rule to open judgment and let defendant into a defence is peculiar to Pennsylvania practice, and is a clear example of our system of administering equity under common law forms. By practice it is confined to judgments by default and those entered on warrants of attorney to confess, etc. It was, however, devised in the absence of a court of chancery, as a substitute for a bill in equity, to enjoin proceedings at law; Mitchell's "Motions and Rules;" 49 Penn. 365; 8 Phila. 553; 2 Watts, 379; 6 W. N. C. 484.

OPENING OF A POLICY OF INSURANCE. The question has been made whether, and in what cases, if any, the valuation in a valued policy shall be opened. The valuation, being a part of the agreement of the parties, is not to be set aside as between them in any case. The question is, how shall it be treated where only a part of the subject insured and valued is put at a risk, and also in the settlement of a particular average? and the answer is the same in both cases: viz., when the proportion or rate per centum put at risk or lost is ascertained, the agreed valuation of the whole is to be applied to the part put at risk or the proportion lost, pro rata. 2 Phill. Ins. 1203.

OPERATION OF LAW. A term applied to indicate the manner in which a party acquires rights without any act of his own: as, the right to an estate of one who dies intestate is cast upon the heir at law, by operation of law; when a lessee for life enfeoffs him in reversion, or when the lessee and lessor join in a feoffment, or when a lessee for life or years accepts a new lease or demise from the lessor, there is a surrender of the first lease by operation of law; 5 B. & C. 269; 9 id. 298; 2 B. & Ad. 119; 5 Taunt. 518. See DESCENT; PURCHASE.

OPERATIVE. A workman; one employed to perform labor for another. See 1 Penn. L. J. 368; 3 C. Rob. 237; 2 Cra. 240, 270.

OPERATIVE WORDS. In a deed, or lease, are the words which effect the transaction of which the instrument is the evidence; the terms generally used in a lease are "demise and lease," but any words clearly indicating an intention of making a present demise will suffice; Fawcett, L. & T. 74; Wms. R. P. 196; Bacon, Abr. (K) 161; see Martindale, Conv. 273.

OPINION. In Evidence. An inference or conclusion drawn by a witness as distinguished from facts known to him as facts.

It is the province of the jury to draw inferences and conclusions; and if witnesses were in general allowed to testify what they judge as well as what they know, the verdict would sometimes prove not the decision of the jury, but that of the witnesses. Hence the rule that, in general, the witness cannot be asked his opinion upon a particular question; 29 N. H. 94; 16 Ill. 513; 18 Ga. 194, 573; 7 Wend. 560; 24 id. 668; 2 N. Y. 514; 9 id. 371; 17 id. 340. But while it is incompetent for a witness to state his opinion upon a question of law, where the intent with which an act done by him is drawn in question he may testify as to such intent; 12 Reptr. 664.

Some confusion in the application of this rule arises from the delicacy of the line which divides that which is to be regarded as matter of observation from that which is matter of judgment founded upon observation. Thus, it is held that an unprofessional witness may testify to the fact that a person whom he saw was intoxicated, whether he is able to state all the constituent facts which amount to drunkenness or not; 14 N. Y. 562; 26 Ala. N. S. 26. But, on the other hand, insanity or mental incapacity cannot, in general, be proved by the mere assertion of an unprofessional witness; 17 N. Y. 340; 7 Barb. 314; 13 Tex. 568. And see 25 Ala. N. S. 21.

So handwriting may be proved by being recognized by a witness who has seen other writings of the party in the usual course of business, or who has seen him write; Peake, N. P. 21; 1 Esp. 15, 351; 2 Johns. Cas. 211; 19 Johns. 134. But, on the other hand, the authorship of an anonymous article in a newspaper cannot be proved by one professing to have a knowledge of the author's style; How. App. Cas. N. Y. 187, 202.

From necessity, an exception to the rule of excluding opinions is made in questions involving matters of science, art, or trade, where skill and knowledge possessed by a witness, peculiar to the subject, give a value to his opinion above that of any inference which the jury could draw from facts which he might state; 4 Hill, N. Y. 129; 1 Denio, 281; 3 Ill. 297; 2 N. H. 480; 2 Story, 421. Such a witness is termed an expert; and he may give his opinion in evidence.

The following reference to some of the matters in which the opinions of expert witnessess have been held admissible will illustrate this principle. The unwritten or common law of foreign countries may be proved by the opinion of witnesses possessing professional knowledge; 1 Cra. 12, 38; 2 id. 236; 6 Pet. 763; 2 Wash. C. C. 1, 175; 2 Wend. 411; 3 Pick. 293; 4 Conn. 517; 4 Bibb, 73; 2 Marsh. 609; 5 Harr. & J. 186; 1 Johns. 385; 14 Mass. 455; 6 Conn. 508; 1 Vt. 336; 15 S. & R. 87; 1 La. 153; 3 id. 53; 6 Cra. 274; the degree of hazard of property insured against fire; 17 Barb. 111; 4 Zabr. 843; whether a picture is a good likeness or not; 39 Ala. 193; handwriting; 35 Me. 78; 2 R. I. 319; 25 N. H. 87; 1 Jones, No. C. 94, 150; 13 B. Monr. 258; mechanical operations, the proper way of conducting a particular manufacture, and the effect of a certain method; 4 Barb. 614; 19 id. 338; 3 N. Y. 322; negligence of a navigator, and its effect in producing a collision; 24 Ala. N. S. 21; sanity; 1 Add. 244; 41 Ala. 700; 12 N. Y. 358; 17 id. 340; impotency; 3 Phill. Eccl. 14; value of chattles; 22 Ala. N. S. 370; 11 Cush. 257; 22 Barb. 652, 656; 23 Wend. 354; value of land; 11 Cush. 201; 4 Gray, 607; 9 N. Y. 188; compare 4 Ohio St. 583; value of services; 15 Barb. 550; 20 id. 387; speed of a railway train; 59 N. Y. 631; benefit to real property by laying out a street adjacent thereto; 2 Gray, 107; survey-marks identified as being those made by United States surveyors; 24 Ala. N. S. 390; seaworthiness; Peake, Cas. 25; 10 Bingh. 57; and see 9 Cush. 226; whether a person appeared sick or well; 53 N. Y. 603. So an engineer may be called to say what, in his opinion, is the cause that a harbor has been blocked up; 3 Dougl. 158; 1 Phill. Ev. 276; 4 Term, 498. Opinion evidence as to the age of a person, from his appearance, is not admissible; 6 Conn. 9; nor is it in cases involving adultery, on the question of guilt or guilty intent; see 18 Ala. 738.

It is to be observed, however, that the principle of admitting such opinions is taken with the qualifications necessary to make, as far as possible, the judgment of the jury, and not that of the witness, the final means of determining the issue. Thus opinions of experts are not admissible upon the question of damages; 4 Denio, 311; 3 Hill, N. Y. 609; 21 Barb. 331; 23 Wend. 425; 2 N. Y. 514; and experts are always confined to opinions within the scope of their professions, and are not allowed to give opinions on things of which the jury can as well judge; 5 Rog. Rec. N. Y. 26; 4 Wend. 320; 14 Me. 398; 3 Dana, 382; 1 Penn. R. 161; 2 Halst. 244; 7 Vt. 161; 6 Rand. 704; 4 Yeates, 262; 9 Conn. 102; 3 N. H. 349; 5 Harr. & J. 438; 1 Denio, 281. A distinction is also to be observed between a feeble impression and a mere opinion or belief; 3 Ohio St. 406; 19 Wend. 477. See Mr. Lawson's article, in 25 Alb. L. J. 367 et seq.

In Practice. The statement of reasons delivered by a judge or court for giving the judgment which is pronounced upon a case. The judgment itself is sometimes called an opinion; and sometimes the opinion is spoken of as the judgment of the court.

A declaration, usually in writing, made by a counsel to the client of what the law is, according to his judgment, on a statement of facts submitted to him.

An opinion is in both the above cases a decision of what principles of law are to be applied in the particular case, with the difference that judicial opinions pronounced by the court are law and of authority, while the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are merely advice to his client or argument to the court.

Where there are several judges, and they do not all agree in the disposition of the cause, the opinion of the majority is termed the prevailing opinion, or the opinion of the court. The opinion of the minority is termed the dissenting opinion. The opinions of the courts, collected and provided with such preliminary statements of facts and of the arguments of counsel as may be necessary in each case to an understanding of the decision, make up the books of reports.

Opinions are said to be judicial or extra-judicial. A judicial opinion is one which is given on a question which is actually involved in the matter brought before the judge for his decision; an extra-judicial opinion is one which, although given by a judge in deciding a case, is not necessary to the judgment; Vaugh. 382; 1 Hale, Hist. 141; and, whether given in or out of court, is no more than the prolatum of him who gives it, and has no legal efficacy; 4 Penn. St. 28. Where a point is essential to the decision rendered, it will be presumed that it was duly considered, and that all that could be urged for or against it was presented to the court. But if it appears from the report of the case that such point was not taken or inquired into at all, there is no ground for this presumption, and the authority of the case is proportionably weakened; 8 Abb. Pr. 316.

Where two or more points are discussed in the opinions delivered on the decision of a cause, and the determination of either point in the manner indicated in such opinions would authorize the judgment pronounced by the court, the judges concurring in the judgment must be presumed to have concurred in such opinions upon all the points so discussed, unless some dissent is expressed or the circumstances necessarily lead to a different conclusion; 6 N. Y. 9. Where a judgment is reversed upon a part only of the grounds on which it went, it is still deemed an authority as to the other grounds not questioned. See 5 Johns. 125.

Counsel should, in giving an opinion, as far as practicable, give, first, a direct and positive opinion, meeting the point and effect of the question, and, if the question proposed is properly divisible into several, treating it accordingly. Second, his reasons, succinctly stated, in support of such opinion. Third, a reference to the statutes or decisions on the subject. Fourth, when the facts are susceptible of a material difference in statement, a suggestion of the probability of such variation. When an opinion is sought as a guide in respect to maintaining an action or defence, some other matters should be noticed:—as, Fifth, any necessary precautionary suggestions in reference to the possibility of a fatal defect in the evidence, arising from the nature of the case. Thus, where some important fact is stated as resting principally on the statement of the party interested, if by the law of the place such party is incompetent to testify respecting it, a suggestion ought to be made to inquire how that fact is to be proved. Sixth, a suggestion of the proper mode of proceeding, or the process or pleadings to be adopted.

In English and American law, the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are not entitled to any weight with the court, as evidence of the law. While the court will deem it their duty to receive such opinions as arguments and entitled to whatever weight they may have as such, they will not yield to them any authority; 4 Penn. 1, 28. In many cases, however, where a client acts in good faith under the advice of counsel, he may on that ground be protected from a liability which the court in its discretion might otherwise have imposed upon him.

OPPOSITION. In Practice. The act of a creditor who declares his dissent to a debtor's being discharged under the insolvent laws. 14 Bankr. Reg. 449.

OPPRESSOR. One who having public authority uses it unlawfully to tyrannize over another: as, if he keep him in prison until he shall do something which he is not lawfully bound to do.

To charge a magistrate with being an oppressor is, therefore, actionable. 1 Starkie, Sland. 185.

OPPROBRIUM. In Civil Law. Ignominy; shame; infamy.

OPTION. Choice; election. See those titles.

In Contracts. A contract by which A, in consideration of the payment of a certain sum to B, acquires the privilege of buying from or selling to B, specified securities at a fixed price within a certain time; 71 N. Y. 420; 83 id. 93.

These options are of three kinds, viz.: "calls," "puts," and "straddles," or "spread eagles." A call gives A the option of calling or buying from B or not, certain securities. A put gives A the option of selling or delivering to B or not. A straddle is a combination of a put and a call, and secures to A the right to buy of or sell to B or not. Where neither party, at the time of making the contract, intends to deliver or accept the shares, but merely to pay differences according to the rise or fall of the market, the contract is void either by virtue of statute or as contrary to public policy; 11 C. B. 538. In each transaction the law looks primarily at the intention of the parties; and the form of the transaction is not conclusive; 11 Hun, 471; 71 N. Y. 420; 5 M. & W. 466; 89 Penn. 250; 10 W. N. C. 112. Option contracts are not prima facie gambling contracts; 11 Hun. 471; 71 N. Y. 420. But see, 78 Ill. 43; 83 id. 33. See in general Dos Passos, Stock-Brokers.

OPTIONAL WRIT. An original writ in the alternative, commanding either to do a thing or show cause why it has not been done. 3 Bla. Com. 274; Finch, Law, 257.

OPUS LOCATUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A work (i. e. the result of work) let to another to be used. A work (i. e. something to be completed by work) hired to be done by another. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Opus, Locare; L. 51, § 1, D. Locat.; L. 1, § 1, D. ad leg. Rhod.

OPUS MAGNIFICIUM or MANIFICIUM (from Lat. opus, work, manus, hand). In Old English Law. Manual labor. Fleta, l. 2, c. 48, § 3.

OR. A disjunctive particle.

As a particle, or is often construed and, and and construed or, to further the intent of the parties, in legacies, devises, deeds, bonds, and writings; 3 Gill. 492; 7 id. 197; 1 Call, 212; 2 Rop. Leg. text and notes of American editor 1400, 1405; 3 Greenl. Ev. tit. 38, c. 9, §§ 18, 25; 1 Jarm. Wills, c. 17, p. 427, 2d ed., and cases cited in Perk. note.; 1 Wills. Ex. 932, notes k, l; 5 Co. 112 a; Cro. Jac. 322; 4 Zabr. 686; 3 Term, 470.

Where an indictment is in the alternative, as forged or caused to be forged, it is bad for uncertainty; 2 Stra. 900; Hardw. 370; 1 Y. & J. 22. But a description of a horse as of a brown or bay color, in an indictment for larceny of such horse, is good; 13 Vt. 687; and so an indictment describing a nuisance as in the highway or road; 1 Dall. 150. See 28 Vt. 583; 24 Conn. 286; 13 Ark. 397. So, "break or enter," in a statute defining burglary means "break and enter;" 82 Penn. 306, 326; 105 Mass. 185.

When the word or in a statute is used in the sense of to wit, that is in explanation of what precedes, and making it signify the same thing, a complaint or indictment which adopts the words of the statute is well framed. Thus, it was held that an indictment was sufficient which alleged that the defendant had in his custody and possession ten counterfeit bank-bills or promissory notes, payable to the bearer thereof, and purporting to be signed in behalf of the president and directors of the Union Bank, knowing them to be counterfeit, and with intent to utter and pass them, and thereby to injure and defraud the said president and directors; it being manifest from the statute on which the indictment was framed, that promissory note was used merely as explanatory of bank-bill, and meant the same thing; 8 Mass. 59; 2 Gray, 502.
